

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE REPUBLIC.

Devoted to the Dissemination of Political Information.

VOL. VIII.

WASHINGTON, D. C., MARCH, 1877.

No. 3.

"HAYES HAS 185 VOTES, AND IS ELECTED."

Telegram from Z. CHANDLER, Nov. 9, 1876.

The above famous dispatch of November 9th has proven prophetic. It has been trebly vindicated, first, by the official returns; second, by the electoral commission created through Democratic influence to test the validity of the claim; third, by public opinion. It flashed over the wires at a time when Tilden's election was conceded by many, and, though it came from a leader whose political sagacity had never been at fault, it was regarded by many skeptical Republicans as too good to be true. But its truth has been established. It has stood unshaken in the midst of the fiercest political contest of modern times, and remains as true as when uttered by its distinguished author two days after the election. It was based upon reliable evidence; and the desperate efforts of Democracy to disprove it have only tended to reveal more clearly the truth upon which it rested.

But the struggle has ended, and over its results we congratulate the American people. Right has triumphed; justice has asserted its supremacy, and the Republic begins its second century with its government in the hands of men as loyal and true as those who stood guard at its birth. The majesty of the ballot has been acknowledged; and before a majority of one vote forty-five millions of people bow as cheerfully as they would before a majority of one hundred.

In reviewing the contest since the day of election we discern the hand of Providence leading the nation through unseen dangers as a skillful pilot would a ship through the sunken reefs of a treacherous sea. The very desperation of our opponents has been turned to our advantage. Their efforts to prove corruption upon the Republican party have resulted in disclosing to the world the purity and patriotism of Republican leaders. Every investigation has recoiled upon Democracy. The exposure of telegrams has resulted in bringing to the light a series of Democratic dispatches wherein money was promised for the purchase of votes and tempting bribes offered for the buying of Republican electors. Not a line could be found to reflect upon the honor of the Republican managers. Every dispatch, every letter, every proposition and suggestion might be written on the doors of a church without bringing a blush of shame to the cheeks of any American citizen. So with the investigation of campaign expenditures and the laying bare of bank accounts, the revelations have been in favor of the Republican party, while Democratic transactions have been unearthed that clearly proved that the corrupt tactics of Tammany were not lost sight of in the attempt to elect Mr. Tilden. Surely the friends of good government throughout the world have reason to congratulate each other that the Republican party has passed through the fiery ordeal, forced upon it by Democratic hate, and emerged from it purer and stronger than ever.

With the vindication of its original claim and the peaceful inauguration of President tutional right and submitted a certainty to the arbitration of an impartial tribunal. For the sake of the nation it will avoid the rekindling of party animosities, and will seek through a liberal policy the awakening of that spirit of patriotism which will bring to its support many who have been blinded with prejudice against it. It will invite the co-operation of good citizens everywhere to bring about the complete pacification of the country by measures calculated to subdue party passions, restore industries, resume specie payments, cancel in good faith our national obligations, and make universal the enjoyment of the rights of citizenship.

The next ten years of its history will round out its record of usefulness, and men who to-day revile at it and hate it because they do not comprehend its true character, will hasten to do justice to its merits when the scales of party prejudice shall fall from their eyes, and permit them to behold the grandeur of the work it has accomplished.

Now, that its tenure of power is assured, we look for a revival of business, a restoration of confidence throughout the land, and for a long period of unexampled prosperity. The dread of Democratic supremacy is no longer felt. The inauguration of Hayes has lifted a burden of doubt and anxiety from the business men of the country, and will cause them to return to their old channels of commercial activity. The future is no longer doubtful, it is bright with promise, and tens of thousands will start forward with renewed energy to realize the possibilities which it holds in store.

We do not regret the closeness of the contest. It has proven to the world that public virtue still rules in our Republic, and that the party of freedom is practically incorruptible. Out of one hundred and eighty-five electors not one could be found willing to sell his vote. They turned aside the tempter and performed their duty without fear or favor. Some of them were poor in money, but all were rich in patriotism and virtue, and they proved by their acts that there was not money enough in the Democratic party to induce them to betray their sacred trusts. To these men and to the members of returning boards in the closely contested States the nation owes a debt of gratitude which can never be canceled. In the name of liberty, which they have preserved, and speaking for generations yet unborn who will enjoy the fruits of their labors, we thank them for their heroic devotion to the right, and their services to the Republic. They saved, by their fidelity and courage, the fruits of four years of war, and held for the future the results of a century of free government.

To justify their faith and to show to the world that the Republican party is still worthy of public confidence, and able to meet the growing difficulties of government, should be the duty and privilege of its friends. The mission of the party is not ended, for with the inauguration of Hayes a new era began in its eventful career. It has education to foster, patriotism to rekindle, resources to develop, and general prosperity to restore to the country. To the accomplishment of its work it calls upon every good citizen to lend a helping hand, and invites the blessing and protection of Providence on its patriotic labors.

SECRETARY CHANDLER'S TELEGRAM.—The Washington Star, of March 2, says: "Secretary Chandler has proved himself a prophet. A few days after the election he telegraphed from New York the result, and a copy of this dispatch was posted up in one of the windows of the building on F street occupied by the National Republican Committee. It was a large piece of brown paper with the legend inscribed in rude letters, 'Hayes has 185 votes and is elected. Chandler.' The placard is still up to silently attest Mr. Chandler's accuracy in forecasting the result of the Presidential election."

WITH Rutherford B. Hayes as Chief Magistrate, and gold at 1.04½, peace and prosperity, specie payments and good will to all men will be the principal features in the life of the Republic for the next four years.

WILLIAM ALMON WHEELER.

VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

William A. Wheeler, like President Hayes, springs from an old Puritan stock, famous for brave deeds and noble works. Both are derived from Vermont parentage. Grandfather Wheeler was in the first Concord fight, and throughout the Revolutionary struggle Mr. Wheeler's maternal grandfather, William Woodward, fought in the ranks of the Patriots.

William A. Wheeler was born June 30, 1819, at Malone, New York. Poverty and hardships was the lot of his boyhood. His father, Almon Wheeler, a lawyer by profession, had died when William was but eight years old. His mother, Eliza Woodward Wheeler, a noble Christian woman, of gentle manners, but "of great force of character," upon the death of her husband, reckoned as her sole wealth an incumbered estate valued at $300. Her native energy and an abiding faith in Heaven sustained her in her troubles. By her labor in keeping boarders she maintained her little family, and assisted and encouraged William in acquiring an education, first in the district schools, and then at the University of Vermont. Thus encouraged, his own sterling qualities, his energy, perseverance, and endurance, supplied the rest. In winter he taught school and "boarded around:" in summer he labored at farming, pursuing his studies the while. He was in the class of 1842.

Under Mr. Asa Hascall he studied law, was admitted to the bar, and by his abilities and industry soon achieved a high reputation and success as "a keen advocate and wise counselor." As a Whig in politics, he in 1846 was elected district attorney; in 1849 and again in 1850 he was elected to the State Assembly, and in 1859 and 1860 to the State Assembly. When the old Whig party fell under the intrigues of slavery, Mr. Wheeler entered the ranks of freedom: he joined the Republican party. In 1856 he actively and zealously labored for the election of Frémont, and in 1860 for that of Abraham Lincoln. In 1856, during the "Border Ruffian" raiding in Kansas, his sympathy was with the victims of proslavery tyranny. He, in 1856, while at Chicago, contributed $100 to the fund "for distributing material aid to our hunted and oppressed brethren" in Kansas, and in 1860, upon the firing upon Fort Sumter, contributed $1,000 for the relief of soldiers' families. In the Thirty-seventh, Forty-first, Forty-second, Forty-third, and Forty-fourth Congresses, he served as a Representative. He was chairman of the Committees of Commerce and the Pacific Railroad; was a member of the Belknap impeachment committee, a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and as a member of the committee on Southern affairs was the author of the Louisiana adjustment, known as the "Wheeler compromise." As a banker and railroad manager he acquired a handsome reputation for business ability, tact, and integrity, and in every relation, under all circumstances, throughout his useful public career, he has maintained—and deservedly—the character of an able statesman, an inflexible patriot, and a Christian gentleman.

In 1867 he was elected a delegate at large to the Constitutional convention of the State of New York. In that convention were such men as Wm. M. Evarts, G. W. Curtis, H. Greeley, Sanford E. Church, Ira Harris, Samuel J. Tilden, and Edwards Pierrepont, "representatives of the best legal, financial, and administrative talent in the Empire State." Of a body so imposing Mr. Wheeler was chosen chairman almost by acclamation, and presided with such marked ability, dignity, and impartiality, that at its close Mr. Sanford E. Church said: "I have had some experience in deliberative bodies, and I can say without qualification that for impartiality, fairness, and ability, I have never seen a presiding officer excel the presiding officer of this body." Like dignity and ability will distinguish him as President of the Senate.

THE RETIREMENT OF PRESIDENT GRANT.

The retirement of President Grant to private life closes for the present one of the most brilliant and eventful careers in American history. For fifteen years he has been the central figure in the nation, on whom millions have relied for safety and protection. From Belmont to Appomattox, throughout the trying period of reconstruction, and during the eight years of his administration, his life has been one ceaseless round of severe labor, enough to have broken down any one but a Hercules, whose shoulders were broadened by Providence to bear the burdens he was destined to carry. As a soldier he stood unequaled, and whether his victories were the result of his matchless energies or his surpassing skill, they will ever rank among the most brilliant of either ancient or modern times. His most inveterate political enemy cannot fail to accord him the highest praise as a military leader. The armies he wielded, the talent and courage he opposed, the masterly movements he planned and executed, and the results he achieved have won for him a name and fame that will outlive the Republic he served. As a General he never knew such a word as failure. Beaten to-day he became the victor to-morrow. He had faith in the possibilities of organized power, and had the rare faculty of applying it at the very moment when others would fail. He wrested victory from defeat, and more than once plucked success from the very jaws of failure. His genius appeared to be equal to any occasion. While others sat down before difficulties to study out the best way to surmount them, he grappled them in an instant and triumphed over them. His policy was to seek out the enemy, and when he found him to fight him—believing that a thousand killed in battle would save ten thousand from dying in hospital. He was a fighting General in every sense of the term, and his men were infused with his spirit, and felt when the battle opened that they had a leader who could not be beaten. An army believing itself invincible is like an avalanche in motion, it sweeps over everything in its path. So Grant's army swept over everything it encountered, until there was nothing left to oppose it but shattered regiments and worn-out men, who had reached the end of human endurance. The series of battles fought by the Army of the Potomac from the Rapidan to Richmond were terrible in the extreme, yet they shortened the war and saved tens of thousands of lives that its prolongation would have sacrificed. Lee's magnificent army melted away before Grant's fierce attacks, and the fangs of the rebellion were effectually broken. The rebel power received its death-blow, and its subsequent efforts were simply the dying struggles of a wounded giant. After all, the war was a question of resources, a game of give and take, and the winner was to be the one that could stand the fearful drain of blood and treasure longest. Both sides were equal in point of courage and skill, but the weight of artillery and the force of numbers were on the side of the North. Grant saw this from the first, and by dealing blow after blow, giving the enemy no chance to recover, he finally compelled his worn-out adversary to surrender. When Lee laid down his sword at Appomattox the confederacy was not conquered, it was simply exhausted. Its last man had been drawn, its last shot fired, its provisions consumed, it had no other alternative but submission or annihilation. The fighting policy of Grant had at last forced it into the last ditch and there it died. Under a temporizing policy it could not have been destroyed. It would have grown stronger each year, and finally won recognition. It was a tumor on the body politic. McClellan's soothing sirups and salves might ease the pain, but it required the sharp, decisive cutting of Grant to remove it, and save the nation. He was a thorough believer in the heroic treatment, and the Republic lives to-day because he had the skill and courage to apply it.

With the safety of the nation, or rather its deliverance from armed rebellion, came new dangers hardly less formidable than the ones from which Grant's sword had rescued the Government. The disbandment of the two opposing armies, the extreme poverty of the Southern States, the complete disorganization of society consequent upon the overthrow of their recognized government, and the lawless element suddenly released from the rebel armies, brought about serious difficulties, which required administrative firmness and statesmanship of a high order. Throughout this period of reorganization, popularly known as the period of reconstruction, General Grant showed rare sagacity, and by his magnanimity and good judgment brought about a healthy condition of affairs, something akin to good will between the two sections. The Southern people saw him in a new light. He was no longer the dashing soldier, trampling Confederate armies under foot, and marking the path of his victorious march by fire and sword, but the true friend to the suffering; quick to help, advise, and protect. He lost the character of a conqueror in the work of the pacificator. He sought to bind up the wounds of the war, and to encourage the people to rebuild their prosperity. He urged a policy of generous treatment toward those who had aided the rebellion, and the nation adopted it. Helping hands were extended; Northern capital was proffered; and an era of good feeling promising the early revival of patriotism throughout the South, and a genuine acceptance of the results of war seemed about to dawn upon the nation.

But it was to be otherwise. The true friend was ignored, and the false one accepted. Grant's policy was to rebuild the South on the basis of a returning love for the Union, but it failed before the treacherous policy of Andrew Johnson. Grant was but a general; Johnson was President, and to his seductive whisperings the Southern people lent a willing ear. Whether he intended it or not, he made treason respectable, and the friends of the Union throughout the South odious. From the date of his interference in Southern affairs the South began to regard its condition as due to the tyranny of the North. The open rupture of the President with Grant and many of the leaders in the Union cause fanned the flame of discontent. The ex-Confederates no longer felt that they had brought their troubles upon themselves by a causeless rebellion. They forgot the magnanimous treatment which gave them life and property when both were forfeited. Johnson had taken sides with them; lifted them into full fellowship with himself; magnified their wrongs, and made their sins, by contrast, positive virtues. Union men were no longer welcome. Social ostracism followed. Northern men, with muscle and money, who had gone down to help rebuild the waste places, were transformed into carpet-baggers, while the native Southerner, who had surrendered in good faith, and turned his back upon the Bourbon Democracy, was posted as a scallawag and persecuted by his Johnsonized neighbors. Treason was no longer a crime to be repented of, but a virtue to be extolled and rewarded; and from that day to this the badge of distinction that admits its possessor to the highest honors in the Southern States is a clear record of fidelity to the rebel cause. It is humiliating to acknowledge, but nevertheless true, that the most distinguished friend of the Union cause could not, if passed upon by the white vote of the South, be elected to the humblest office within the gift of its people.

It is hard to speak ill of the dead, but the charity that overlooks the individual cannot forget his acts. Through Johnson's treachery reconstruction became a failure. It forced upon the country two great political mistakes: universal amnesty and universal suffrage. Both should have been qualified, yet Johnson's claim to the right to extend the one made absolutely necessary the other. Universal suffrage was the antidote to the poison of disloyalty injected into the body politic. It was the arraying of loyal ignorance against disloyal intelligence. It has fought bravely, heroically, but the gradual loss of the Southern States to the Republican party shows it has struggled in vain. It has failed to receive the support of the nation that gave it, and has been borne down by superior intelligence and courage. The germ of the good it contained may spring up and bear fruit in an age when justice shall hold its sword between the strong and the weak, but for the present its possession is little better than a mockery. The antidote has been absorbed by the poison it sought to destroy!

The Johnsonian period of reconstruction was one of extreme peril to the Republic, and not until some future historian shall reveal the secret workings of Johnson's ambition, and his efforts to seduce loyalty from the path of duty will the world know how near the nation came to its second betrayal, and what a debt of gratitude it owes to U. S. Grant for his firmness and patriotism in resisting Executive usurpation. There was the true ring to his letter to the President of August 1st, 1867, wherein he protested against the removal of certain officers who had proven distasteful to the rebels:

"I earnestly urge, in the name of a patriotic people who have sacrificed hundreds of thousands of loyal lives, and thousands of millions of treasure to preserve the integrity and union of this country, that this order be not insisted upon. * * * This is a Republic where the will of the people is the law of the land. I beg that their voice may be heard. * * * The order will be interpreted by the unreconstructed element in the South, those who did all they could to break up this Government by arms, and now wish to be the only element consulted as to the method of restoring order, as a triumph. It will embolden them to renewed opposition to the will of the loyal masses, believing that they have the Executive with them."

The same spirit is shown in his letters of 1868, and in his conduct during that trying period which culminated in the impeachment of the President. He could not be turned from the path of right. He resisted every attempt to use the army for of Johnson's schemes. truth his words to the ary 3d, 1868:

and this whole matter, to the end, as an atte in the resistance of hesitated to assume the lers, and thus to destroy e the country."

President Grant to the
, by an overwhelming

majority, was but a fitting tribute to his distinguished services to the country. His elevation to the high position closed the work of the soldier, and introduced the work of the statesman. We need no better proof of the appreciation of his first term by the people than the unqualified indorsement given him for the second term. The convention that gave him the nomination paid him the rare compliment of a unanimous vote on the first ballot, and throughout the Union his election was hailed with satisfaction and joy.

To pass correct judgment upon President Grant's administration it is necessary to consider the difficulties which have surrounded him. He came into power amid public dissensions on the Southern questions consequent upon the unfortunate policy of Andrew Johnson. The party that had elected him was not a unit on any of the important questions which had agitated the country from the beginning of Johnson's apostasy. The party had within it too many men anxious to be regarded as leaders with pet policies of their own to impress upon the new administration. Some favored a firm policy, with sufficient military force to maintain it until loyalty throughout the Southern States could protect itself; others, equally honest, favored a liberal, magnanimous course, dependent upon the honor and good faith of the ex-Confederates for its success. Some insisted upon radical measures as best calculated to produce good results; others opposed them, and urged a conservative policy as the only one that could restore a healthy condition of affairs throughout the South. These opposing views led to divisions, and whichever side the Executive favored he was sure to invite the hostility of the other. He was therefore compelled to rely upon his good judgment and be guided by his sense of right and justice as cases requiring his interference were presented. The responsibility which should have been borne by Congress was too often forced upon the Executive, and out of this assumption of power that could not, under his oath of office, be evaded, grew those dissensions which culminated, at the close of his first term, in the alienation of some of the most respected leaders of the party. Such men as Sumner, Schurz, Trumbull, Greeley, and others, who had sustained his first election, arrayed themselves in deadly hostility to his second. Their personal prejudices had blinded them to justice, and they determined to destroy the party that had given them prominence, in order to defeat the man who had stood in the way of their ambition. But the people, quick to detect the right from the wrong, the guilt from the pure gold, turned their back upon the men who boasted of their influence to control the masses, and responded with enthusiasm to the support of Grant, whose course they approved, and in whose integrity and patriotism they had unbounded confidence. The result was his triumphant election, by a popular majority, greater than had been given to any President since the days of Washington.

The difficulties which were presented at the beginning of his second term were hardly less formidable than those which surrounded his first. Defeat had but increased the activity and vitalized the opposition of those Republicans who had gone over to Democracy. Their alliance was no longer secret, but open. Without any definite policy of government upon which they could agree, they were a unit on the general policy of opposing Grant and his administration. Thus obstacles were placed in his path, and the abuse which became organized during the campaign followed him throughout his second term, gaining strength whenever his positive character stood in the way of corrupt schemes and the bad men who favored them. But their assaults have been in vain. The character they endeavored to destroy was too far above their reach, and to-day it stands as high in the love and confidence of the American people as when it was enthroned in their affections at the close of the rebellion.

No grander tribute can be paid to the retiring President than to say that he seemed unconscious of the presence of his assailants, and never used his high trust to punish or oppose them. He has gone straight forward in the path of duty, neither turning to the right nor the left to indulge in personalities or to refute slander. Conscious of his own rectitude and of the purity of his motives, he has been content to be misunderstood by many who should have been his friends, leaving the vindication of his labors to the tribunal of public opinion, which seldom errs in its judgment, and to impartial history, which separates the true from the false, and renders justice where justice has been earned.

The administration of President Grant in its entirety has been a decided success. Our foreign relations have been satisfactory, and dangers which at times threatened to disturb the peace have been met and overcome by wisdom and diplomacy. American citizenship has been respected everywhere, except in our own land. Our differences with England were amicably settled by the payment to us of $15,000,000 in gold. The vexed San Juan boundary question was decided in our favor. The close of the Franco-Prussian war found us on friendly terms with both nations. The Spanish war-cloud, which seemed ready to burst, was rendered harmless by a firm and equitable policy. Every department of our foreign affairs has been managed with good judgment, and has reflected credit upon the nation. Our financial policy has been no less successful. Our credit has been improved, and the value of our currency advanced, while the public debt has steadily decreased in the face of greatly reduced taxation. The burdens of the war have been growing lighter yearly, and will be eventually lifted from the shoulders of the nation, if future administrations follow the prevailing policy of the past eight years. The hard times and the consequent business depression throughout the country have tested our financial policy, and proved it equal to the severest strain. No better indorsement could be given than the fact that our national securities and our currency have remained unimpaired during a period of business embarrassment that has affected all other securities.

Although the civil service under Grant's administration has been assailed by his enemies, and the atmosphere of politics made impure by the pestilential charges of corruption raised against it, time will prove it, what its friends have claimed it to be, equal to the best civil service in our history.

To claim that it has been faultless would be to claim human perfection. A few rascals have crept into office, but they have been driven out as soon as their true character was found out. They got in in spite of precaution to keep them out. They went out as soon as it was known that they were in. Dishonesty has been the rare exception under Grant's administration, while official integrity has been the rule. The records show this. A comparison of defalcations with those of former Administrations prove it. But the enemies of the service have magnified its few faults. A single failure out of tens of thousands of appointments has been held up as a fair specimen of the whole. A single charge a thousand times repeated has been made to appear a thousand cases of corrupt practice. The flaws in the marble have been exposed to inspection, while the solid and enduring shaft has been carefully concealed from sight. But in spite of the envy, jealousy, prejudice, and partisan hatred which have been actively engaged in the work of misrepresentation, Grant's civil service will ever commend itself to fair-minded citizens, irrespective of party considerations.

His devotion to the Indian peace policy will ever remain a leading feature of his administration. His belief that Indians were susceptible of civilization has not been changed, and the successful results of his policy have long since vindicated its wisdom. In the midst of public excitement urging the extermination of the Indians because of the cruel acts committed by hostile tribes, he has stood firm to the policy of justice and humanity, believing that the acts of the guilty should not bring vengeance upon the heads of the innocent. For his consistent course in his treatment of the Indians he deserves, and will receive, the thanks of the Christian world, and if those who succeed him follow out the policy he inaugurated the Indian question will soon cease to vex the land.

But we are too near the temple to do full justice to its proportions. When party passion shall give place to reason, and time removes those prejudices which blind men to the truth, the Administration of President Grant will be regarded as one of the most praiseworthy of our history. Its merits will stand the test of time, and its virtues will command the admiration of mankind when its few faults shall have been buried in oblivion. The sense of gratitude is not yet dead among the American people, and Ulysses S. Grant, whether regarded as a soldier or a statesman, will be held in affectionate remembrance as long as patriotism prevails and public virtue upholds the cause of freedom.

A PEN PORTRAIT OF PRESIDENT HAYES.—A Columbus, Ohio, correspondent of the Philadelphia Press describes President Hayes as a very cheerful man, with a full sandy beard, slightly touched with silver streaks; a full face, ruddy and glowing with health; no crows' feet, no furrows, a well-shaped mouth, good teeth; two large, open, blue eyes of kindly expression; a smile on his lips; a high, broad, clear forehead; a voice, deep, strong and sonorous; large, shapely limbs; a full breast, quick but not nervous of movement; moderately quick but not rapid of speech; a good listener, calm, cool, dispassionate, anything but radical; never cross, short, or sharp; always affable, kind and candid, with no secrets to whisper, no plots to promote, no tricks to explain; open as the day, firm as a rock, pure as a woman, with no bad habits, whether of tobacco, whisky, or anything else; pure and plain of speech, popular among all classes, without affectation, mock dignity, or the least suspicion of demagoguery; wearing the same face for all, speaking the same language to all, bearing himself with dignity and modest reserve; regular in his hours, happy in his family relations as man can be, strong in the affections of the people; such is General Hayes, the President-elect of the United States. No man was ever so fortunate. He has not a single personal enemy in Ohio, a fact true perhaps of no other prominent politician in Ohio. In all his long public career as Congressman, General in the army, Governor three times, there is nothing to explain, and no charge has ever been made against him of any kind whatsoever. It is doubtful if any man living is less open to criticism or reproach. Even the Democratic members of the Ohio General Assembly, at the end of this protracted campaign, speak well of him.

RUTHERFORD BIRCHARD HAYES.

THE NINETEENTH PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

ANCESTRY.

"But by your father's worth if yours you rate,
Count me those only who were good and great!

* * * * *
'Tis phrase absurd to call a villain great!
Who wickedly is wise, or madly brave,
Is but the more a fool, the more a knave.
Who noble ends by noble means obtains,
Or, falling, smiles in exile or in chains—
Like good Aurelius let him reign, or bleed Like Socrates—that Man is great indeed!"

—POPE.

Even Samuel J. Tilden's biographer, appreciating the reverence innate in man for a generous ancestry, traces his lineage to a noble stock—to the regicide reformers of Old England. What a caricature! Oliver Cromwell degraded in Ralph Nickleby! A caitiff falling from a hero! A satyr from a god!

But in Rutherford Birchard Hayes, the noble character of the parent stock, a warrior race, patriotic and intrepid, robust and vigorous, physically and intellectually, and extending back into a remote age, is illustrated in the abilities and virtues of the scion. In the early history of old Scotia, in the periods when the shores of Caledonia were ravaged by the old North pirates, the terrible vikings of Scandinavia, "The Hay of Luncarty," an heroic plowman, on a memorable occasion, discovering the approach of the invader, commanded his sons: "Pull your plow and harrow to pieces and fight." He and his sturdy boys fought. In a narrow pass near their humble hamlet they valiantly met and repelled the invader. The deed of "The Hay" will not die. Its intrepidity and patriotism made him famous—a leader—among a people renowned for courage. "The Hay" became a head of one of the most illustrious clans in Scotland. "The blood of Douglas" brooked no superior. Down through the mighty and troublous days of Scotland and England, down through our colonial and revolutionary periods—in all their struggles—and subsequently throughout our history, heroic and patriotic men and women, of high and steadfast courage, of enlightened religious and moral faith—the Russells, Lees, Smiths, Birchards, and Austins—soldiers, statesmen, authors, and divines—champions of "Liberty and the Word"—illustrate and honor the Hayes genealogy. "The Hay of Luncarty," the intrepid Scot plowman, in heroic virtue, finds a rival in the famous preacher of Weathersfield and Hadley, in the Rev. John Russell, one of our colonial divines, who for several years, in defiance of the Stuart, concealed and protected the famous Regicides at Hadley. In Rutherford B. Hayes, in the soldier, statesman, and patriot of to-day, this generous stock, in ability, courage, and steadfast loyalty to country and faith, has a manly scion.

HIS BIRTH AND PARENTAGE.

Rutherford B. Hayes was born October 4th, 1822, in the town of Delaware, Ohio. His father, Rutherford Hayes, was born in Vermont, and emigrated to Ohio in 1817. As a business man, the father was intelligent, enterprising, and active. As a citizen he was above reproach, and was distinguished among his neighbors alike for his independence and for his integrity and thrift. He was not wealthy. His death in July, 1822, left the family in comparatively straightened circumstances. But the widow, Mrs. Sophia Hayes, a woman noted for the great energy of her character—industrious, capable, and self-reliant—a sincere Christian—affectionate, and devoted, as only such women are, to her children, ably supplied the loss. The education of her children was her supreme care—the grand aim of her exemplary life: their culture not merely in scholarly lore, in which she was aided by her brother, Mr. Sardis Birchard, but in those higher and nobler attainments of Christian virtue and duty only learned under a pious mother's teaching and example.

HIS EARLY TRAINING—AT SCHOOL, COLLEGE AND IN LAW.

The whole life of Rutherford B. Hayes is the crown of her noble success. He was early sent to school. With Mrs. Joan Murray young Hayes studied the rudiments of English. With Judge Sherman Finch he studied Greek and Latin, and these studies were extended at the Academy at Norwalk, Ohio, under the scholarly instruction of the Rev. Mr. Chapman. In 1837, at Isaac Webb's noted institution at Middletown, Conn.—a preparatory school for students entering Yale—young Hayes prepared himself for college. In 1838, at the age of sixteen, he entered Kenyon College after passing the usual examination; and in 1842 he graduated with the highest honors, delivering the valedictory of his class. At college, young Hayes' favorite studies were mental and moral philosophy, mathematics and logic, and the languages, particularly the German and French, which he mastered and translates with ease, speaking the French with considerable fluency. He early entertained an inclination for the law, under the influence of Mr. Ebenezer Lane, an eminent jurist of Ohio, and long a Justice of the Supreme Court of the State, and while attending the proceedings of the courts. He accordingly, upon leaving college, entered upon the study of law at Columbus in the office of Mr. Sparrow, a gentleman of distinguished merit in the legal profession. In 1843 he entered the law school of Harvard University, then under the charge of the celebrated jurists, Justice Story and Prof. Simon Greenleaf, and finished the course of lectures in 1845. While in Boston he attended the lectures of Prof. Longfellow on foreign literature, and those of the great Agassiz upon physical and natural science. In the courts of the "Hub," the arguments of Webster, profound and learned, and in Faneuil Hall, the magnificent speeches of "God-like Dan" upon the great political questions of the day, at once instructed and delighted the thoughtful young student. He also at this time made the acquaintance of the venerable patriot, ex-President John Quincy Adams, at his home in Quincy.

HIS TRAITS AND CHARACTER AT SCHOOL AND COLLEGE.

Great diligence and proficiency in his studies, and irreproachable morals, was the portraiture of his character drawn by his several instructors. Everywhere he was the popular favorite: a popularity everywhere won by a manly bearing, a frank and generous spirit, and upright conduct. It was these that early secured for young Hayes, in Judge Finch, an interest so deep that caused the Judge to devote the hours between the labors of his profession to his instruction in Latin and Greek. It was these that challenged "the sincere respect and esteem" of Isaac Webb while awarding him the first prize for proficiency "in Latin, Greek, and arithmetic:" this "conduct" which did "honor to his mother." It was these which won for him the esteem and friendship of Story and Greenleaf—that at Kenyon, as at Cambridge, secured him the attachment and applause of his college mates, many of whom have since been distinguished for their brilliant talents, scholarly attainments, and eloquence—such men as Lorin Andrews, Guy M. Bryan, Stanley Matthews, Christopher Wolcott, Geo. Hoadly, Manning F. Force, R. E. Trowbridge, and J. B. L. Curry—all of whom, although some of them are of opposite politics, have borne manly testimony to the sterling character and talents of their cherished classmate. In the language of one, now an eminent jurist: Hayes, at college, "behaved like a considerate, mature man;" "great common sense" distinguished "his personal conduct:" "he never uttered a profane word!" In the language of another, now also an able lawyer: Hayes, at Kenyon, "was a noble, chivalrous fellow, of great promise;" "he was popular, magnanimous, manly;" "he left a glowing memory—a memory that was a fascination!"

HIS MARRIAGE.

In December, 1852, at Cincinnati, by Prof. L. D. McCabe, of the Ohio Wesleyan University, Mr. Hayes was united in marriage to Miss Lucy Webb, an estimable lady, of rare accomplishments and domestic virtues—a most fortunate union, which has greatly influenced his character and life. Her father, Dr. James Webb, was a popular practicing physician of Chillicothe. He was one of our early anti-slavery heroes.

In 1833 he died, in Lexington, Kentucky, where he had gone to superintend the arrangements preliminary to the departure to Liberia of certain slaves liberated by himself and father. Her grandfather, Lieut. Col. Cook, in 1777, in the army of the Revolution, was attached to the regiment of Col. Andrew Ward. Hence, in the Presidential Mansion for the next four years, both in the person of the General and that of his lady, we shall have worthy representatives of the old revolutionary blood.

AS A JURIST.

Of course we can give but a meager outline of his many triumphs as an advocate. Admitted to practice in the courts of Ohio in 1845, the young lawyer, proud of his profession, and burning with an ambition for distinction in its honored walks, hung out his "shingle" at Lower Sandusky, now Fremont, Sandusky county, Ohio. In 1846 he formed a law partnership with Gen. Ralph P. Buckland, subsequently a member of the State Senate, and a Union veteran in the war of the Rebellion; but, in 1848-'9 failing health forced him to seek recuperation under the climate of Texas with his friend Guy M. Bryan. Six months of active life on the prairies, boating, fishing, and hunting, restored his constitution to robust health, which since has never failed.

In 1850 he established himself in an office in Cincinnati, and in 1854 united in a law partnership in that city with R. M. Corwine and W. K. Rogers, under the firm name of Corwine, Hayes & Rogers. But his profession, laborious and severe as was his application to its duties, did not wholly engross his busy life. Literature also claimed him as a devotee. He divided his studies with the law. The pages of Shakspeare, Burke, Webster and Emerson were his favorites; and the influence of these, and that of his literary club, a renowned institution of Cincinnati, of which he was eleven years a member, and at the social gatherings of which he enjoyed the society of such men, distinguished alike for their professional abilities and literary culture, as Chief Justice Chase, Tom Corwin, the Ewings, father and son, Gen. Pope, Gen. Edward F. Noyes, Stanley Matthews, Manning F. Force, R. D. Mussey, and others—the influence of these is illustrated in his speeches, inaugurals, and messages, all as compositions chaste in style, fluent in their diction, and forcible in logic and matter. Such an application and training begat its reward. Success was a natural consequence.

Hence, as in his maiden effort in the United States District Court at Cincinnati, in an important "action to prevent or enjoin the building of a railway bridge across the bay of Sandusky," with the elder Ewing as an opponent; so in the celebrated Nancy Farrar case, in which the insane culprit had poisoned all the members of two families, with an opponent like Geo. E. Pugh for the State, carrying the case to the Supreme Court before Justices Corwin, Thurman, and Ranney, and saving the life of the wretched lunatic after her conviction by the lower court; so in the James Summons murder case; so as city solicitor of Cincinnati—elected by a Democratic vote in the City Councils with Caleb B. Smith, subsequently Secretary of the Interior, as his chief competitor—and throughout his practice, he acquired and maintained the reputation of a jurist, learned, able, conscientious, and faithful. Repeatedly he was opposed by some of the ablest jurists of the State: his high character and abilities were acknowledged by all. As solicitor of the city, in his many important judgments, many of them involving heavy interests, and all marked by ability and a conscientious sense of duty, Mr. Hayes was not merely the legal adviser of the municipality: in many the comprehensive views of the statesman crop out in the opinions of the jurist. In a noted one in 1859, in discussing the power of the Councils to contract a debt for "water-works purposes," he denies the power of the city to do so without further authority from the Legislature: he opposes on principle the creation of new debts, and the consequent entailment of new and heavy burdens upon the people by increased taxation.

AS A SOLDIER.

The Rebellion, in 1861, found Rutherford

B. Hayes among the foremost in the field of perilous duty. As major of the 23d Ohio volunteers, as judge advocate of the department, and as lieutenant colonel of the regiment, in the summer and fall of 1861, Hayes was active with the army of Rosecrans in the gallant work of clearing the mountainous regions of West Virginia of a formidable enemy. In the fall of 1862 he was at South Mountain. Leading the Union advance at the head of his regiment—one of the regiments of the famous "Old Kanawha" brigade—against superior forces, posted advantageously on the crest of the mountain, Lieutenant Colonel Hayes encountered a stubborn resistance. The rebels disputed every foot of ground, but Hayes, charging rapidly and gallantly, again and again, drove the rebels out of the woods, drove them across the fields, and up the mountain. Wounded and fainting from loss of blood, but recovering, he advanced his regiment, which had retired upon his fall; falling again while fighting at the head of his men, he was carried from the field; again he reappeared, with his wounds half dressed, at the head of his regiment, animating his comrades and directing the fight, until, falling again exhausted, he was again carried from the field. The remainder of the brigade arriving, the enemy, by a brilliant bayonet charge, was swept from the crest of the mountain into the woods beyond. It was a gallant fight on a beautiful Sabbath morning in September. It was skillfully fought: it was bravely won. Hayes' gallantry, fortitude, and conduct, his heroism, infecting his little band and sustaining them under tremendous losses—a loss of one-half of their number hors du combat—against heavy odds, until re-enforced, secured a handsome victory to the Union forces.

This heroism, the intrepidity, skill, endurance, and dash, displayed at South Mountain, never deserted him: it was conspicuous in his every fight. In 1863 he pursued and captured the sanguinary raider, John Morgan. At Clyde Mountain, in the spring of 1864, in command of a brigade against the enemy fortified upon its summit, charging, at the head of his men, through the woods, over bogs and creeks, with hundreds falling around him, amid a storm of "iron hail," he swept over the works, and bayoneted their defenders under their barricades.

In July, at Winchester, in command of a brigade, he, with the gallant Mulligan, moved out to meet a supposed reconnoissance by the enemy, but the reconnoissance, developing into a movement in heavy force, Hayes and Mulligan were surrounded—closed in on both flanks. No retreat was proposed. He and Mulligan continued to advance, but an annihilating fire from artillery and infantry, in front and on both flanks, mowed down by scores the devoted band. Mulligan fell. Hayes, with great coolness and judgment, slowly retreated to a hill inaccessible to cavalry, and turning, hurled back the yelling pursuers. His horse had early been killed under him. Hence, from morn till midnight, on foot, always exposed in the position of danger, Hayes, by intrepid daring, endurance, and skill, rescued his little command from annihilation by overwhelming numbers. Again at Berryville, Va., his gallantry and skill illustrated his devotion to the national cause. At the Opequan, or Winchester, in September, 1864, one of Sheridan's master triumphs in the valley, where, defeated at noon and disaster apparently inevitable, at nightfall he was victorious: in the recovery of the day, in the charge of the reserves under Crook, Hayes' brigade again led the advance. Striking for the flanks of the victorious enemy, and charging with a yell amid a storm of death-dealing missiles, over morasses in which his men sank to the chin—over morasses flanked by high banks—up the banks, up the hills, through the woods, carrying the enemy's fortifications, flanking and defeating him, he entered Winchester at the head of his men in hot pursuit of Early. At Fisher's Hill, still in pursuit of Early, after Opequan, again turning the enemy's flank, by pushing his way up mountains, through woods, and down ravines, supposed to be impassable, he, with indomitable perseverance, courage, and admirable skill, carried the enemy's position with a yell, and completed the rout and dispersion of the panic-stricken foe.

At Cedar Creek, in October, the scene of Sheridan's memorable ride, and ever-glorious victory, again the "Old Kanawha," under Hayes, sustained the early brunt of the fight, exacting all the heroism of its intrepid commander. Overlapped and assaulted impetuously on both flanks and assailed in front, his line rapidly melted away: Hayes was left alone, exposed to a murderous fire. A heavy volley was aimed at him. It killed his horse, riddling it with a score of bullets. Plunging forward in its death throes, it violently threw its rider, dislocating his ankle, and bruising him from head to foot: he, nevertheless, regained his regiment. At the crisis of the battle, Sheridan's arrival, after his spirited ride, changed the whole face of affairs. "Boys, we must go back to camp," was his inspiring cry. Back they went right gallantly. Rapidly reorganizing his broken ranks, and reforming his line, with the "Old Kanawha" in the center, he charged Early impetuously in front and flank, forcing him back upon Cedar Creek, finally breaking his army in utter rout, and pursuing and capturing prisoners, artillery, arms, camps, and baggage. The victory was as complete as glorious. Early was squelched.

It was on this memorable field that Sheridan, clasping the hand of Hayes, exclaimed: "Colonel! from this day forward you will be a brigadier general." Ten days later the commission arrived: a little later that of major general. Wounded four times, and a hundred days under fire, exposed to death in a series of brilliant actions, his promotions were but the well-earned meed of merit in the field.

AS A STATESMAN.

Rutherford B. Hayes at no period of his life was a Democrat. Originally a Whig, a disciple of the national school of Webster and Clay, his maiden vote for President was cast for the gallant Henry Clay. His next was for Harrison; and his last, as a Whig, for Winfield Scott. The Whig party having collapsed under the slavery issue, Gen. Hayes enlisted under the banner of Republicanism, and earnestly labored, by voice and vote, first for the election of Frémont, and next for that of Abraham Lincoln. In 1864, while in the field, without his knowledge, without his connivance, against his wish, he was nominated for Congress by the Republican convention of the 2d Congressional District of Ohio. In 1866 he was renominated by acclamation. In 1867 he was nominated for Governor, and in 1869 renominated by acclamation and re-elected. In 1872 he declined an election to the United States Senate, refused a federal appointment, and had retired, as he hoped, to private life, but in 1875 was recalled to active politics by an appeal of the Republicans of Ohio, of the country, in their travail, for the prestige of his name: a third time he was elected Governor of Ohio.

Few men, now living, have a record so grand. His every victory, in politics as in the field, was a triumph of the nation. In all, the spirit of the patriot, the inflexible champion of his country and freedom—equal rights for all—ruled and triumphed, and his countrymen were the beneficiaries. In none did private ambition, a thought of self, a mere wish for honors or place, predominate. In all duty was supreme: duty to freedom, to humanity, to country! In 1864, upon his first nomination to Congress while in the field, he endeavored to evade the honor: his duty was in the field—at the front. Springing spontaneously from his friends, from those he esteemed and loved, and recognizing and appreciating it as a testimonial to his worth, his patriotism and gallant services in the field, he no doubt felt greatly honored. He finally accepted the nomination. A seat in Congress, associated with men distinguished for learning, abilities, and eloquence—the lawmakers of the land—is a high and honorable one. It is one ambitiously sought by even the greatest. Under other circumstances, the proffered honor would have greatly pleased the General. As it was it manifestly annoyed him. Having accepted it, however, he, as a high-spirited man, naturally wished to succeed; but, under no circumstances, whether necessary to success or not, would he abandon one duty, or evade one peril, at the front. In a letter to a friend in Ohio, dated "Sheridan's Camp, August 24th, 1864," he says :

"Your suggestion about getting a furlough to take the stump was certainly made without reflection. An officer fit for duty, who, at this crisis, would abandon his post to electioneer for a seat in Congress ought to be scalped. You may feel perfectly sure I shall do no such thing."

His wish for success was strong, but his sense of duty to his country in the field in the supreme hour of her peril was stronger. Against it he would tolerate no private wish—no selfish ambition. His patriotism was crowned with success. His soldiers, already idolizing him, and glorying at this new manifestation of his self-sacrificing spirit, cried out at the Opequan, at the brunt of the fight: "One more charge, Colonel—Victory and Congress!" He was elected, triumphantly elected, in despite of the lying caricatures and ribald lampoons of the Democracy, by a majority of 2,450 votes, over their strongest man. After the fall of Richmond, after the surrender at the Appomattox, and all armed resistance to the national authority had ceased, Gen. Hayes, in December, 1865, took his seat in the House.

In Congress, before the people, and as Governor, by his votes, speeches, and influence, he maintained the good faith, the honor, and the interests of the nation. His comrades of the "Old Kanawha" never wanted an advocate: his time was ever at their disposal in Congress and before the departments at Washington. As chairman of the Committee on the Library, he was the great enemy of all shoddy or sham in art, but zealously, and with a judgment based upon an enlightened and a liberal culture, encouraged all works of real merit. He was the author's friend. He was chiefly instrumental in adding two wings to the library section of the Capitol, in adding to the volumes of the Congressional Library those of the celebrated "Force Historical Collection," the Smithsonian Library, copies of all books, pamphlets, maps, &c., copyrighted in the United States, and in extending the privileges of the Library to a larger class of public officers.

Both in Congress and as Governor he earnestly encouraged all measures and means tending to humanize the masses—to elevate or improve their condition, or add to their happiness or comfort. He was thus the zealous champion of our public school system. He advocated the establishment of parks, fountains, galleries of art, libraries, colleges, hospitals, and churches: whatever benefits or elevates mankind; and gave a notable example of his sincerity by inducing his uncle, Mr. Sardis Birchard, in his will, to bequeath $75,000 to the citizens of Fremont for a public park and free library! He was his uncle's sole heir: the bequest was consequently at his own expense.

He advocated and encouraged all measures for the development of the industrial resources, or productive industry, of Ohio and the nation—of agriculture, manufactures, and commerce, and of internal improvements by the State and nation. He is the friend of cheap transportation—the zealous champion of civil service, and the enemy of debts and high taxes.

He sustained the great principles underlying "Reconstruction"—freedom, equality, human rights! He demanded irrevocable guarantees of these by amendments to the organic law, basing representation, not upon population, but voters; and secured, in conjunction with Orth, of Indiana, and Cullom, of Illinois, the ratification of the new amendments by Tennessee, which was necessary to render them valid.

Upon all the great questions touching the public debt, or the finances, of the Republic, he was patriotic, inflexible, and sound. He believes that "honesty is the best policy." As the debt of the Revolution was "the price of liberty"—the cost of independence—so the debt of the Rebellion was the price of nationality—of national existence. It was consequently "sacred and inviolable." It ought to be paid, principal and interest: it could only be repudiated or scaled in national dishonor. He denounced all attempts at inflation as expedients only of demagogues or traitors. Inflation was dishonor: inflation was ruin. Its adoption would defeat the pretended purpose for which it was advocated—a relief of “hard times.” Instead of relieving trade, instead of permanently stimulating traffic or business, or of facilitating their revival upon a permanent or solid basis—instead of relieving the masses by giving them permanent or remunerative employment, or rendering the burdens of taxation more tolerable—its adoption, by depreciating the intrinsic value of the dollar by unsettling all values while nominally advancing them to an artificial standard, would inevitably result in cheapening labor, robbing the laborer, and involve all in one common financial ruin and in national disgrace.

THE PRESIDENTIAL CONFLICT — HAYES’ VICTORY A TRIUMPH OF THE NATION.

As in the great campaign of 1875 in Ohio, so in the Presidential conflict of 1876, all these important questions of public policy were involved, as was that of States rights—the grand question, underlying the existence of the Republic, whether, under the Constitution, our Union is a nation, sovereign or supreme within the limits of its powers, with inherent forces capable of maintaining and vindicating its authority and unity, or a confederacy—a simple league of States—liable to disruption at will by any malcontent State. States rights is coeval with the Constitution. It was the invention of those who in 1788 resisted the adoption of our bond of union—our organic law, and developed its mischievous character in the Cabinet of Washington, in the conflict between Jefferson and Hamilton, the founders respectively of our States rights and national schools of politics. Under the teachings of Jefferson’s school, under those of John Taylor, of Caroline, William B. Giles, and John C. Calhoun, and their later satellites, Rhett, Mason, and Jeff. Davis, the early doctrine of States rights was extended through all the forms of nullification into the open doctrine of secession. Only the States were sovereign. They were the judges of their own rights and powers, and of those of the United States. The Union was simply a confederacy, a league of States; the National Government a simple agency created by the States to represent their will, to be dissolved or destroyed whenever, in the judgment of the States, it failed to serve the purposes for which it was created. Originally it was the doctrine of simple malcontents, disappointed theorists, having no reference to slavery; in later years it became the formidable engine of pro-slavery traitors. Again and again it convulsed the nation in perilous contention. Overthrown in argument, in the battle of brains, by Webster and Clay in their conflicts with Hayne and Calhoun, knocked hors du combat by Jackson in his suppression of nullification, it assumed all its malignant proportions under Rhett and Jeff Davis, and its traitorous uses culminated in the deviltry of the rebellion. Baffled by the sword, after immense sacrifices, in its attempted destruction of the nation, it, in the campaigns of 1875-’76, was galvanized by the Democracy into new existence.

Those were perilous periods for the nation. Its traitorous foe rejoiced in anticipated success: in imagination they had already throttled the nation. An election tidal wave had swept the Republicans from Congress: the House was Confederate. A financial crisis was upon the nation. “Hard times” cruelly afflicted all ranks and classes; trade languished; productive industry was checked: the farmer had no market for his crops; the merchant had but few customers; and the workingman no demand for his labor; thousands were idle, and destitution and want, all the evils of a general financial revulsion attendant upon reckless over-speculation, stalked over the land. It was the malcontent’s hour of reprisal. The patriot’s misery was the traitor’s jubilee; the travail of the people the demagogue’s harvest. Eagerly they seized the opportunities. Tilden, Hendricks, Allen, Thurman, and Pendleton, re-enforced by lieutenants and allies in all the States, both in 1875 and 1876, took the field with the grandest hopes. They openly exulted in anticipated victory. They exhausted all the expedients, all the slogans and shams of demagogical craft. They raised the cry of “corruption,” stimulated and openly aided the reckless and slanderous abuse of the highest officers of the Government. They shouted “reform,” “hard times,” “more money,” “let us have a change of rulers," "the people want a change," organized systematic murder, violence, and fraud throughout the States, and, through the House, assessed the national purse for a campaign fund for the collection and circulation of the slanderous perjuries of mercenary informers in the shape of Congressional reports against the highest and purest in the land. All the probabilities were against the nation. In both campaigns the Republicans, at first, were dispirited. The fruits of the victory for which, as the representatives of the nation, they had contended in the rebellion, at such unparalleled sacrifices, were in peril. The most patriotic doubted. Brave men, strong men wavered. All eyes turned to Rutherford B. Hayes. The crises demanded the prestige of his name, a tower of strength. These were calls like that which in 1861 had carried him into the field. That of 1875 he received while at home, unsuspectingly playing base-ball with his children, and rejoicing that he had escaped from the active toils of politics—that he was relegated to the cultivation of his land and the delights of his domestic hearth. It was the call of duty—duty to country, to his party, and the great national principles, upon the success of which depended the salvation of both. His hesitation was brief. He entered the field at once, and under his lead the confidence and enthusiasm of his party soon revived. He boldly raised the national banner. The United States was a nation, not a league—a nation with powers inherent in its organism capable of maintaining its legitimate sovereignty, of enforcing its constitutional authority, and of coercing and punishing all who resisted either or menaced its life; hard money, the earliest possible resumption of specie payments, was the great need of business and the people; the absolute good faith of the Republic demanded the honorable liquidation of all its obligations in the payment of the national debt, principal and interest; the inviolability of our public school system; the development of the wealth and resources of the country; the encouragement of manufactures and commerce by all proper legislation for their protection and support; freedom, justice, and the equality of all men of all races and colors before the law—all these he ably maintained as the basis of government or the wants of the people for the revival of prosperity. There was no dodging of issues—no resort to miserable subterfuges or makeshifts; but a manly square and unflinching battle against shams and cries and frauds of demagogical craft. It commanded the attention of the great financial centers of Europe. Patriotic men, eloquent and able, rallied to his support. Sherman, Garfield, Tilden, Noyes, Foster, Lawrence, and Danforth, a brilliant array of State strength, aided by Morton, Woodford, Schurz, Grosvenor, Oglesby, Windom, Dawes, and Boutwell from abroad, met and routed the Democratic hosts. As at the Opequan, as at Cedar Creek, when all seemed disaster and ruin, the charge of the intrepid leader of the "Old Kanawha" restored the fight and "snatched victory from the jaws of defeat." In 1875 the stars of Allen and Thurman set forever: in 1876 that of Tilden! The nation had again triumphed in the victory of Hayes.

THE CUBAN SLAVERY QUESTION.—The Havana Voz de Cuba, February 24th, referring to President Grant's message, and his statement that Cuba is the only country in which slavery now exists, says while slavery on a large scale exists in Brazil, the Spanish law of gradual abolition will result in ending slavery in Cuba earlier than in Brazil. If foreign government insist that slavery be abolished in Brazil, while it exists in Cuba, then let the Spanish law be exchanged for the Brazilian one, thus doing away with fault-finding and the pretexts of other nations compelling them to blame Brazil, when blaming Cuba. Whether under Spanish or Brazilian law we shall have a pass through a transformation of the greatest importance. Nobody ignores this, yet nobody takes the provisory steps. We cannot understand this indifference on the solution of which the future of the Island largely depends. There is no other country where individual efforts are so strong, and where collective efforts are unknown. * * * Nothing exists outside of war of equal importance to the future of the Island as this labor question.

COUNTING OF THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE GRAND COMMISSION.

PASSAGE OF ELECTORAL BILL IN SENATE.

The bill of the joint committee of the Senate and House on the counting of the electoral votes, after a lengthy, able, and eloquent debate in the Senate, was passed by that body January 25th by the following vote :

YEAS.—Alcorn, Allison, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Chaffee, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill, Price, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Stevenson, Teller, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, Windom, Withers, Wright—Total, 47.

NAYS.—Blaine, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Clayton, Conover, Dorsey, Eaton, Hamilton, Hamlin, Ingalls, Mitchell, Morton, Patterson, Sargent, Sherman, West—Total, 17.

HOUSE REPORTS AND BILL ON ELECTORAL VOTE.

In the House, on January 18th, J. Proctor Knott forced the House, by a vote of yeas 141 to nays 81, to a consideration of the resolutions reported by the House Committee on the Powers, Privileges, and Duties of the House in the count of the electoral vote. They are as follows :

Resolved, First, That the Constitution of the United States does not confer upon the President of the Senate the power to examine and ascertain the votes to be counted as the electoral votes for President and Vice President of the United States.

Second, That the only power which the Constitution of the United States confers upon the President of the Senate in respect to the electoral votes for President and Vice President of the United States is to receive the sealed lists transmitted to him by the several electoral colleges, to keep the same safely, and to open all the certificates or those purporting to be such in the presence of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Third, That the Constitution of the United States does confer upon the Senate and the House of Representatives the power to examine and ascertain the votes to be counted as the electoral votes.

Fourth, That in the execution of their power in respect to the counting of the electoral vote the House of Representatives is at least equal with the Senate.

Fifth, That in the counting of the electoral votes, no vote can be counted against the judgment and determination of the House of Representatives.

Sixth, That the committee have leave to sit again and report hereafter further matter for the consideration of the House.

The passage of these resolutions Mr. Knott urged in a speech of some power and much acrimony.

Mr. Burchard, of Illinois, on the part of the Republican minority of the committee, made a report concluding with the following resolutions :

Resolved, First, That it is in the power and duty of the House, conjointly with the Senate, to provide by law or other constitutional method a mode for fairly and truly ascertaining and properly counting the electoral vote of each State, so as to give effect to the choice of each State in the election of President and Vice President.

Resolved, Second, That in the absence of legislative provision on the subject, or authoritative direction from the Senate and House of Representatives, the President of the Senate, upon opening the certificates, declares and counts the electoral votes for President and Vice President of the United States.

Mr. Burchard advocated their adoption in an able speech, in which he denied the right of either house to review the proceedings of a State in the appointment of electors.

PASSAGE OF ELECTORAL BILL IN HOUSE.

On the same day (January 18th) the electoral bill adopted by the joint committee of the two houses was reported to the House, and its passage was supported by Mr. Payne, of Ohio, the chairman of the committee on the part of the House. The debate was continued from day to day up to the 26th. Messrs. Seelye, Tucker, Hoar, Hill, Hewitt, Hunton, Goode, Lamar, Singleton, Springer, and Walker, among others, advocated its passage. Messrs. Garfield, Hale, Frye, Monroe, and Townsend, among others, opposed its passage as unconstitutional and unwise. On January 26th the bill passed the House by the following vote :

YEAS.—Messrs. Randall (Speaker,) Abbott, Adams, Ainsworth, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, Bayley, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, Banning, Beebe, Belle, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, Bradley, Bright, Brown of Kentucky, Buckner, Burchard of Wisconsin, Burleigh, Cabell, Caldwell of Tennessee, Campbell, Candler, Caulfield, Chapin, Chittenden, Clark of Kentucky, Clark of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Crapo, Culberson, Cutler, Duvall, Davis, Davy, Debolt, Dibrell, Douglass, Durand, Eden, Ellis, Faulkner, Felton, Field, Finlay, Foster, Franklin, Fuller, Gause, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Hamilton of Indiana, Hamilton of New Jersey, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Harris of Massachusetts, Harris of Georgia, Harris of Virginia, Harrison, Hartman, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Hathorn, Haymond, Hendee, Hereford, Hewitt of New York, Hewitt of Alabama, Hill, Hoar, Holman, Hooker, Hopkins, Hoskins, House, Humphreys, Hunter, Hunton, Jenks, Jones of New Hampshire, Kehr, Kelly, Lamar, Landers of Indiana, Landers of Connecticut, Lane, Leavenworth, Lemoyne, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Lynde, Mackey, Marsh, McDougall, McCrary, McDill, McFarland, McMahon, Meade, Metcalf, Miller, Morey, Morgan, Morrison, Mitchell, Neal, New, Norton, O'Brien, Oliver, Payne, Phelps, Philips of Missouri, Pierce, Piper, Platt, Potter, Powell, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, J. B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, Robbins of North Carolina, Robbins of Pennsylvania, Roberts, Ross of New Jersey, Sampson, Savage, Saylor, Scales, Schleicher, Seelye, Sheadley, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stanton, Strait, Stedger, Stevenson, Stone, Swann, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Thompson, Thomas, Throckmorton, Townsend of Pennsylvania, Tucker, Turner, Vance of North Carolina, Waddell, Walker of New York, Walker of Virginia, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warner, Warren, Watterson, Wells of Missouri, Wells of Mississippi, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Wyke, Willard, A. S. Williams of Michigan, Williams of Delaware, W. B. Williams of Michigan, Wilshire, Wilson of West Virginia, Wilson of Iowa, Wood of New York, Yeates, and Young—Total, 191.

NAYS.—Messrs. Baker of Indiana, Baker of New York, Ballou, Banks, Blackburn, Blair, Bradford, Brown of Kansas, Burchard of Illinois, Buttz, Caldwell of Alabama, Cannon, Carr, Caswell, Cate, Conger, Crounse, Danford, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durham, Evans, Eames, Flye, Forney, Fort, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Hale, Haralson, Hendee, Henderson, Hoge, Hubbell, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jones of Kentucky, Joyce, Kasson, Kimball, Knott, Lapham, Lawrence, Lynch, Magoon, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Nash, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Plaisted, Poppleton, Pratt, Purman, Ramey, Robinson, Rush, Singleton, Sinickson, Slemmons, Smalls, Smith of Pennsylvania, Smith of Georgia, Stowell, Thornburgh, Townsend of New York, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Vance of Ohio, Wait, Waldron, Wallace of South Carolina, Wallace of Pennsylvania, White, Whitney, Williams of New York, Williams of Wisconsin, Williams of Alabama, Wood of Pennsylvania, Woodburn, Woodworth—Total, 86.

APPROVED BY PRESIDENT.

On the same day the bill was promptly enrolled, signed by the Speaker, and dispatched to the President, who on the 29th approved it and communicated the following message to the two houses, assigning his reasons for the approval :

To the Senate of the United States:

I follow the example heretofore occasionally permitted of communicating in this mode my approval of the act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877, because of my appreciation of the imminent peril to the institutions of the country from which, in my judgment, the act affords a wise and constitutional means of escape.

For the first time in the history of our country, under the Constitution as it now is, a dispute exists with regard to the result of the election of the Chief Magistrate of the nation.

It is understood that upon the disposition of disputes touching the electoral votes cast at the late election by one or more of the States depends the question whether one or the other of the candidates for the Presidency is to be the lawful Chief Magistrate. The importance of having clearly ascertained by a procedure regulated by law which of the two citizens has been elected and of having the right of this high office recognized and cheerfully agreed in by all the people of the Republic cannot be overestimated, and leads me to express to Congress and to the nation my great satisfaction at the adoption of a measure that affords an orderly means of decision of a gravely exciting question.

While the history of our country in its earlier periods shows that the President of the Senate has counted the votes and declared their standing, our whole history shows that in no instance of doubt or dispute has he exercised the power of deciding, and that the two houses of Congress have disposed of all such doubts and disputes, although in no instance hitherto have they been such that their decision could essentially have affected the result.

For the first time the Government of the United States is now brought to meet the question as one vital to the result, and this under conditions not the best calculated to produce an agreement or to induce calm feeling in the several branches of the Government or among the people of the country. In a case where as now the result is involved, it is the highest duty of the law-making power to provide in advance a constitutional, orderly, and just method of executing the Constitution in this most interesting and critical of its provisions. The doing so, far from being a compromise of right, is an enforcement of right and execution of powers conferred by the Constitution on Congress.

I think that this orderly method has been secured by the bill, which, appealing to the Constitution and the law as the guide in ascertaining rights, provides a means of deciding questions of single returns through the direct action of Congress, and in respect to double returns, by a tribunal of inquiry, whose decisions stand unless both houses of Congress shall concur in determining otherwise; thus securing a definite disposition of all questions of dispute in whatever aspect they may arise. With or without this law, as all of the States have voted, and as a tie vote is impossible, it must be that one of the two candidates has been elected; and it would be deplorable to witness an irregular controversy as to which of the two should receive or which should continue to hold the office. In all periods of history controversies have arisen as to the succession or choice of the chiefs of States; and no party or citizens loving their country and its free institutions can sacrifice too much of mere feeling in preserving through the upright course of law their country from the smallest danger to its peace on such an occasion, and it cannot be impressed too firmly in the heart of all the people that true liberty and real progress can exist only through a cheerful adherence to constitutional law.

The bill purports to provide only for the settlement of questions arising from the recent elections. The fact that such questions can arise demonstrates the necessity, which I cannot doubt will before long be supplied, of permanent general legislation to meet cases which have not been contemplated in the Constitution or laws of the country.

The bill may not be perfect, and its provisions may not be such as would be best applicable to all future occasions, but it is calculated to meet the present condition of the question and of the country.

The country is agitated. It needs and it desires peace, quiet and harmony between all parties and all sections; its industries are arrested, labor unemployed, capital idle, and enterprise paralyzed by reason of the doubt and anxiety attending the uncertainty of a double claim to the Chief Magistracy of the nation. It wants to be assured that the result of the election will be accepted without resistance from the supporters of the disappointed candidate, and that its highest officer shall not hold his place with a questioned title of right. Relieving that the bill will secure these ends, I give it my signature.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Jan. 29, 1877.

SELECTION OF THE FIFTH JUDGE.

On the 31st the following communication from the Supreme Judges, addressed to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House, was received and read in both houses:

Pursuant to the provisions of the second section of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," approved January 29, 1877, the undersigned, associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States assigned to the first, third, eighth, and ninth circuits, respectively, have this day selected Hon. Joseph P. Bradley, the associate justice assigned to the fifth circuit, to be a member of the commission constituted by said act.

Respectfully submitted.

NATHAN CLIFFORD,
SAM. J. MILLER,
STEPHEN J. FIELDS,
W. STRONG,

Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States assigned respectively to the First, Third, Eighth, and Ninth Circuits.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30, 1877.

ORGANIZATION OF ELECTORAL COMMISSION.

At noon of the same day, (the 31st) the "Tripartite Commission" assembled in the Supreme Court room and organized. All the members were present. The special oath required by the electoral act was administered by Mr. Middleton, Clerk of the Court, to Justice Clifford, who, under the act, is the presiding officer of the commission. Justice Clifford then administered the same oath to the other fourteen members. It then completed its organization. Its members and officers are :

MEMBERS OF THE COMMISSION.

Hon. Nathan Clifford, Associate Justice Supreme Court, First Circuit.

Hon. William Strong, Associate Justice Supreme Court, Third Circuit.

Hon. Samuel F. Miller, Associate Justice Supreme Court, Eighth Circuit.

Hon. Stephen J. Field, Associate Justice Supreme Court, Ninth Circuit.

Hon. Joseph P. Bradley, Associate Justice Supreme Court, Fifth Circuit.

Hon. George F. Edmunds, United States Senator.

Hon. Oliver P. Morton, United States Senator.

Hon. Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, United States Senator.

Hon. Allen G. Thurman, United States Senator.

Hon. Thomas F. Bayard, United States Senator.

Hon. Henry B. Payne, United States Representative.

Hon. Eppa Hunton, United States Representative.

Hon. Josiah G. Abbott, United States Representative.

Hon. James A. Garfield, United States Representative.

Hon. George F. Hoar, United States Representative.

OFFICERS OF THE COMMISSION.

Hon. Nathan Clifford, Presiding Justice.
James H. McKenney, Secretary.

B. E. Catlin, } Assistant Secretaries.
G. A. Howard, }

William H. Reardon, Marshal.

A. S. Seely, } Deputy Marshals.
J. C. Taliaferro, }

D. F. Murphy, Stenographer.

COUNSEL FOR THE OBJECTORS TO CERTIFICATE NO. 1.

Hon. Charles O'Connor, of New York.

Hon. Jeremiah S. Black, of Pennsylvania.

Ashbel Green, Esq., of New Jersey.

William C. Whitney, Esq., of New York,

COUNSEL FOR THE OBJECTORS TO CERTIFICATES NOS. 2 AND 3.

Hon. William M. Evarts, of New York.

Hon. E. W. Stoughton, of New York.

Hon. Stanley Matthews, of Ohio.

Hon. Samuel Shellabarger, of Ohio.

RULES TO GOVERN COMMISSION.

The following are the rules adopted by the commission for the government of its proceedings, under the electoral act :

RULE I. The commission shall appoint a Secretary, two assistant Secretaries, a Marshal and two Deputy Marshals, a Stenographer, and such messengers as shall be needful ; to hold during the pleasure of the commission.

RULE II. On any subject submitted to the commission, a hearing shall be had ; and counsel shall be allowed to conduct the case on each side.

RULE III. Counsel, not exceeding two in number on each side, will be heard by the commission on the merits of any case presented to it, not longer than two hours being allowed to each side, unless a longer time and additional counsel shall be specially authorized by the commission. In the hearing of interlocutory questions, but one counsel shall be heard on each side, and he not longer than fifteen minutes, unless the commission allow further time and additional counsel ; and printed arguments will be received.

RULE IV. The objectors to any certificate or vote may select two of their number to support their objections in oral argument and to advocate the validity of any certificate or vote the validity of which they maintain ; and in like manner the objectors to any other certificate may select two of their number for a like purpose ; but, under this rule, not more than four persons shall speak, and neither side shall occupy more than two hours.

RULE V. Applications for process to compel the attendance of witnesses or the production of written or documentary testimony may be made by counsel on either side. And all process shall be served and executed by the marshal of the commission or his deputies. Depositions hereafter taken for use before the commission shall be sufficiently authenticated if taken before any commissioner of the circuit courts of the United States, or any clerk or deputy clerk of any court of the United States.

RULE VI. Admission to the public sittings of the commission shall be regulated in such manner as the President of the commission shall direct.

RULE VII. The commission will sit, unless otherwise ordered, in the room of the Supreme Court of the United States, and with open doors, (excepting when in consultation,) unless otherwise directed.

NOTICE TO THE TWO HOUSES OF ITS ORGANIZATION.

On Thursday (February 1st) the following communication, addressed to the Senate and House, was received in the two houses and read :

WASHINGTON, February 1, 1877.

SIR: I have the honor to inform the House of Representatives that the commission constituted under the act of Congress approved January 29th, 1877, entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4th, A. D. 1877, has met, and, the members thereof having taken and subscribed the oath prescribed by law, organized, and is now ready to proceed to the performance of its duties."

Very respectfully,

NATHAN CLIFFORD,
President of Commission.

PROCEEDINGS IN HOUSE.

The proceedings of the commission was ordered to be printed in the Record.

On the same day, Mr. Payne, in the House, submitted the following resolution, which was read, considered, and adopted :

Resolved, That the Clerk inform the Senate that the House is now ready to receive that body for the purpose of proceeding to open and count the votes of electors of the several States for President and Vice President.

Messrs. Ingalls and Allison were appointed tellers on the part of the Senate, and Messrs. Cook and Stone on that of the House.

PROCEEDINGS IN SENATE.

At two minutes to one o'clock, the President pro tempore of the Senate, (Mr. Ferry,) announced that one o'clock, under the provisions of the electoral act, was the hour at which the Senate was required to appear in the hall of the House, for the purpose, in conjunction with that body, of opening and counting the votes of the electors for President and Vice President. Whereupon, on motion of Mr. Edmunds, the Senate proceeded to the hall of the House, the Members and officers of the House rising to receive them.

ASSEMBLING AND ORDER OF JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

In accordance with the law seats had been provided as follows: For the President of the Senate, the Speaker's chair; for the Speaker, immediately upon his left; for the Senators, in the body of the hall upon the right of the presiding officer; for the Representatives, in the body of the hall not provided for the Senators; for the tellers, Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House of Representatives, at the Clerk's desk; for the other officers of the two houses, in front of the Clerk's desk and upon each side of the Speaker's platform.

The President pro tempore of the Senate took his seat as presiding officer of the joint convention of the two houses, the Speaker of the House occupying a chair upon his left.

He called the joint meeting to order, and said :

"In obedience to the Constitution, the Senate and House of Representatives have met to be present at the opening of the certificates, the counting, and the declaring of the results of the electoral votes for the President and Vice President of the United States for the term of four years commencing on the 4th day of March next. In compliance with law, the President of the Senate will now proceed, in the presence of the two houses, to open all the certificates of the several States, in alphabetical order, beginning with the State of Alabama."

COUNTING OF THE VOTE.

He opened and handed to the tellers the certificate of the State of Alabama, with the duplicates received by mail, which were read, giving ten votes for Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, for President, and ten votes for Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, for Vice President. No objection being made to the votes, they were counted.

In this manner the certificates of the States of Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, and Delaware were opened and read, and there being no objection the several votes were counted.

FLORIDA.

The President pro tempore then handed to the tellers three different sets of certificates from the State of Florida, which were read; the first giving four votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, for President, and four votes to William A. Wheeler, of New York, for Vice President; the second giving four votes for Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, for President, and four votes for Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, for Vice President; and the third, reciting the action of the present Democratic executive authorities of Florida, under a recent law (approved January 17th, 1877,) of the present Democratic Legislature, and the mandamus of the State court in revising and recounting the votes by which the electors for the State were appointed, and certifying that the Tilden electors were appointed.

OBJECTIONS TO COUNT OF VOTE FOR HAYES.

The counting of the four votes of the State for Hayes and Wheeler was objected to by Charles W. Jones, Henry Cooper, and J. E. McDonald, Senators, and David Dudley Field, J. R. Tucker, G. A. Jenks, and William Springer, members of the House: 1st. Because Charles H. Pearce, Fred. C. Humphreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long, who cast the four votes for Hayes and Wheeler, were not the legally appointed electors of the State chosen on the 7th of November last; and 2d and 3d. Because Wilkinson Call, James E. Yonge, Robert B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock were such legally appointed electors and their title was irrevocable; 4th. Because Gov. Stearns' certificate setting forth the appointment of the Republican or Hayes electors was untrue, and was corruptly procured and made in pursuance of a conspiracy between Gov. Stearns and the Hayes electors; 5th. Because the papers certifying the Hayes votes "are fictitious and unreal, and do not truly represent any votes or lawful acts." 6th. Because, if the "pretended certificates" of Governor Stearns, and the "pretended lists of votes" of the Hayes electors "ever had any validity," they "have been annulled and declared void by the subsequent lawful certificate of the present [Democratic] executive" of Florida, made under the act of January 17th, 1877, and the mandamus of the State court, &c.

OBJECTIONS TO COUNT OF VOTE FOR TILDEN.

The counting of the four votes of Florida for Tilden and Hendricks was objected to by S. B. Conover, A. A. Sargent, John Sherman, and H. M. Teller, Senators; and Wm. Woodburn, Mark H. Dunnell, John A. Kasson, and Geo. McCrary, members of the House: 1st. Because the certificates, or papers purporting to be certificates of the votes cast by Yonge, Call, Hilton, and Bullock, "are not authenticated according to the requirements of the Constitution and laws of the United States." 2d. Because such certificates, or papers, or "list of the names of said electors," are not authenticated by "the certificate of the executive authority of the State of Florida," or "accompanied by any valid or lawful certification or authentication." 3d. Because, "by a certificate" "in all respects regular, valid, and sufficient under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and duly authenticated as such," "it appears that Humphreys, Pearce, Holden, and Long," "were duly appointed electors," (and not Yonge, Call, Hilton, and Bullock,) on November 7th, 1876, to cast the electoral vote of the State for President and Vice President.

OBJECTIONS TO COUNTING HUMPHREYS' VOTES.

The counting of the votes of F. C. Humphreys, one of the Hayes electors, was also objected to by Senator Jones and Mr. C. G. Thompson, a member of the House, upon the ground that being "a shipping commissioner" under the National Government, at the date of his appointment, he was ineligible under the Constitution.

The certificates or papers, with the objections, were referred to the commission, and the two houses separated (at 3 o'clock and 5 minutes P. M.)

SUBSEQUENT SHARP PRACTICE IN HOUSE.

The House then attempted a characteristic piece of sharp practice. On the evening previous the report of the Democratic majority of the Florida Investigating Committee had been read in the House. It ends with a resolve, that "at the election, on November 7th, 1876, in Florida," the Tilden electors "were fairly and duly chosen," and "having on the first Wednesday of December, A. D. 1876, cast their votes for Samuel J. Tilden for President and Thomas

A. Hendricks for Vice President, they are the legal votes for the State of Florida, and must be counted as such." But the report of the Republican minority of the committee, whose conclusions are just the opposite, was not read: the minority were not prepared to report. Hence, as a means of getting the resolution of the majority before the electoral commission, while excluding that of the minority, the House, immediately upon the return of the Senate to its own chamber, voted down a motion to take a recess, and Mr. Hoskins, of New Jersey, attempted to force the previous question on the adoption of the resolution. It failed. The Republicans, indignant, fought it determinedly, and compelled them to abandon the attempt.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE ELECTORAL COMMISSION—OBJECTIONS RECEIVED.

On Thursday, (February 1st,) at 3 o'clock P. M., the commission met. The following communication was received and read:

HALL OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 1, 1877.
To the President of the Commission:

More than one return or paper purporting to be a return or certificate of electoral votes of the State of Florida having been received and this day opened in the presence of the two houses of Congress and objections thereto having been made, the said returns, with all accompanying papers, and also the objections thereto, are herewith submitted to the judgment and decision of the commission, as provided by law.

T. W. FERRY,
President of the Senate.

The nature or character of the several objections of the respective parties were stated, and the papers ordered to be printed. As the disposition and arrangements of counsel under the rules had not been completed, further public business was postponed until the following morning, and the commission held a private session for consultation.

OPENING OF THE CASE.

At the meeting of the commission on Friday, (February 2d,) at 10 o'clock A. M., the case was fully opened. The presiding justice (Mr. Clifford) said:

"The case before the commission is that of Florida. Inquiries were made yesterday

'what is the case?' to which I beg leave to respond that it consists of three certificates with the accompanying papers, and the objections to the same. Two of the objectors on each side will be allowed to speak in the opening of the case. Those representing the objections to certificate No. 1 will speak first, and I would remind them that the fourth rule allows them two hours in which they will state the case in the opening arguments in support of their objections, and also in support of any other certificate which they claim to be valid. When they have concluded, two objectors on the other side will speak under the same rules and limitations."

For convenience the cases were numbered 1, 2, and 3.

After some preliminary conversation among counsel and the members of the commission, the case was opened for the Democracy by Messrs. Field and Tucker against the counting of the votes of the Hayes electors, followed by Messrs. Kasson and McCrary for the Republicans in support of that count.

THE ARGUMENTS FOR THE DEMOCRACY.

Messrs. Field and Tucker, in their arguments, going behind the certificates of the Governor of Florida, assail the returns upon which the Hayes electors were appointed by alleging fraud in the county and State canvasses, and conspiracy to fraud between the State authorities and parties at Washington, which they support by the ex parte statements of Democratic affiliates. They cite "only one county"—Baker county—but urge that it was "decisive of the result," and indulge much in "bunkum" appeals to the commission. They detail the acts of the Supreme Court and Legislature of Florida in authorizing a new canvass of the votes of the State cast in November last, and claim that the new count which gives the electoral vote to Tilden is the only fair and legal one. They deny that the certificate of the Governor excludes all proofs of fraud—that it is conclusive evidence of the legal or rightful appointment of electors—that the canvassing board of Florida was invested with any judicial power or discretion in the count, and maintain at length the power and duty of the commission to go behind the certificate in an inquiry for fraud.

ARGUMENTS FOR THE REPUBLICANS.

Messrs. Kasson and McCrary, in their arguments, repel the allegations of fraud in Baker county. They show the Democratic frauds in Jackson, Alachua, and other counties through the illegal voting of railroad trains of Democratic non-residents, ballot-box stuffing, and the like; they sustain the justice and perfect fairness of the returning board by showing that the exclusion of certain votes from the count was in obedience to the mandate of the Florida law, (in force at the date of the canvass,) which commands the canvassers to exclude all returns "irregular, false, or fraudulent;" they expose the unlawful proceedings of the Supreme Court and Legislature of Florida in their extraordinary efforts to secure the State for Tilden—their usurpation of powers prohibited by the Constitution, absorbing, confounding, and practically destroying the three great divisions of Government, the executive, legislative, and judicial; the granting by the court of a quo warranto upon a board functus officio, and its decision, from which an appeal had been taken at the date of the writ; the enactment by the Legislature of an ex post facto law, which directs a recount of the votes by a new Democratic board created for the purpose, and the attempts by ex post facto proceedings to render null and void a duty and acts lawful at the date of their performance—all bearing "prima facie presumption of fraud." They show that the Tilden certificates are "wanting in all the elements of constitutional or legal validity," and are supported only by usurpation, the grossest violations of popular rights, intimidation, violence and fraud. The proposition to go behind the returns in any inquiry for fraud, even if the commission possessed the power to adopt it, they show to be impracticable; it could not with justice and fairness be completed by the 4th of March; but they deny and resist such a claim of power in the commission. It involved a usurpation without a precedent. It proposed to transform the commission into a returning board for the re-canvass of the popular vote of the State. Where was the power for that? Where, under the Constitution, or under the law creating the commission? All the power the commission had in the matter was that devolved by the Constitution upon Congress or upon the President of the Senate, whichever it might be designed by that instrument to "count" the votes. In no view had either any such power. The only duty of either is ministerial, to "count" the votes of the electors, not to scrutinize or re-canvass the popular vote by which they were appointed. Nor can Congress confer upon the commission powers which it does not itself possess. Hence, the only duty of the commission is to ascertain whether the papers before it as certificates are genuine or counterfeit—whether they are duly and truly verified by State authority, as required by the Constitution—whether the electoral college has complied with the law—a simple "ministerial examination;" and when that duty has been completed its functions are exhausted.

WILL THE COMMISSION GO BEHIND THE CERTIFICATES.

At the meeting on Saturday, (February 3d,) at 10.30 o'clock A. M., Mr. O'Connor, under the suggestions of the presiding justice, stated the propositions of his side, when, on motion of Justice Miller, the commission decided that counsel be allowed three hours on each side to discuss the question whether any evidence will be considered by the commission that was not submitted to the two houses by the President of the Senate; and if so, what evidence can properly be considered; and also the question what is the evidence now before the commission.

ARRANGEMENT FOR ARGUMENT.

It was arranged that each side should occupy one-half of its time in a full opening at that meeting, the remainder on Monday, and that three counsel on either side should be heard.

Messrs. Merrick and Black opened for the Democracy, followed by Messrs. Stanley Matthews and Stoughton for the Republicans.

At the meeting on Monday, (February 5th,) at 11 o'clock A. M., Mr. Evarts continued and closed the argument for the Republicans, followed by Mr. Charles O'Connor, who closed the argument for Tilden. The commission took a recess for three-quarters of an hour; when it re-assembled, it proceeded to deliberate with closed doors, and at 3.15 o'clock P. M. adjourned.

ARGUMENTS FOR THE DEMOCRACY.

Messrs. Merrick, Black, and O'Connor in their arguments maintained that the powers of the commission were those which under the Constitution devolved upon Congress in the counting of the electoral vote. Had Congress the power to go behind the Governor's certificate? The two houses, since the election in November last, had, through their committees, gone behind that certificate—had inquired into the alleged frauds at the election, and into all matters touching the appointment of electors. Congress having such power, and that body having delegated its powers to the commission, its power to go behind the certificates of the State authorities, and require evidence of their authenticity or legality, was clear. It was the duty of the commission to do so. Hence, the testimony taken by the congressional committees having been referred to the commission by the two houses, with the objections and the several certificates in the case, all these were now before it, were properly in the cause, and entitled to all the weight of similar evidence before a court of equity. Of themselves the certificates of the State authorities were conclusive evidence of nothing, not even under the law of 1792. Congress had no authority or power to make the issue of the certificate mandatory upon the Governor—he might issue it or not, as he pleased; nor had it the power to declare that, if issued, it should be conclusive; he might issue a fraudulent certificate, or a certificate based upon fraud, to the injury of the rightful electors, nor to declare that its absence should invalidate the rightful vote. Hence the necessity, and the duty, of the commission to go behind the certificates to determine their character.

The constitutional clause in reference to the Presidential electors made it the duty of Congress to count the votes. Before it can count them Congress must first ascertain which are the votes—"the true votes." How is it to ascertain them? How but by an inquiry into the facts? If it possesses any power of inquiry into the character of the votes, its character must be full and ample, and it cannot, by any law, curtail its power to go fully into the inquiry by making the certificate of the Governor conclusive. It must scrutinize the facts antecedent to the issue of the certificate. Hence, the duty, as the power, of the commission to go behind the Governor's certificate; to receive as valid evidence the testimony taken by the congressional committees, the quo warranto decree of the State court, and the recanvass by the Democratic returning board under a law of the Democratic Legislature, all of which they maintain were lawful and just. Besides, that evidence having been once reported and filed, must be accepted as before the court.

ARGUMENTS FOR THE REPUBLICANS.

Messrs. Matthews, Stoughton and Evarts, in their arguments, ably rebut the propositions of Democratic counsel, and declare that the Republicans do not claim that the Governor's certificate is conclusive. They ask, What is the character of the commission? what are its powers under the law, and what is the subject it was investigating? What, then, was the nature of the evidence it was competent to entertain? Was it a court, entertaining a "judicial investigation upon quo warranto?" Where did it derive its authority? Was it a revising canvassing board to determine whether the Governor's certificate is valid, or a "tribunal of special and limited jurisdiction," in determining certain questions relating to the count of the electoral vote, under the Constitution, for President and Vice President of the United States? What, then, is the only evidence it can entertain?

Now, the election of President and Vice President is in no sense a popular election. Nor is the appointment of electors necessarily a popular function. Under the Constitution, under the organic law, their appointment and the method of their appointment are wholly left to the States, and they, by law, may invest their appointment in the people, in the Legislature, in the Governor, or in the sheriff. As a matter of fact, with the exception of Colorado, all the States had invested their appointment in the people. The Constitution had reserved to Congress "control in certain particulars" over their appointment; that is, it designates the day upon which the appointment shall be made, and the day on which the electors so appointed shall cast their ballots for President and Vice President; but when the day of appointment has passed, and the electors on the designated day have cast their votes, these acts are irrevocable either by Congress or the States. There is no power anywhere to revise or reverse them. Nor are the electors bound to vote for any particular candidates. The electoral colleges, under the Constitution, are independent in all their functions, and, though appointed by the votes of one party, have a perfect legal right to vote for the candidates of another party. Hence, the only duty of the commission, under the inquiry referred to it by Congress, is to determine which of the "two sets of votes," claiming to be the electoral votes of Florida, are "the votes lawfully to be counted"—"to separate the lawful from the unlawful" votes—to determine which of the certificates offered is "the one known to the law or made in conformity with the law." Can it in such an inquiry, in the performance of such a duty, go into an investigation of fraud in the popular vote prior to the appointment of electors? Even if it had such a power, was such an investigation possible? An impartial investigation would only vindicate the justness of the appointment of the Hayes electors. Of that there was little doubt.

Such an investigation, if entered into at all, to be just, must be thorough and complete, and would extend necessarily over a greater space of time than that allotted to the commission; but such an investigation was foreign to the purpose for which it was created, and transcended the limits of its jurisdiction. All the testimony permitted them by the Constitution and the laws was that furnished by the acts of the State. Under all the forms of law, State and national, the appointment of the Hayes electors was complete; in their appointment all the requirements of the Constitution and the laws had been literally and legally fulfilled. That was unassailable. The reverse was the fact in reference to the Tilden so-called electors. Their pretended appointment fulfilled none of the requirements of the laws. Its fraudulent character was pronounced by the laws of the United States and of Florida. Even the quo warranto of the Tilden so-called electors admits the Hayes electors to have been the de facto electors on the 6th of December—in the exercise of their functions on the day fixed by law for the vote by the electors for President. As de facto electors in possession, they cast their ballots as prescribed by law. But even admitting fraud, it was a mistake to suppose that "fraud vitiates everything," and the learned counsel instanced many things which it did not vitiate. Hence, the votes of the Hayes electors—the de facto electors on the day designated by law—whether rightfully or fraudulently appointed—were final and irrevocable.

No power exists which can legally disturb them. The quo warranto did not reach or affect them. The appointment of electors is a political, not a judicial act. A mandamus may issue compelling an elective officer to act—to perform the functions of his office, but a mandamus to impede, retard, or impeach an election was "an absolute novelty" in law. Nor was there in the Legislature of Florida an authority or power, by a retrospective or ex post facto law, to review, invalidate or reverse an act legal and final under the laws of the State at the date of its performance. Hence, the only testimony permitted to the commission in the inquiry referred to it, was that furnished by the acts of the State under the Constitution and electoral laws.

DECISION OF THE COMMISSION.

On Tuesday the commission sat with closed doors. At its meeting on Wednesday, (February 7th,) by a vote of 8 yeas to 7 nays, upon the motion of Justice Miller, it ordered that no evidence will be received or considered by the commission which was not submitted to the joint meeting of the two houses by the President of the Senate, except such as relates to the eligibility of F. C. Humphreys, one of the electors.

YEAS.—Messrs. Bradley, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Garfield, Hoar, Miller, Morton and Strong.

NAYS.—Messrs. Abbott, Bayard, Clifford, Field, Hunton, Payne, and Thurman.

On the motion of Mr. Abbott it was ordered, by a vote of 8 to 7, that in the case of Florida, the commission will receive evidence relating to the eligibility of Humphreys, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Abbott, Bayard, Bradley, Clifford, Field, Hunton, Payne, and Thurman.

NAYS.—Messrs. Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Garfield, Hoar, Miller, Morton, and Strong.

QUO WARRANTO AND HUMPHREYS, THE INELIGIBLE ELECTOR.

At the meeting of the commission, (February 8th, at 11 o'clock A. M.) it heard the evidence and arguments respecting the ineligibility of F. C. Humphreys as one of the Republican electors for the State of Florida. An attempt was made by the Democratic counsel to get in evidence as to "the precise time" of serving the quo warranto on the Hayes electors; but the evidence was objected to by Mr. Evarts as inadmissible under the previous ruling of the commission. Objection sustained.

Mr. James E. Yonge swore that in August, 1876, Humphreys was acting as shipping commissioner for the port of Pensacola, Florida. It was an appointment under the U. S. Circuit Court for the northern district of Florida. His commission was introduced. His appointment in 1872 was admitted, but the Republican counsel declined to cross-examine the witness, as no evidence had been adduced showing that Humphreys held the commission on November 7th, 1876—the date of his appointment as elector.

Mr. F. C. Humphreys was sworn and stated substantially: I was a candidate on the Republican ticket in November last for elector. I had held the office of shipping commissioner, but on the 24th of September, 1876, I sent in my resignation of the office to Judge Woods, of the Circuit Court. (Copy of resignation was shown.) It was accepted by the Judge October 2d, 1876, (copy of acceptance shown;) and I received from Hiram Potter, Jr., collector of customs, a notification that he had been assigned by Judge Woods to the duties of shipping commissioner, vacated by the Judge's acceptance of my resignation. (Copy of notification shown.) He also stated that he had not exercised or performed any of the duties of the office since October 5th, 1876, the date of his receiving the Judge's acceptance of his resignation; but that since that date those duties had been performed by Collector Potter.

It also appeared in evidence that Judge Woods was absent at the time in Newark, Ohio, where he received and accepted Humphreys' resignation.

ARGUMENT OF DEMOCRACY.

The presiding justice announced that the whole case was open for argument.

Messrs. Hoadly, Green, and Merrick, in their arguments for the Democracy, maintain "that this office of shipping commissioner, being one to be filled by the court, could only be surrendered up or resigned to the court itself;" that Judge Woods, of the Circuit Court, "acting in chambers," could not, in Ohio, release Humphreys from a trust with which the court, not in chambers, had clothed him in Florida; that Humphreys could not divest himself of the office by his own act—that public policy requires that it should not be at his will and pleasure; that his "paper resignation" and Judge Wood's acceptance of that resignation were not sufficient to divest him of that office—that only the court in session which appointed him could release him from its duties; that on the 7th day of November, 1876, the court had not received or accepted that resignation; that consequently, on that day, Humphreys, in view of the law, still held the office of shipping commissioner, an office of profit and trust under the Federal Government, and was ineligible as an elector for the State. The learned counsel elaborate this position at length, and fortify it with numerous references. They urge that the effect of the disqualification extends to both the State and the elector—that it disqualifies the State from appointing, and the elector from accepting the trust—that it is equivalent to declaring that "the State may appoint from among the number of qualified persons ;” and cite from the debate in the convention which framed the Constitution, and congressional debates and reports, to show that the purpose of the constitutional clause was to protect the States in the choice of electors from the influence of Federal power. They refer to a “multitude of cases in England” which declare that the choice of an ineligible candidate voids the election, and urge that “the same doctrine is applied in many American cases.” But “American cases have differed widely.” They cite a number, and assert that “no American case treats the election of one who at the time was non-qualified, and who attempted to act, as other than an absolutely null appointment.” In Indiana the next highest candidate was elected. In Pennsylvania, New York, and California, the election went back to the people. In the Rhode Island case the Legislature elected. They argued that, if the four Florida electors had been disqualified, it “would be clearly a case of failure to make choice,” and the people would have again to elect, if, as in Rhode Island, the Democratic Legislature did not elect. They also review the evidence before the commission in the papers handed by the President of the Senate to the two houses. They endeavor to break the force of the Hayes certificates signed by Gov. Stearns, dated 6th of December, 1876, and attested by the Secretary of State under the broad seal of Florida. They argue at length, citing authorities, that the judgment of the State court in quo warranto proceedings, determining the law and the facts—that the certificate of the Adjutant General of the State to the appointment of the Tilden electors, that the two sets of certificates of the Tilden electors, (dated respectively December 6th, 1876, and January 26th, 1877,) the certificate of Gov. Drew, reciting the facts of a recanvass of the popular vote, and attesting the choice of the Tilden electors under the acts of the Democratic Legislature of January 17th and 26th, 1877—that these several acts and papers, although most of them were executed subsequent to the casting of the electoral vote of the State in December last, yet were all legal and in time, and unite in proof that the acts of the returning board in certifying the appointment of the Hayes electors were “unauthorized, illegal, and void.”

ARGUMENTS FOR THE REPUBLICANS.

Messrs. Shellabarger and Evarts, in their arguments, maintain that the record of the proceedings in the quo warranto case is not before the commission. It is only alluded to by Gov. Drew, not embraced in his certificates, and there is no evidence in record before the commission that any judgment in quo warranto was ever pronounced. Under the ruling of the commission it had all been excluded ; so had certificates Nos. 2 and 3—all these post election matters, the quo warranto, mandamus, January legislation, and the recanvass—all “these posthumous certificates of post mortem action”—all acts post-dating the electoral vote ; because, under the Constitution, from the very nature of the power involved—that of appointment—and the necessities of the case, all acts of the State in accomplishing the appointment must antedate the performance of the act for which the elector is appointed. That being sound, all the arguments of counsel on the Democratic side about the effect of decisions of the courts in determining the signification of their own statutes, all the decisions which have been referred to in regard to the obligations of all Federal tribunals to follow the interpretation which the State courts put upon their statutes, loses all significance. When the electoral vote of a State has once been cast by men endowed with every muniment of title to the office of elector at the date of their first and last official act—the day of voting under the law—the jurisdiction of the State over the vote has passed away. No power exists in a State to destroy its electoral vote, when once cast—to unseat a President—neither by pretended interpretations of its laws by partisan courts, nor by the enactment by partisan legislatures of laws acting backward. The proposition that it can, simply reduces the Constitution and the whole debate “to the most intense and unmitigated absurdity.” The design of the Constitution, its express requirement, is that every act of the State respecting electors, being all appointment, and appointment only, shall precede the vote. It is not sufficient to start proceedings prior to the vote, but they must be complete and effectual before the act of voting. The power of the State over the electoral votes stops at the moment it puts them under seal, deposits them in "the urn of the nation." If an elector on the voting day is endowed with all the insignia of right, with all the apparent title of office, that can, according to the existing State machinery be held on that day, he is to every possible extent, as against the State, the elector both de facto and de jure. By his vote he accomplishes in fact and law an act of government; but whether he is an officer de jure or de facto, still, being on that day so endowed, so in office, so acting in the actual occupancy of office with all apparent right, his act constituted an act of government—the act of the State was thereby accomplished in law—it was government, not mere election, but government—government inaugurated, accomplished, endowed. It is the last act of the State in exercising its part of the creation of a President; when accomplished, it is irrevocable. If any party after that can try the title it is the nation, not the State. That springs from the very nature of our dual governments, our two sovereignties of States and United States. The boundary of State power is at the point where the vote is sealed and goes to the Capitol. The vote is an accomplished act—the power of the State over it has passed away.

The learned counsel illustrate and enforce these positions in a multitude of forms fortified by numerous authorities, and urge the "monstrous" absurdity of the opposite position. All acts or proceedings, all the machinery for testing or determining the validity of the vote, must precede the casting of the votes. No post hoc judgment can affect them. If it were not so, what would be the result? Every election would be at the mercy of partisan intriguers—of suits at nisi prius—in partisan courts. Every individual disappointed or unhappy about the result, who is "enterprising," would be able to attack and destroy the greatest office in the world, and precipitate the nation in revolution and unutterable disaster. They cite the celebrated case of Robbins, in 1834, in the United States Senate, in which Henry Clay, John C. Calhoun, Daniel Webster, John M. Clayton, Tom Ewing, Willie P. Mangum, Wm. C. Preston, and others, all illustrious as jurists and statesmen, held the same position. Robbins had been elected Senator by the Legislature of Rhode Island. At a subsequent meeting the Legislature attempted to annul Robbins' election by the election of Potter. But these able jurists in the Senate held to the principle that the election of Senator was an act of the State in its sovereign capacity, and when completed could not be reversed; it was irrevocable. So with the electoral colleges. Their appointment was an act of the States in their sovereign capacity. When once completed and the elector has voted, his acts are final and irreversible. Any other principle would destroy all law, would put it in the power of the States to overthrow the Constitution, to destroy it in this its very citadel, and to end the life of the State. As to the eligibility of Humphreys, they had by proofs aliunde established his eligibility—that he had resigned his office of shipping commissioner under the Federal Government long prior to his appointment as elector—that his resignation had been accepted by Judge Woods, of the court appointing him—that he had not since exercised the functions of the office, but that they had been performed by another. They explained in the amplest manner the law of the United States respecting resignations, showing his absolute right to resign at will, and establish his eligibility; but maintain that, whether eligible or not, he having been appointed the elector in law de facto and de jure, on the day of voting, and having voted, his vote must be counted.

At the meeting on Friday, (February 9th,) at 10 o'clock A. M., it was decided that under the law the body was a commission, not a court; that its members were commissioners, not justices, and that the proper title of the presiding officer was president, not presiding justice. The doors were closed, and after debate the commission took a recess for half an hour. At 2.07 o'clock P. M. the commission reassembled. It was ordered that general debate close at 6 P. M., and that, after that hour, each commissioner shall be allowed to speak but once, and not longer than five minutes.

Mr. Thurman offered a resolution declaring that "F. C. Humphreys was not a shipping commissioner on the 7th day of November, 1876," but after some debate withdrew the resolution.

Mr. Edmunds moved, as the decision of the commission, a form addressed to the President of the Senate, setting forth the facts and the finding of the commission to the effect that the Hayes electors had been lawfully elected, that consequently neither of the papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes of Florida numbered 2 and 3, that is, the Tilden certificates, is the certificates or votes provided for by the Constitution, and that they ought not to be counted.

Mr. Hunton moved to amend by substituting that the Tilden electors are the persons duly appointed electors on the 7th day of November, 1876, and that their vote ought to be counted.

Mr. Hunton's amendment was negatived by a vote of 8 to 7, and Mr. Edmunds then withdrew his resolution.

Mr. Garfield offered the following :

Resolved, That four persons, to wit, Frederick C. Humphreys, Charles H. Pearce, William A. Holden, and Thomas W. Long were duly appointed electors of President and Vice President for the State of Florida, and that the votes cast by the aforesaid four persons are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved, That Mr. Edmunds, Mr. Bradley, and Mr. Miller be appointed a committee to draft a report of the action of the commission, as required by law.

The following is the vote by which the first resolution was adopted :

1. Bradley, Edmunds, Frefield, Hoar, Miller, Morton, et al, 8.

2. Abbott, Bayard, Clifton, Payne, and Thur-

sion was then passed, and the commission took a recess for one hour.

At 7.03 o'clock P. M. the commission reassembled.

Upon the motion of Mr. Edmunds, from the committee appointed to prepare a report of the commission in the matter of the electoral vote of the State of Florida, the following was ordered and signed as "the final decision and report" of the commission :

ELECTORAL COMMISSION,

Washington, D. C., Feb. 9, A. D. 1877.

To the President of the Senate of the United States, presiding in the meeting of the two houses of Congress, under the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," approved January 29, A. D. 1877 :

The Electoral Commission mentioned in said act, having received certain certificates and papers purporting to be certificates and papers accompanying the same, of the electoral votes from the State of Florida, and the objections thereto submitted to it under said act, now report that it has duly considered the same, pursuant to said act, and has decided, and does hereby decide, that the votes of Frederick C. Humphreys, Charles H. Pearce, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long named in the certificate of M. L. Stearns, Governor of said State, which votes are certified by said persons as appears by the certificate submitted to the commission, as aforesaid, and marked "number one" by said commission, and herewith returned, are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that the same are lawfully to be counted as therein certified, namely : four votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of the State of Ohio, for President, and four votes for William A. Wheeler, of the State of New York, for Vice President. The commission also has decided, and hereby decides and reports, that the four persons first before named were duly appointed electors in and by said State of Florida.

The ground of this decision, stated briefly, as required by said act, is as follows :

That it is not competent under the Constitution and the law, as it existed at the date of the passage of said act, to go into evidence abundant on the papers opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two houses to prove that other persons than those regularly certified to by the Governor of the State of Florida, in and according to the determination and declaration of their appointment by the board of State canvassers of said State prior to the time required for the performance of their duties, had been appointed electors, or by counter-proof to show that they had not, and that all proceedings of the courts or acts of the Legislature, or of the executive of Florida, subsequent to the casting of the votes of the electors on the prescribed day, are inadmissible for any such purpose.

As to the objection made to the eligibility of Mr. Humphreys, the commission is of opinion that, without reference to the question of the effect of the vote of an ineligible elector, the evidence does not show that he held the office of shipping commissioner on the day when the electors were appointed.

The commission has also decided, and does hereby decide and report, that, as a consequence of the foregoing, and upon the grounds before stated, neither of the papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes of said State of Florida numbered two and three by the commission, and herewith returned, are the certificates of the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that they ought not to be counted as such.

Done at Washington, the day and year first above written.

SAM. F. MILLER,
W. STRONG,
JOSEPH P. BRADLEY,
GEO. F. EDMUNDS,
O. P. MORTON,
FRED'K C. FRELINGHUYSEN,
JAMES A. GARFIELD,
GEORGE F. HOAR,
Commissioners.

Letters, addressed to the President of the Senate and Speaker Randall, notifying them of the action of the commission, were also adopted and signed by the President.

In the Senate on Saturday, (February 10th,) the following was received and read :

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 9, 1877.

SIR: I am directed by the Electoral Commission to inform the Senate that it has considered and decided upon the matters submitted to it under the act of Congress concerning the same, touching the electoral votes from the State of Florida, and herewith by direction of said commission I transmit to you the said decision in writing, signed by the members agreeing therein, to be read at the meeting of the two houses according to said act. All the certificates and papers sent to the commission by the President of the Senate are herewith returned.

NATHAN CLIFFORD,
President of the Commission.
Hon. THOS. W. FERRY,
President of the Senate.

In the House on the same day the following was received and read :

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 9, 1877.

SIR: I am directed by the Electoral Commission to inform the House of Representatives that it has considered and decided upon the matters submitted to it under the act of Congress concerning the same, touching the electoral votes from the State of Florida, and has transmitted said decision to the President of the Senate, to be read at the meeting of the two houses according to said act.

NATHAN CLIFFORD,
President of the Commission.
Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker of the House of Reps.

The following was adopted by the House, and received and read in the Senate :

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House notify the Senate that the House of Representatives will be prepared to meet the Senate in the hall of the House at 1 o'clock P. M. this day, to proceed with the further count of the electoral vote for President and Vice President.

In the Senate, at 12.57 o'clock P. M., the President pro tempore said :

"The House of Representatives has given notice to the Senate that it is ready to receive it at 1 o'clock to continue the counting of the electoral vote. It is now 3 minutes to 1. If it be the pleasure of the Senate it will now repair to the hall of the House of Representatives."

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the hall of the House.

The Senate entered the hall, took the seats provided for its members, and the President pro tempore, after announcing that "the joint meeting of Congress for counting the electoral vote resumes its session," said :

"The two houses, having separated pending the submission to the commission of objections to the certificates from the State of Florida, have reassembled to hear and to coincide or otherwise with the decision of that tribunal, which, by a majority of the commission, in writing, and signed by the members agreeing therein, will now be read by the Secretary of the Senate and be entered in the Journal of each house."

The report and decision of the electoral commission was read, when the President pro tempore asked: "Are there objections to this decision?"

Objections, which were signed by the following gentlemen: Charles W. Jones of Florida, Henry Cooper of Tennessee, Francis Kernan of New York, Eli Saubury of Delaware, J. E. McDonald of Indiana, W. H. Barnum of Connecticut, on the part of the Senate; J. Proctor Knott, David Dudley Field of New York, W. S. Holman of Indiana, J. R. Tucker, Charles P. Thompson, G. A. Jenks of Pennsylvania, J. J. Finley, Milton Sayler, E. Jno. Ellis, W. R. Morrison, Abram S. Hewitt, and William M. Springer, on the part of the House, were submitted by Mr. Field and read:

An objection is interposed by the undersigned Senators and Representatives to the decision made by the commission constituted by the act entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of the vote for President and Vice President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," as to the true and lawful electoral vote of Florida, upon the following grounds:

First. For that the decision determines that the vote cast by Charles H. Pearce, Frederick C. Humphreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long, as electors of President and Vice President of the United States in and for or on behalf of the State of Florida, is the true and lawful electoral vote of said State, when, in truth and in fact, the vote cast by Wilkinson Call, James E. Yonge, Robert B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock is the true and lawful vote of said State.

Second. For that said commission refused to receive competent and material evidence tending to prove that Charles H. Pearce, Frederick C. Humphreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long were not appointed electors in the manner prescribed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, but were designated as electors by the returning board of said State corruptly and fraudulently, in disregard of law and with the intent to defeat the will of the people expressed in the choice of Wilkinson Call, James E. Yonge, Robert B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock, who were legally and regularly appointed electors by the State of Florida, in the manner directed by the Legislature thereof.

Third. For that the decision aforesaid was founded upon the resolution and order of said commission previously made, as follows:

"Ordered, That no evidence will be received or considered by the commission which was not submitted to the joint convention of the two houses by the President of the Senate with the different certificates, except such as relates to the eligibility of F. C. Humphreys, one of the electors."

Fourth. For that said decision excludes all the evidence taken by the two houses of Congress and the committees of each house concerning the frauds, errors, and irregularities committed by the persons whose certificates are taken as proof of the due appointment of electors.

Fifth. For that said decision excludes all evidence tending to prove that the certificate of ——— Stearns, Governor, as also that of the board of State canvassers, was procured or given in pursuance of a fraudulent and corrupt conspiracy to cheat the State of Florida out of its rightful choice of electors and to substitute therefor those who had not been chosen or appointed electors by said State in the manner directed by the Legislature thereof.

Sixth. For that said commission refused to recognize the right of the courts of the State of Florida to review and reverse the judgment of the returning board or board of State canvassers rendered through fraud and without jurisdiction, and rejected and refused to consider the action of said courts after their decision that Charles H. Pearce, Frederick C. Humphreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long were not entitled to cast the electoral vote of Florida; which said decision was rendered by a court of said State in a case lawfully brought before said court, which court had jurisdiction over the subject-matter thereof, and whose jurisdiction over the said Charles H. Pearce, Frederick C. Humphreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long had attached before any act was done by them as electors.

Seventh. For that said decision excludes all evidence tending to prove that the State of Florida, by all the departments of its government—legislative, executive, and judicial, has repudiated as fraudulent and void the certificate of ——— Stearns, Governor, as well as that of the State canvassers, upon which certificate of the said Governor the said commission has acted and by means of which the true electoral votes of Florida have been rejected and false ones substituted in their stead; and

Eighth. For that to count the votes of Charles H. Pearce, Frederick C. Humphreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long as electors for President and Vice President would be a violation of the Constitution of the United States.

There being no further objections, the two houses separated.

In the Senate, after some debate, and after voting down all the attempts of the Democracy to adjourn or to reject the decision of the commission in the Florida case, Mr. Sherman's resolution, "That the decision of the commission on the electoral vote of the State of Florida stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding," was adopted by the following vote :

YEAS.—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—Total, 44.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—Total, 25.

In the House, after an earnest effort on the part of Messrs. Hale, Kasson, McCrary, and others to induce that body to proceed at once to the consideration of the objections, and to continue the count as required by the electoral law, that body took a recess (by a vote of 162 to 107) until Monday morning.

During the roll-call a message from the Senate announced that the Senate had agreed to the following resolution :

Resolved, That the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of the State of Florida stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The message also notified the House that the Senate was now ready to meet the House to proceed with the counting of the electoral votes for President and Vice President.

In the House, on Monday, (February 12th,) Mr. Field offered the following :

Ordered, That the counting of the electoral votes from the State of Florida shall not proceed in conformity with the decision of the Electoral Commission, but that the votes of Wilkinson Call, James E. Yonge, Robert B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock be counted as the votes from the State of Florida for President and Vice President of the United States.

Mr. Knott, as a substitute, offered a long series of whereases, eight in number, arraigning and denouncing the decision of the Electoral Commission, and ending with the following :

Now, therefore, in order that said commission may have an opportunity to correct its manifest inconsistency therein, and to explain how and in what manner it ascertained that the certificate of M. L. Stearns, as Governor of the State of Florida, was on and according to any determination and declaration of any board of canvassers of said State :

Be it resolved, That the decision of said commission, and the grounds thereof, be, and the same are hereby, remanded and recommitted to said commission, with the request that the same be so corrected or explained to this House, and that said commission be further requested to furnish in detail the true reasons of its decision, that this House may be enlightened as to the course it ought to pursue in the discharge of its duties in respect of the vote of the State of Florida under the Constitution of the United States and the act of Congress above referred to, and that in the meantime the votes of Frederick C. Humphreys, Charles H. Pearce, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long shall not be counted.

After some debate they were decided to be out of order under the provisions of the electoral law.

The two hours provided under the law for debate upon Mr. Field's resolution were then occupied by Messrs. McCrary, Banks, Frye, Carr, and Dunnell for the Republicans, and by Messrs. Tucker, Springer, Hurd, Thompson, Walker of Virginia, Robbins, and Field for the Democracy. The efforts of the Democracy against the decision was simply a prolonged cry of "fraud," "fraud"—"the triumph of gigantic fraud"—"the consummation of villainy and fraud" in robbing Tilden of the electoral vote of Florida. All that against the commission of their own creation. The Republicans, while sustaining the decision as eminently just—as the only rightful judgment possible under the Constitution and the laws, and one which vindicated justice and the rights of the people of Florida against the manifold frauds of the Democracy—threw back the charge of fraud. They had courted investigations into all these reckless charges—not merely into the frauds charged in Florida, Louisiana, and South Carolina, but into the notorious frauds in New York city and its surroundings, by which Tilden had stolen its 35 votes; into those of New Haven, Bridgeport, and Hartford, by which the Democracy had robbed Hayes of the electoral votes of Connecticut; into those of Indiana, in which, under its laws, no registration is necessary, and into which voters were imported from Kentucky in such numbers that in one Democratic county Tilden's majority was greater than its whole male voting population. And where were the proofs of Republican frauds in Florida? The charge had not been sustained even by Democratic perjury and forgery. Who was Attorney General Cocke, upon whom the Democracy rely for their proofs? An immaculate Democrat—one of "the pure and undefiled" Democracy of the South! A member of the Florida returning board—a member whose votes and legal opinions had decided the electoral vote of Florida in favor of Hayes, and who only changed his convictions of right and duty, who was only converted to the belief that Tilden had carried the State or was entitled to its electoral vote, through an interview with a lot of New York and other foreign Democratic politicians, with the notorious Manton Marble at their head. So on with the Flemings, Green R. Moores, Floyd Dukes, and others, whose bold perjury had won the applause of Tilden and the Democracy. But under every count and recount the Hayes electors had been chosen. Where, then, were the proofs of Republican fraud? The cry itself was a fraud, an invention of the Democracy for the consummation of the greatest crime in our history, the foisting of Tilden upon the nation as President by organized violence and fraud!

Mr. Hale proposed to amend Mr. Field's resolution so as to make it read:

Ordered, That the counting of the electoral vote from the State of Florida shall proceed in conformity with the decision of the electoral commission.

The amendment was lost—yeas, 103; nays, 167.

Mr. Field's resolution was then passed by the following vote:

YEAS.—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, Jr., Banning, Bell, Blackburn, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Carr, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, Jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Cutler, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Ellis, Faulkner, Felton, Field, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Gause, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Haymond, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Holman, Hooker, Hopkins, House, Humphreys, Hunton, Hurd, Jenks, Frank Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Kehr, Knott, Lamar, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Lynde, Mackey, Maish, McFarland, McMahon, Meade, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Money, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Neal, New, O'Brien, Odell, Payne, John F. Philips, Piper, Poppleton, Powell, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Schleicher, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stenger, Stevenson, Stone, Swann, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Throckmorton, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warner, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Alpheus S. Williams, Jere N. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Fernando Wood, Yeates, and Young—Total, 168.

NAYS.—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Belford, Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard,

Burleigh, Buttz, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Evans, Flye, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Hale, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Hoar, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Joyce, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lynch, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Nash, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Pratt, Rainey, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stowell, Strait, Thornburgh, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Wait, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, G. Wiley Wells, Whitehouse, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Alan Wood, Jr., Woodburn, and Woodworth—Total, 103.

Mr. Field offered the following, which was read, considered, and adopted:

Ordered, That the Clerk inform the Senate of the action of this House, and that the House is now ready to meet the Senate in this hall.

At 2.25 o'clock P. M. the Senate entered the hall and took the seats allotted to Senators.

The President pro tempore then announced that the joint meeting resumes its sessions. The resolution of the Senate concurring in the decision of the Electoral Commission, and that of the House non-concurring were read, and the President declared that the counting will now proceed in conformity with the decision of the commission. The four votes of Florida was accordingly counted for Hayes and Wheeler. The votes of the States of Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas and Kentucky were severally counted without objection. When the certificates of the votes of Louisiana, signed respectively by William P. Kellogg as Governor, and John McEnery as Governor, were opened and read, objections were made to the counting of the votes of the Hayes electors, in a writing signed by Messrs. Saulsbury, McDonald, Stevenson and Bogy, Senators; and Messrs. Field, Jenks, Gibson, Tucker, Levy, Ellis and Morrison, members of the House:

I. Because on the 7th day of November,

1876, there was no law, joint resolution, or other act of the Legislature of Florida in force directing the manner in which electors for said State should be appointed.

II. Because, if any such law existed at that date, it vested the appointment of electors in the people, and the Tilden, not the Hayes, electors had been duly appointed.

III. Because the Hayes electors were not appointed in the manner directed by the constitution and the laws of Louisiana and of the United States, and the list of electors certified by the said Wm. P. Kellogg, claiming to be, but not being, Governor, were false in fact and fraudulently made and certified by said Kellogg.

IV. Because the pretended canvass of the returns of said election by J. Madison Wells, T. C. Anderson, G. Casanave, and Louis Kenner, as returning officers, was without jurisdiction and void: 1st. The statutes of Louisiana gave them no jurisdiction to make such canvass. 2d. Such statutes, if conferring such jurisdiction, are void, because unconstitutional. 3d. Such statutes, in conferring upon returning officers judicial power or discretion to reject returns and determine who were appointed electors, was in conflict with the constitution of the State and of the United States, and anti-republican. 4th. If such statutes are valid, still the returning board was illegal, being constituted of only four persons, all Republicans, when the laws declare it shall consist of five persons, of all political parties. 5th. Said returning board had no legal power to reject returns unless the foundation of such power was first laid as required by the laws, which was not done to an extent to change the result on the face of the returns. 6th. Said returning board had falsely and fraudulently certified the election of the Hayes electors. Said returning board had offered, for a money consideration, to certify a correct count, but failing to find a purchaser, had falsely, corruptly, and fraudulently certified the election of the minority candidates.

V. They especially object to the count of the vote of A. B. Levissee, because ineligible under the Constitution, he holding an office of profit and trust under the National Government at the date of appointment.

VI. They especially object to the count of the vote of O. H. Brewster, because ineligible under the Constitution, he holding an office of profit and trust under the National Government at the date of his appointment.

VII. They object and insist that under no circumstances can more than six electoral votes be counted, as Levissee and Brewster are intelligible, and whose meaning is in the course of the long time, was the long certifying him with certain as a certain and certain, which certification are not, as he is disqualified by law from holding both offices.

VIII. Vername. Kellogg's certification to the Hayes election were falsely, fraudulently, and corruptly made, and issued as a part of a conspiracy between Kellogg and the returning board to cheat and defraud the rightful Tilden electors of their lawful appointment and the State of its vote for President and Vice President, and are utterly void. In support of all which they invoke the Constitution and the reports of the investigating committees of the House.

Further objections to the counting of the votes of the Hayes electors were made in a writing signed by Messrs. Haulsbury, McDonald, and Kernan, Senators; and Messrs. Jenks, Tucker, Gilman, Field, Levy, and Ellis, Representatives, because at the date of their appointment as electors - November 7th, 1876 - the government of Louisiana was not republican in form, or if republican in form, there had been no lawful canvass of the votes at said election, and any alleged canvass was an act of usurpation, fraudulent and void. They object further to the votes of Kellogg, Johnson, Burch, and Marks, Hayes electors, because at the time of their appointment they were ineligible under the laws of the State, being officers of the State government.

Further objections to the counting of the votes of the Hayen electors were made in a writing signed by Messrs. Stevenson and Whyte, Senators; and Messrs. Hooker, De Bolt, Bland, Wood, Wells and Egbert, Representatives, because the said Hayen electors were not appointed by the State in the manner directed by its Legislature.

Objections to the counting of the votes of the Tilden electors were made and signed by Messrs. Howe, Oglesby, Sherman, West, Harburt, Townsend, Joyce, Danford, Crapo, Hale and Lawrence, as follows:

respectfully object to to for President and United States given been given by John ckliff, or of either of that there is no evieither of said persons has been appointed an elector of said State in such manner as the Legislature thereof has directed; and for the further reason that there is evidence conclusive in law that neither of said persons has been appointed to be an elector for the State of Louisiana in such manner as the Legislature thereof has directed).

They respectfully object to the reading, the recording, or the acknowledging of any commission or license or certificate of appointment or of authentication signed or purporting to be signed by John McEnery as Governor of the State of Louisiana, for the reason that there is no evidence that John McEnery is now or ever was at any time during the year 1876 Governor of the State of Louisiana, and for the further reason that there is conclusive evidence that W. P. Kellogg was during the whole of the year 1876 and for several years prior thereto Governor of that State; was recognized as such by the judicial and legislative departments of the government of that State and by every department of the government of the United States.

There being no further objections the certificates and objections were referred to the Electoral Commission for its judgment and decision, and the Senate returned to its chamber.

At the meeting of the Electoral Commission on Monday, February 12th, the following communication was received (at 4.40 o'clock P. M.) and read:

HALL OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 12, 1877.

To the President of the Commission:

More than one return or paper purporting to be a return or certificate of electoral votes of the State of Louisiana having been received and this day opened in the presence of the two houses of Congress and read, and objections thereto having been made, the said returns, with all accompanying papers, and also the objections thereto, are herewith submitted to the judgment and decision of the commission, as provided by law.

T. W. FERRY,
President of the Senate.

At the meeting of the commission on Tuesday, (February 18th,) at 11 o'clock A. M., Senator McDonald and Representative Jenks urged the objections of the Democracy to the count of Louisiana for Hayes, followed by Senator Howe and Representative Hurlbut for the Republicans in favor of that count. The argument of counsel was opened at the evening session for the Democracy by ex-Senator Carpenter.

At the meeting of the commission on Wednesday, (February 14th,) at 10 o'clock A. M., Mr. Carpenter concluded his argument. The evidence which the Democracy proposed to submit, and asked the commission to admit, was then offered by ex-Senator Trumbull. After considerable discussion by the commissioners upon various points raised, Mr. Trumbull opened the argument for the Democracy upon the question of the admissibility of testimony, and in favor of its admission. He was followed by Messrs. Stoughton and Shellabarger for the Republicans against its admission.

At the meeting of the commission on Thursday, (February 15th,) at 10.15 o'clock A. M., Mr. Evarts continued the argument for the Republicans, and Judge Campbell closed the argument for the Democracy. The arguments on both sides were a repetition in substance of the principles and points involved in the Florida case.

At the meeting of the commission on Friday, (February 16th,) at 10 o'clock A. M., it was—Ordered, That the evidence offered be not received.

An extension of time for further argument was declined by both sides, and the commission went into secret session, in which it adopted the following by a vote of yeas 8, nays 7 :

The Electoral Commission mentioned in said act, having received certain certificates and papers purporting to be certificates, and papers accompanying the same, of the electoral votes from the State of Louisiana, and the objections thereto submitted to it under said act, now report that it has duly considered the same pursuant to said act, and has by a majority of votes decided and does hereby decide that the votes of William P. Kellogg, J. Henri Burch, Peter Joseph, Lionel A. Sheldon, Morris Marks, Aaron B. Levissee, Orlando H. Brewster, and Oscar Joffrion, named in the certificate of William P. Kellogg, Governor of said State, which votes are certified by said persons, as appears by the certificate submitted to the commission as aforesaid, and marked numbers one (1) and three (3) by said commission, and herewith returned, are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that the same are lawfully to be counted as therein certified, namely :

Eight votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of the State of Ohio, for President ; and Eight votes for William A. Wheeler, of the State of New York, for Vice President.

The commission has by a majority of votes also decided, and does hereby decide and report, that the eight persons first before named were duly appointed electors in and by the State of Louisiana.

The brief ground of this decision is that it appears, upon such evidence as by the Constitution and the law named in said act of Congress is competent and pertinent to the consideration of the subject, that the before-mentioned electors appear to have been lawfully appointed such electors of President and Vice President of the United States for the term beginning March 4th, A. D. 1877, of the State of Louisiana, and that they voted as such at the time and in the manner provided for by the Constitution of the United States and the law.

And the commission has by a majority of votes decided and does hereby decide that it is not competent under the Constitution and the law as it existed at the date of the passage of said act to go into evidence aliunde the papers opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two houses to prove that other persons than those regularly certified to by the Governor of the State of Louisiana on and according to the determination and declaration of their appointment by the returning officers for elections in the said State prior to the time required for the performance of their duties had been appointed electors, or by counter-proof to show that they had not ; or that the determination of the said returning officers was not in accordance with the truth and the fact ; the commission by a majority of votes being of opinion that it is not within the jurisdiction of the two houses of Congress assembled to count the votes for President and Vice President to enter upon a trial of such questions.

The commission by a majority of votes is also of opinion that it is not competent to prove that any of said persons so appointed electors as aforesaid held an office of trust or profit under the United States at the time when they were appointed or that they were ineligible under the laws of the State, or any other matter offered to be proved aliunde the said certificates and papers.

The commission is also of opinion by a majority of votes that the returning officers of elections who canvassed the votes at the election for electors in Louisiana were a legally constituted body by virtue of a constitutional law and that a vaca in said body did not vitiate its proceedings.

The commission has also decided and does hereby decide by a majority of votes, and report that as a consequence of the foregoing and upon the grounds before stated that the paper purporting to be a certificate of the electoral votes of said State of Louisiana, objected to by Timothy O. Howe and others, marked "N. C. No. 2" by the commission and herewith returned, is not the certificate of the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that they ought not to be counted as such.

It was subsequently certified and signed by Samuel F. Miller, W. Strong, Joseph P. Bradley, George F. Edmunds, O. P. Morton, Fred'k T. Frelinghuysen, James A. Garfield, George F. Hoar.

On Monday, (the 19th.) the joint meeting of the two houses reassembled, and the Secretary of the Senate read the decision of the commission. The Democracy offered as objections to the decision the proceedings of the commission refusing to admit testimony and the proffered evidence, signed by all the Democratic Senators and Members. Further objections were offered by Messrs. Johnston, Wallace, Dennis, Bailey, Kernan, Kelly, and Saulsbury, Senators; and by Messrs. Hopkins, Boone, Roberts, Ashe, Money, and Clymer, Members, to the effect that the decision was in violation of law, an act of bad faith in the commission, and in disregard of truth, justice, and law, &c. Similar objections were filed by other Senators and Members. The houses then separated.

In the House, a motion for a recess was immediately made and carried.

In the Senate, after debate, the following resolution was adopted by a vote of yeas, 41; nays, 28:

Resolved, That the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of the State of Louisiana stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

In the House on Tuesday, (February 20th,) after debate, a resolution was adopted, dissenting from the decision of the commission.

On the same day the joint meeting reassembled. The action of the Senate and House was stated, and the count proceeded. The votes of Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, and Massachusetts were counted. Objection was made to the count of the vote of Daniel S. Crossman, a Michigan elector, on the ground of ineligibility, &c. The two houses separated, and both decided to count the vote of Crossman, both agreeing that he was eligible.

The joint meeting reassembled. The votes of Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, and Nebraska were counted. Objection was made to the vote of R. M. Daggett, a Nevada elector, on the ground of ineligibility, &c. The two houses separated.

The House immediately voted to take a recess until the following morning.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted deciding to count Daggett's vote.

On the 21st, the House also adopted a resolution, deciding to count Daggett's vote. The joint meeting reassembled, and the count proceeded. The votes of Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, and Ohio were counted. Objections to the counting of the Oregon Hayes electoral votes were made by Messrs. Kelly, Cooper, Bogy, McDonald, and Stevenson, Senators; and Messrs. Field, Tucker, Lane, Jenks, Walling, Clymer, Wigginton, Poppleton, Vance, Hurd, and Luttrell, Members, to the effect that their votes have not the certificate of the Governor of Oregon, with the seal of the State, attached; that Watts, claiming to be an elector, was ineligible on the 7th day of November, 1876, he being a postmaster on that day; that the certificate of the Governor of Oregon does not contain the name of Watts; that it was lawful and right for the Governor to appoint Cronin, instead of Watts, and that Cartwright and Odell had no lawful right to appoint Watts on the 6th day of December, as on that day Watts was a postmaster and ineligible.

Objections to the count of the so-called Tilden electors were made by Messrs. Mitchell and Sargent, Senators, and Messrs. Lawrence, Hale, McCrary, and Banks, Members, to the effect that Miller, Parker, and Cronin, the said so-called Tilden electors, were never lawfully appointed as said electors; that the lawfully appointed Hayes electors, at the time and in the manner prescribed by law, cast their votes for Hayes and Wheeler; that their votes are "the only true and lawful votes" of the State, and were duly transmitted to the President of the Senate; that they received the highest number of votes cast at the election on November 7th, 1876; that the Secretary of State, the canvassing officer under the laws of Oregon, canvassed the votes cast at said election, and certifies, under his hand and great seal of the State, that the Hayes electors were duly appointed by the qualified voters of Oregon.

These objections were referred to the electoral commission.

At the meeting of the Electoral Commission on Wednesday, (February 21st,) at 11 o'clock A. M., the order of the joint meeting of the two houses, referring the certificates with the several objections in the Oregon case to the commission, was read. Senator Kelly, followed by Representative Jenks, sustained the objections against counting the Hayes college, and Senator Mitchell, followed by Representative Lawrence, rebutted those objections. At the evening session Mr. Hoadly, as counsel, opened the argument for the Democracy.

At the meeting of the commission on Thursday, (February 22d,) at 10 o'clock A. M., Mr. Matthews opened the argument for the Republicans. Here the testimony of Messrs. Postmaster General Tyner, J. M. McGrew, and John W. Watts was taken as to the date of Watts' resignation as postmaster, establishing the fact that he resigned on the 14th of November, 1876, and had not since exercised any of the functions of the office. Then Mr. Evarts closed the argument for the Republicans, and Mr. Merrick that for the Democracy. The arguments on both sides were a repetition, in substance, of those in the Florida case on the question of the eligibility of Humphreys. The commission went into secret session.

At the meeting of the commission on Friday, (February 23d,) at 10 o'clock A. M., it proceeded to a discussion of the merits of the case. At a few minutes to 4 o'clock P.

M. the commission adjourned to Mr. Thurman's house, who was sick, for the purpose of voting on the propositions submitted by members. The motion of Commissioner Fields, that Watts was ineligible on the 7th of November, 1876, was lost by a vote of yeas 7, nays 8. The motion of Mr. Fields that, Watts being ineligible, Cartwright and Odell were the only persons duly elected, and that there was a failure to elect a third, was also lost—yeas 7, nays 8. The motion of Mr. Fields that, as the laws of Oregon make no provision for the appointment of an elector in the case of a failure by the people to choose, the attempted election of a third in Oregon was inoperative and void, was lost by a vote of yeas 7, nays 8. Mr. Bayard's motion of a like purport was also lost by the same vote. Mr. Edmunds' motion declaring the Cronin college illegal was adopted unanimously—yeas 15; and the motion of Mr. Morton, declaring Odell, Cartwright, and Watts the lawful electors of Oregon, and that their vote should be counted, was then adopted—yeas 8, nays 7. The following report was signed by Messrs. Samuel F. Miller, W. Strong, Joseph P. Bradley, George F. Edmunds, O. P. Morton, Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, James A. Garfield, and George F. Hoar, and addressed to the President of the Senate:

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION.

The Electoral Commission in said act having received certain certificates and papers, purporting to be certificates and papers accompanying the same of the electoral vote from the State of Oregon, and the objections thereto, submitted to it under said act, now reports that it has duly considered the same pursuant to said act, and has by a majority of votes decided, and does hereby decide, that the votes of W. H. Odell, J. C. Cartwright and J. W. Watts, named in the certificate of said persons, and in the papers accompanying the same, which votes are certified by said persons, as appears by the certificates submitted to the commission as aforesaid, and marked No. 1, N. C., by said commission, and herewith returned, are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that the same are lawfully to be counted as therein certified, namely : Three votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of the State of Ohio, for President, and three votes for William A. Wheeler, of the State of New York, for Vice President.

The commission has, by a majority of votes, also decided, and does hereby decide and report that the three persons first above-named were duly appointed electors in and by the State of Oregon.

The brief ground of this decision is that it appears upon such evidence as by the Constitution and the law named in the said act of Congress is competent and pertinent to the consideration of the subject ; that the before-mentioned electors appear to have lawfully appointed such electors of President and Vice President of the United States for the term beginning March 4, A. D. 1877, of the State of Oregon, and that they voted as such at the time and in the manner provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and the law.

And they are further of opinion that by the laws of the State of Oregon the duty of canvassing the returns of all the votes given at an election of President and Vice President was imposed upon the Secretary of State and upon no one else.

That the Secretary of State did canvass these returns in the case before us, and thereby ascertained that J. C. Cartwright, W. H. Odell, and J. W. Watts had a majority of all the votes given for electors, and had the highest number of votes for that office, and by the express language of the statutes those persons are deemed elected.

That in obedience to his duty, the Secretary made a canvass and tabulated statement of the votes showing this result, which, according to law, he placed on file in his office on the 4th day of December, 1876. All this appears by an official certificate under the seal of the State, and signed by him, and delivered by him to the electors, to the President of tes.

lure of the Gover-e certificate of the so elected does not ting their appoint-

That the act of the Governor of Oregon in giving to E. A. Cronin a certificate of his election, though he received a thousand votes less than Watts, on the ground that the latter was ineligible, was without authority of law, and is therefore void.

That although the evidence shows that Watts was a postmaster at the time of his election, that fact is rendered immaterial by his resignation both as postmaster and elector, his subsequent appointment to fill the vacancy so made by the electoral college.

The commission has also decided, and does hereby decide by a majority of votes, and reports that as a consequence of the foregoing, and upon the grounds before stated, the paper purporting to be a certificate of the electoral vote of said State of Oregon, signed by E. A. Cronin, J. N. T. Miller, and John Parker, marked No. 2, N. C., by the commission, and herewith returned, is not the certificate of the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that they ought not to be counted as such.

REASSEMBLING OF THE JOINT MEETING.

On Saturday (February 24th) the joint meeting reassembled. The decision of the commission in the Oregon case was read, and Senators Wallace, Ransom, and Whyte, and Representatives Stenger, Tucker, Roberts, Collins, Turney, Slemons, Mutchler, Cochrane, Vance, and Jenks, objected to the decision on the grounds urged by the Democratic counsel before the commission. The houses separated. The Senate affirmed the decision. The House, after the Democracy had failed in a filibustering attempt to adjourn, voted to reverse the decision.

The joint meeting reassembled. The action of the two houses was stated by the President of the Senate, and the count continued. The three votes of Oregon were counted for Rutherford B. Hayes and William A. Wheeler. Objections were made to a vote of Pennsylvania, because Daniel J. Morrell, being a Centennial Commissioner on the 7th of November, 1876, was ineligible, and not meeting with the college, the appointment of Henry A. Boggs by the electors to fill the vacancy thus created was in violation of the law of Pennsylvania, and that his vote ought not to be counted. The houses separated. In the Senate it was decided that the vote was legal, and should be counted, but in the House the Democracy forced a recess until Monday.

In the House on Monday, (the 26th,) after the Democracy had exhausted every filibustering expedient, in which Messrs. Stenger, of Pennsylvania; Hewitt, of New York; Tucker, of Virginia; Jones, of Kentucky; Davis, Beebe, Caulfield, Poppleton, Hardenbergh, Buckner, and Springer were distinguished, a resolution was adopted declaring that Boggs had not been legally appointed an elector, and that his vote should not be counted.

The joint meeting reassembled, and the twenty-nine votes of Pennsylvania were counted for Hayes and Wheeler. Objections were made to counting the vote of Wm. S. Slater, an elector for Rhode Island. The two houses separated. In the Senate, a resolution affirming the legality of Slater's vote, and that it ought to be counted, was unanimously adopted. In the House, the Democratic filibusters—its political Captain Kidds and Lafittes—were routed by a vote of yeas one hundred and eighty-two to sixty-seven nays. The House then declared that Slater's vote be counted.

The joint meeting reassembled, and the votes of Rhode Island were counted. Objections were made to the count of South Carolina for Hayes and Wheeler, by Senators Johnson and Barnum, and Representatives S. S. Cox, J. Proctor Knott, John Randolph Tucker, G. A. Jenks, W. S. Stenger, and thirty others, on the ground: first, that at the Presidential election there was no legal election held in South Carolina; second, that at the date of the election the government of the State was not republican in form; third and fourth, that the stationing of troops and the employment of deputy marshals, illegally, by the Federal Government, in the State, during the election, intimidated Democratic voters; and fifth, that there was at the date of the election no government in the State but the one sustained by Federal troops. Objections were made to the counting of the votes of the so-called Tilden electors of South Carolina by Senators Patterson, Angus Cameron, and Christiancy, and Representatives Lawrence, Lapham, Banks, Smalls, Hoge and Rainey, on the ground that the said so-called electors were not appointed electors by South Carolina; that their list of pretended votes have not the certificate of the Governor and the seal of the State attached; that the Hayes electors were duly appointed by the State; that the proper canvassing officer of the State, after a careful canvass of all of the votes cast at the Presidential election, had duly certified their appointment; that their votes had been duly cast on the day designated by law, and the list of said votes were transmitted to the President of the Senate, with the certificate of the Governor and the great seal of the State attached.

The certificates and objections were referred to the commission.

At the meeting of the Electoral Commission on Monday, (February 26th.) at 10 o'clock A. M., the resignation of Senator Thurman, because of continued ill-health, as a member of the commission, was received. The Senate was promptly notified of the resignation, and Mr. Kernan, of New York, was unanimously elected in the place of Mr. Thurman. At its evening session the order of the joint meeting of the two houses referring the certificates and objections in the South Carolina case was read.

At the meeting of the commission on Tuesday, (February 27th,) at 10 o'clock A. M., Representatives Hurd and Cochrane, for the Democracy, sustained the objections against the Hayes electors, followed by Representative Lawrence in their support. Senator Christiancy, for the Republicans, waived his right to be heard. Messrs. Montgomery Blair and Jere. S. Black were heard as counsel, in argument, for the Democracy; but Mr. Shellabarger for the Republicans submitted their side of the case without argument.

At the evening session Mr. Morton offered resolutions declaring—

That it is not competent for the two houses, assembled to count the vote for President and Vice President, to in-

read by the Secretary of the Senate and be entered in the Journal of each house."

The report and decision of the electoral commission was read, when the President pro tempore asked: "Are there objections to this decision?"

Objections, which were signed by the following gentlemen: Charles W. Jones of Florida, Henry Cooper of Tennessee, Francis Kernan of New York, Eli Saulsbury of Delaware, J. E. McDonald of Indiana, W. H. Barnum of Connecticut, on the part of the Senate; J. Proctor Knott, David Dudley Field of New York, W. S. Holman of Indiana, J. R. Tucker, Charles P. Thompson, G. A. Jenks of Pennsylvania, J. J. Finley, Milton Sayler, E. Jno. Ellis, W. R. Morrison, Abram S. Hewitt, and William M. Springer, on the part of the House, were submitted by Mr. Field and read:

An objection is interposed by the undersigned Senators and Representatives to the decision made by the commission constituted by the act entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of the vote for President and Vice President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," as to the true and lawful electoral vote of Florida, upon the following grounds:

First. For that the decision determines that the vote cast by Charles H. Pearce, Frederick C. Humphreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long, as electors of President and Vice President of the United States in and for or on behalf of the State of Florida, is the true and lawful electoral vote of said State, when, in truth and in fact, the vote cast by Wilkinson Call, James E. Yonge, Robert B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock is the true and lawful vote of said State.

Second. For that said commission refused to receive competent and material evidence tending to prove that Charles H. Pearce, Frederick C. Humphreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long were not appointed electors in the manner prescribed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, but were designated as electors by the returning board of said State corruptly and fraudulently, in disregard of law and with the intent to defeat the will of the people expressed in the choice of Wilkinson Call, James E. Yonge, Robert B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock, who were legally and regularly appointed electors by the State of Florida, in the manner directed by the Legislature thereof.

Third. For that the decision aforesaid was founded upon the resolution and order of said commission previously made, as follows:

"Ordered, That no evidence will be received or considered by the commission which was not submitted to the joint convention of the two houses by the President of the Senate with the different certificates, except such as relates to the eligibility of F. C. Humphreys, one of the electors."

Fourth. For that said decision excludes all the evidence taken by the two houses of Congress and the committees of each house concerning the frauds, errors, and irregularities committed by the persons whose certificates are taken as proof of the due appointment of electors.

Fifth. For that said decision excludes all evidence tending to prove that the certificate of ——— Stearns, Governor, as also that of the board of State canvassers, was procured or given in pursuance of a fraudulent and corrupt conspiracy to cheat the State of Florida out of its rightful choice of electors and to substitute therefor those who had not been chosen or appointed electors by said State in the manner directed by the Legislature thereof.

Sixth. For that said commission refused to recognize the right of the courts of the State of Florida to review and reverse the judgment of the returning board or board of State canvassers rendered through fraud and without jurisdiction, and rejected and refused to consider the action of said courts after their decision that Charles H. Pearce, Frederick C. Humphreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long were not entitled to cast the electoral vote of Florida; which said decision was rendered by a court of said State in a case lawfully brought before said court, which court had jurisdiction over the subject-matter thereof, and whose jurisdiction over the said Charles H. Pearce, Frederick C. Humphreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long had attached before any act was done by them as electors.

Seventh. For that said decision excludes all evidence tending to prove that the State of Florida, by all the departments of its government—legislative, executive, and judicial, has repudiated as fraudulent and void the certificate of ——— Stearns, Governor, as well as that of the State canvassers, upon which certificate of the said Governor the said commission has acted and by means of which the true electoral votes of Florida have been rejected and false ones substituted in their stead; and

Eighth. For that to count the votes of Charles H. Pearce, Frederick C. Humphreys, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long as electors for President and Vice President would be a violation of the Constitution of the United States.

There being no further objections, the two houses separated.

In the Senate, after some debate, and after voting down all the attempts of the Democracy to adjourn or to reject the decision of the commission in the Florida case, Mr. Sherman's resolution, "That the decision of the commission on the electoral vote of the State of Florida stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding," was adopted by the following vote :

YEAS.—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—Total, 44.

NAYS.—Messrs. Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—Total, 25.

In the House, after an earnest effort on the part of Messrs. Hale, Kasson, McCrary, and others to induce that body to proceed at once to the consideration of the objections, and to continue the count as required by the electoral law, that body took a recess (by a vote of 162 to 107) until Monday morning.

During the roll-call a message from the Senate announced that the Senate had agreed to the following resolution :

Resolved, That the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of the State of Florida stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The message also notified the House that the Senate was now ready to meet the House to proceed with the counting of the electoral votes for President and Vice President.

In the House, on Monday, (February 12th,) Mr. Field offered the following :

Ordered, That the counting of the electoral votes from the State of Florida shall not proceed in conformity with the decision of the Electoral Commission, but that the votes of Wilkinson Call, James E. Yonge, Robert B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock be counted as the votes from the State of Florida for President and Vice President of the United States.

Mr. Knott, as a substitute, offered a long series of whereases, eight in number, arraigning and denouncing the decision of the Electoral Commission, and ending with the following :

Now, therefore, in order that said commission may have an opportunity to correct its manifest inconsistency therein, and to explain how and in what manner it ascertained that the certificate of M. L. Stearns, as Governor of the State of Florida, was on and according to any determination and declaration of any board of canvassers of said State :

Be it resolved, That the decision of said commission, and the grounds thereof, be, and the same are hereby, remanded and recommitted to said commission, with the request that the same be so corrected or explained to this House, and that said commission be further requested to furnish in detail the true reasons of its decision, that this House may be enlightened as to the course it ought to pursue in the discharge of its duties in respect of the vote of the State of Florida under the Constitution of the United States and the act of Congress above referred to, and that in the meantime the votes of Frederick C. Humphreys, Charles H. Pearce, William H. Holden, and Thomas W. Long shall not be counted.

After some debate they were decided to be out of order under the provisions of the electoral law.

The two hours provided under the law for debate upon Mr. Field's resolution were then occupied by Messrs. McCrary, Banks, Frye, Carr, and Dunnell for the Republicans, and by Messrs. Tucker, Springer, Hurd, Thompson, Walker of Virginia, Robbins, and Field for the Democracy. The efforts of the Democracy against the decision was simply a prolonged cry of "fraud," "fraud"—"the triumph of gigantic fraud"—"the consummation of villainy and fraud" in robbing Tilden of the electoral vote of Florida. All that against the commission of their own creation. The Republicans, while sustaining the decision as eminently just—as the only rightful judgment possible under the Constitution and the laws, and one which vindicated justice and the rights of the people of Florida against the manifold frauds of the Democracy—threw back the charge of fraud. They had courted investigations into all these reckless charges—not merely into the frauds charged in Florida, Louisiana, and South Carolina, but into the notorious frauds in New York city and its surroundings, by which Tilden had stolen its 35 votes; into those of New Haven, Bridgeport, and Hartford, by which the Democracy had robbed Hayes of the electoral votes of Connecticut; into those of Indiana, in which, under its laws, no registration is necessary, and into which voters were imported from Kentucky in such numbers that in one Democratic county Tilden's majority was greater than its whole male voting population. And where were the proofs of Republican frauds in Florida? The charge had not been sustained even by Democratic perjury and forgery. Who was Attorney General Cocke, upon whom the Democracy rely for their proofs? An immaculate Democrat—one of "the pure and undefiled" Democracy of the South! A member of the Florida returning board—a member whose votes and legal opinions had decided the electoral vote of Florida in favor of Hayes, and who only changed his convictions of right and duty, who was only converted to the belief that Tilden had carried the State or was entitled to its electoral vote, through an interview with a lot of New York and other foreign Democratic politicians, with the notorious Manton Marble at their head. So on with the Flemings, Green R. Moores, Floyd Dukes, and others, whose bold perjury had won the applause of Tilden and the Democracy. But under every count and recount the Hayes electors had been chosen. Where, then, were the proofs of Republican fraud? The cry itself was a fraud, an invention of the Democracy for the consummation of the greatest crime in our history, the foisting of Tilden upon the nation as President by organized violence and fraud!

Mr. Hale proposed to amend Mr. Field's resolution so as to make it read:

Ordered, That the counting of the electoral vote from the State of Florida shall proceed in conformity with the decision of the electoral commission.

The amendment was lost—yeas, 103; nays, 167.

Mr. Field's resolution was then passed by the following vote:

YEAS.—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, Jr., Banning, Bell, Blackburn, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Carr, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, Jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Cutler, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Ellis, Faulkner, Felton, Field, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Gause, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Haymond, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Holman, Hooker, Hopkins, House, Humphreys, Hunton, Hurd, Jenks, Frank Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Kehr, Knott, Lamar, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Lynde, Mackey, Maish, McFarland, McMahon, Meade, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Money, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Neal, New, O'Brien, Odell, Payne, John F. Philips, Piper, Poppleton, Powell, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Schleicher, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stenger, Stevenson, Stone, Swann, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Throckmorton, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warner, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Alpheus S. Williams, Jere N. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Fernando Wood, Yeates, and Young—Total, 168.

NAYS.—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Belford, Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard,

Burleigh, Buttz, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Evans, Flye, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Hale, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Hoar, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Joyce, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lynch, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Nash, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Pratt, Rainey, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stowell, Strait, Thornburgh, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Wait, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, G. Wiley Wells, Whitehouse, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Alan Wood, Jr., Woodburn, and Woodworth—Total, 103.

Mr. Field offered the following, which was read, considered, and adopted :

Ordered, That the Clerk inform the Senate of the action of this House, and that the House is now ready to meet the Senate in this hall.

At 2.25 o'clock P. M. the Senate entered the hall and took the seats allotted to Senators.

The President pro tempore then announced that the joint meeting resumes its sessions. The resolution of the Senate concurring in the decision of the Electoral Commission, and that of the House non-concurring were read, and the President declared that the counting will now proceed in conformity with the decision of the commission. The four votes of Florida was accordingly counted for Hayes and Wheeler. The votes of the States of Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas and Kentucky were severally counted without objection. When the certificates of the votes of Louisiana, signed respectively by William P. Kellogg as Governor, and John McEnery as Governor, were opened and read, objections were made to the counting of the votes of the Hayes electors, in a writing signed by Messrs. Saulsbury, McDonald, Stevenson and Boggy, Senators; and Messrs. Field, Jenks, Gibson, Tucker, Levy, Ellis and Morrison, members of the House :

I. Because on the 7th day of November,

1876, there was no law, joint resolution, or other act of the Legislature of Florida in force directing the manner in which electors for said State should be appointed.

II. Because, if any such law existed at that date, it vested the appointment of electors in the people, and the Tilden, not the Hayes, electors had been duly appointed.

III. Because the Hayes electors were not appointed in the manner directed by the constitution and the laws of Louisiana and of the United States, and the list of electors certified by the said Wm. P. Kellogg, claiming to be, but not being, Governor, were false in fact and fraudulently made and certified by said Kellogg.

IV. Because the pretended canvass of the returns of said election by J. Madison Wells, T. C. Anderson, G. Casanave, and Louis Kenner, as returning officers, was without jurisdiction and void: 1st. The statutes of Louisiana gave them no jurisdiction to make such canvass. 2d. Such statutes, if conferring such jurisdiction, are void, because unconstitutional. 3d. Such statutes, in conferring upon returning officers judicial power or discretion to reject returns and determine who were appointed electors, was in conflict with the constitution of the State and of the United States, and anti-republican. 4th. If such statutes are valid, still the returning board was illegal, being constituted of only four persons, all Republicans, when the laws declare it shall consist of five persons, of all political parties. 5th. Said returning board had no legal power to reject returns unless the foundation of such power was first laid as required by the laws, which was not done to an extent to change the result on the face of the returns. 6th. Said returning board had falsely and fraudulently certified the election of the Hayes electors. Said returning board had offered, for a money consideration, to certify a correct count, but failing to find a purchaser, had falsely, corruptly, and fraudulently certified the election of the minority candidates.

V. They especially object to the count of the vote of A. B. Levissee, because ineligible under the Constitution, he holding an office of profit and trust under the National Government at the date of appointment.

VI. They especially object to the count of the vote of O. H. Brewster, because ineligible under the Constitution, he holding an office of profit and trust under the National Government at the date of his appointment.

VII. They object and insist that under no circumstances can more than six electoral votes be counted, as Levissee and Brewster are ineligible, and object especially to the count of Kellogg's vote, said Kellogg certifying his own election as Governor and elector, which certificates are void, as he is disqualified by law from holding both offices.

VIII. Because Kellogg's certificates to the Hayes electors were falsely, fraudulently, and corruptly made and issued as a part of a conspiracy between Kellogg and the returning board to cheat and defraud the rightful Tilden electors of their lawful appointment and the State of its vote for President and Vice President, and are utterly void. In support of all which they invoke the Constitution and the reports of the investigating committees of the House.

Further objections to the counting of the votes of the Hayes electors were made in a writing signed by Messrs. Saulsbury, McDonald, and Kernan, Senators; and Messrs. Jenks, Tucker, Gibson, Field, Levy, and Ellis, Representatives, because at the date of their appointment as electors—November 7th, 1876—the government of Louisiana was not republican in form, or if republican in form, there had been no lawful canvass of the votes at said election, and any alleged canvass was an act of usurpation, fraudulent and void. They object further to the votes of Kellogg, Joffrion, Burch, and Marks, Hayes electors, because at the time of their appointment they were ineligible under the laws of the State, being officers of the State government.

Further objections to the counting of the votes of the Hayes electors were made in a writing signed by Messrs. Stevenson and Whyte, Senators; and Messrs. Hooker, De Bolt, Bland, Wood, Wells and Egbert, Representatives, because the said Hayes electors were not appointed by the State in the manner directed by its Legislature.

Objections to the counting of the votes of the Tilden electors were made and signed by Messrs. Howe, Oglesby, Sherman, West, Hurburt, Townsend, Joyce, Danford, Crapo, Hale and Lawrence, as follows:

The undersigned respectfully object to the counting of any vote for President and Vice President of the United States given or purporting to have been given by John McEnery or R. C. Wickliff, or of either of them, for the reason that there is no evidence whatever that either of said persons has been appointed an elector of said State in such manner as the Legislature thereof has directed; and for the further reason that there is evidence conclusive in law that neither of said persons has been appointed to be an elector for the State of Louisiana in such manner as the Legislature thereof has directed.

They respectfully object to the reading, the recording, or the acknowledging of any commission or license or certificate of appointment or of authentication signed or purporting to be signed by John McEnery as Governor of the State of Louisiana, for the reason that there is no evidence that John McEnery is now or ever was at any time during the year 1876 Governor of the State of Louisiana, and for the further reason that there is conclusive evidence that W. P. Kellogg was during the whole of the year 1876 and for several years prior thereto Governor of that State; was recognized as such by the judicial and legislative departments of the government of that State and by every department of the government of the United States.

There being no further objections the certificates and objections were referred to the Electoral Commission for its judgment and decision, and the Senate returned to its chamber.

At the meeting of the Electoral Commission on Monday, February 12th, the following communication was received (at 4.40 o'clock P. M.) and read:

HALL OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 12, 1877.

To the President of the Commission:

More than one return or paper purporting to be a return or certificate of electoral votes of the State of Louisiana having been received and this day opened in the presence of the two houses of Congress and read, and objections thereto having been made, the said returns, with all accompanying papers, and also the objections thereto, are herewith submitted to the judgment and decision of the commission, as provided by law.

T. W. FERRY,
President of the Senate.

At the meeting of the commission on Tuesday, (February 13th,) at 11 o'clock A. M., Senator McDonald and Representative Jenks urged the objections of the Democracy to the count of Louisiana for Hayes, followed by Senator Howe and Representative Hurlbut for the Republicans in favor of that count. The argument of counsel was opened at the evening session for the Democracy by ex-Senator Carpenter.

At the meeting of the commission on Wednesday, (February 14th,) at 10 o'clock A. M., Mr. Carpenter concluded his argument. The evidence which the Democracy proposed to submit, and asked the commission to admit, was then offered by ex-Senator Trumbull. After considerable discussion by the commissioners upon various points raised, Mr. Trumbull opened the argument for the Democracy upon the question of the admissibility of testimony, and in favor of its admission. He was followed by Messrs. Stoughton and Shellabarger for the Republicans against its admission.

At the meeting of the commission on Thursday, (February 15th,) at 10.15 o'clock A. M., Mr. Evarts continued the argument for the Republicans, and Judge Campbell closed the argument for the Democracy. The arguments on both sides were a repetition in substance of the principles and points involved in the Florida case.

At the meeting of the commission on Friday, (February 16th,) at 10 o'clock A. M., it was—

Ordered, That the evidence offered be not received.

An extension of time for further argument was declined by both sides, and the commission went into secret session, in which it adopted the following by a vote of yeas 8, nays 7 :

The Electoral Commission mentioned in said act, having received certain certificates and papers purporting to be certificates, and papers accompanying the same, of the electoral votes from the State of Louisiana, and the objections thereto submitted to it under said act, now report that it has duly considered the same pursuant to said act, and has by a majority of votes decided and does hereby decide that the votes of William P. Kellogg, J. Henri Burch, Peter Joseph, Lionel A. Sheldon, Morris Marks, Aaron B. Levissee, Orlando H. Brewster, and Oscar Joffrion, named in the certificate of William P. Kellogg, Governor of said State, which votes are certified by said persons, as appears by the certificate submitted to the commission as aforesaid, and marked numbers one (1) and three (3) by said commission, and herewith returned, are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that the same are lawfully to be counted as therein certified, namely :

Eight votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of the State of Ohio, for President; and Eight votes for William A. Wheeler, of the State of New York, for Vice President.

The commission has by a majority of votes also decided, and does hereby decide and report, that the eight persons first before named were duly appointed electors in and by the State of Louisiana.

The brief ground of this decision is that it appears, upon such evidence as by the Constitution and the law named in said act of Congress is competent and pertinent to the consideration of the subject, that the before-mentioned electors appear to have been lawfully appointed such electors of President and Vice President of the United States for the term beginning March 4th, A. D. 1877, of the State of Louisiana, and that they voted as such at the time and in the manner provided for by the Constitution of the United States and the law.

And the commission has by a majority of votes decided and does hereby decide that it is not competent under the Constitution and the law as it existed at the date of the passage of said act to go into evidence aliunde the papers opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two houses to prove that other persons than those regularly certified to by the Governor of the State of Louisiana on and according to the determination and declaration of their appointment by the returning officers for elections in the said State prior to the time required for the performance of their duties had been appointed electors, or by counter-proof to show that they had not; or that the determination of the said returning officers was not in accordance with the truth and the fact; the commission by a majority of votes being of opinion that it is not within the jurisdiction of the two houses of Congress assembled to count the votes for President and Vice President to enter upon a trial of such questions.

The commission by a majority of votes is also of opinion that it is not competent to prove that any of said persons so appointed electors as aforesaid held an office of trust or profit under the United States at the time when they were appointed or that they were ineligible under the laws of the State, or any other matter offered to be proved aliunde the said certificates and papers.

The commission is also of opinion by a majority of votes that the returning officers of elections who canvassed the votes at the election for electors in Louisiana were a legally constituted body by virtue of a constitutional law and that a vacancy in said body did not vitiate its proceedings.

The commission has also decided and does hereby decide by a majority of votes, and report that as a consequence of the foregoing and upon the grounds before stated that the paper purporting to be a certificate of the electoral votes of said State of Louisiana, objected to by Timothy O. Howe and others, marked "N. C. No. 2" by the commission and herewith returned, is not the certificate of the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that they ought not to be counted as such.

It was subsequently certified and signed by Samuel F. Miller, W. Strong, Joseph P. Bradley, George F. Edmunds, O. P. Morton, Fred'k T. Frelinghuysen, James A. Garfield, George F. Hoar.

On Monday, (the 19th.) the joint meeting of the two houses reassembled, and the Secretary of the Senate read the decision of the commission. The Democracy offered as objections to the decision the proceedings of the commission refusing to admit testimony and the proffered evidence, signed by all the Democratic Senators and Members. Further objections were offered by Messrs. Johnston, Wallace, Dennis, Bailey, Kernan, Kelly, and Saulsbury, Senators; and by Messrs. Hopkins, Boone, Roberts, Ashe, Money, and Clymer, Members, to the effect that the decision was in violation of law, an act of bad faith in the commission, and in disregard of truth, justice, and law, &c. Similar objections were filed by other Senators and Members. The houses then separated.

In the House, a motion for a recess was immediately made and carried.

In the Senate, after debate, the following resolution was adopted by a vote of yeas, 41; nays, 28:

Resolved, That the decision of the commission upon the electoral vote of the State of Louisiana stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

In the House on Tuesday, (February 20th,) after debate, a resolution was adopted, dissenting from the decision of the commission.

On the same day the joint meeting reassembled. The action of the Senate and House was stated, and the count proceeded. The votes of Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, and Massachusetts were counted. Objection was made to the count of the vote of Daniel S. Crossman, a Michigan elector, on the ground of ineligibility, &c. The two houses separated, and both decided to count the vote of Crossman, both agreeing that he was eligible.

The joint meeting reassembled. The votes of Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, and Nebraska were counted. Objection was made to the vote of R. M. Daggett, a Nevada elector, on the ground of ineligibility, &c. The two houses separated.

The House immediately voted to take a recess until the following morning.

In the Senate, a resolution was adopted deciding to count Daggett's vote.

On the 21st, the House also adopted a resolution, deciding to count Daggett's vote. The joint meeting reassembled, and the count proceeded. The votes of Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, and Ohio were counted. Objections to the counting of the Oregon Hayes electoral votes were made by Messrs. Kelly, Cooper, Bogy, McDonald, and Stevenson, Senators; and Messrs. Field, Tucker, Lane, Jenks, Walling, Clymer, Wigginton, Poppleton, Vance, Hurd, and Luttrell, Members, to the effect that their votes have not the certificate of the Governor of Oregon, with the seal of the State, attached; that Watts, claiming to be an elector, was ineligible on the 7th day of November, 1876, he being a postmaster on that day; that the certificate of the Governor of Oregon does not contain the name of Watts; that it was lawful and right for the Governor to appoint Cronin, instead of Watts, and that Cartwright and Odell had no lawful right to appoint Watts on the 6th day of December, as on that day Watts was a postmaster and ineligible.

Objections to the count of the so-called Tilden electors were made by Messrs. Mitchell and Sargent, Senators, and Messrs. Lawrence, Hale, McCrary, and Banks, Members, to the effect that Miller, Parker, and Cronin, the said so-called Tilden electors, were never lawfully appointed as said electors; that the lawfully appointed Hayes electors, at the time and in the manner prescribed by law, cast their votes for Hayes and Wheeler; that their votes are "the only true and lawful votes" of the State, and were duly transmitted to the President of the Senate; that they received the highest number of votes cast at the election on November 7th, 1876; that the Secretary of State, the canvassing officer under the laws of Oregon, canvassed the votes cast at said election, and certifies, under his hand and great seal of the State, that the Hayes electors were duly appointed by the qualified voters of Oregon.

These objections were referred to the electoral commission.

At the meeting of the Electoral Commission on Wednesday, (February 21st,) at 11 o'clock A. M., the order of the joint meeting of the two houses, referring the certificates with the several objections in the Oregon case to the commission, was read. Senator Kelly, followed by Representative Jenks, sustained the objections against counting the Hayes college, and Senator Mitchell, followed by Representative Lawrence, rebutted those objections. At the evening session Mr. Hoadly, as counsel, opened the argument for the Democracy.

At the meeting of the commission on Thursday, (February 22d,) at 10 o'clock A. M., Mr. Matthews opened the argument for the Republicans. Here the testimony of Messrs. Postmaster General Tyner, J. M. McGrew, and John W. Watts was taken as to the date of Watts' resignation as postmaster, establishing the fact that he resigned on the 14th of November, 1876, and had not since exercised any of the functions of the office. Then Mr. Evarts closed the argument for the Republicans, and Mr. Merrick that for the Democracy. The arguments on both sides were a repetition, in substance, of those in the Florida case on the question of the eligibility of Humphreys. The commission went into secret session.

At the meeting of the commission on Friday, (February 23d,) at 10 o'clock A. M., it proceeded to a discussion of the merits of the case. At a few minutes to 4 o'clock P.

M. the commission adjourned to Mr. Thurman's house, who was sick, for the purpose of voting on the propositions submitted by members. The motion of Commissioner Fields, that Watts was ineligible on the 7th of November, 1876, was lost by a vote of yeas 7, nays 8. The motion of Mr. Fields that, Watts being ineligible, Cartwright and Odell were the only persons duly elected, and that there was a failure to elect a third, was also lost—yeas 7, nays 8. The motion of Mr. Fields that, as the laws of Oregon make no provision for the appointment of an elector in the case of a failure by the people to choose, the attempted election of a third in Oregon was inoperative and void, was lost by a vote of yeas 7, nays 8. Mr. Bayard's motion of a like purport was also lost by the same vote. Mr. Edmunds' motion declaring the Cronin college illegal was adopted unanimously—yeas 15; and the motion of Mr. Morton, declaring Odell, Cartwright, and Watts the lawful electors of Oregon, and that their vote should be counted, was then adopted—yeas 8, nays 7. The following report was signed by Messrs. Samuel F. Miller, W. Strong, Joseph P. Bradley, George F. Edmunds, O. P. Morton, Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, James A. Garfield, and George F. Hoar, and addressed to the President of the Senate:

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION.

The Electoral Commission in said act having received certain certificates and papers, purporting to be certificates and papers accompanying the same of the electoral vote from the State of Oregon, and the objections thereto, submitted to it under said act, now reports that it has duly considered the same pursuant to said act, and has by a majority of votes decided, and does hereby decide, that the votes of W. H. Odell, J. C. Cartwright and J. W. Watts, named in the certificate of said persons, and in the papers accompanying the same, which votes are certified by said persons, as appears by the certificates submitted to the commission as aforesaid, and marked No. 1, N. C., by said commission, and herewith returned, are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that the same are lawfully to be counted as therein certified, namely : Three votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of the State of Ohio, for President, and three votes for William A. Wheeler, of the State of New York, for Vice President.

The commission has, by a majority of votes, also decided, and does hereby decide and report that the three persons first above-named were duly appointed electors in and by the State of Oregon.

The brief ground of this decision is that it appears upon such evidence as by the Constitution and the law named in the said act of Congress is competent and pertinent to the consideration of the subject ; that the before-mentioned electors appear to have lawfully appointed such electors of President and Vice President of the United States for the term beginning March 4, A. D. 1877, of the State of Oregon, and that they voted as such at the time and in the manner provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and the law.

And they are further of opinion that by the laws of the State of Oregon the duty of canvassing the returns of all the votes given at an election of President and Vice President was imposed upon the Secretary of on no one else.

 ecretary of State did canvass in the case before us, and rtained that J. C. Cartwright, and J. W. Watts had a major-votes given for electors, and est number of votes for that the express language of the persons are deemed elected.
 idience to his duty, the Secrecanvass and tabulated statetes showing this result, which, law, he placed on file in his 4th day of December, 1876.
 ars by an official certificate l of the State, and signed by vered by him to the electors, d by them to the President of ith their votes.

fusal or failure of the Gover-1 to sign the certificate of the e persons so elected does not t of defeating their appoint-electors.

That the act of the Governor of Oregon in giving to E. A. Cronin a certificate of his election, though he received a thousand votes less than Watts, on the ground that the latter was ineligible, was without authority of law, and is therefore void.

That although the evidence shows that Watts was a postmaster at the time of his election, that fact is rendered immaterial by his resignation both as postmaster and elector, his subsequent appointment to fill the vacancy so made by the electoral college.

The commission has also decided, and does hereby decide by a majority of votes, and reports that as a consequence of the foregoing, and upon the grounds before stated, the paper purporting to be a certificate of the electoral vote of said State of Oregon, signed by E. A. Cronin, J. N. T. Miller, and John Parker, marked No. 2, N. C., by the commission, and herewith returned, is not the certificate of the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that they ought not to be counted as such.

REASSEMBLING OF THE JOINT MEETING.

On Saturday (February 24th) the joint meeting reassembled. The decision of the commission in the Oregon case was read, and Senators Wallace, Ransom, and Whyte, and Representatives Stenger, Tucker, Roberts, Collins, Turney, Slemons, Mutchler, Cochrane, Vance, and Jenks, objected to the decision on the grounds urged by the Democratic counsel before the commission. The houses separated. The Senate affirmed the decision. The House, after the Democracy had failed in a filibustering attempt to adjourn, voted to reverse the decision.

The joint meeting reassembled. The action of the two houses was stated by the President of the Senate, and the count continued. The three votes of Oregon were counted for Rutherford B. Hayes and William A. Wheeler. Objections were made to a vote of Pennsylvania, because Daniel J. Morrell, being a Centennial Commissioner on the 7th of November, 1876, was ineligible, and not meeting with the college, the appointment of Henry A. Boggs by the electors to fill the vacancy thus created was in violation of the law of Pennsylvania, and that his vote ought not to be counted. The houses separated. In the Senate it was decided that the vote was legal, and should be counted, but in the House the Democracy forced a recess until Monday.

In the House on Monday, (the 26th,) after the Democracy had exhausted every filibustering expedient, in which Messrs. Stenger, of Pennsylvania; Hewitt, of New York; Tucker, of Virginia; Jones, of Kentucky; Davis, Beebe, Caulfield, Poppleton, Hardenbergh, Buckner, and Springer were distinguished, a resolution was adopted declaring that Boggs had not been legally appointed an elector, and that his vote should not be counted.

The joint meeting reassembled, and the twenty-nine votes of Pennsylvania were counted for Hayes and Wheeler. Objections were made to counting the vote of Wm. S. Slater, an elector for Rhode Island. The two houses separated. In the Senate, a resolution affirming the legality of Slater's vote, and that it ought to be counted, was unanimously adopted. In the House, the Democratic filibusters—its political Captain Kidds and Lafittes—were routed by a vote of yeas one hundred and eighty-two to sixty-seven nays. The House then declared that Slater's vote be counted.

The joint meeting reassembled, and the votes of Rhode Island were counted. Objections were made to the count of South Carolina for Hayes and Wheeler, by Senators Johnson and Barnum, and Representatives S. S. Cox, J. Proctor Knott, John Randolph Tucker, G. A. Jenks, W. S. Stenger, and thirty others, on the ground: first, that at the Presidential election there was no legal election held in South Carolina; second, that at the date of the election the government of the State was not republican in form; third and fourth, that the stationing of troops and the employment of deputy marshals, illegally, by the Federal Government, in the State, during the election, intimidated Democratic voters; and fifth, that there was at the date of the election no government in the State but the one sustained by Federal troops. Objections were made to the counting of the votes of the so-called Tilden electors of South Carolina by Senators Patterson, Angus Cameron, and Christiancy, and Representatives Lawrence, Lapham, Banks, Smalls, Hoge and Rainey, on the ground that the said so-called electors were not appointed electors by South Carolina; that their list of pretended votes have not the certificate of the Governor and the seal of the State attached; that the Hayes electors were duly appointed by the State; that the proper canvassing officer of the State, after a careful canvass of all of the votes cast at the Presidential election, had duly certified their appointment; that their votes had been duly cast on the day designated by law, and the list of said votes were transmitted to the President of the Senate, with the certificate of the Governor and the great seal of the State attached.

The certificates and objections were referred to the commission.

At the meeting of the Electoral Commission on Monday, (February 26th.) at 10 o'clock A. M., the resignation of Senator Thurman, because of continued ill-health, as a member of the commission, was received. The Senate was promptly notified of the resignation, and Mr. Kernan, of New York, was unanimously elected in the place of Mr. Thurman. At its evening session the order of the joint meeting of the two houses referring the certificates and objections in the South Carolina case was read.

At the meeting of the commission on Tuesday, (February 27th,) at 10 o'clock A. M., Representatives Hurd and Cochrane, for the Democracy, sustained the objections against the Hayes electors, followed by Representative Lawrence in their support. Senator Christiancy, for the Republicans, waived his right to be heard. Messrs. Montgomery Blair and Jere. S. Black were heard as counsel, in argument, for the Democracy; but Mr. Shellabarger for the Republicans submitted their side of the case without argument.

At the evening session Mr. Morton offered resolutions declaring—

That it is not competent for the houses, assembled to count the votes for President and Vice President, to by evidence whether a State, regularly represented in the two houses of Congress, and recognized as a State of the United States by the other departments of the Government, has a government Republican in form; that while public disturbance and anarchy in any State may make it impossible for the State to appoint electors of President and Vice President, and is sufficient cause for rejecting any electoral votes purporting to be the votes of electors appointed thereby, yet, that where a State is regularly represented as a State in Congress, and is recognized as a State by the other departments of the Government, and has a government republican in form, and does appoint electors in the manner prescribed by the Legislature thereof, evidence cannot be received by the two houses of Congress assembled to count the votes, to show that disturbance existed at the time of election, which may have interfered to a greater or less extent with the freedom of election at the polls in said State; nor to inquire into the regularity of the action of the President of the United States in sending a military force into any State for the preservation of order or the suppression of insurrection and domestic violence, in order by such proof to lay a ground for rejecting the electoral vote of said State; that, consequently, the electoral votes of the State of South Carolina ought to be received and counted, if not objectionable on other grounds; and that the other objections show no valid cause for rejecting the same.

Mr. Field offered as substitutes resolutions declaring—

That evidence is admissible to show that prior to or during the election on the 7th day of November, 1876, in the State of South Carolina, there were unlawfully stationed in various parts of the State, at or near the polling places, detachments of United States troops and over one thousand United States deputy marshals, by whose presence and influence qualified voters of the State were deprived of the right of suffrage, and a free choice by the people of Presidential electors was prevented.

Mr. Field's resolutions were rejected, and Mr. Morton's adopted by a vote of eight to seven.

On motion of Mr. Frelinghuysen, the so-called Tilden electors were declared "not the lawful electors for the State of South Carolina." Yeas 8, nays 7.

On motion of Mr. Morton, it was declared that C. C. Bowen, J. Winsmith, Thomas B. Johnston, Timothy Hurley, W. B. Nash, Wilson Cook, and W. F. Myers, the Hayes electors, were the lawfully-appointed electors for the State, and that their votes should be counted. Yeas 8, nays 7.

The following report was signed by Messrs. Samuel F. Miller, W. Strong, Joseph P. Bradley, George F. Edmunds, O. P. Morton, Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, James A. Garfield, and George F. Hoar, and addressed to the President of the Senate:

The Electoral Commission, mentioned in said act, having received certain subpoenas and papers purporting to be certificates, and papers accompanying the same, of the electoral votes from the State of South Carolina, and the objections thereto submitted to it under said act, now report that it has duly considered the same pursuant to said act, and has, by a majority of votes decided, and does hereby decide, that the votes of C. C. Bowen, J. Winsmith, Thomas B. Johnson, Timothy Hurley, W. B. Nash, Wilson Cook, and W. F. Myers, named in the certificate of D. H. Chamberlain, Governor of said State, which votes are certified by said persons, as appears by the certificates submitted to the commission as aforesaid, and marked "No. 1, S. C.," by said committee, and herewith returned, are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that the same are lawfully to be counted as herein certified, namely: Seven (7) votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of the State of Ohio, for President, and seven (7) votes for William A. Wheeler, of the State of New York, for Vice President.

The commission has, by a majority of votes, also decided, and does hereby decide and report, that the seven persons just above named were duly appointed electors in and by the State of South Carolina.

The brief ground of this decision is, that it appears upon such evidence as by the Constitution and the law named in said act of Congress, is competent and pertinent to the consideration of the subject, that the before mentioned electors appear to have been lawfully appointed such electors of President and Vice President of the United States for the term beginning March 4, A. D. 1877, of the State of South Carolina, and that they voted as such at the time and in the manner provided for by the Constitution of the United States and the law.

And the commission, as further grounds for their decision, are of opinion that the failure of the Legislature to provide a system for the registration of persons entitled to vote, does not render nugatory all elections held under said laws, otherwise sufficient, though it may be the duty of the Legislature to enact such a law. If it were otherwise all government in that State is a usurpation, its officers without authority, and the social compact in that State is at an end.

That this commission must take notice that there is a government in South Carolina republican in form, since its constitution provides for such a government, and it is, and was on the day of appointing electors, so recognized by the Executive, and by both branches of the legislative departments of the Government of the United States.

That so far as the commission can take notice of the presence of the soldiers of the United States in the State of South Carolina during the election, it appears that they were placed there by the President of the United States, to suppress insurrection, at the request of the proper authorities of the State.

But we are also of opinion that under the papers before us it appears that the Governor and Secretary of State having certified under the seal of the State that the electors whose votes we have decided to be the lawful electoral votes of the State were duly appointed electors, which certificates, both by presumption of law and by the certificate of the rival claimants of the electoral office, was based upon the action of the State canvassers, there exists no power in this commission, as there exists none in the two houses of Congress, in counting the electoral vote, to inquire into the circumstances under which the primary vote for electors was given.

The power of the Congress of the United States, in its legislative capacity, to inquire into the matters alleged and to act upon the information so obtained, is a very different one from its power in the matter of counting the electoral votes. The votes to be counted are those presented by the States, and when ascertained and presented by the proper authorities of the States they must be counted.

The commission has also decided, by a majority of votes, and does hereby direct and report, that as a cause of the foregoing and upon the grounds before stated, the paper purporting to be the electoral vote of said State of South Carolina, signed by Theodore R. Barker, S. McGowan, John W. Harrington, John Isaac Ingram, William Wallace, John B. Erwin, Robert Aldrich, marked "No. 2, S. C.," by the commission, and herewith returned, is not the certificate of the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that they ought not to be counted as such.

When the following resolution, offered by Mr. Morton, was unanimously adopted :

Resolved, That the thanks of the commission are due to Commissioner Clifford for the ability, impartiality, and urbanity with which he has presided over its deliberations.

The members of the commission were authorized to file, and have printed with its proceedings, the remarks made by them during its consultations, and removed from its private sessions the injunction of secrecy.

In the House the squad of Democratic filibusters attempted delay through their discreditable tactics, but were signally defeated. Mr. Springer's motion for a recess was rejected by a vote of yeas 92 to nays 170. Under the rulings of Speaker Randall their points of order and appeals—all for the purpose of delay—were soon disposed of. The Clerk read the decision of the Electoral Commission and the objections in the joint meeting of the two houses respecting the votes of South Carolina. When Mr. Philips, of Missouri, asked that the testimony in the case be read, Mr. Wood, of New York, objected, because the evidence comprised twelve hundred pages, and the reading, at the rate of ten pages per hour, would consume over five days; hence the object of calling for the reading was to defeat the count. The Speaker submitted the question to the House, and it refused, by a vote of 87 yeas to 175 nays, to have the testimony read. After the two hours debate under the electoral law had been exhausted, upon a resolution sustaining the objections, a call was made for the question, but an amendment of Mr. Walling, of Ohio, and the tactics of the filibusters were interposed, and they succeeded in forcing the following agreement :

"The amendment to be withdrawn, and the House to come to a direct vote upon the original resolution as amended by Mr. Walling, of Ohio; the Senate then to be invited to meet the House for the purpose of continuing the count; and when the State of Vermont shall be reached, and the two houses shall separate, then the House to take a recess until to-morrow at 10 o'clock."

The resolution sustaining the objections was then adopted.

In the Senate a resolution sustaining the decision of the commission was adopted.

The two houses reassembled in joint meeting. The separate action of the two houses was read and the count continued. The votes of South Carolina, Tennessee, and Texas were counted; when objection was made to the count of the votes of Vermont by Senator Merrimon and Representatives Springer and Hamilton on the ground that dual returns had been sent to the President of the Senate from the State. President Ferry stated that he had received but one return from the State. Mr. Hewitt offered a duplicate of the second return. The President declined to receive it. The law forbade his receiving any such paper after the first Thursday in February. Mr. Springer, of Illinois, produced an indecent scene by his violent and unparliamentary conduct, and President Ferry was compelled, again and again, to direct him to take his seat. Other objections, signed by Senator Barnum and Representatives Poppleton, McMahon, and others were filed, to the effect that Henry S. Sollace, a Hayes elector of the State of Vermont at the date of the last Presidential election, was ineligible as an elector, &c., but that the vote of Amos Aldrich, (Cronin, No. 2,) the Democratic elector who received the highest vote at the election, should be counted.

Here Mr. Springer attempted a renewal of his indecent conduct by demanding that the case of Vermont—it having dual returns—be referred to the Electoral Commission. The President of the Senate stated that he had received but the one set of returns, which had been read, and as there were no further objections he and the Senate withdrew.

The House then took a recess, as per agreement. In the Senate, after a brief debate, a resolution was unanimously adopted declaring that the vote of Sollace should be counted, when the Senate took a recess until the following morning.

In the House on Thursday, (March 1st,) the recess having expired, an attempt was made to consider and dispose of the objections in joint meeting to the count of Sollace's vote in the electoral college of Vermont. That the filibusters at once opposed by all manner of motions. They demanded that the bogus electoral certificate from Vermont presented by Mr. Hewitt be returned to the House by the President of the Senate, who they insisted had carried it away, and retained it in his custody; that it be opened by him in the joint meeting, and that if it contain a dual certificate of votes that the case of Vermont be referred to the Electoral Commission. All these demands were successively voted down by a decisive majority of the House. Then calls of the House by divisions, by tellers, and by yeas and nays, motions to reconsider these and to lay them on the table by yeas and nays, and motions to take recesses and the like; rising to frivolous points of orders without point, of questions of privilege, of "higher" privilege than the "highest" privilege—all amid the wildest confusion and indecent uproar; members rising and standing, some garrulously attempting spread-eagle bombast, others shouting in the effort to make themselves heard, and others gesticulating furiously, in all of which the galleries and lobby participated. Again and again were the lobbies and cloak-rooms cleared. All attempts and appeals of the Speaker and orderly members of the body to preserve the decorum of the House were openly defied. The scene baffles description. Engaged in it most prominently were Poppleton and Walling, of Ohio; Caulfield and Springer, of Illinois; Beebe, of New York; O'Brien, of Maryland; and Mills, of Texas—Beebe actually mounting a desk and ranting like a crazy harlequin in a mountebank show. At length the House reached the main question. The Senate had on the previous evening unanimously adopted a resolution declaring that the vote of Sollace should be counted. The House now voted that it should not be counted.

The joint meeting reassembled. The count was resumed. The votes of Vermont, Virginia, and West Virginia were counted. Objections were made to the count of Daniel L. Downs, a Hayes elector for Wisconsin, on the ground of ineligibility, he having been, it was alleged, at the date of his appointment, an examining surgeon for the Pension Office. The two houses separated. The Senate promptly decided that Downs' vote ought to be counted. In the House filibustering, indecent confusion and uproar again long prevailed. Mr. Mills, of Texas, moved a long series of "whereases," declaring that Tilden had been elected by the people, and denouncing the canvassing officers and Governors of Louisiana and Florida as guilty of corruption and fraud, and the Electoral Commission of duplicity and bad faith, declaring that Hayes had not been duly and legally elected, and ending with the following :

Resolved by the House of Representatives,
That said House will proceed immediately, in obedience to the Constitution, to choose a President.

Manifestly, a majority of the House was in favor of its adoption, but after a struggle it was beaten by the point that it was not in order, or germane to the objections under consideration, and the question upon Downs' vote was reached, and the House resolved that it should not be counted.

The joint meeting reassembled. The separate resolutions of the two houses were read and the count concluded. The five votes of Wisconsin were counted for Hayes and Wheeler, and the President of the Senate, after receiving the result from the tellers, announced that Rutherford B. Hayes having received 185 votes, a majority of all the votes cast, is duly elected President of the United States, and William A. Wheeler, having received 185 votes, a majority of all the votes cast, is duly elected Vice President of the United States, for four years from the 4th of March, 1877.

So the mighty struggle ended, and fortunately for the country, in the triumph of justice and right. During the later scenes of the disgraceful proceedings in the House, on Friday morning, Mr. Blackburn, of Kentucky, in his ill-suppressed malice, called its attention "to the fact that Friday had been ushered in—Friday, 'hangman's day'—a fit day to witness the consummation of the villainy of this procedure." Mr. Williams, of Wisconsin, responded. He said: "This is not only Friday, but hangman's day; and there could be no more fitting time than just past the hour of midnight—

'When churchyards yawn, and Hell itself breathes out
Contagion to this world'— that this bogus, pretentious, bastard brat of political reform, which for the last twelve months has affronted the eyes of God and men, should be strangled to death, gibbeted higher than Haman!" And so it was.

THE INAUGURATION OF RUTHERFORD B. HAYES.

By proclamation President Grant summoned, as is usual in such cases, an extra meeting of the Senate, to convene on Monday, March 5th, at 12 noon, to attend the inauguration of President elect R. B. Hayes, and of Vice President elect William A. Wheeler. The arrangements for this occasion have been made known to the country through the public press. Attended by an immense concourse of the most distinguished and prominent persons in official life, with a large number of ladies, and of visitors from all parts of the country, the members of the diplomatic corps, the judges of the Supreme Court, the outgoing Cabinet, and many other notables, the Senate convened at the hour designated. It was then organized by administering the oath to Vice President Wheeler and to the incoming Senators in the presence of the august assembly. The body then repaired to the stand prepared, in the usual place, on the east front of the Capitol, where, after all was arranged, the President elect received the oath of office at the hands of the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, and there, before a surging sea of upturned faces, delivered his inaugural address. This done, he was subsequently conveyed in the midst of a mighty procession back to the Executive Mansion, to enter on the duties of his term.

The time for preparation was exceedingly short. The city was thronged with strangers, and in the midst of the strongest and most bitter current of party and political excitement that ever swayed the nation, the proceedings of the day were accomplished without disorder, and as becomes the dignity of a great people and the fame of the great Republic—esto perpetua.

The inaugural address of President Hayes is a plain, manly statement of the condition of the country, and of what is required in order to secure the desired end. It is in harmony with what was said in his letter of acceptance. He gives the Southern question great prominence as a subject "of supreme importance," as it certainly is, and defines it as "the permanent pacification of the country upon such principles and by such measures as will secure the complete protection of all its citizens in the free enjoyment of all their constitutional rights." This view of the case will be heartily indorsed by every good citizen throughout the country, as will also the declaration that "the evils which afflict the Southern States can only be removed or remedied by the united and harmonious efforts of both races, actuated by motives of mutual sympathy and regard." He points to the necessity of the material development of the South, urges reform in the civil service, and closes with an earnest appeal in a united effort "to secure to our country the blessings of justice, peace, and union."

THE WORK OF THE FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

THE ELECTORAL COUNT.

The matter of President-making has pretty thoroughly absorbed the time and attention of Congress during the present session. The history of this most marvelous and unprecedented state of things is so thoroughly and accurately given in this number as to preclude the necessity of further notice in this place. One very singular result may, however, be mentioned. In the Senate Hon. T. W. Ferry, President of the Senate, ruled that the electoral-count day begun on Thursday, February 1st, and that it continues until the completion of the count, which must be before the 4th of March; and, further, that the legislative day can only transpire during the time that the Electoral Commission is sitting upon a case which has been referred to it under the recent law. At all other times no business has been in order but proceeding with the electoral count. As the Electoral Commission has been in session a considerable portion of the time since February 1st, this ruling, which is undoubtedly correct, has permitted the business of the Senate to proceed with less delay than at first might be supposed. In the House Mr. Speaker Randall started out upon a different theory, which was that nothing could be done after the count begun, aside from the proceedings of the count itself, except by unanimous consent. After a week or ten days of obstruction to the ordinary and necessary business of Congress, produced by this ruling, it was found necessary to change it and take the theory adopted by the President of the Senate.

THE APPROPRIATIONS.

The regular appropriation bills have this year been allowed to pass without much scrutiny or contest, the Democrats in the House having pretty much their own way of fixing them, as there has been no time for long discussions over these bills.

REPORTS OF INVESTIGATIONS.

The various committees constituted at the commencement of the session to examine into the existence and extent of fraud and intimidation in the late Presidential election, have either fully or nearly completed their labors, and some of the reports have been already made or made in part. An immense mass of evidence has been taken, and the want of time and the general confusion will prevent this Congress from ever being able in any proper manner to digest it, and it must be turned over to the archives of the Capitol, to furnish food for the curious and the philosophical, or to aid the future historian in his researches in regard to the actual condition of these eventful times.

CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

An interesting memorial touching the provision for a suitable place for the deposit of the relics of the Centennial Exposition, which have been accumulating in large quantities from our own and foreign countries, has been made in the House. The list of countries presenting these materials, besides our own, is as follows: Argentine Republic, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Chili, China, Egypt, France, Germany, Hawaii, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Orange Free States, Peru, Portugal, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Siam, Switzerland, Turkey, Tunis, Great Britain, Bermuda, Canada, New South Wales, New Zealand, Queensland, South Australia, Tasmania, Victoria, and Venezuela. It is likely that a building will be furnished by the Government for these materials.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

In the Senate a long discussion has been in progress on a bill reported to amend the former legislation in regard to the Pacific railroad companies and the matters necessary to be adjusted between them and the Government of the United States. But no conclusion has been reached thereon.

THE RECUSANT WITNESSES.

Governor Wells and General Anderson, members of the Returning Board of the State of Louisiana, have been held in contempt by the Democratic House and placed in close confinement in the basement of the Capitol for not producing papers and documents over which they have now no control, and which they have no right to produce if they possessed them. The oppression of the House has been in this instance arbitrary and severe, and has called forth an indignant protest from a large portion of the press of the country. It is an evil, however, which will, in a few days, come to an end; and if there is any redress for such treatment under the laws and in the courts of the country, these gentlemen ought to prosecute it to the end.

MR. JAMES B. EADS.

This gentleman, having succeeded with his jetties in making the contemplated improvement in the south pass of the mouth of the Mississippi river, comes now before Congress, claiming, under former legislation, half a million of dollars. Much discussion has followed this application, but Congress has finally awarded it to him, and the money has been paid from the United States Treasury.

THE DISTRICT TAX BILL.

This bill has been pending some time in the Senate, but was finally passed by that body. Its provisions are rather onerous upon the tax-payers of the District, but on the whole may be accepted as the fairest that Congress is disposed to concede. The rate of taxation on real estate in the cities of Washington and Georgetown is $1 50 to the $100, and in other parts of the District $1 to the $100. Church edifices and school buildings are exempt. The bill, in substance, will doubtless become a law, and stand for the present as the legislation controlling this important subject.

COMPLETION OF THE COUNT.

On the morning of March 2d, at about 4 o'clock, Congress having been in session all night, and that on the heel of one of the most exciting days ever known in the Capitol, the two houses having met for the last time in joint convention, the vote of Wisconsin, the last of the thirty-eight States of the Union, was counted for Hayes and Wheeler. The tellers summed up the count, and Mr. Allison, one of the Senate tellers, announced the vote to stand as follows: Whole number of votes of the electoral college, 369; for Hayes and Wheeler, 185; for Tilden and Hendricks, 184.

Then, in the presence of a large concourse of people and of the two houses of Congress, and in the midst of circumstances that were truly dramatic, the President of the Senate, Hon. T. W. Ferry, in the usual form declared the result of the election. He then dissolved the joint convention, and the two houses separated and soon after adjourned to meet for legislation at 12 o'clock noon.

THE ELECTORAL COMMISSION.

This tribunal met in the room of the Supreme Court on Friday, March 2d, and after the settlement of some routine business, the salaries of reporters, clerks, and officers, adjourned sine die. Much has been said of this commission pro and con. It has had one of the most difficult, arduous, and delicate tasks to accomplish that was ever assigned to the judgment of men. But it has settled the controversy which menaced anarchy to the nation; and when the smoke of the contest has cleared away it is believed that its decisions will be accepted by all reasonable and fair-minded men as the only proper and legal conclusions which could have been reached, and its judgment will be honored in time to come as the only means of safety to the Republic in a time of imminent peril.

THE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

As noted above the regular appropriations have been kept far behind, not only from want of time and attention, but from various grave points of difference between the Senate and the House, such as the President's salary, the number of the standing army, the questions of internal improvement, and many others. The last two days of the session have found Congress under an unusual pressure, straining every nerve to complete the necessary legislation before its expiration. Frequent committees of conference have been raised, and every hour has been appropriated, even up to the last moment at 12 o'clock noon on Sunday, a necessity which many of the better portion of the people will regret. In the afternoon of Saturday the army bill was under consideration in the Senate. The legislative bill was in the hands of a second conference committee, the chief difference being the item of the President's salary. The navy, post office, and sundry civil service bills were in first conference. The river and harbor bill was yet in the hands of the appropriation committee. The Indian, West Point, deficiency, pension, consular and diplomatic, and fortification bills had all become laws. The postal bill was hanging fire on the Pacific mail subsidy. Later the Senate receded from its demand, and the subsidy was stricken out. To work these bills through before the expiration of Congress was an exhausting task, especially with men who by so long a strain upon them were already worn out with fatigue. President Grant was in his room awaiting the bills for signature. So the night wore away. The struggle over the army bill was intense. No agreement could be effected. Slowly the two houses came to an agreement amid an indescribable confusion which transcended any other former closing of Congress known for many years.

THE CLOSING SCENES.

The Sabbath morning dawned upon the flags still floating above the Capitol. Men, tired and haggard, looking after some interest which engrossed them, still traversed the corridors and hung about the doors. In the Senate the business went on with comparative order and dispatch. In the House nearly three hundred members were at times struggling for the floor to make a speech or raise some point of order, and the gavel of the Speaker was in constant requisition. But one after another the bills were passed—all save the army bill, which, owing to the stubborn resistance of each house, was finally left behind, and will necessitate an early session of the new Congress. The closing moments at last arrived. Mr. Speaker Randall offered a few parting words, the gavel fell, and the House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress was no more, and many will say they do not wish to see its like again.

In the Senate, President T. W. Ferry, who has so ably presided over that body since the death of Vice President Wilson, pronounced a brief and most appropriate address, and with feeling words, to which Senators without party distinction gave most cordial assent, announced the conclusion of the session of the Senate in the Congress which then expired.

In some respects this Congress has been without a parallel in the history of the country. Its course has been stormy from the beginning, and the echoes of the tumult yet resound.

EARLY'S RAID ON WASHINGTON.

A LEAF FROM HISTORY.

The beginning of July, 1864, found Grant with his powerful army of tried veterans in front of Petersburg, the key of the rebel capital. Daily he was tightening the grasp that was to end in the capture of the doomed city. In vain General Lee exerted his consummate skill to break the steel chain that the Federal army was drawing around him. The men that had swept from the Rapidan to the James river in the face of death and fought their way inch by inch to the very heart of the Confederacy, could not be turned aside from their purpose. They had come to take Richmond, and nothing but some unforeseen disaster could prevent them. The rebel commander, ever fruitful in resources, and desperate as a lion at bay, determined on a bold stroke to raise the siege and, if possible, escape from his indomitable adversary. He knew that Grant had drawn every available man from the defenses of Washington; that but a small force stood between Richmond and the Federal capital, and that a rapid movement up the valley of the Shenandoah would, in all probability, result in the capture of Washington, or the quick release of Grant's iron grasp upon the throat of the Confederacy.

The movement was planned in secret, and its execution was the first intimation of Lee's design. General Jubal Early was put in command of about twenty-five thousand men—the best in the rebel army. Breckinridge and Rhodes were among his corps commanders. On the 3d of July the rebel army had reached Martinsburg without encountering any opposition. Sigel, with his small command, beat a hasty retreat across the Potomac. Weber, at Harper's Ferry, heard of the advance just in time to withdraw his command from that point, and took up his position on the Maryland Heights opposite. Early had thus driven, without a shot, the slight obstacles from his path. The gates of the North were found open and unguarded, and the flushed enemy swept through them to achieve, what was thought at the time, an easy victory ahead. Without any effort to prevent them they crossed the Potomac at Williamsport and Point of Rocks, and on the 6th of July had penetrated to Hagerstown. From this point strong detachments were sent out to occupy Frederick and neighboring towns, and to destroy the railroads and canals leading to Baltimore and Washington. Thus far the movement had been a grand success. The Federal authorities had been taken by surprise, and for the time being, it looked as if the superb strategy of Lee was to achieve all that he had hoped for.

General Grant, however, was not idle. As soon as he divined Lee's purpose he adopted measures to defeat it. It was a grand game on the chess board of war, and though Lee had the advantage of a move, Grant's masterly activity and sagacity won in the end. Never in his brilliant career did his genius show to better advantage. Quick as a flash his forces were in motion. Hardly had Early's columns left Richmond before Grant's troops were in motion to intercept them. It was, in reality, a race for the Federal capital; Early moving by land, Grant's forces by water.

General Lew Wallace, commanding the department of Annapolis, was quickly apprised of the rebel movement, and took measures to defeat it. He had about eight thousand men, the larger portion of which were one hundred days' men, and artillery men from the defenses of Baltimore. Rickett's division of the old sixth corps was the only tried fighting material under his command.

The best point of defense was thought to be on the Monocacy, near the railroad crossing. Here Wallace hoped to keep the enemy at bay until General Wright, with the remainder of the sixth corps and part of the nineteenth, could reach Washington.

Early knew the value of time. He knew that Grant was not asleep, and he felt that a single hour's delay might snatch from him the golden prize. He ran against the columns of Wallace, and without stopping to determine their strength, precipitated his fighting force of 16,000 men against them. The contest was like to a fight between a full-grown man and a plucky boy. The boy stood his ground, fought like a hero, checked the progress of the man, and retreated from the field only when forced by unequal odds to do so.

Wallace fell back upon Baltimore, leaving the road to Washington open to the victorious enemy.

Early had been crippled by the desperate fight, and for the first time since leaving Richmond was checked in his rapid movements. But he took in the situation at a glance, and with almost superhuman efforts pushed on toward the defenseless capital. The battle of the Monocacy was fought on the 8th of July, yet by forced marches, Early's advance had reached Rockville on the morning of the 10th, and by the 11th his entire force was in front of the empty defenses of the Federal capital. The sixth and nineteenth corps had not yet arrived. A handful of old soldiers held Fort Stevens, at the head of the Seventh street road, while the rifle pits were poorly defended by raw recruits, and as many of the convalescents as the hospitals of the city could turn out for the emergency. Surely, nothing but an act of Providence could save the city; for, at the word of command, the men that had charged our blazing batteries at Malvern Hill and Gettysburg would rush over the weak defenses of Washington as easy as a column of flame over the dry grass of the prairie.

The writer of this sketch was in Washington on the 10th of July, 1864. News of Wallace's defeat had been received, and swift couriers had heralded the rapid approach of Early. The occupation of the city was hourly expected, and temporary defenses were erected at several points. The clerks of the several departments were formed into companies and regiments, and arms and uniforms hastily distributed among them. The most exposed public buildings were quickly barricaded, and at the head of Pennsylvania and New York avenues, near the Treasury Department, batteries of artillery were planted.

Sunday night, the 10th, the enemy was expected. It was known that their advance had reached Rockville in the morning, and a forced march would have brought them in front of the city before night. The streets and avenues were deserted. From the principal streets every vehicle and other obstructions had been removed, while thousands passed a sleepless night, expecting the enemy's entrance before morning. But they did not come, and the morning of the 11th dawned upon the capital—still safe, and upon the advance of the rebel army within gunshot of its defenses.

That Washington could have been captured on the night of the 10th and at any time before the evening of the 11th has been claimed by rebel authorities and generally conceded by the best informed of the Union army. Why was it not taken? Various reasons have been assigned, but the true one must be found in the subsequent admissions of Early himself. They clearly indicate that at the critical moment when orders had been given for an advance both Early and Rhodes were deceived into the belief that the re-enforcements sent by Grant had reached the city and were in strong position in their front.

As this portion of the history of the rebel movement upon Washington is but little known, we deem it proper to bring the rebel commander on the stand as a witness against himself. He had been severely blamed for his failure to grasp the prize which, for a whole day, lay within reach of his grasp, and to defend himself he was forced to explain why it was that he held his army in check at the very moment when its advance must have secured the Federal capital. In his report Early says:

"A short time after noon (July 11th,) riding some distance ahead of my infantry I got in sight of the fortifications of Washington, into which a force of the enemy's cavalry had retired before mine. The works were apparently feebly manned, though they appeared to be strong in themselves. My whole column was moving by the flank along the road from a necessity of the case, as the character of the country would not permit a movement in any other way, and the trains were interspersed in the column for protection. I sent word for the leading division (Rhodes') to be brought up as rapidly as possible, and for the other divisions except one to be left as a guard to the trains, to move out of the column to the front. This was the work of time. General Rhodes was ordered to have his division brought into line as it came up and to move at once against the works. While his brigade was coming up he and I were in front examining the works, and before his first brigade could be formed into line we saw a cloud of dust from the direction of Washington and a column of infantry had filed into the trenches on the right and left and a regiment was sent to the front as skirmishers. We saw the men deploy with precision, and Rhodes remarked, 'they are not hundred days' men; they are old soldiers!'"

This was the movement that deceived Early into the belief that a portion of Grant's army had arrived and that caused him to hesitate about throwing himself upon an unknown force. His hesitation was the salvation of the city, for not until after 3 o'clock in the afternoon did a soldier from either the sixth or nineteenth corps disembark at the wharf at Washington—nearly five miles from the scene of action.

The regiment—or rather the skeleton regiment, for it numbered less than four hundred men—that had advanced as skirmishers, and deployed with such precision as to deceive both Early and Rhodes, was the twenty-fifth New York, dismounted cavalry, under the command of Captain S. E. Chamberlain. It had been ordered to Camp Stoneman to be remounted, for it had seen active service, and by the casualties of battle had lost, not only in numbers, but in everything save courage and endurance. It left City Point on the 7th of July, arrived at Baltimore on the 8th, and Camp Stoneman on the 9th. It was destined to have no rest, for at midnight of the 10th it was ordered to move as quickly as possible into the defenses of Washington. At daybreak it had reached Fort Stevens, and during the morning it kept up an active exchange of shots with the advance posts of the rebel army. Early's sharpshooters had taken possession of the houses within rifle range of Fort Stevens, and to dislodge them and destroy the houses became a necessity. The work might well test the courage of the oldest veterans, but Captain (afterward Colonel) Chamberlain and his gallant men were equal to the occasion. At two o'clock he received the order to advance as skirmishers. 'The men sprang into line as if about to go on parade instead of into the face of an army of fifteen thousand strong. To make the attempt with an army at their back to support them would have been gallant work, but to charge upon the rebel outposts with only a defenseless city to fall back upon, was an act of valor unsurpassed in the history of the war. Its very boldness deceived the enemy. The sixth corps was deemed invincible. Its presence on the field was equal to an additional corps. Early had heard of its detachment from Grant's forces; he had been advised of its approach, and when he saw this skeleton regiment deploying with precision under a severe fire, and sweeping his sharpshooters from their hiding places, no wonder he was deceived into the belief that this was the van of an army that had come to the relief of Washington.

We have been permitted to examine the diary of Captain Chamberlain, and the entries made at the time tell the whole story. We append the record of four days.

July 10th, 1864. Received orders to move into the defenses of Washington. Marched from camp at midnight. Arrived at Fort Stevens on the morning of the 11th.

July 11th. Ordered out as skirmishers at 2 P. M. Rebs within rifle shot of Fort Stevens. Advanced and drove the enemy from houses. Sharp fighting. Burned several houses by order. Was relieved by the sixth corps. Loss, five killed and thirteen wounded. Maloney of my company killed.

July 12th. Went out on a skirmish line and relieved regiment of invalids. Exchanged shots with enemy until evening, when enemy advanced strong line of skirmishers. Sharp fighting by the sixth corps; enemy driven back.

July 13th. Rebs all left. Sixth and nineteenth corps in pursuit.

How well the statement of General Early confirms the belief that to the providential movement of the twenty-fifth New York cavalry, dismounted, we owe the preservation of the nation's capital on the 11th day of July. Early says he came in sight of the defenses "a short time after noon." He ordered the attacking columns to be brought up. He says: "This was the work of time." The work of preparation must have taken at least an hour and a half, which would have made it near two o'clock when he and Rhodes saw a regiment advance on skirmish line, and with such precision as to force the latter to say: "They are not hundred days' men; they are old soldiers."

The diary of the gallant Chamberlain says, "ordered out as skirmishers at 2 P. M." Here we have the secret of that unaccountable delay which gave us the few hours that were needed to bring to the front the sixth and nineteenth corps. The statement of Early and the diary of Chamberlain show conclusively that to the brave men who advanced in the face of the rebel army at two o'clock on the 11th day of July, belong the credit of saving the capital from rebel invasion. Without a knowledge of their own weakness, they stood in the breach at the very moment of supreme danger, and under Providence became the humble instruments of diverting a national calamity, the result of which might have changed the whole subsequent history of our struggle for national existence.

If the prompt obedience of a soldier at the critical moment ever saved an army or wrested victory from defeat, the prompt execution of the order to advance by Captain Chamberlain saved the capital, for if Early had known that this handful of men had nothing but empty or poorly-manned trenches behind them, he could have entered the city without firing a shot. Before he knew the truth the golden opportunity had been lost forever, for at sun-down the tramp of the old sixth corps resounded through the streets of Washington, and the morning of the 12th found the defenses of Washington once more impregnable.

The rest of the story is soon told. Early, chagrined at his failure, determined to make an attempt to force a passage into the city. He advanced in force, but was met by veterans who had faced him before on many a hard-fought field. The struggle was short, sharp, and decisive, and under cover of the night he withdrew his forces baffled and defeated. General Wright was placed in command of our forces and on the morning of the 13th began a hot pursuit of the rebel army. He struck the rear guard of Early at Snicker's Ferry, on the Shenandoah. A sharp battle was fought and the enemy was again worsted. Our cavalry, under Averill, caught a portion of the rebel army at Winchester and captured four guns and five hundred prisoners; but our forces were too weak to follow Early down the valley, and not until Sheridan was placed in command and our army re-enforced, did we succeed in driving Early out of the valley of the Shenandoah. From its rich grain fields he had been drawing supplies for Lee's army, and he was loth to leave. He contested the ground with desperate energy and consummate skill, and not until Sheridan's brilliant victory at Cedar Creek had taught him that he was dealing with a master hand, did he relinquish his idea of another and more successful move upon the nation's capital. How far the galling recollection of his lost opportunity went to spur him on to another effort will never be known. That it must have remained a thorn in his memory is shown by his subsequent statements justifying his action by claiming that he was governed by those prudential motives which should actuate a commander when far removed from his base of operations.

On the old battle-field in front of Fort Stevens is a national cemetery in which lie buried the brave men who fell in defense of the capital. The few head-boards bearing the inscription "killed July 11th" mark the graves of the gallant fellows who stood in the track of a victorious army, and, by their valor, held it in check until the long expected relief arrived. They died without a knowledge of the priceless value of the services rendered, and although their sacrifices were no greater than those who fell on the 12th, a grateful nation should inscribe their names upon granite that posterity might know the men who plucked the precious hours from the grasp of time and held them until the moment of supreme danger was passed.

The gallant officer who led this forlorn hope still lives to enjoy the fruits of his heroic service. For bravery in the field he rose to the rank of Colonel, and until the close of the war rounded out on other fields the fame he earned in the defense of Washington. Marrying into a Quaker family, well-known throughout Loudon county for their loyalty during the war, the Colonel resigned from the regular army, into which he had been commissioned, and devoted his time and energies to the more peaceful and congenial pursuits of civil life. Though a Vermonter by birth he has made Virginia his home, and if the better qualities of manhood combined with a chivalric love for the Republican party can find their proper appreciation in the Old Dominion, he is sure to take rank among her most honored citizens. Modest, brave, upright, he is a good type of the American gentleman—distinguished alike in peace or war for his high sense of honor and his ready response to the call of duty.

EDUCATION IN VIRGINIA.

If it were possible to photograph the minds of Southern Democrats as Shakespeare caught folly in his time, and drew it at full length for the world's instruction, the blindest and most chaotic confusion would be the subject of representation. Virginia, the Old Dominion, the Mother of Presidents, the slave-breeding State, which, when under Republican rule, had a school fund, but of which the Democracy robbed it when it passed under Democratic control—the State which feels disposed to repudiate its public debt and has already defaulted in its payment of the interest—Virginia, Democratic and disloyal, synonymous words everywhere in the South, is in the throes of something concerning the education of its youth. Slavery, with the rebellion of the Democratic party in the old slave States, has managed to exhibit human nature in the worst phase of its depravity. And, indeed, the influence and operation of those two crimes upon the human mind seem to obliterate every sense of manhood in the parties interested, who evidently take delight in kicking away every instrumentality that might improve them, in order that they may revel unrestrained in ignorance and pronounce aloud their refusal to be better informed.

Education in the South has never reached a very high standard. On the one side, the owner of slaves did not wish to take more trouble than he could help to become scholarly, so he stopped short at a considerable distance from the temple of knowledge. On the other, the densest ignorance on the part of the slave was the favored condition selected for him by his master, who, when he could sell him with the certainty that he could not read and could guarantee that he had not an idea in his head, took his money with ecstasy, and thanked God that the soul of that black man ought to have burst with gratitude for the training it had received in Southern Christianity. No slaves are alleged to be in Virginia now, as the freedmen are citizens, whatever may be the conduct of Democrats. But there are colored and white children growing up into man and womanhood who must be educated, and the trouble is, what books shall be used? Alas, the old leaven has crept in. Surviving rebel Democrats want the rebellion spoken well of in the lessons of children in such schools as are not shut. They want the young mind taught that the rebellion was not wrong; that the attempted destruction of the Union was no crime; that hatred of the Old Flag and contempt of the National Government should be cherished as a duty, and that a high-spirited Southern citizen should always call the citizens of the North, East and West, Yankees, because they love work and are industrious, and because they know the epithet is offensive. Southern books of history only are suitable for Southern schools, never mind the truth or the facts, which are sometimes inconvenient, and when so, should always be concealed. Such military chieftains as Robt. E. Lee and Mosby, Stonewall Jackson and Major General Bishop Polk were Southern Napoleons, who never lost a battle, if they did not always win, because they cut up the Yankees, hip and thigh; while Generals Grant and Sherman and the Union military commanders would stand looking at the retreating forms of the warm-hearted chivalry as they hastily left the battle-fields and did not know how much they were despised, as they ought to have done. The impudence of the Yankee soldiers was intolerable. They belonged to every class and trade under the sun, and left their respective vocations to save the country. They would have been slaves in the South, for they actually loved labor, and said they kept their families in comfort and respectability by it, which showed at once the evils of freedom and the superior civilization of the South. And then the horrid and blasphemous blunders of the Yankees must be proved in the books used in schools. The South was not beaten; oh, no! The rebellion was not put down; the South wouldn't have slaves if it could, although the "nigger" was once a slave and has no right to wages when he works for white men, who would be degraded by labor, and slavery is the rightful position of the inferior race. A convulsion must have occurred in April, 1865, on Southern soil, which made it more sacred and more endeared to us. The South, which had not been used to industry, grew tired of the war, stacked arms and went home to live in doubt of what would come next. But when it learned that the Republican party passed amnesty laws, of which the most chivalrous Southerner took advantage, every rebel Democrat could afford to laugh at the Yankee North when it talked of putting down the rebellion and resolve to carry it on at their leisure. The rebellion triumphed. The South beat the Yankee North at their own game. The weakness of the Republican party was appalling, and the war was a failure.

Away with the Yankee trash of the history of the United States from Virginia schools! Away with all the false histories that say the Union and its cause succeeded. The South has its own views of the Union and its value, and will please itself in spite of the North, and the vast public debt the rebellion cost, and the enormous bloodshed of the struggle. "Goodrich's Pictorial History of the United States" may do very well in Yankee schools; but for the youth of Virginia, never! So, at least, says the Rev. Dr. W. H. Ruffner, as will be seen by the following letter:

RICHMOND, TUESDAY NIGHT,
January 16, 1877.

To the Editor of The State:

DEAR SIR: I am acquainted with the school history you object to in your paper of this afternoon, and with you consider it, as well as Northern histories of the United States generally, as unfit for use in Virginia public schools. Only Virginia-written histories are allowed by the regulations of the Board of Education. Unfortunately this board, although required by law to provide for uniformity of textbooks, does not possess power sufficient to enforce its regulations in the face of resolute opposition on the part of the local authorities. But as respects this "Goodrich's History," I have no knowledge of its being used in even one single public school in the State, although I do not affirm that it is not. It was used in some of the Richmond public schools when the city system came under State control, in 1871, but I strenuously objected to it at that time and thought that its use was entirely discontinued. The City Superintendent of Schools tells me now that he does not know of any case in which it is used in the city schools.

It has been objected also that "Swinton's History of the United States" is used in some of our public schools. I can only say that it is done contrary to the regulations of the State Board.

Very respectfully,

W. H. RUFFNER,
Superintendent Public Schools.

Mark!—Only Virginia-written histories are allowed in Virginia by the regulation of the Board of Education. Only histories which represent the cause of the rebellion as holy, and every battle a rebel conquest over freedom and its cause—over Yankee mudsills! In such case, the rebellion, indeed, has not ended. Let the country note the present training of the Southern youth now growing up to manhood. The rising generation are taught to venerate the crimes and falsehoods of their Democratic rebel fathers, pardoned by the unheard-of weakness of the Republican party, and are trained under the very eyes of that party to vindicate them and the most Godless and bloodiest rebellion in which the hand of man was ever engaged.

MR. FIELD BEFORE THE COMMISSION.

Putting aside the question of the propriety of raising a commission to decide whether Mr. Hayes or Mr. Tilden has been elected President of the United States for four years from the 4th of March, 1877, it may be said that its action thus far (February 10th) has been wisely controlled. But the action of the Democratic counsel, or counsel for Mr. Tilden, has been just the reverse. The awkwardness of the position of Mr. David Dudley Field has been felt most acutely by his friends. He was Mr. Tweed's counsel, eminent in the law; he was concerned in some kind of international arbitration scheme which would transfer the battle-field to a court, and change the sword for the fluent tongue of a lawyer with all the happy plausibility of a Chinese gong. Suddenly the face of Mr. D. D. Field vanished from the courts of New York, where he was gathering money swiftly; but as suddenly it appeared in the Capitol at Washington, where his earnings would be limited, however great his labors. One might imagine that an ambitious man would have made political capital out of the position. But Mr. Field was not satisfied with politics. He had not scope and verge enough. He came with a "single eye" to duty; such an eye as Fernando Wood claimed to have in his employ, but which conferred no honor on him under any circumstances. Mr. Field's single eye soon wandered from political generalities, though faithful to Democratic doctrine and interests, and a seat having been provided for its owner in Proctor Knott's Committee on Privileges and Elections, it settled itself firmly on Mr. Tilden's countenance, from which it took its cue. The grim visage of Mr. David Dudley Field, with his eye vacant to all sublunary things, but resting in the direction of the defeated Democratic candidate for the Presidency, soon extinguished Proctor Knott, and the disappearance of that gentleman by reason of his extinction, induced the New York Times to remark with subdued jocularly that Mr. Field had become the committee itself, and that his single eye resting on a witness, either coached a Democrat to lie lovingly against Republicans, or caused instant annihilation to a Republican who was capable of testifying ugly facts—facts of foul assassination, perjury, and fraud against Democrats who had sold themselves to Mr. Tilden.

Strange surmises every now and then float in the air. What could induce a lawyer like Mr. David Dudley Field, in large practice before the courts, with a large income derived therefrom, suddenly to leave his clients and sit as a substitute for a member of the House of Representatives at the fag end of the last session of an expiring Congress? Mr. Field could not have been moved by a love of fame, for the fame of having been Tweed's chief counsel will never leave him, although some persons call it infamous. Then again, the pay of a Congressman was infinitely less than that he received as a lawyer. Was it friendship? Friendship for Mr. Tilden, who was defeated, that he might help the Democratic party to defeat the people who elected Mr. Hayes? Mr. Tilden would hardly call upon Mr. David Dudley Field, even for friendship's sake, to help him in such a case, at so great a pecuniary sacrifice. It is good, solid doctrine that the laborer is worthy of his hire. And if the mist could be penetrated, and the truth laid bare, it might be seen that the "single eye" of Mr. Field is fixed distinctly on that "bar'l" of money owned by Mr. Tilden, which has so debauched and bedeviled the Democrats, but to a share of which Mr. Field's extraordinary labors may possibly entitle him.

Now, Mr. Field's legal ability is unquestioned. But if his advent in the House threw the Democratic intellect into a state of gross fermentation, what shall be said of the consternation of the commission as it beheld this doughty champion of Mr. Tilden stalk into court? There he was with his eye pealed and ready to fix itself, with the tenacity of a leech, on any political atrocity that would remove "defeat" from the name of Mr. Tilden, as the Democratic friends of a "deserter in the presence of the enemy" labor to have "deserted" erased from his name on the rolls of the Federal army. The commission was indeed moved. Its members had heard of his appeals on behalf of Mr. Tilden—grand, impulsive, melting! If he did not call Jove to his aid, he spoke of the virtues of the Democratic party and the love of the gentle Democratic rebel to Southern Republicans, who were only asked to vote the Democratic ticket, or be shot if they didn't; or the sly trick of the gentle, rebel Democratic bulldozer, full of fun, who cast whole handfuls of Democratic ballots in the box, and swore that they had been voted by Republicans, who dearly loved Mr. Tilden! He held up the Democratic truth of violence and murder, with all the evidence of death produced, and asked the world to disbelieve it, and look on Mr. Tilden, whom the country had defeated because the people did not want him—and would not trust him! Then with that sparkling eye and glib tongue, Mr. Field appealed to the national honor in favor of Mr. Tilden's cause, but he did not say that both Mr. Tilden and his cause have dishonored the American name, which the people felt, and felt, too, the strongest determination to prevent the Democratic party from profiting by its wrongs and crimes!

The great commission then was startled when Mr. Field appeared with his eye "single" and fixed in the direction of Mr. Tilden, as his legal help. The subject was the Democratic rascality in Florida, in the perpetration of which certain Democrats said they were Democratic electors, and cast their vote for Mr. Tilden. They might as well have said that they were Dragons of Wantley, who had been engaged to perform a farce for the benefit of a stuffed alligator, as the decision of the commission has since shown. But they were Democrats, and that was enough for Mr. Field. He was ready to wrestle against the Republican case, and rose to his feet with an objection which he was about to launch at the commission. But the presiding justice interposed with a queer inquiry, involving whether he appeared as counsel in the Democratic case or as a member of Congress. Mr. Field did not appear as counsel, so he said. But that he should be called upon to define his position must have arisen from his superserviceable performances, which smacked more of the paid advocate for Mr. Tilden, with a single eye to a monster fee, rather than of the modest labor of a member of Congress serving his country for his country's good, at a small compensation. Why, the compensation would hardly pay for the services of his head clerk in watching the interests of Mr. Field's clients, who expected the work of the master himself to be given instead of that of an underling, who simply stopped a gap to enable his master to lose money after the manner of patriots. There is a mystery about it, however, to be unraveled. Looking straight into the eye of Mr. Tweed, who has not yet made restitution, and then at the single eye of Mr. Field, anybody may say that he is not the man to lose money when money is to be made.

THERE are some sixty-four thousand book agents in the United States, of whom nearly one thousand committed suicide last year—failed to learn a trade, and forced at a later period to labor and suffer for a miserable pittance. The percentage of mortality among the traveling insurance, sewing machine, and lightning rod agents is even greater. This is the result of a natural law. Five-sixths of these men should have been mechanics or cultivators of the soil.

DESPITE the severity with which the depression in trade has been felt in Canada, the finances are in a satisfactory condition. This results from judicious economy, the Government expenses, including the debt interest, being about one-fourth less than the annual disbursements of our civic Treasury. With this light taxation, the Dominion needs only a wider market to attain greater prosperity.

A GREAT FALL FOR DEMOCRACY.—Shades of Webster! To what base uses has Democracy returned when it falls back upon Fernando Wood as the great expounder of the Constitution!

SPECIE RESUMPTION.

MESSAGE OF PRESIDENT GRANT.

On Saturday, February 3d, the following message from the President was received and read in the House of Representatives:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

By the act of Congress approved January 14, 1875, "to provide for the resumption of specie payments," the 1st of January, 1879, is fixed as the date when such resumption is to begin. It may not be desirable to fix an earlier date when it shall actually become obligatory upon the Government to redeem its outstanding legal-tender notes in coin on presentation, but it is certainly most desirable and will prove most beneficial to every pecuniary interest of the country to hasten the day when the paper circulation of the country and the gold coin shall have equal values.

At a later day if currency and coin should retain equal values it might become advisable to authorize or direct resumption. I believe the time has come when by a simple act of the legislative branch of the Government this most desirable result can be attained. I am strengthened in this view by the course trade has taken in the last two years, and by the strength of the credit of the United States at home and abroad.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, the exports of the United States exceeded the imports by $120,213,102; but our exports include $40,569,621 of specie and bullion in excess of imports of the same commodities. For the six months of the present fiscal year, from July 1, 1876, to January 1, 1877, the excess of exports over imports amounted to $107,544,869, and the import of specie and bullion exceeded the export of the precious metals by $6,192,147 in the same time. The actual excess of exports over imports for the six months, exclusive of specie and bullion, amounted to $113,737,040, showing for the time being the accumulation of specie and bullion in the country amounting to more than $6,000,000 in addition to the national product of these metals for the same period, a total increase of gold and silver for the six months not far short of $60,000,000. It is very evident that unless this great increase of the precious metals can be utilized at home in such a way as to make it in some manner remunerative to the holders, it must seek a foreign market as surely as would any other product of the soil or the manufactory. Any legislation which will keep coin and bullion at home will, in my judgment, soon bring about practical resumption and will add the coin of the country to the circulating medium, thus securing a healthy "inflation" of a sound currency to the great advantage of every legitimate business interest.

The act to provide for the resumption of specie payments authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds of either of the descriptions named in the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," for not less than par in gold. With the present value of the 4½ per cent. bonds in the markets of the world, they could be exchanged at par for gold, thus strengthening the Treasury to meet final resumption and to keep the excess of coin over demand, pending its permanent use as a circulating medium, at home. All that would be further required would be to reduce the volume of legal-tender notes in circulation. To accomplish this I would suggest an act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue 4 per cent. bonds, with forty years to run before maturity, to be exchanged for legal-tender notes whenever presented in sums of $50, or any multiple thereof, the whole amount of such bonds, however, not to exceed $150,000,000. To increase the home demand for such bonds I would recommend that they be available for deposit in the United States Treasury for banking purposes under the various provisions of law relating to national banks.

I would suggest further, that national banks be required to retain a certain percentage of the coin interest received by them from the bonds deposited with the Treasury to secure their circulation.

I would also recommend the repeal of the third section of the joint resolution "for the issue of silver coin," approved July 22, 1876, limiting the subsidiary coin and fractional currency to $50,000,000.

I am satisfied that if Congress will enact some such law as will accomplish the end suggested, they will give a relief to the country instant in its effects, and for which they will receive the gratitude of the whole people.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Feb. 3, 1877.

SENATOR SARGENT made a powerful speech against the electoral bill, and placed himself in the ranks of the defenders of the Constitution.

RUSSIA.

REGULATIONS RELATIVE TO PAYMENT IN GOLD OF CUSTOMS DUTIES.

[Translated from the "Official Gazette," November 25, (13,) 1876. No. 254.]

The Committee on Finance, in their official journal, publish the following regulations, approved by his Imperial Majesty on the 10th day of November, 1876, based on the report of the Minister of Finance :

1. From and after January 1st, 1877, customs duties will be payable in gold coin.

NOTE.—In sales of merchandise at auction by the customs authorities the amount of commission to be paid will be computed at gold rates.

2. It is left to the discretion of the Minister of Finance to permit such of the customs offices as he may deem expedient to receive, besides the Russian gold coin, the following representatives of value :

a. Coupons of the current and of the last preceding term, pertaining to the notes of the Russian "metallique" State loan ; to the 4 per cent. metal notes of the Imperial Bank ; to the bonds of the Nicolai railroad, and to the consolidated bonds of Russian railroads.

b. Such notes and bonds of the above description as have been drawn for redemption.

c. Foreign gold coins, and

d. Foreign bank notes redeemable in gold.

Regulations approved by the Minister of Finance will be published, relative to the acceptance of such representatives of value, with instructions as to what foreign coins and what foreign bank notes may be received, and at what rates they are receivable.

3. The Imperial Bank will receive from the public all of the representatives of value enumerated in Art. 2, as well as the following :

a. Gold in bars.

b. Gold orders of the administrators of the mines.

c. Gold drafts on foreign countries.

Said bank will issue in place of such securities certificates of deposit for amounts computed in "Half Imperials."

These certificates will be received in payment at their nominal value, by the customs authorities and by private parties, after mutual agreement.

The Imperial Bank will pay on sight the nominal value of these certificates in "Half Imperials."

The Minister of Finance will prescribe the form and the value of said certificates, and will issue to the Imperial Bank all instructions required for carrying these regulations into operation.

4. Customs duties payable in metallic money not exceeding in amount 5 roubles and 15 copecks, may be paid in silver roubles at their nominal value. Credit-rouble notes, however, can only be accepted for such payments, if paid in double the amount.

NOTE.—Duties payable in coin and not exceeding in amount 100 roubles may, as a temporary exception up to January 1, 1878, be paid in credit notes, under the condition, however, that in such case payment is to be made in double the amount.

5. For the copecks left over, (up to a rouble,) any Russian silver coins, subsidiary coins not excepted, will be received at their nominal value ; and in payments less than 20 copecks, Russian copper coins, also at their nominal value.

6. Customs duties which remain unpaid on the 1st of January, 1877, will be paid at the gold valuation.

7. Securities deposited at customs offices previous to the publication of these regulations can be redeemed as heretofore, viz : for credit notes. In all other cases, such deposits made or remaining with the customs officers after January 1, 1877, can only be redeemed for gold.

8. The acceptance of securities, in interest-bearing paper and bonds, for the payment of customs duties, will take place as heretofore, but at new rates of value, to be fixed by the Minister of Finance.

9. The Minister of Finance and the Comptroller of the Empire together regulate such changes in the rendering of the customs accounts as the introduction of the payment in gold of customs duties necessitates.

10. Such doubts as may arise as to the execution of the details of the above regulations will be decided by the Minister of Finance.

TRANSLATOR'S NOTE.—A "Half Imperial" is a Russian gold coin containing 5.9987 grammes of fine metal, and consequently is of very nearly the intrinsic value of four dollars in the gold coin of the United States. It is reckoned at 5 roubles, gold; or 5 roubles, 15 copecks, silver.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS

FOR THE YEAR 1876.

The counting of the books, just completed, shows an aggregate of 311,097 volumes of bound books, together with about 100,000 pamphlets. The last enumeration, January 1, 1876, showed a total of 293,507 volumes. The books added during the year thus amount to 17,590 volumes, besides 8,636 pamphlets.

The additions to the Library have been—

	Books.	Pam- phlets.
By purchase.....	5,495	745
By copyright.....	8,020	5,295
By deposit of the Smithsonian Institution.....	1,417	1,878
By donation, (including State documents).....	1,828	345
By exchanges.....	830	373
Total.....	17,590	8,636

To this are to be added maps and charts acquired during the year to the number of 2,445.

The acquisitions to the Library by purchase during the last year, though not so large numerically as in some previous ones, have been more than usually important.

The business of the copyright department during the year shows a considerable increase of entries, notwithstanding the depressed condition of the book-publishing trade and connected interests. The whole number of entries of copyrights for the twelve months of 1876 was 14,882 against 14,197 for the preceding calendar year. The cash receipts paid into the Treasury amounted to $12,500.50, while for the year preceding the aggregate was $11,780.50, showing an increase in fees of $720. It was anticipated, when the transfer of all prints and labels used in connection with manufactured articles was made from the copyright office to that of the Commissioner of Patents, that there would be a large and permanent decrease in the number of copyright entries. But the result during the past year as well as in that preceding indicates that the general increase in the entry of articles that are still legitimate subjects of copyright is such as, taken in connection with the growth of the country, will keep this department fully up to its present average of business.

Under the law which requires the deposit in the Library of two copies of each book or other publication protected by copyright, the following articles have been received in 1876, under each designation of copyright matter:

Books.....	8,020
Periodicals.....	7,027
Musical compositions.....	5,767
Dramatic compositions.....	262
Photographs.....	1,347
Engravings and chromos.....	1,483
Maps, charts and drawings.....	2,070
Prints.....	224
Total.....	26,200

As two copies of each publication are deposited, it will be seen that the net additions to the collections have amounted to 13,100 articles, 4,010 of which are books.

The materials for the new general catalogue of the Library, referred to in my last report, have been completed during the year, and all the titles, exceeding 260,000 in number, are ready for the press. But no appropriation has been made for the expense of printing; the small sum devoted to the printing and binding of the Library at the last session of Congress being hardly adequate to the necessities for the binding of books and the necessary blanks and records for the copyright department. The importance of making early provision for publishing this new general catalogue, which will represent the entire contents of the Library up to date, is earnestly commended to the attention of the committee and of Congress.

The preparation of the complete index to the documents, debates, and laws of Congress has very considerably advanced during the past year. The whole number of reference-titles already written amounts to an aggregate of forty thousand.

Since my last report, the publication of the first volume of original historical documents relating to the French discoveries and explorations in the northwestern portion of the United States and on the Mississippi has taken place. The whole work will be embraced in six octavo volumes, with an atlas of maps in quarto, and will cover a vast collection of letters, official papers, and other documents, in the original French, relating to the discoveries and settlements under Cavelier de la Salle and other explorers in territory now belonging to the United States, from A. D. 1614 to 1752. The edition of these historical volumes being small, (only five hundred copies,) it is recommended that, instead of a gratuitous distribution, the Librarian be authorized to exchange copies of the work with historical societies and other libraries for any books deemed equivalent in value, to enrich the collection of Congress.

The question of most pressing importance connected with the interests of the Library of Congress, which has become, by liberal legislation and extensive growth, the library of the nation, is the provision of a suitable building to contain its rapidly accumulating stores. In four previous reports, the undersigned has pressed this subject upon the attention of the committee in all its phases, and no repetition is here necessary of the cogent reasons, becoming continually more pressing, for prompt action in supplying so manifest a public necessity. In a report made by the Chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, June 8, 1876, (Senate Report No. 387, 1st session, 44th Congress,) a succinct statement may be found of the reasons which impelled the committee to recommend a bill for the construction of a new fire-proof building for the Library. The bill accompanying that report (S. 910) proposed to appropriate the sum of $150,000 "for preparing the ground, laying the foundation, and commencing the construction of a new fire-proof building for the use of the Library of the United States."* The site proposed in the bill was the public reservation lying on the west side of the Capitol, now occupied by the Botanic Garden. A subsequent examination of the ground, however, developed weighty objections to the location proposed; and, in the curtailment of all appropriations which governed the action of Congress at the last session, no step was taken toward providing for the wants of its overcrowded Library.

The whole subject is again earnestly commended to the early attention of the committee, with the single remark that the injury to the books, bound newspapers, and objects of art which are piled up unprovided with shelves or room, is constantly increasing with every addition, while the difficulties and embarrassments attending the administration of the Library and the large copyright business of the country within such narrow quarters are such as would not be tolerated for a single season in any first-class business house in any city of the country. The undersigned cannot doubt that the committee will agree with him in the belief that the people of the country stand ready to sanction any wise expenditure necessary to protect and preserve these great collections of a nation's literature and art, which are intrusted to the immediate care and responsibility of the representatives of the people.

A. R. SPOFFORD,
Librarian of Congress.

* The fair capacity of the present rooms is 240,000 volumes. Over 311,000 are already in the Library.

TRUE statesmanship is needed more to-day than at any other period during the history of the Republic.

BONDED SECURITIES OF THE UNITED STATES.

PREPARED BY E. B. ELLIOTT, OF THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The following is a statement with respect to the several classes of bonded securities of the United States, of their average values respectively in the New York market, and also with the calculated rates of interest realized to investors, for the months of October, November, and December, 1876:

CLASSES OF SECURITIES.		PRICES, EXCLUDING ACCRUED INTEREST, REDUCED TO GOLD VALUE.
		Average for month of			Three months ended December.
		October.	November.	December.
Ten-forties of 1904, M. & S., 5 p. c.....		104.22	103.68	103.46	103.78
Sixes of 1881, J. & J., 6 p. c.....		105.60	105.10	105.74	105.48
Five-twenties of 1865, (old,) M. & N., 6 p. c.....		100.06	100.13	100.66	100.28
Five-twenties of 1865, (new,) J. & J., 6 p. c.....		100.82	100.76	101.86	101.14
Five-twenties of 1867, J. & J., 6 p. c.....		103.48	103.46	104.57	103.83
Five-twenties of 1868, J. & J., 6 p. c.....		104.57	104.38	105.87	104.94
New Fives of 1881, F. M. A. & N., 5 p. c.....		103.14	102.60	102.78	102.64
Funded Loan of 1891, M. J. S. & D., 4½ p. c.....		*100.82
Currency Sixes, J. & J., 6 p. c. (currency prices).....		121.82	121.25	121.01	121.36
Average currency price of gold.....		109.63	109.69	107.77	109.05
Average gold price of currency.....		91.18	91.16	92.80	91.71

CLASSES OF SECURITIES.		Assumed Periods to Payment.	CALCULATED RATE OF INTEREST REALIZED TO INVESTORS.
			Average for month of			Three months ended Decem'r.
			October.	Novembe	December.
	Years.		Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per ct.
Ten-forties of 1904, M. & S., 5 p. c.....	28		4.73	4.76	4.78	4.76
" " " "	20		4.67	4.71	4.73	4.70
" " " "	10		4.47	4.54	4.56	4.52
" " " "	5		4.06	4.18	4.23	4.15
Sixes of 1881, J. & J., 6 p. c.....	5		4.73	4.84	4.70	4.76
" " " "	4		4.46	4.59	4.42	4.49
Five-twenties of 1865, (O.) M. & N., 6 p. c.....	9		5.99	5.98	5.91	5.96
" " " " " "	3		5.98	5.95	5.74	5.89
" " " " " "	2		5.97	5.93	5.65	5.85
" " " " " "	1		5.94	5.86	5.32	5.71
Five-twenties of 1865, (N.) J. & J., 6 p. c.....	9		5.88	5.89	5.73	5.83
" " " " " "	3		5.70	5.72	5.32	5.58
" " " " " "	2		5.56	5.59	5.01	5.38
" " " " " "	1		5.15	5.21	4.09	4.82
Five-twenties of 1867, J. & J., 6 p. c.....	11		5.57	5.57	5.45	5.53
" " " " " "	5		5.20	5.20	4.96	5.12
" " " " " "	4		5.03	5.04	4.73	4.93
Five-twenties of 1868, J. & J., 6 p. c.....	12		5.48	5.49	5.33	5.43
" " " " " "	6		5.11	5.14	4.86	5.03
" " " " " "	5		4.96	5.00	4.67	4.87
" " " " " "	4		4.73	4.79	4.38	4.63
New Fives of 1881, F. M. A. & N., 5 p. c.....	5		4.29	4.41	4.37	4.36
" " " " " "	10		4.60	4.67	4.65	4.64
" " " " " "	20		4.75	4.79	4.78	4.77
" " " " " "	Perpetuity		4.84	4.87	4.87	4.86
Funded Loan of 1891, M. J. S. & D., 4½ p. c.....	15		*4.43
" " " " " "	20		*4.44
" " " " " "	Perpetuity		*4.46
Currency Sixes, J. & J., 6 p. c.....
Assuming non-resumption specie payments	21		4.40	4.43	4.45	4.43
Assuming resumption January 1, 1879.....	21		5.08	5.11	5.00	5.06

* From quotations for six days ended December 30th only.

For example, it will be seen from the above table that the prices of the five per cent. securities known as the "Ten-for-ties,"—as being redeemable after ten years and payable after forty years from the date of issue, (1864,)—averaged for the last three months of 1876, when reduced to a gold value, and accrued interest excluded, \$103.78 on every \$100 of face value; also, that the indicated annual rate of interest realized to investors was, if ten years be assumed as the probable period which the securities will remain outstanding before being called in for redemption, $4\frac{1}{2}$ (more exactly 4.52) per cent. Assuming five years, ten years, and twenty-eight years respectively to payment, will give as the annual rates of interest to be realized 4.15, 4.70, and 4.75 per cent.

The realized rate of interest indicated by the prices of the "Sixes of 1881," known as the "long sixes," (interest payable in January and July,) taking four years as the period to elapse before payment, is also $4\frac{1}{2}$ (4.49) per cent.

The price of the "New Fives," those lately placed upon the market, indicates the realized rate to be, on the assumption of a probable ten-year period to payment, $4\frac{1}{2}$ (more exactly 4.64) per cent.

The price at which the $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. securities which are now being placed on the market are quoted, indicates a rate of interest to be realized of about 4.44 per cent.

The prices of "Currency Sixes," having twenty-one years to payment, indicate a rate of interest realized to investors ranging from 4.43 to 5.06 per cent.; the former on the assumption that the currency price of gold continues indefinitely at the existing current rate, and the latter on the assumption that the prices of gold and greenbacks will reach permanent equality from and after January 1, 1879—two years from now.

The $4\frac{1}{2}$ and 5 per cents. and the Sixes of 1881, judging from the computed rates of interest realized to investors, are the most popular of the Government securities. The 5-20's of 1867 and 1868 come next in order; the Currency Sixes next; and the 5-20's of 1865 last in the order of popularity.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS DURING THE CALENDAR YEARS 1875 AND 1876 COMPARED.

The following corrected statement, showing the value of merchandise and of specie and bullion imported and exported the calendar year 1876, compared with like data for the year 1875, is furnished by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics:

[ALL SPECIE VALUES.]

	Imports.	Domestic Exports.	Foreign Exports.
MERCHANDISE.
Twelve months ended—
December 31, 1876.....	$426,612,706	$575,698,040	$14,923,743
December 31, 1875.....	503,152,936	497,263,737	13,683,685
SPECIE AND BULLION.
Twelve months ended—
December 31, 1876.....	34,479,397	47,973,752	8,380,713
December 31, 1875.....	22,896,148	70,108,852	9,194,662
TOTAL—MERCHANDISE, AND SPECIE AND BULLION.
Twelve months ended—
December 31, 1876.....	461,092,103	623,671,792	23,304,456
December 31, 1875.....	526,049,084	567,372,589	22,878,347

VALUES IN UNITED STATES MONEY OF STANDARD COINS OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, D. C., January 1, 1877.
 The first section of the act of March 3, 1873, Statutes at Large, volume 17, page 602, reproduced in section 3564 of the Revised Statutes, provides "that the value of foreign coin, as expressed in the money of account of the United States, shall be that of the pure metal of such coin of standard value," and that "the values of the standard coins in circulation of the various nations of the world shall be estimated annually by the Director of the Mint, and be proclaimed on the first day of January by the Secretary of the Treasury."
 The estimate of values contained in the following table has been made by the Director of the Mint, and is hereby proclaimed in compliance with the above-stated provisions of law:

Country.	Monetary unit.	Standard.	Value in U. S. money.	Standard coin.
Austria.....	Florin.....	Silver	$.45.3	Florin.
Belgium.....	Franc.....	Gold and silver19.3	5, 10, and 20 francs.
Bolivia.....	Dollar.....	Gold and silver96.5	Escudo, $\frac{1}{2}$ bolivar and bolivar.
Brazil.....	Milreis of 1,000 reis.....	Gold.....	.64.6	None.
British Possessions in North America.....	Dollar.....	Gold.....	1.00
Bogota.....	Peso.....	Gold.....	.96.6	Dollar.
Central America.....	Dollar.....	Silver91.8	Condor, doubloon, and escudo.
Chili.....	Peso.....	Gold.....	.91.2	10 and 20 crowns.
Denmark.....	Crown.....	Gold.....	.26.6	Dollar.
Ecuador.....	Dollar.....	Silver91.8	5, 10, 25, and 50 piasters.
Egypt.....	Pound of 100 piasters.....	Gold.....	4.97.4	5, 10, and 20 francs.
France.....	Franc.....	Gold and silver19.3	$\frac{1}{2}$ sovereign and sovereign.
Great Britain.....	Pound sterling.....	Gold.....	4.86.6 $\frac{1}{2}$	5, 10, 20, 50, and 100 drachmas.
Greece.....	Drachma.....	Gold and silver19.3	5, 10, and 20 marks.
German Empire.....	Mark.....	Gold.....	.23.8	1, 2, 5, 10, and 20 yen.
Japan.....	Yen.....	Gold.....	.99.7
India.....	Rupee of 16 annas.....	Silver43.6	5, 10, 20, 50, and 100 lire.
Italy.....	Lira.....	Gold and silver19.3
Liberia.....	Dollar.....	Gold.....	1.00	Peso or dollar, 5, 10, 25, and 50 centavo.
Mexico.....	Dollar.....	Silver99.8	Florin; ten guldens, gold, ($4.01, 9.)
Netherlands.....	Florin.....	Gold and silver38.5	10 and 20 crowns.
Norway.....	Crown.....	Gold.....	.26.8
Peru.....	Dollar.....	Silver91.8	2, 5, and 10 milreis.
Portugal.....	Milreis of 1,000 reis.....	Gold.....	1.08	$\frac{1}{2}$, $\frac{1}{4}$, and 1 rouble.
Russia.....	Rouble of 100 copecks.....	Silver73.4
Sandwich Islands.....	Dollar.....	Gold.....	1.00	5, 10, 20, 50, and 100 pesetas.
Spain.....	Peseta of 100 centimes.....	Gold and silver19.3	10 and 20 crowns.
Sweden.....	Crown.....	Gold.....	.26.8	5, 10, and 20 francs.
Switzerland.....	Franc.....	Gold and silver19.3
Tripoli.....	Mahbub of 20 piasters.....	Silver82.9
Tunis.....	Piaster of 16 caroubes.....	Silver11.8
Turkey.....	Piaster.....	Gold.....	.04.3	25, 50, 100, 250, and 500 piasters.
United States of Colombia.....	Peso.....	Silver91.8

The above rates will be taken in estimating the values of all foreign merchandise made out in any of said currencies imported on or after January 1, 1877.

I am, very respectfully,

LOT M. MORRILL, Secretary of the Treasury.

STATE AND TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENTS.

States and Territories.	Popu-lation, 1870.	Area, sq. mi.	Capitals.	Governors.	Area, sq. mi.	Term Expires.	Legisla-ture next Session begins.	State Election on—
Alabama.....	996,992	50,722	Montgomery.....	George N. Houston (D).....	63,000	Nov. 1879	Nov. 1878	1st Monday in Aug.
Alaska Territory.....	16,340	677,700	Sitka.....	O. O. Howard, M. G. (R).....	3,500	April, 1877	Jan. 1878	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Arizona Territory.....	41,730	113,916	Tucson.....	A. P. K. Sanford (R).....	3,500	Jan. 1877	Jan. 1877	1st Monday in Sept.
Arkansas.....	484,471	52,196	Little Rock.....	William R. Miller (D).....	6,000	Dec. 1879	Dec. 1877	1st Wednesday in California.....	560,347	158,661	San Francisco.....	William Irwin (D).....	4,000	Jan. 1879	Nov. 1878	1st Tuesday in Oct.
Colorado.....	39,864	104,600	Denver.....	John L. Ronti (R).....	2,000	Jan. 1879	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Connecticut.....	237,464	4,760	Hartford.....	Richard D. Hubbard (D).....	3,500	Jan. 1878	Dec. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Dakota Territory.....	14,181	182,000	Yankton.....	John L. Pennington (R).....	2,000	Jan. 1879	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Delaware.....	126,016	2,120	Dover.....	John P. Cochran (D).....	4,000	Jan. 1879	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
District of Columbia.....	131,700	60	Washington.....	George F. Drew (D).....	4,000	Jan. 1881	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Florida.....	167,748	59,346	Tallahassee.....	Alfred H. Colquitt (D).....	4,000	Jan. 1881	Jan. 1877	1st Wednesday in Oct.
Georgia.....	1,184,109	59,000	Atlanta.....	Mason Brayman (R).....	5,000	July, 1880	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Idaho Territory.....	20,883	90,932	Boise City.....	Shelby M. Oullom (R).....	5,000	Jan. 1881	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Illinois.....	2,689,891	63,410	Springfield.....	James D. Williams (D).....	3,000	Jan. 1881	Jan. 1877	2d Tuesday in Oct.
Indiana.....	1,880,837	33,809	Indianapolis.....	Samuel J. Kirkwood (R).....	2,500	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	2d Tuesday in Oct.
Indian Territory.....	68,132	68,991	Tahlequah.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	2d Tuesday in Oct.
Iowa.....	1,191,792	55,046	Des Moines.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	2d Tuesday in Oct.
Kansas.....	364,399	58,318	Topeka.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Sept. 1879	Jan. 1877	1st Monday in Aug.
Kentucky.....	1,321,011	37,680	Frankfort.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	1st Monday in Aug.
Louisiana.....	736,616	41,346	New Orleans.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	2d Monday in Sept.
Maine.....	636,616	35,000	Augusta.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Maryland.....	780,394	11,134	Annapolis.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Massachusetts.....	1,457,351	7,800	Boston.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Michigan.....	1,184,089	56,431	Lansing.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Minnesota.....	439,706	83,631	St. Paul.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Mississippi.....	577,922	47,154	Jackson.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Missouri.....	1,731,296	65,350	Jefferson City.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	July, 1879	Jan. 1877	1st Monday in Aug.
Montana Territory.....	39,863	143,776	Helena.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	2d Tuesday in Oct.
Nebraska.....	122,983	73,985	Lincoln.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	2d Tuesday in Oct.
Nevada.....	43,491	81,429	Carson City.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	2d Tuesday in Oct.
New Hampshire.....	313,300	9,240	Concord.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	2d Tuesday in Oct.
New Jersey.....	906,090	8,320	Trenton.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	June, 1879	Jan. 1877	2d Tuesday in Oct.
New Mexico Territory.....	111,318	121,201	Santa Fe.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Dec. 1879	Jan. 1877	1st Monday in Sept.
New York.....	4,362,759	47,000	Albany.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	10,000	Jan. 1879	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
North Carolina.....	1,071,561	50,704	Raleigh.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	4,000	Jan. 1879	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Ohio.....	2,080,260	39,964	Columbus.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	4,000	Jan. 1879	Jan. 1877	2d Tuesday in Oct.
Oregon.....	90,923	95,274	Salem.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	1,500	Sept. 1878	Jan. 1877	1st Monday in June.
Pennsylvania.....	3,621,791	46,000	Harrisburg.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	10,000	Jan. 1879	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Rhode Island.....	217,393	1,306	Newport—Providence.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	1,000	May, 1877	Jan. 1877	1st Wednesday in April.
South Carolina.....	706,006	34,000	Columbia.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Dec. 1879	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Tennessee.....	1,258,020	45,600	Nashville.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	4,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Texas.....	818,678	74,356	Austin.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	2d Tuesday in Feb.
Utah Territory.....	99,400	87,056	Salt Lake City.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Dec. 1878	Jan. 1877	1st Monday in Aug.
Vermont.....	330,561	10,212	Montpelier.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	1,000	Oct. 1878	Jan. 1877	1st Tuesday in Sept.
Virginia.....	1,223,163	36,352	Richmond.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Washington Territory.....	37,403	69,994	Olympia.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	April, 1880	Jan. 1877	2d Tuesday in Oct.
West Virginia.....	442,014	23,000	Wheeling.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Wisconsin.....	1,004,670	43,934	Madison.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	4,000	Jan. 1878	Jan. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.
Wyoming Territory.....	11,818	68,000	Cheyenne.....	Charles M. Cronwell (R).....	3,500	Feb. 1879	Nov. 1877	Tuesday after 1st Mon. Nov.

NATIONAL BANK NOTES.

REGULATIONS GOVERNING THEIR REDEMPTION.

The following regulations are adopted in lieu of all which have been heretofore issued governing the redemption of national bank notes by the National Bank Redemption Agency, under the provisions of "An act fixing the amount of United States notes, providing for a redistribution of the national bank currency, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874, (18 Stat., 123.)

I.—THE REDEMPTION ACT.

The provisions of the said act relating to the redemption of the national bank currency are as follows:

SEC. 2. That section thirty-one of "The National Bank Act," be so amended that the several associations therein provided for shall not hereafter be required to keep on hand any amount of money whatever by reason of the amount of their respective circulations; but the moneys required by said section to be kept at all times on hand shall be determined by the amount of deposits in all respects, as provided for in the said section.

SEC. 3. That every association organized, or to be organized, under the provisions of the said act, and of the several acts amendatory thereof, shall at all times keep and have on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, in lawful money of the United States, a sum equal to five per centum of its circulation, to be held and used for the redemption of such circulation; which sum shall be counted as a part of its lawful reserve, as provided in section two of this act; and when the circulating notes of any such associations, assorted or unassorted, shall be presented for redemption, in sums of one thousand dollars or any multiple thereof, to the Treasurer of the United States, the same shall be redeemed in United States notes. All notes so redeemed shall be charged by the Treasurer of the United States to the respective associations issuing the same, and he shall notify them severally, on the first day of each month, or oftener, at his discretion, of the amount of such redemptions; and whenever such redemptions for any association shall amount to the sum of five hundred dollars, such association so notified shall forthwith deposit with the Treasurer of the United States a sum in United States notes equal to the amount of its circulating notes so redeemed. And all notes of national banks, worn, defaced, mutilated, or otherwise unfit for circulation, shall, when received by any Assistant Treasurer or at any designated depository of the United States, be forwarded to the Treasurer of the United States for redemption, as provided herein. And when such redemptions have been so reimbursed, the circulating notes so redeemed shall be forwarded to the respective associations by which they were issued; but if any of such notes are worn, mutilated, defaced or rendered otherwise unfit for use, they shall be forwarded to the Comptroller of the Currency and destroyed, and replaced as now provided by law: Provided, That each of said associations shall reimburse to the Treasury the charges for transportation, and the costs for assorting such notes; and the associations hereafter organized shall also severally reimburse to the Treasury the cost of engraving such plates as shall be ordered by each association respectively; and the amount assessed upon each association shall be in proportion to the circulation redeemed, and be charged to the fund on deposit with the Treasurer: And provided further, That so much of section thirty-two of said national bank act requiring or permitting the redemption of its circulating notes elsewhere than at its own counter, except as provided for in this section, is hereby repealed.

II.—ORIGINAL FIVE PER CENT. DEPOSIT.

1. Every newly organized national bank, with the exception of national gold banks, is required, immediately on the receipt of its circulation from the Comptroller of the Currency, to deposit in the Treasury of the United States a sum equal to five per centum thereof in lawful money of the United States, in one of the following ways:

I. By a deposit of United States notes with the Assistant Treasurer U. S. in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, or New Orleans, to the credit of the Currency Transfer Account of the Treasurer U. S., or with the Assistant Treasurer U. S. in Baltimore, Chicago, Cincinnati, or St. Louis, to the credit of the General Account of the Treasurer U. S. Banks not situated in one of the above-named cities should make the deposit through their correspondents. The original certificate of deposit must be forwarded to the Treasurer U. S. and Redemption Agent.

II. By a remittance of United States notes, addressed to the Treasurer U. S., marked "United States notes for credit of five per cent. fund," with the express charges thereon prepaid.

2. In estimating the circulation upon which the deposit is required, the bank must include all notes of its issue in its own possession as well as those in actual circulation.

3. A similar deposit, made in the same manner, is required on all additional circulation issued to national banks.

III.—REDEMPTION OF NATIONAL BANK NOTES.

1. The notes of national banks, other than gold banks, may be forwarded to the Treasurer U. S. and Redemption Agent for redemption, under the contract with Adams Express Company, in sums of $1,000 or any multiple thereof, by any person, company, firm, bank, or corporation situated within the territory covered by the contract.

Remittances from banks and other parties situated without the territory covered by the contract should be marked "under contract with Adams Express Company, from ," [——— the point of connection with that company,] the charges should be prepaid to that point, and the bills therefor should be sent to the Treasurer U. S. and Redemption Agent, for approval and reimbursement to the consignors by Treasury drafts.

Remittances of any other amounts than $1,000, or a multiple thereof, are not received for redemption under contract, but the charges thereon must be prepaid by the consignors.

2. Assistant Treasurers and designated depositaries of the United States are required to select from the funds received by them all notes of national banks which are worn, defaced, mutilated, or otherwise unfit for circulation, and to forward them to the Treasurer U. S. and Redemption Agent, from time to time, under the contract with Adams Express Company, in sums of $1,000, or a multiple thereof, for their credit in general account.

3. Notes equaling or exceeding three-fifths of their original proportions, if in such condition that their genuineness can be clearly ascertained, and if the name of the bank and the signature of one of its officers are distinguishable, are redeemed for their full face value. Notes, the signatures of which have evidently become illegible from wear, are not rejected on that account.

4. Fragments less than three-fifths are not redeemed by the Redemption Agency, but should be presented for redemption to the banks by which the notes were issued. If redeemed by the banks of issue, they are accepted by the agency at the valuation placed on them by the banks. This rule applies to fragments, which the Comptroller of the Currency has certified that he will accept for an amount less than their face value, if redeemed by the bank of issue. The regulations subjecting United States currency to discount do not apply to national bank notes.

5. The notes must be inclosed in strong straps, of sufficient width, and securely fastened. On each strap must be printed or written with ink the amount inclosed, and the name of the owner. Not less than 100 nor more than 200 notes should be placed in a strap.

6. An inventory, describing the contents by parcels and amounts, must be inclosed with every remittance.

7. All remittances of national bank notes must be addressed to the "Treasurer of the United States and Redemption Agent, Washington, D. C."

8. The packages must be put up in boxes or in wrappers of stout paper, tied with strong twine, secured by careful sealing, and plainly marked on the face of the outer wrapper with the amount and nature of the contents, the full name and address of the consignor, and the fact that they are forwarded under the contract with Adams Express Company, thus :

— National Bank Notes for redemption, [or for credit of five per cent. fund,] under contract with Adams Express Company.

TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES AND REDEMPTION AGENT,
Washington, D. C.

From FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Smithville, Ohio.

9. A letter of advice, written on not less than half a sheet of commercial-note paper, fully describing the remittance and stating the disposition to be made of the proceeds, must be put inside of the package, and a duplicate letter be sent by mail to the Treasurer U. S. and Redemption Agent on the day that the remittance is forwarded.

10. The packages, when received at the agency, are charged to and receipted for by the counters, with the seals unbroken, and each counter is required to count, return, and obtain a receipt for the contents of each package before receiving another. An inventory or schedule of the contents, according to the amounts marked on the straps, is made immediately on opening the package, and the contents of each strap are proved separately and put aside, if found to be correct. If discrepancies are found they are noted on the proper strap, which is returned to the owner. "Shorts" are at once reported and verified by the teller in charge. The packages are charged to the counters by the amounts on the wrappers, and any discrepancy between this amount and the contents is reported as an "over" or a "short" by inventory.

11. Returns for remittances of national bank notes from Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, are made by transfer checks on the Assistant Treasurers in the cities from which the remittances are received.

12. Returns for remittances from all other places are made by express, in new legal-tender notes of such denominations as may be asked for, to the parties by whom the remittances are made, with the express charges thereon prepaid to their destination. The arrangements with the express companies forbid the furnishing of exchange for bank notes redeemed or the remittance of the proceeds to any other parties than the consignors.

13. Notes of a bank's own issue redeemed by it should be forwarded directly to the Comptroller of the Currency, with the express charges thereon prepaid. This rule does not apply to notes of a bank's own issue, received by it in the ordinary course of business, mixed with other bank notes.

14. The law officers of the department having decided that national bank notes, stolen when unsigned, and put in circulation with forged signatures, are not obligatory promissory notes of the bank under Section 5182 of the Revised Statutes, such notes are not redeemed by the agency.

15. United States currency and national bank notes, whether for redemption or credit, must be forwarded in separate packages, addressed, respectively, to the Treasurer U. S. and to the Treasurer U. S. and Redemption Agent, and must be accompanied by separate letters of advice.

16. Assistant Treasurers and depositaries of the United States, and national bank depositaries, are not required to redeem national bank notes, but they should receive, in payment of public dues, and on account of transfers of funds, all national bank notes redeemable at their full face value by the agency under the foregoing regulations.

17. National bank depositaries may forward national bank notes to the agency for their credit in general account as transfers of funds.

IV.—REIMBURSEMENT FOR NOTES REDEEMED.

1. Immediately on receipt of the Treasurer's notifications, advising them of the redemption of their notes, national banks are required to remit the whole amount due in one of the following ways:

I. By a deposit of United States notes with the Assistant Treasurer U. S. in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, or New Orleans, to the credit of the Currency Transfer Account of the Treasurer U. S., or with the Assistant Treasurer U. S. in Baltimore, Chicago, Cincinnati, or St. Louis, to the credit of the general account of the Treasurer U. S. Banks not situated in one of the above-named cities should make the deposit through their correspondents. The original certificate of deposit must be forwarded directly to the Treasurer U. S. and Redemption Agent by the bank, making the deposit, as credit cannot be given on the books of the agency until it is received.

II. By a remittance of national bank notes, addressed to the Treasurer U. S. and Redemption Agent, under the contract with Adams Express Company, marked "National bank notes for credit of five per cent. fund."

2. Reimbursement may also be made by a remittance of legal tender notes or fractional currency, addressed to the Treasurer U. S. and marked "U. S. currency for credit for five per cent. fund," but the express charges, if not prepaid, are deducted from the proceeds of the remittance.

3. The law requires national banks to remit for the full amount of their notes redeemed immediately on the receipt of the calls, and does not permit them to await the receipt of the notes fit for circulation or of the certificate of the destruction of the notes unfit for circulation.

4. Assistant Treasurers are not authorized to receive either remittances of money by express or drafts, for credit of the five per cent. fund.

5. Drafts are not accepted by the agency for credit of the five per cent. fund. If received, they are returned to the sender.

6. National bank depositaries are not authorized to receive deposits for credit of the five per cent. fund.

7. In case the amount due does not exceed the five per cent. deposit of the bank, the notes fit for circulation are forwarded to it by express, and the notes unfit for circulation are delivered to the Comptroller of the Currency for destruction and replacement with new notes, on the same day that the call is made. In cases of overdraft of the bank's five per cent. account, either the fit or the unfit notes, or both, as the case may require, are held until the overdraft is made good.

8. The law requires the agency to return all notes fit for circulation redeemed by it to the respective associations by which they were issued, and to deliver those unfit for circulation to the Comptroller of the Currency for destruction, and no other disposition can be of them.

9. When a national bank has made a deposit of legal-tender notes for the purpose of retiring a portion of its circulation, all of its notes redeemed, whether fit or unfit for circulation, are charged to that deposit until it is exhausted.

V.—FIVE PER CENT. REDEMPTION FUND.

1. Banks should charge all remittances for credit of their five per cent. account, including the original five per cent. deposit, to an account designated as the "Five per cent. Redemption Fund."

2. Immediately on the receipt of the call or advice of redemption, "circulation outstanding" should be charged with the amount of both fit and unfit notes reported as redeemed, and the redemption fund credited. When the redemption is reimbursed, the redemption fund should be charged; when the notes fit for circulation are received by the bank, the circulation account should be credited, and the same course should be pursued when the incomplete currency, received from the Comptroller of the Currency in place of the unfit notes, is made ready for issue. By this method the five per cent. and circulation accounts of the bank may be made to agree at all times with those of the agency and of the Comptroller of the Currency, except as regards remittances in transit.

3. Remittances for which returns are to be made in transfer checks or new United States currency should not be charged to the redemption fund.

4. National banks which have made deposits of legal-tender notes for the purpose of retiring a portion of their circulation under section 4 of the Act of June 20, 1874, are required to maintain the five per cent. deposit only on the remainder of their circulation. The excess over the required amount is surrendered by the agency immediately on receipt of advice from the Comptroller of the Currency of the amount retired.

5. Banks may keep with the Treasurer any amount they choose in excess of the required five per cent. of their circulation, but they are not permitted to count such excess as a part of their lawful money reserve. It should be entered on their reports of their condition, under item 23—"due from U. S. Treasurer, (other than five per cent. redemption fund.)"

6. Remittances to reimburse for notes redeemed are credited "to make good" the five per cent. deposit; remittances which increase the deposit above the required amount are credited "in excess" of the five per cent. deposit; and remittances in payment of the required deposit on the original circulation of a bank, or on additional circulation issued to it, are credited "on account" of the five per cent. deposit.

VI.—EXPRESS CHARGES.

1. The express charges on national bank notes received for redemption or credit, on United States currency returned for national bank notes redeemed, and on assorted national bank notes, fit for circulation, forwarded to the banks of issue, are advanced by the agency and afterward assessed upon the several national banks in proportion to the amount of their circulation redeemed.

2. The charges for the transportation of incomplete currency forwarded to the banks by the Comptroller of the Currency are not defrayed by the agency. It is forwarded under a contract between the Comptroller and the express company, and the charges, at contract rates, are required to be paid by the banks to which it is sent. The rates are twenty-five cents for each thousand dollars to each express company over whose lines the remittances pass.

3. The entire express charges on remittances of bank notes for redemption and returns, made in any other amounts than $1,000 or a multiple thereof, whether less or more than $1,000, must be prepaid; otherwise they are deducted from the proceeds of the remittances. Bank notes may, however, be sent to make good the five per cent. deposit of a bank at the expense of the agency, in any amounts for which the calls are made. Remittances for credit in anticipation of calls must be sent in even thousands of dollars.

4. The full express charges to their destination on fit notes returned to the banks of issue are prepaid by the agency, whether the banks are situated within or without the territory covered by the contract.

5. The contract with Adams Express Company extends to and includes all points within the United States "accessible through established express lines, reached by continuous railway connection," but does not extend westward beyond Omaha and Nebraska city, in Nebraska, and Atchison and Leavenworth, in Kansas, nor include the lines of Wells, Fargo & Co. in Missouri and Iowa. The contract covers the lines of the following express companies: Adams, American Merchants' Union, Central, Earl, Eastern, Harnden, Hope, Howard, National, New Jersey, Southern, Union, United States, and United States and Canada.

6. The express companies are liable for the loss or destruction of national bank notes forwarded to the agency under the contract, except when the loss arises through the act of God or of the public enemy, and receipts of the express companies limiting their liability further than this need not be accepted by consignors.

VII.—INCOMPLETE CURRENCY.

1. The issue of new circulating notes to national banks is under the exclusive control of the Comptroller of the Currency, and any inquiry in regard thereto should be addressed to him.

2. No new currency is ordered to be printed except on requisitions from the banks, specifying the amounts and denominations desired. Banks usually order supplies in advance, from which the Comptroller remits, from time to time, new notes of their issue in return for their notes unfit for circulation destroyed.

3. Banks should advise the Comptroller of the denominations of their notes desired in return for their notes destroyed.

4. Banks should keep an account of the amount of their incomplete currency in the hands of the Comptroller, and should make requisitions for additional supplies a sufficient time in advance of the exhaustion of the currency previously ordered to cover the time necessary to have the new notes prepared by the engravers.

5. Banks are charged by the agency with the full amount of their notes unfit for circulation delivered to the Comptroller, whether the exact amount is reissued by him or not. It sometimes happens that the exact amount is not sent by him because it cannot be made up of full sheets of notes. In such case the amount due should appear on the bank's books as a deficit in its circulation account, not as an excess in its five per cent. account.

VIII.—ASSESSMENT FOR EXPENSES.

1. Under section 3 of the redemption act, the expenses incurred by the agency for "the charges for transportation and the costs for assorting" the redeemed notes of national banks are assessed upon the several banks in proportion to their circulation redeemed, and are charged to them in their five per cent. accounts.

2. All of the express charges incurred are consolidated and assessed in proportion to the amount of the notes redeemed for each bank, and all of the other charges are assessed in proportion to the number of notes redeemed for each bank.

3. Denominational registers are kept of the notes redeemed for each bank, from which the amount and number of its notes redeemed are exactly computed.

4. The assessment is made by fiscal years, and is levied as soon after the end of each year (June 30) as the accounts can be settled and the computations made.

5. Remittance should be made for the amount of the assessment immediately on the receipt of the notice thereof, in the same manner as for notes redeemed. It is not sufficient for a bank to credit the amount to the five per cent. redemption fund on its books.

6. Banks which have made a deposit during the fiscal year for the retirement of all or a portion of their circulation are assessed only for the proportionate share of the expenses incurred in redeeming their notes prior to the making, or after the exhaustion, of the deposit. A. U. WYMAN, Treasurer U. S. and Redemption Agent.

WASHINGTON, February 1, 1877.

"RETURN GRAIN MOVEMENT" RUMORS.—Foreign grain markets have been tame and spiritless for a long time past, especially for wheat, and our own markets have been, in the wheat connection, kept relatively higher as to prices, partly by speculative manipulation, based on the assumption of short supplies in the interior, thus seriously checking business. Export dealings in wheat at New York have been recently unimportant, shippers complaining of their inability to pay asking rates. Millers here and throughout the interior have been also very reserved in their operations, yet values have been maintained by holders with remarkable firmness. Through the past few weeks various rumors have been in circulation of return shipments of American wheat from Europe of more or less magnitude, these rumors, for the most part, being credited to "well-informed parties at Chicago," where, by the way, the speculative interest is represented as being in substantial control of the market. The rumors have had reference mostly to returning cargoes of California wheat, but at the close of the past week became more comprehensive, and hinted at "large quantities of wheat arriving at the port of New York from England, Germany, and California, with further important amounts on the way." The rumors are spoken of as having the foundation of a return shipment of very inferior Spring wheat from Glasgow, which inferior wheat is said to be in liberal supply and unmarketable there, and possibly one or two lots of California wheat, which have been involved in the return movement by the rumors which are so freely supplied from certain points at the West to the markets of the seaboard with the sufficiently obvious purpose of influencing values.

TREASON OF THE DEMOCRATIC LEADERS.

The attention of the country is called to the fact that the leaders of the Democratic party are upon their trial and will have to answer for their misdeeds. The extent of Democratic frauds in the recent election for President, on behalf of Tilden, is really appalling. And it may be said that the character and disloyal attitude of the Democratic majority in the House was permitted by Providence in order to convince the people that the Democracy were no longer a political party, but political banditti—reckless, fraudulent, and murderous, and held together by the hope of plunder on obtaining office by violence, perjury, and defiance. It will be remembered that a horde of pardoned rebel Democrats swore that they were members of the House, and had been elected from the South. So unused were the bulk of them to the duty of legislators, that having created a Democratic majority, the work of the first session of the worst and most despicable House of Representatives the country ever had, was parceled out into two heads, viz: First, to cripple the public service by inadequate appropriations; and, second, to secure the appointment of something like fifty investigating committees, which occupied the time of the session in the preparation of false and partisan reports, and in spending the public money for witnesses and printing to an amount beyond that of any Congress known. Appropriations were exhausted and renewed, and deficiency bills were necessary to renew appropriations still exhausted. The present Democratic party arraigned the Nation, not the Republican party alone, for fighting to save the Union and for the expenses of the war incurred to suppress the Democratic rebellion—a rebellion in which these pardoned rebel Democratic members themselves participated; and as the election for the Presidency would take place before the present session, the Congressional reports of Democratic committees were used as alleged public documents, furnishing evidence of Republican extravagance, &c., thus flooding the country with Democratic falsehood, so unblushing and nefarious, that it has at last come home to the perpetrators, who cut a very sorry figure.

It would seem that the unusual spectacle of a Democratic majority in the House, made up by the aid of a multitude of pardoned Democratic rebels, who had fought against the Union, when it was known that the Republican party was in a majority in the country, had furnished the unusual opportunity of wasting a session in manufacturing lying Democratic reports; and that the Democratic leaders, flushed with pride at their own infamy, had formed the unusual resolution of forcing Mr. Tilden, the candidate of the Democratic party, upon the people at any hazard, for they could never have expected his election if the public choice was permitted to be made. What are the wishes of the people to the Democratic party? That party in American politics died with the defeat of the rebellion. Such of its members as survived the scattering retained the name, but were largely recruited from the ranks of slave-owners and slave-whippers, whose occupation was gone with emancipation. These worthies knew nothing of public choice or public opinion for anybody but themselves and their friends. So the Northern Democratic leaders confided to Southern rebel Democrats the delicate duty of assisting Mr. Tilden to the Presidency. Mr. Tilden, in return, furnished them with the fraudulent election devices of Mr. Tweed, which had debauched the great State of New York, by subjecting it to the fictitious Democratic majority of the Irish Catholic colony of New York city, whose dangerous classes are intensely Democratic, led by Romish priests, who will not educate their flocks, lest they should become honest men and escape from their control. The Republican majority in the Northern States showed that few would favor Mr. Tilden. The South, which was Republican, was therefore relied upon as the great hotbed of Democratic villainy.

Democratic calculation was right. Southern States, with overwhelming Republican majorities, were claimed as Democratic by the use of the rifle, the revolver, and the whip, stimulated, perchance, with the "bar'l" of Mr. Tilden's money which was sent early on its travels, and the result was this: One prolonged Democratic howl went up simultaneously throughout the country, claiming Mr. Tilden's election, in the face of the bloodiest Democratic evidence of his utter and ignominious defeat. Villainy of any kind, when pitted against truth and justice, must always succumb—Democratic villainy especially, as Southern Democrats have added the crime of murder to their usual Democratic practice of packing off some fellow to Congress they said was elected, while they saved the voters the trouble of voting at the polls. This Democratic vociferation and unanimity was all preconcerted—a part of a comprehensive plan of the leaders of the Democracy. And when Congress assembled in December last, the fraudulent claim was so insolently and threateningly asserted as to induce a Republican Senate to pass the compromise bill, to bring the Democratic party to a realizing sense that it is defunct after all; that the people defeated Mr. Tilden, and won't have him anyhow; and that common decency demanded a more sober demeanor, mixed with a shade of shame at the detection of their hollow and blatant cheat. But Democratic shame is an unheard-of quality, and may be nonexistent; for the same Democratic Congress rebels—for they cannot be called "Congressmen," as many of them were not elected, having merely bull-dozed themselves on to the floor of the House, as their friends bull-dozed for Mr. Tilden, who ought truly to have paid them handsomely—set to work to bull-doze the people by investigating the election, but always with a view to inflict Mr. Tilden on the country. The Democrats on the House committees on Louisiana, Florida, and South Carolina, and on Privileges and Elections have out-Heroded Herod. They have broken down the sanctity of every private right, and unintentionally led into public gaze a set of Democratic scoundrels who would not be believed if they were to swear till they were black in the face. These Democratic witnesses took the oath to tell the truth, and swore to the most outrageous falsehoods, with all the grace and ease of Democratic Beau Brummells, to whom lying was natural; and when the telegraph flashed their perjury to their homes, men who knew them made affidavit that they were the veriest Democratic rascals unchanged. Littlefield, one of these most delicate perjurers, had peddled in the streets of New Orleans forged naturalization papers, which he offered to sell, and Mr. David Dudley Field almost embraced him for his perjured testimony.

But truth must triumph; and as the Republican party has nothing but the truth to rely upon, the triumph of the party will be complete. The Democrats overdid the thing. The perjury was too stupendous, while the treason of the Democratic leaders was unearthed through their own instrumentality. They are, indeed, hoist by their own petard, and will be pitchforked into that dark, cavernous abyss, the proper limbo for the aggregation of Democratic lies and frauds, while Mr. Tilden may walk the streets of New York, a wiser and a poorer man; but he will not come to Washington to be made President.

Look at the following Democratic telegrams concerning the Oregon vote. Knavery and treason are manifest. The threats indicate the deep and damning corruption of the Democracy, and justify the charge that the rebellion of the South was the rebellion of the Democratic party.

General John G. Corse, of Chicago, Ill., was before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections. In reply to Senator Mitchell, he testified that Colonel W. T. Pelton, of New York, telegraphed him about the 18th of November last, asking him to go to Oregon and look after an ineligible elector. Witness replied to Pelton, saying that he would go, but that it would take ten days for him to get to Oregon, and witness thought it better that some one should go from San Francisco. The witness admitted sending the following dispatches:

CHICAGO, Nov. 13, 1876.
To W. T. Pelton, Everett House, N. Y.:
 The general impression is that Democrats will not allow Tilden to be counted out. We are prepared to resist any fraud.

J. G. CORSE.

CHICAGO, Nov. 15, 1876.

To Perry H. Smith, St. Charles Hotel, New Orleans, La. :

If Louisiana electoral vote is stolen from us we will get California and Oregon. We have 160,000 ex-soldiers now enrolled. Vast numbers of Republicans with us. Stand firm.
CORSE.

CHICAGO, ILL.

To Hon. J. M. Palmer, New Orleans, La. :

Two hundred thousand ex-Union soldiers, embracing thousands who voted for Hayes, sustain you. If Tilden is fraudulently counted out in Louisiana the end is not yet. You have Illinois behind you.
CORSE-CAMERON.

Witness received the following :

NEW YORK, Nov. 21, 1876.

To Gen. J. G. Corse, Chicago, Ill. :

If you think it necessary you can pay National Democrat two hundred and draw on me at sight, and thus close.

W. T. PELTON.

The above referred to the paying of a bill for printing, The National Democrat is a German newspaper, published at Chicago.

The following dispatch was also offered in evidence by Senator Mitchell :

NOVEMBER 8, 1876.

To W. T. Pelton, Everett House, New York :

Gen. Corse left for Wisconsin, as you requested. Desired me to say that we entertained an apprehension that an effort would be made to defeat Governor Tilden in case of a close election, and that we are fully prepared for such an emergency. Over 100,000 ex-soldiers are enrolled in the North in his behalf, and from present indications with that number we can call to our aid a half million North and South, provided the opposition undertake to deprive him of his seat as Chief Magistrate.
DANIEL CAMERON.

Cameron is the private secretary of McCormick, chairman of the Illinois Democratic Committee.

Surely the President was justified in preparing to defend the country against the confessed treason of the Democratic leaders, whose threats were openly made that they would use force to make Tilden President when the people knew they had defeated him.

WHO WILL RECOGNIZE MR. HAYES.—

In the midst of a great deal of talk about Mr. Tilden being the choice of the people, and predictions that the country will not recognize Mr. Hayes, the New York Herald takes the trouble to calmly analyze the situation. The conclusions deduced are well worth reading. A careful perusal of them will tend to allay excitement and show that after all the country will not be so badly disappointed in its hopes :

"Most of the great sections of the country will be quite satisfied with this result of the Presidential election. In the New England States the electoral vote, whose honesty is not questioned, stands as follows : Hayes—Maine 7, Massachusetts 13, New Hampshire 5, Rhode Island 4, Vermont 5 ; total, 34. Tilden—Connecticut 6.

"Hayes being the overwhelming choice of the New England States they will give his administration a warm support. Going from the extreme East to the extreme West the electoral vote in the Pacific States stands thus : Hayes—California 6, Colorado 2, Nevada 3, Oregon 3 ; total, 15. Tilden—none.

"Mr. Hayes will accordingly begin his term as President with the confidence and favoring good wishes of the Pacific States, which gave him all their electoral votes. Coming back to the great commonwealths which are classed as the Western States, we find this to be the state of their electoral vote : Hayes—Illinois 21, Iowa 11, Kansas 5, Michigan 11, Minnesota 5, Nebraska 3, Ohio 22, Wisconsin 10 ; total, 88. Tilden—Indiana 15.

"It is obvious, therefore, that Mr. Hayes will be acceptable to the West, and that an attempt to weaken his influence would not be supported by that great section. The South sets its face against filibustering or factious opposition, and counsels its Democratic brethren to give President Hayes a fair trial. That he will be pretty generally accepted in the North is evident from the fact that of the 231 electoral votes of all the Northern States Mr. Hayes received 166 and Mr. Tilden only 65. Mr. Hayes is the choice of eighteen Northern States and Mr. Tilden of only four. If the Democrats will cast their eyes abroad over the whole country they will look in vain for any section of our great country that will refuse to recognize Mr. Hayes as the lawful President of the United States."

Improved Ventilator for Railway Closets.

The annexed cut represents a section of the water-closet seat and basin pipe of a railway car, with the Improved Ventilator attachment under the floor of the car.

The motion of the train in either direction causes the air to pass downward through the forward funnel c, creating a vacuum at the base of the pipe a, thus securing a downward current through the basin pipe B.

The attention of Railway Companies and all others interested in the health and comfort of the traveling public is invited to the Improved Ventilator, represented in the above cut. Its simplicity commends it to all who have examined it. It effectually prevents the upward draft in the discharge pipe of Railway water-closets, thereby cutting off the which have hitherto found their way into the cars through the closet hoppers. The Improved Ventilator has been recently introduced upon the cars of the Maine Central Railroad, and the following certificate confirms fully the advantages claimed for it by the inventor:

NOXIOUS GASES, DUST, WIND, AND CINDERS,

MAINE CENTRAL RAILROAD,
PORTLAND, ME., January 4, 1877.

LUTHER JONES, Esq., Lewiston, Me.:

DEAR SIR: We have now on the cars of this road sixteen of your Improved Ventilators for water closets. We find they possess all the advantages you claim for them, and exactly answer the purpose for which they are intended.

Yours truly,

PAYSON TUCKER,
Superintendent.

THE TRAVELING PUBLIC

will at once recognize the vital necessity of this improvement and fully appreciate the comfort and protection which it affords. It can be placed upon any car at a small expense. Upon receipt of five dollars one will be furnished for trial.

Address

Luther Jones,

Lewiston, Maine,

SOLE AGENT FOR THE NEW ENGLAND STATES.

100 Page Book. List of 3,000 Newspapers. How to advertise. Send 25 cents to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

$12 a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

$55 to $77 a week to Agents. Samples free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

DARBY & DUVALL, { No. 432
9th st.
MAGAZINE PRINTERS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

VOL. 8.

PREMIUMS.

1877.

THE REPUBLIC MAGAZINE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A
Club of Ten Subscribers for the Current Year and $20,
The Publishers will forward, free of cost and postage,
A COMPLETE SET, FIRST THREE VOLUMES, OF THE REPUBLIC
HANDSOMELY BOUND, WITH INDEX.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A
Club of Fifteen Subscribers and $30,
A COMPLETE SET, FIRST FOUR VOLUMES, OF THE REPUBLIC.

For Twenty Subscribers,
VOLS. 1 TO 6 WILL BE GIVEN AS A PREMIUM.

TO THE PERSON SENDING
The Largest Club in any Month, being more than 20,
A COMPLETE SET, INCLUDING THE SEVENTH VOLUME,

Which closed with the December number of 1876, all neatly bound, with index, and free of cost or postage.

These propositions afford an opportunity to acquire, with little effort, the best text book extant on the science of government.

SPECIAL PREMIUMS FOR 1877.

Marshall's Life-size Portraits of Hayes and Wheeler.

Any one sending a new subscriber and $2 will receive the REPUBLIC MAGAZINE one year and choice of a life-size portrait of GOV. RUTHERFORD B. HAYES or HON. WM. A. WHEELER, engraved in pure line by Wm. E. Marshall; autograph printed on each engraving.

For two subscribers and $4 the proprietors will send the Magazine one year and a portrait of each of the candidates, (Hayes and Wheeler.)

The Magazine and premiums are in all cases sent with the postage prepaid.

These engravings are full life size, and are companion pictures. They are engraved in pure line by William E. Marshall, and are fully equal to his celebrated and well-known portraits of Washington, Lincoln, and General Grant. They are printed on fine paper of good quality, and are thoroughly indorsed as excellent and faithful portraits and elegant works of art.

TERMS.—THE REPUBLIC is a magazine of 64 pages, published monthly, at $2 a year, or six copies for $10. The postage, in all cases, will be paid by the publishers.

Specimen copies and prospectus will, on request, be sent free to those desiring to raise clubs.

ADDRESS

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

A 2419

SINGLE COPIES, 25 CENTS.

THE REPUBLIC:

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

DEVOTED TO

THE DISSEMINATION OF POLITICAL INFORMATION.

Vol. VI.—No. 5.

MAY, 1876.

Whole No. 39.

Contents:

	PAGE
Crippling the National Government.....	273
The Civil Service Force in the Employ of the General Government....	282
Proposed Pensions for Rebels.....	288
Reminiscences of Persons and Events During the Two Terms of Gen- eral Jackson's Presidency.....	289
The Rebellion and its Secret History	294
Our Public Service.....	296
The Truth of History and the Horrors of Andersonville.....	299
The Gray Beneath the Blue.....	301
The Loss of Laborers to Georgia.....	303
Was Secession Treason?	304
The New Hampshire Elections.....	305
Labor and Wages in the United States—Protection vs. Free Trade.....	307
Our Currency—Banks and Banking, Past and Present	316
The Work of the Forty-fourth Congress	322
Review of the Month.....	327
Executive and Department Doings.....	333

PUBLISHED BY

THE REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

IN ADVANCE.

1876.

PROSPECTUS. Vol. 6.

THE REPUBLIC,

A Political Science Monthly Magazine.

THE REPUBLIC begins its sixth volume with the Centennial year, January, 1876.

It has grown in public favor, and has received substantial encouragement from every State and Territory in the Union.

Its early promises have been made good. Its pages have been filled with political information, with the suggestions of wisdom growing out of experience, with facts and figures carefully arranged, making a fund of knowledge, of itself, a valuable text-book to all interested in Governmental affairs.

In view of the Presidential election, which takes place in 1876, the REPUBLIC desires to increase its field of usefulness by adding to its list of subscribers. It already numbers among its readers, many of the most thoughtful and intelligent citizens of the country. The deep interest expressed by them in the work, is to the publishers, evidence of an appreciation that thousands of others would entertain of the REPUBLIC, could it be brought to their attention. Will not our friends take upon themselves the slight labor of inviting other good citizens to add their names and their influence to a magazine that is published in the interest of public morality and good government.

In the future, as in the past, the REPUBLIC will advocate an honest administration of Government, whether municipal, State or National.

It will favor loyalty, honesty, economy, and personal ability as pre-requisites for office.

It will give credit where credit is due; and impartial criticism whenever required.

It will seek to hold up intelligence as the safeguard to National safety, and will defend our free-school system as essential to its preservation.

It will advocate improvements, that experience may commend, in the education of the young; but will oppose all efforts to divide the public-school funds, or to introduce into the schools sectarian influences.

It will advocate the perpetuation of the Republican party as the best, if not the only means to secure the preservation of the Union, and the impartial execution of the laws.

It will labor earnestly to bring about such reforms as the spirit of progress may demand, and in all things seek to present those methods of administration, which the wisdom and experience of a century have confirmed.

It will give to its readers a clear insight into the various branches of Government, by a faithful record of their doings.

These are among the leading features of the work to which the REPUBLIC is devoted. It will draw its best energies to make the Centennial volumes worthy the Nation it serves, as it enters upon.

The republican press of the country, co-laborers in the grand mission of preserving government, the REPUBLIC sends greeting and thanks. If increased activity and continuation of the good will expressed, our brethren of the press will still extend us a generous welcome. The Presidential campaign will bring upon all, responsibilities and new demands. The REPUBLIC will bear its share and perform without fear or favor, keeping ever in view, that the highest reward that patriotism, is the consciousness that its efforts have advanced civilization and contributed to the cause of good government.

TERMS:

THE REPUBLIC is a magazine of sixty-four pages, published monthly, at $2 a year, or $10. The postage, in all cases, will be paid by the publishers. A few of the back volumes may yet be obtained, either bound or in numbers. Remittance should be made by postal money-order or registered letter.

Address,

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY, Washington, D. C.

THE REPUBLIC.

Devoted to the Dissemination of Political Information.

VOL. VI.

WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY, 1876.

No. 5.

CRIPPLING THE NATIONAL GOVERNMENT.

The attitude of the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives on the question of appropriations is one of an alarming character. It illustrates very forcibly the evil and unpatriotic policy of that organization, and must more than ever convince thoughtful and prudent citizens of the great danger to which the country would be subjected by the transfer of the General Government to its hands. Cries of "extravagance" and of "corruption" are the ready slogans of demagogues, while the reckless cutting down of expenditures seems an easy evasion of responsibility, a facile way of reaping undeserved credit, and, when examined, a striking proof of an utter want of statesmanship. Those who undertake it exhibit as plentiful a lack of sagacity as they do a superabundance of impudence. The campaign of slander and libel, which for the last five years has been an especial feature of the Opposition, has, like other vaulting ambitions, "o'erleapt itself," and now flounders in the cloaca on the other side, from whence it has expected to gain abundant materials for that throwing of filth wherein it revels.

TOTAL REDUCTION PROPOSED.

The civil service, or purely administrative work of the General Government, is that portion whose efficiency is now most seriously threatened. The Democratic majority of the House Committee on Appropriations have reported the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, covering the fiscal year 1876-7. The character of the bill may be seen from the following summary of totals:

Appropriated, 1875-6.....	$18,734,422 20
Estimated, 1876-7.....	20,773,306 70
Appropriations recommended for 1876-7.....	12,799,883 61
Difference between current appropriations and those reported.	5,934,538 59
Between recommendations and estimates.....	7,978,423 09

The object of such wholesale reduction, in but one of the appropriation bills, is at once apparent. It is to give force to the long-reiterated accusation of reckless extravagance in the Administration and by the party sustaining it, and at the same time convince the unreflecting and penurious classes that it is no longer safe or wise to trust the Government in the hands that have so long defended its existence and directed its affairs. Had it not been so recklessly attempted the policy might have succeeded. As it is, the Democratic engineers are "hoist with their own petard." They have succeeded only in demonstrating that they stand before an awkward dilemma. On one horn they will be impaled to a demonstration, as it will not be a difficult task to prove conclusively that the proposed wholesale reductions are designed only for possible political effect on Northern elections, (Southern ones are to be coerced in the most approved ex-Confederate-White-League style,) and are therefore made to show a huge sum less in the present bulk of expenditures, without much or any regard to the effect it may have on the efficiency of the public service or the possible aggregate of the deficiency bills which must be considered—after the elections. This horn of their dilemma is being sharpened by Randall, Holman & Co. Already its pricking makes some of their supporters uneasy. In a few instances and items modifications have been introduced, to secure their united support, otherwise doubtful.

DEMAGOGERY OR TREASON.

The other horn presents an even more serious and threatening aspect. It recalls Wendell Phillips' epigrammatic warning with regard to the sectional South and its history—that to forget is a crime. In 1860–'61 a long threatened rebellion in the interests of slavery and the destructive political sophistries by which it was promoted culminated in the commencement of a four years' civil war. Actual hostilities were preceded by the scattering and dismantling of the Federal Navy; the disruption of the Army; the seizure of military posts, forts, arsenals, navy-yards, mints, custom-houses, and post offices; the robbery of public funds; the coercion of Indian tribes, and a vigorous attempt to disorganize the General Government so as to make it ineffective for resistance. The policy then pursued was designed to sunder the Union, destroy the Nation, and to create a new and slaveholding Confederacy. Two things were aimed at: To cripple and destroy in advance the means of effective resistance and to obtain possession of all Governmental machinery existing within the territory designed for separation and independence.

That purpose was, after a Titanic struggle, utterly defeated. Fifteen years after its inauguration, the same section, party, and men are back in Congress, aiming apparently at a rehabilitation of their former unsuccessful struggle under another form and by new direction. Slavery has been destroyed. Secession has apparently been surrendered. But the philosophy of disintegration survives in a more dangerous shape. The doctrine of State sovereignty is now advanced as a just vindication of the slaveholders' rebellion, and as the most effective method of winning (by its enthronement as a successful party dogma) within the Union what could not be achieved out of it. To tear to pieces it was necessary to destroy the means of coercion and resistance. To conquer what could not be pulled down it may be necessary to so cripple the internal administration as to prevent the efficient direction of the public service, thereby disgusting the people and greatly weakening respect for the Federal Government. The first aim was to destroy its material resources; the latter one seems to look to the crippling of its moral power, and thereby bringing it into contempt.

The Democratic party in and out of Congress may take whatever horn of this dilemma it pleases. Either will impale it so deeply that ere long it will be only a gibbering spectacle of demagogish incompetency and sectional malignancy, or of both together. Perhaps these characteristics cannot be made more plain than by a practical application of the facts. The statements embodied herein may be relied upon as exhibiting in moderate form the effects of the reductions proposed in the important departments referred to. They are the result of careful inquiry, and the conclusions reached can be easily verified.

A SIGNIFICANT STATEMENT.

The extent of the reductions so recklessly made is exhibited in the following table, showing as it does the ratio allowed by the appropriation bill on the estimates as presented by the several Departments and Bureaus thereof:

Per cent. allowed on estimates.
0	Indian Office, (abolished.)
1½	Court of Claims; contingent expenses, etc.
33	Bureau of Education.
40	Contingent expenses of Senate.
45	Mints and Assay offices.
50	Department of State.
54	Capitol police.
58	Treasury Department.
59	Contingent expenses of House of Representatives
59	Territorial Governments.
63	Pension Office and contingent expenses.
64	Secretary Interior; contingent expenses Patent Office Building.
67	War Department and contingent expenses.
68	Clerks and employees of Senate.
68	Executive.
69	Library of Congress and Botanical Garden.
69	Navy Department and contingent expenses.
69	Expenses of collecting internal revenue.
72	Department of Agriculture and contingent expenses.
73	Post Office Department and contingent expenses.
77	Congressional Printing Office.
78	Department of Justice and contingent expenses.
81	General Land Office clerks and contingent expenses.
83	Patent Office and contingent expenses.
84	Surveyors General and clerks.
86	Clerks and employees of House of Representatives.
88	Pay and mileage of members of House of Representatives.
89	Pay and mileage of Senators.
90	Reporters of Debates and Proceedings of Congress.
99	U. S. courts; attorneys and marshals.
100	Compiling of Congressional Directory.

The result of this wholesale and indiscriminate reduction of the appropriations may in part be estimated by the following statement of its effect on the principal bureaus of the Treasury Department proper:

EFFECT OF THE REDUCTION ON THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT PROPER.

Offices.	Clerks.	Per cent.	Amount.	Per cent.	Remarks.
First Comptroller's—
1876.....	47	$75,800		The current work of the office cannot be kept up with the force contemplated by the bill now before Congress.
1877.....	37	55,480
Reduction.....	10	21	20,820	27
Second Comptroller's—
1876.....	72	110,600		It will be impossible to carry on the current work in this office if the proposed reduction is made.
1877.....	46	65,780
Reduction.....	26	36	44,820	40
First Auditor's—
1876.....	49	77,380		It will be practically impossible to keep up the work of this office with the force reduced as shown on this schedule, and three additional to the present force are deemed necessary.
1877.....	34	50,910
Reduction.....	15	30	26,470	34
Second Auditor's—
1876.....	174	245,280		This office has a large number of unsettled accounts, bounty cases, &c., on hand. The present force is inadequate to that rapid disposal of them which should characterize the public service. With the proposed reduction the Bureau will practically be disorganized.
1877.....	106	142,500
Reduction.....	68	40	102,780	42
Third Auditor's—
1876.....	171	237,000		With the present force 20,305 accounts behind, involving over $40,000,000, and many other accounts of which the amounts are not stated.
1877.....	108	141,100
Reduction.....	63	37	95,900	40
Fourth Auditor's—
1876.....	54	81,000		Already reduced so low that it is difficult to perform the current business of the office. A further reduction will be positively injurious to the public good.
1877.....	40	56,130
Reduction.....	14	26	24,870	31
Fifth Auditor's—
1876.....	33	50,680		The reduction of force proposed will delay the adjustment of accounts, or prevent the careful consideration of them which the public interests require. In either case the public business must suffer.
1877.....	24	34,760
Reduction.....	9	27	15,920	31
Sixth Auditor's—
1876.....	233	313,320		The reduction proposed will delay the settlement of the accounts of the Post Office Department. The work of this Bureau will be increased largely during the next fiscal year.
1877.....	216	271,050
Reduction.....	17	7½	42,270	13½
Commissioner of Customs'—
1876.....	80	49,760		Cannot keep up the work with less than the present force.
1877.....	19	30,760
Reduction.....	11	37	19,000	40
Register's—
1876.....	207	246,160		The proposed reduction is made without discrimination, and shows ignorance of the work to be performed. One large division will be brought to a complete standstill. All will be crippled. The experienced officers cannot be retained. The work must fall behind very largely.
1877.....	143	157,970
Reduction.....	64	31	88,190	36
Internal Revenue—
Reduction.....	20			Could not suffer the reduction without great detriment to the public good.
Treasurer's—
Reduction.....	113	28	131,000	30	This Bureau cannot perform its important duties with the proposed force. There is barely enough at present employed.
Comptroller of Currency's—
1876.....	125	161,620		The National Banks will be embarrassed by the reduction, and the business of the country must suffer. As the expenses of this Bureau are paid by the banks, this is a double hardship.
1877.....	85	102,810
	40	30½	58,810	30½

The foregoing, it will be observed, does not include several important bureaus, as that of the Supervising Architect, the Revenue Marine, Hospital and Life Saving Service, the Bureau of Statistics, and the Light-House Board. The efficiency of these are all threatened, that of the Architect's office being almost destroyed. The Secretary's office itself will be, as Secretary Bristow points out, seriously affected.

EFFECT ON THE SERVICE.

It will be observed, that the largest reductions proposed in the Treasury bureaus are to be found in the Second Auditor's—forty per cent. in clerical force, and forty-two per cent. in money; the Third Auditor's, thirty-seven and forty per cent., and in the Fifth Auditor's, twenty-seven and thirty-one, a reduction that practically destroys this bureau. The Register's, also, thirty-one and thirty-six; the Treasurer and Comptroller of the Currency about thirty per cent. on both; and in the Second Comptroller's, where it is thirty-six per cent. in force and forty in money. These bureaus are concerned in the settlement of accounts, and in the handling and issuing of the public securities and currency. The Second Comptroller and the Second and Third Auditors have the settlement of the vast body of army accounts, quartermasters, paymasters, claims, etc., as well as of pay and bounties. The Fifth Auditor is charged with the adjustment of all internal revenue, diplomatic, and consular accounts. If the first named are not examined every quarter, so as to be adjusted at the end of each year, the door is left wide open for defalcation and dishonesty. The proposed reduction practically destroys this bureau, as by it every clerk will be required to do six times as much work per day as was the case in 1861. It would seem as if there was a special purpose in crippling these bureaus. It is well known that considerable dissatisfaction exists because of the delays experienced in the settlement of such accounts as those indicated. This affects a larger class than the claimants number. The same purpose crops out in the attack on the Pension Bureau, and in its proposed transfer to the War Department. It is harsh but not unjust to declare that the object would appear to be to bring about a wide-spread sense of injustice on the part of the Government among a numerous body of citizens, who rightly deem themselves entitled to consideration at the hands of the Nation they so valiantly defended.

The disorganization or impairing of the bureaus charged with the collection of the revenue, as well as those that are intrusted with the handling and issuing of the public moneys, is even a more fatal policy. Already the Customs Bureau finds itself too weak-handed to meet the increased requirements of the service. The Centennial Exposition has made a great draft on its resources. This will increase, not diminish.

It is a fruitful opportunity for smuggling, to which the Democracy propose to add a premium by decreasing the force that can be employed. The internal revenue service is also to be impaired. But there is a Democratic excuse for this. By decreasing the officials, illicit distillers in the South will be secure. The Democratic vote will be increased thereby. Recently the French Minister notified our Government that the exhibitors from that country would feel compelled to withdraw their goods unless something was done to facilitate their reception. So petty and small is the spirit exhibited that this great Government is compelled to accept the charitable interposition of its citizens in order to keep its principal post office buildings lighted. Only by such disgrace has the Democratic majority been roused to a sense of duty. All that portion of the Treasury work, which, like the Supervising Architect's office, has to do with the employment of labor is systematically crippled, and that, too, at a period when the general depression of industry makes the smallest addition to the ranks of the great army of the unemployed a greivous burden. Now turn from the Treasury to

THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

With the very important interests and duties committed to its charge, what will be seen? The following statement of the condition and necessities of the work in this Department illustrates the effect of the proposed reductions therein:

Offices.	Clerks.	Percent.	Amount.	Percent.	Remarks.
Secretary's—
1876.....	42	$69,780
1877.....	37	58,530
Reduction.....	5	12	11,250	16	The work of this office requires an increase rather than a decrease of force.
Land—
1876.....	201	284,960
1877.....	167	211,380
Reduction.....	34	17	53,580	20	With the proposed reduction great injury will be done to settlers and others dependent upon the prompt action of the General Land Office.
Pension—
1876.....	365	490,780
1877.....	269	338,920
Reduction.....	96	26	151,860	31	This office is greatly behind in its work. To reduce the force, as proposed, will work great injury to the pensioners of the country.
Patent—
1876.....	332	436,400
1877.....	291	370,220
Reduction.....	41	12	66,180	15	This office returns a revenue in excess of its expenditures. To cripple it by a reduction is to cut down its revenues.
Education—
1876.....	18	18,860
1877.....	11	14,890
Reduction.....	2	15	3,470	19	The proposed reduction of clerical force will prove injurious. But the reduction of the contingent expenses from $21,200 called for to $1,210 will be ruinous. It will prevent the collection of statistics and stop work that is necessary to be done.
Indian Office abolished.

IMPEDING THE RETURN OF PROSPERITY.

The effect of the proposed reductions in this Department cannot but be very injurious. Take the General Land Office as an example. Year by year it is more heavily taxed, until the present force is worked to its utmost capacity to keep abreast of current business. The revival of prosperity, though slow in its advance, is sure to come. Along the whole western line the pioneer columns are advancing. The railroads send out their iron lines like tentacles to clasp and encompass the wilderness. The activity of the Land, like that of the Patent Office, is a proof of prosperity and progress. Statesmanship would recognize this, and provide for it accordingly. Demagogism only sees an opportunity of reducing salaries already poor, and of making a lesser appropriation than usual, utterly indifferent as to the injury that may be inflicted on general business, or the injustice done to individuals.

The Patent Office presents another illustration. Like our consular service, this office more than pays for itself. It would certainly seem as if a wise liberality should govern the appropriations made for its administration. In the present case, however, the force is reduced below the ordinary demands of the work, and not the slightest heed is paid to the strong probability that the Centennial Exposition with its crowds of foreign visitors is likely to greatly increase the business. Very many inventors from other countries will doubtless apply for patents, hoping thus to protect what they exhibit, as well as hereafter make profit from sales among us. The Pension Bureau has been recently attacked, especially on the ground that its work drags behind so largely. The force is too small, therefore reduce it. This is the logic of Democratic reform. But, then, applicants will be dissatisfied, and votes against the party in power may thereby be made.

THE STATE DEPARTMENT.

Take the important duties that are committed to Secretary Fish and the Department under his control. By the bill under consideration, its clerical force is greatly crippled, and the departmental work will be thereby delayed to an injurious degree. The staff of this Department must necessarily be one selected with great care. There are among its clerks many men, not only skilled in their delicate duties, but with special culture and accomplishments, which render them almost invaluable. A number of them are linguists of no mean order. Others are encyclopedias in their compendious knowledge of public and diplomatic affairs. It is such men as these—of whom the State Department by no means enjoys a monopoly in so far as the civil service is concerned—that the Democratic economists are depriving of a decent reward for a high order of service, well and faithfully performed. The demagogues in Congress, who are playing so large a game on such small cards, exhibit their inherent meanness most effectually when they reduce the already indifferent pay of Government clerks, but take especial pains not to put their own salaries on the same low level.

AN ATTACK ON LABOR.

No grosser or meaner attack on labor and its honest reward has been made of late years. The Republican party, in Congress or out of it, has never resisted any honest effort to reduce the expenses of the Government, and thus lighten the burdens of the tax-payers. But it has never done so at the cost of honest toil, or of the efficiency of the public service. Both are involved in the pending policy of the accidental majority of the House of Representatives. The facts already given, and others to follow, show how the latter will be brought about. As to the reduction of salaries, look for a moment at the gross injustice sought to be perpetrated. Take our consular service as an example. Whatever may be its shortcomings, the statement cannot be disputed that in the character of consuls and the honest administration of their duties that service is at least seventy-five per cent. in advance of what it was under Democratic rule. The consular service pays for itself, and leaves a surplus annually of about $100,000. Since 1860 the price of living has everywhere advanced. All social economists take note of the fact that the increase of rapid intercommunication has largely increased and equalized the price of labor and the cost of living the civilized world all over. The rise of incomes—taking the grade to which consuls, &c., would properly belong—has not been in a proportionate ratio to the cost of living. The English Government has collected and published in a Parliamentary Blue Book a large number of facts, which show that this increased cost of living at all their principal consular posts has within the past fifteen years been equal to at least forty per cent. During that period there has been several readjustments of our consular salaries, but no general or adequate increase has ever been made. On the other hand, there is much less opportunity than formerly to increase such incomes by doubtful means. Under the much abused Republican policy of special inspectors the affairs of the consulates have been investigated, and very many leaks stopped. Yet in face of these facts the Democratic House, under the leadership of a springing demagogue from the Illinois prairies, has slashed right and left, cutting down the salaries indiscriminately, and abolishing offices of real value to the commercial interests they are designed to foster.

INCREASED COST OF LIVING.

This illustration fits well with the reductions attempted in Department salaries. These latter were last scheduled in 1853. In a small number of appointments created and made since that date other rates may have been fixed, but as a rule the salaries then arranged are those that rule to-day. The cost of living has increased an average of sixty per cent.; while the increase in wages in other occupations has ranged from fifty to one hundred per cent. The large majority of the men and women employed in the Departments at Washington are persons of education, social culture, and trained intelligence. Very many of them possess a high grade of ability and attainments. All of them who by any means will be able to get away from conditions such as the demagogues propose to impose will undoubtedly do so. The most competent will be the first to retire of their own volition. The service will lose in efficiency thereby. But what does this matter to the politicians of the Randall-Holman school? They want a party cry, and think they have got one, forgetting, however, that the war and what has followed has educated a vast number of persons to a larger comprehension of the needs and demands of the Government than was formerly the case. The American people are not mean. They do not propose to defraud the men and women who are hired to do their work, nor do they believe it to be the business of Government to cut down salaries and cheapen labor. Its business is to administer the trust imposed, and pay a fair price for all the services required.

IMPAIRING THE POSTAL SERVICE.

In further proof of the reckless policy pursued it may be stated that a very large proportion of the reductions proposed, in force or salaries, are made on insufficient evidence of their utility. The salary reduction, it is asserted, was to be made on a dead level rule of ten per cent.; that of force on a similar one of twenty per cent. The rule has not even been systematically applied, favorite officials being partially exempted, while others are made to bear more than their share. In the Treasury the working force is reduced twenty-three per cent., and the appropriation more largely. In the Interior the reduction of force is twenty and one-half per cent.; that of salaries, etc., equals twenty-three per cent. The mere statement of such a hard and fast rule ought to be sufficient, however, to show its unwisdom, because, if for no other reason, it makes no account of the duties performed by the official, and requires no examination into the needs of and demands on the office itself. The proposed reduction of the Post Office Department appropriation is in pertinent proof.

Like the General Land and the Patent Offices the postal service is, only in a larger degree, a proof of the growth and progress of the whole country. Its duties expand as that expands. Its usefulness must be commensurate with the growth of business and settlement. To reduce its resources and cripple its capacity is to hinder the rapid interchange of all business and social life, and will especially hamper the growth of the more struggling communities. The section which will suffer the most is the one most hostile to the policy of enlightenment and equity, which is the distinguishing mark of Republicanism. But the Post Office Department can cut its suit according to the cloth that is given. Its disbursements can be kept within its appropriations.

But that must result in a great lessening of postal facilities, if the amount is not to exceed what is now proposed. At the present time, with 36,000 post offices, over 10,000 mail routes, the disbursement of $35,000,000 and the receiving of $27,000,000, the force of this Department is barely sufficient to perform its required duties. Good policy would require an increase. Especially is this so when the expected influx of foreign visitors and the certain movement of so large a portion of our own population as will attend the Centennial render it certain that there will be a greatly increased demand on the mail service. The annual increase in population, settlement, and business demands a proportionate increase in postal facilities. The electioneering necessities of a party out of power, but having a temporary "coign of vantage," require, or seem to, an ignoring of all these facts, in order to make a showing of economy on the stump and in the party press. The Postmaster General will be required to meet the issue presented by reducing the number of post offices and routes, cutting off four or five thousand of the smaller offices, and discontinuing at least a thousand routes. These will inevitably be, as to a majority of cases, within the Southern and Southwestern States and the Western Territories. The railroad postal force must be largely reduced, thus seriously crippling the mail service between and in the larger cities. If the policy now proposed is carried out as to the transportation of the mails, it must of necessity be followed by a reduction of the number carried. Cities now receiving two general mails per day will have to be content with one; daily mails will become tri-weeklies; the semi-weekly will be transferred to a weekly, while in all other branches the same necessity will prevail. The fact thus presented is already alarming members; but the danger is no greater, though it may be more in volume, than it is as to other branches of the public service treated to the same indiscriminating style of phlebotomy. The Democratic Dr. Sangrados tried another kind of bloodletting from 1861 to 1865. They haven't got quite over it "down South;" but this, and later, mode of reducing the system will prove as ineffectual for the destruction of the Union as was the former sanguinary process.

A SOUTHERN FLY IN DEMOCRATIC AMBER.

The indiscriminate reduction of force, salaries, and necessary contingent expenses is continued through all the Departments, with the exception, perhaps, of that of War. And this exception is another proof of the subserviency to the demands of the Confederate South which is so marked a characteristic of the Democratic party. Texas is at present one of the strongholds of Democracy. It has been made so by the concentration there of the ex-Confederate army by means of immigration from other Southern States, by a large increase of ruffianism and the usual processes of Democratic intimidation, and through the wholesale disfranchisement of colored voters by means of "Judicial Ku-Kluxism." Texas has, in addition, a chronic source of disorder—that of the Rio Grande Mexican cattle forays. To check, and finally, it is hoped, prevent them, it is necessary for the United States to maintain a large military force on that frontier. Besides, the Confederate Democratic leaders are looking for prospective gains to the area of their Southern empire, to the final establishment of which they have never ceased to look forward. The army on the Rio Grande, under their control, could easily be made the vanguard of a new war of conquest. Texas Democrats have, therefore, demanded that the War Department shall not be crippled, and the Sangrados of the Appropriation Committee bow in humility to their vermillion edict.

GOOD NEWS FOR SMUGGLERS AND ILLICIT DISTILLERS.

In all other directions the bleeding and depleting process is vehemently urged. The efficiency of the Department of Justice will be seriously impaired, and especially will this be the case in those regions of the South and Southwest in which, by lax administration, the Democracy will be most largely benefitted. It will not be possible either to push, as actively as should be the case, such against the whisky pursue to settlement ing officials or defraudopriation proposed for y General is simply a dly keep up the De-

AN ATTACK ON THE GRANGERS.

The important Department of Agriculture, concerned as it is with great interests wholly non-partisan and non-political in character, is, under the pending bill, almost deprived of usefulness. This again, in a marked manner, exhibits the want both of genuine statesmanship and of political sagacity on the part of the Democratic managers. Agriculture, as a great producing interest, was never so knit together as at the present time. The Grange permeates with its homogeneous influence every county in the Union, and binds to its policy a vast body of farmers and planters who are not yet within its folds. The statesman would see (Republicans have already done so) in the growth of such movements striking evidence of the manner in which the producing and laboring interests were coming forward to contest with those of commerce and exchange a normal share in legislation and government; and, so seeing, would endeavor to direct and control the same through legitimate channels. The Department of Agriculture has, in our system, become one of the most useful of these channels. The influence of the National Government is beneficially exercised to the advancement and encouragement of a primary force in production, industry, and wealth-making. It is so exercised, and has always been, without regard to party demands or policies, and without in any way interfering with individual interests or activities. The Democrats who represent agricultural districts know the interest manifested by their constituents in the experiments, publications, etc., of this Department quite as well as do their Republican associates on the floor of the House of Representatives.

The attempt to cripple the Department of Agriculture is, like the reductions in the General Land and Patent Offices, the proposed stoppage of all public works, river and harbor improvements, buildings, etc., as well as the inequitable general reduction of salaries, to be regarded only as a deliberate attack on the producing and laboring interests of the country. If this is denied, as it will be, the other horn of the dilemma is seen in the fact that such reductions, made without shrewdness or comprehensiveness, only show the incapacity of the Democratic leaders to do anything more than destroy, tear down, and pull to pieces.

DEMOCRATIC INCAPACITY—ITS PROOF.

The fact is plain that, even acquitting the Democracy as now represented in the House majority of all willful intention to impair the efficiency of the Government and the administration thereof, the pending appropriation bills only prove more conclusively than ever their incapacity to administer the Government or to wisely shape the legislation of the country. If their present actions are not interfused with treasonable malignancy, as in 1861, or animated only by the demagogue's aspirations for a taking election cry, then they must meet a pertinent criticism of which their daily acts are in proof of its truth, and that is, that they have been so long out of power as to be utterly incapable of understanding the enlarged necessities of the nation, or the demands which these are constantly making upon the Government of the country.

THE POLITICAL CRABS.

The truth is that the United States have grown out of the provincial swaddling clothes which the old-time governing Democracy so long imposed. The hands on the dial of Time cannot be turned back. The swaddling clothes are not to be made the cerements of the Nation. The Republic is a lusty and quite well matured giant now-a-days, and the Democratic liliputians who once were large enough to manage it almost to destruction, will find the bonds and withes then used are but as flaxen threads on the thews and sinews of to-day.

Since 1861 America has grown. A new public opinion controls. The civilization of the old Free States, with its vast complexities of industry, wealth, social order, education, and moral growth, is the civilization of the whole land. Its limitations as well as strength are all there. Retrospection is weakness. The Democracy travels backward like the crab. Its one eye is always turned over the shoulder of Time looking to a past, which, thank God! will never come again. It represents the politics and polity of sectionalism. Its criticism is malignant, because its history has been that of destruction. Slavery has dwarfed all moral sense, and the philosophy of disintegration has cramped capacity. Hence when it obtains, as in the present case, a temporary foothold, it cannot utilize the same for future advantage. Political opponents are treated as thieves and scoundrels; there is no sense of personal honor or public comity, as between men of differing opinions, and in pretending to provide for the wants of the Government, as should be the purpose of the regular appropriation bills, the Democrats succeed only in crippling its working capacity, undermining the public service, and by pretended efforts at economy which bear most unjustly on the poorest paid employes and officers, prepare the way for large deficiency bills and render more costly the necessary efforts which the future must bring in order to restore that state of efficiency without which the public work cannot be performed.

OUR DIPLOMATIC service must be overpaid, for it is well known that one of our foreign officials, after a service abroad of seven years, had sufficient funds left, after buying his ticket home, to buy a bottle of anti-sea-sickness cordial and a second-hand cork life-preserver. This remarkable incident, however, is offset by the fact that "one more unfortunate" is at this date "in pawn" at his post, unable to return home until some of his friends send him funds, which they are now engaged in collecting. But then the present force is composed mainly of Republicans, and, unlike the former Democratic incumbents of consular positions, have serious objections, as a rule, to making traffic of the flag, seal, and prestige belonging and supposed to accrue to their offices. Such as have been accused of so trafficking have generally been Democrats, who have nobly played the parts of "camp followers" on the party of success.

BORING a ship's bottom in mid-ocean to discover a rotten plank is wisdom compared to the Democratic policy of investigating everything, at enormous expense, while the workmen of the country are starving for want of needed legislation to set them to work.

THE CIVIL SERVICE FORCE IN THE EMPLOY OF THE GENERAL GOVERNMENT.

A fruitful source of party buncombe is found in the number and character of the persons employed by the United States to carry on the work of administration. It is a theme even more cherished by the political impotents who control the so-called "liberal" press, composed as it is of journals far more distinguished for illiberality of judgment than for any other marked quality. A foreigner who should make the diatribes of a half dozen prominent newspapers that might be named his sole source of study as to our character and institutions would undoubtedly have a good right to believe us the most corrupt people under the sun. The critics who leave that impression know better, but then they delight in befouling their own nest. There is a certain market for their wares, ill-smelling as they are—a market which has been created by their constant efforts, and which it is to be feared grows by what it feeds upon. On the whole, the journalistic critics referred to are worse than the partisan assailants. The one attacks the well-being of the country; the other only intends to assail the acts of the party and Administration which happens to be in power. The country would be all right provided only that they run it. The critics, however, would continue their assaults, seeking apparently to undermine popular faith in republican institutions, or aiming to place themselves and their profession in the position which Prince Bismarck recently declared in the Prussian Parliament the press was seeking to assume—that of the modern inquisition.

The alleged extravagance, corruption, and undue enlargement of the civil service, so-called, is then, as has been said, a fruitful source of criticism. Some recent misrepresentations as to the number of the persons employed by the General Government demand correction, and so affords an occasion to confound the unjust accusers. The Hon. M. J. Durham, of Kentucky, speaking on Thursday, March 23d, on the pending general civil service appropriation bill, made, among other statements, the following :

"The country can justly complain that for years the number of employes and officers of the Government has been greatly increased, and no doubt far beyond the requirements and necessities of the public service. I find on examination that the number of employes borne upon the civil list of the United States for the years indicated is shown as compiled from the Biennial Register, and is, to wit : 1859, 44,527 ; 1861, 46,049 ; 1863, 47,375 ; 1865, 53,067 ; 1867, 56,113 ; 1869, 54,207 ; 1871, 57,605 ; 1873, 86,660 ; 1875, 102,106. A very considerable number of the above who are borne upon the pay-rolls can, without doubt, be dismissed from the service, and there would be still enough left to carry on the Government in its various branches with promptness and dispatch. One of the consequences arising from this large biennial increase of office-holders, and it may be at larger salaries than they are entitled to, is to increase the annual expenses of the Government until they have become enormous and very burdensome to the people."

If the statement above embalmed (not in amber, though, by any means) were correct, it would be a just cause of alarm and reproach. There is no truth in it, however, as will presently be shown. Mr. Durham may probably be acquitted of intentional misrepresentation. He has only blundered in his eagerness to make a point. If his figures are as incorrect for all as they are for 1875 their untrustworthiness is simply ludicrous.

The Biennial Register, or "Blue Book," as it is commonly called, is made up to the 30th of September, in the year of its publication. The law under which its compilation is ordered reads as follows :

SECTION 510. As soon as practicable after the last day of September in each year in which a new Congress is to assemble a register shall be compiled and printed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, of which seven hundred and fifty copies shall be published, and which shall contain the following lists, made up to such last day of September :

1. Correct lists of the officers, clerks, employes, and agents, civil, military, and naval, in the service of the United States, including cadets and midshipmen, which lists shall exhibit the amount of compensation, pay, and emoluments allowed to each, the State or country in which he was born, the State or Territory from which he was appointed to office, and where employed.

2. A list of the names, force, and condition of all the ships and vessels belonging to the United States, and when and where built.

3. Lists of all printers of the laws of the United States, and of all printers employed by Congress or by any Department or officer of the Government during the two years preceding the last day of September up to which such list is required to be made, with the compensation allowed to each, and designating the Department or officer causing the printing to be executed.

4. A statement of all allowances made by the Postmaster General, within the same period of two years, to each contractor on contracts for carrying the mail, discriminating the sum paid as stipulated by the original contract and the sums paid as additional allowance.

Previous to 1873 the compilers of the Register did not deem it necessary to call for any of the names, etc., of the persons employed as mechanics and laborers, whose positions are not specifically designated in the several appropriation acts, and who are therefore employed under general authority to engage and pay for needed labor. Such classes include mechanics and laborers at the several navy-yards, a small portion of those employed on the public buildings, those at the Government printing office, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, on river and harbor improvements, and all works of a similar character. All told these will not exceed ten thousand. In the Registers of 1873 and 1875 an effort has been made to record the names of such employes. It has in part been successful, and hence the increase which has really occurred in the size of the Blue Book. It would seem, however, as if the compiler was mistaken and had given too latitudinarian an interpretation of the law, as quoted. The extent of these additions will hereafter be shown. In the meanwhile it will be well to ascertain what Mr. Durham charges. To read the passage quoted is to obtain the distinct impression that there has been a lavishly wasteful increase of force. Let us look at both the statement and the facts. Both are essential to an understanding of the disparity between them. The accompanying statement shows the figures according to Mr. Durham:

Blue Book for—	No. registered.	Increase	Increase ov'r 1859.
1859.....	44,527
1861.....	46,049	1,522
1863.....	47,375	1,226	2,848
1865.....	53,067	5,692	8,540
1867.....	56,113	3,046	11,586
1869.....	54,107	*	9,480
1871.....	57,605	3,298	13,078
1873.....	86,660	29,055	32,133
1875.....	102,106	15,446	57,579

* 2,006 less than in 1867.

It will be observed that the increase is quite gradual up to 1871. The figures of 1865 and 1867 are due, as every one will see, to the increased postal and other service, rendered necessary by the restoration of Federal authority in the South, and the consequent rehabilitation of its functions therein. The marked decrease in 1869 over 1867 is due to changes made in the internal revenue and other branches, which rendered unnecessary a large number of paid office-holders. The practical dissolution of the Freedmen's Bureau, service about 1868-'69 also decreased the total.

To those who are familiar with legislation since that date it will be a very difficult task to give a satisfactory explanation of the marvellous increase stated by Mr. Durham, as shown by the foregoing table, unless it be regarded as grossly erroneous. This is the true explanation. There has been a steady reduction of the officers, clerks, and other administrative agents of the Government since 1870 in all the branches thereof, except such as are immediately subject to the expansion superinduced by the country's normal growth and progress. The Post Office Department is an illustration of this position. The average increase shown from 1859 down to 1871 is almost wholly accounted for by the additional number of postmasters and other persons added each year. Since 1859, for instance, the number of postmasters has almost doubled. Of course this has increased the force of clerks, agents, carriers, messengers, and contractors to a proportionate degree.

Mr. Durham's misstatements are mischievous, and must be corrected. If the reader could have before him copies of the "Blue Book" for 1871 and 1875 it would be easy to perceive how he has blundered, allowing for the idiocy which aims only at making a telling point as a sure preventive of necessary caution. In the volume first named the number of octavo pages is 913; in that for 1875 there are 1,211—an increase of 298 pages. On each page the number of names printed runs from 81 down to 26, the average being 65 names to a page. To have added 44,501 names to the Blue Book of 1875 over that of 1871 would have required an addition of about 675 pages, making the volume contain 1,589 pages, or 378 more than it actually does. But the increase that is stated must be accounted for—a very easy thing to do when the facts are known. It will be borne in mind that the compiler has added, in the last two Registers, a considerable number of names never heretofore embraced by the publication. According to the statement of that officer the total is not less than 12,000, which, at 65 names to a page, required an addition to the Register of 1875 of about 185 pages. The remaining pages are accounted for by a rearrangement of the matter and a subdividing of the different classes for a more convenient way of presentation. These additional 12,000 names, or so, are obtained in this way. There was an increase of about 2,400 post offices during the past two years, and, in addition thereto, the last Register gives the name of every incumbent for the two years following the preceding publication of a Blue Book. This fact accounts for at least 3,500 additional names. There is an addition to the postal service, consequent on this increase of offices, to the number of 292 persons, otherwise than postmasters. This makes on this branch alone a total increase of 6,192 names.

In addition, there are now embraced in the last Biennial Register the following persons employed by, or otherwise under Government authority, whose names were not embraced by the Register of 1871: Internal revenue gaugers and storekeepers, over 1800; employes at new mints; Commissioners of United States Centennial Exposition, 96; light-house engineers and inspectors; clerks, storekeepers, etc., Subsistence Department of the United States Army; employes (clerks, mechanics, laborers, &c.,) Ordnance Department at large; United States Army; United States geological surveying force; also registers in bankruptcy and Circuit Court commissioners—in all over 6,000 persons. It will be observed that a considerable number of these additions are of mechanics and laborers, paid by the day, a force whose pay and position are not indicated specifically by law, and who usually are hired in open market at the ruling rates of such labor in the vicinity of their work. It would seem as if such persons did not come within the terms of the law, and if they do, then there is a considerable force to be added to the official Register. But even that addition will leave Mr. Durham's figures largely in excess.

But there is another way to test Mr. Durham's inaccuracy as to the Register of 1875, as well as prove the correctness of the enumeration now presented. The total number of names found in the last Blue Book is 79,624. If 1,211 pages (the number it contains) be multiplied by 65, the total will be 78,715. If Mr. Durham's figures, 102,106, are taken, and he be allowed to estimate at the highest number of names entered on any one page of the Register—viz., 81—it will still be found that the 1,211 pages the volume for 1875 embraces will give only 97,891 names, or 4,215 less than the Kentuckian's total.

The foregoing statements alone show that Mr. Durham is guilty of inaccuracy. But a more careful examination will establish, beyond controversy, that he is willfully careless and indifferent to the truth. The Biennial Register contains the names of the Senators and Representatives in Congress, and of all officers of the Army and Navy, the vessels of war, besides executive and judicial officers, the Department and other clerical force, the custom and internal revenue agents, the postmasters, and a considerable body of names representing persons employed as mechanics and laborers. Yet all these names will not come within 23,000 of Mr. Durham's pretended exhibit of the total, by the Register for 1875. This will be shown presently by an actual count. In order to secure a fair estimate of the civil expenses of the National Government, under Republican administrations, which are being assailed by Democratic speakers like Mr.

Durham, it would be but fair to eliminate the officers of the Army and Navy from the muster-roll. The charge is that there is "a biennial increase of office-holders," and "it may be at larger salaries than they are entitled to." Let us see. The last Register will be sufficient for an examination. The following summaries can be regarded as accurate:

Total number of officials, clerical and other civil employes, in the pay of the General Government, and registered in the Biennial Register for 1875.

EXECUTIVE.

Private secretary, assistant, and land warrant clerk.....	8
Other persons.....	4
Total Executive.....	7

CONGRESS.

Officers and employes of the Senate, clerks, Capitol police, &c.....	175
Officers and employes of the House of Representatives.....	155
Government Printing Office, clerks, &c..	8
Total Congress.....	338

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

Secretary, assistant secretaries, clerks, &c., employed in the Department itself	92
Ministers.....	30
Secretaries of Legation.....	13
Consul-Generals.....	17
Consuls.....	234
Commercial agents.....	21
Interpreters, marshals, and dispatch agents.....	18
Consular clerks.....	12
Members of the Alabama Court of Claims and other international commissions..	13
Centennial commissioners.....	96
Total Department of State.....	546

THE TREASURY.

Department proper—

Secretary's office, (this includes representatives of all bureaus and separate offices).....	503
First Comptroller.....	43
Second Comptroller.....	72
First Auditor.....	49
Second Auditor.....	149
Third Auditor.....	171
Fourth Auditor.....	54
Fifth Auditor.....	33
Sixth Auditor.....	233
Commissioner of Customs.....	30
Commissioner of Internal Revenue.....	134
Register.....	207
Treasurer.....	532
Comptroller of Currency.....	125
Total Department proper.....	2,345

Agents of the Department—outside force:

Special agents, (two employed in Washington).....	62
Customs—collectors, &c.....	4,407
Internal revenue—
Collectors.....	211
Deputy collectors.....	879
Storekeepers.....	907
Gaugers.....	909
Assistant treasurers.....	195
Mints and assay offices.....	660
United States depositories.....	13
Coast Survey, (89 employed in Washington).....	146
Life-saving service.....	114

Marine hospitals.....	41
Revenue marine.....	194
Light-house keepers.....	860
Light-house engineers and inspectors....	202
Steamboat inspectors.....	104

Total outside force.....	9,904
Add Department proper.....	2,345

Total Treasury.....	12,258
----------------------------	---------------

DEPARTMENT OF WAR.

Department proper—

Secretary's office.....	77
Adjutant General.....	252
Quartermaster General.....	168
Paymaster General.....	71
Subsistence, Commissary General.....	20
Surgeon General.....	172
Chief of Engineers.....	21
Chief of Ordnance.....	24
Signal Service.....	18
Bureau of Military Justice.....	9
Medical statistics.....	2
Inspector General.....	2
Superintendents of cemeteries.....	70
Public Buildings and Grounds.....	65

Total Department proper.....	981
-------------------------------------	------------

Outside force War Department:

Quartermaster General.....	342
Paymaster General.....	52
Commissary General of Subsistence.....	204
Surgeon General.....	15
Acting Assistant Surgeons.....	163
Ordnance.....	1,100

Total outside force.....	1,876
Add Department proper.....	981

Total War Department.....	2,857
----------------------------------	--------------

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY.

Department proper.....	89
Naval Observatory.....	19
Hydrographic Office.....	23
Almanac, (6 at Washington).....	12

Total Navy Department.....	143
-----------------------------------	------------

The following force are not embraced by the Blue Book:

Civil force, (clerical, &c.,) at navy-yards, asylums, hospitals, academy, and torpedo and other stations.....	558
---	-----

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Department proper—

Secretary's office.....	42
Land office.....	201
Pension office.....	365
Patent office.....	332
Indian affairs.....	57
Bureau of Education.....	13
Geological surveys.....	31
United States Capitol extension.....	4
National Museum.....	18
Inspectors gas and meters.....	2
Hospitals in District of Columbia.....	229

Total Department proper.....	1,294
-------------------------------------	--------------

Outside Department proper—

General Land Office:
Registers.....	98
Receivers.....	98
Surveyors General.....	17
Clerks, &c., to Surveyors General..	108
Indian Affairs:
Superintendents and clerks.....	8
Indian agents.....	78
Employes.....	640
Territories—Governors and secretaries..	18
Pension agents.....	58

Total outside force.....	1,118
Add Department proper.....	1,294

Total Interior.....	2,412
----------------------------	--------------

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.
Department proper	58
District institutions—Police, jail, and re- form school	301
Total Department proper	354
JUDICIARY.
United States Supreme Court judges, (9,) Court of Claims, (5,) District judges, (5,) Police judge, (1,) United States Circuit Courts, (9,) District Courts, (56,) Territorial Courts, (27,) total.....	112
Clerks to United States Courts.....	197
Reporter to Supreme Court.....	1
Marshals.....	86
District attorneys	84
Assistant attorneys	58
Registers in bankruptcy	253
United States Circuit Court commission- ers	1,730
Total judiciary.....	2,521
Add Department proper	354
Total Department of Justice.....	2,875
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.
Department proper	91
POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.
Department proper	384
Other officers and agents :
Postmasters.....	35,547
Contractors.....	6,280
Post Office clerks.....	4,467
Railway Post Office clerks.....	901
Route agents.....	987
Mail route messengers.....	225
Local messengers.....	125
Special messengers.....	66
Total Post Office Department.....	48,892
Total registered force properly belong- ing to the civil service.....	67,757
To this total may be added the follow- ing :
Congress—Senators, Representatives, and Delegates	374
Officers of the Army	2,929
Officers of the Navy and Marine Corps..	1,955
Vessels of the Navy	149
Advertisers for the several Departments	380
Post Office contractors.....	6,280
	12,067
Total number of persons and names re- gistered in the Blue Book for 1875....	79,824

Mr. Durham stated the total to be 102,106. He may be congratulated, as a Democrat, in getting within 23,930 of the truth. But then, using his own standard—that the Blue Book was the measure of the civil list—and it will be found that a still further deduction can be made. The total given—12,067—of names not to be counted as part of the “civil list,” in the sense Mr. Durham used that term, is properly to be subtracted from the whole number registered in the Biennial Blue Book. According, then, to this calculation, the total civil list will embrace but 67,757 names, or 34,349 less than the number given by Mr. Durham.

But that gentleman presented this formidable aggregate as a proof of extravagance ; of the costliness of the present Administration. This is in reality the most important portion of his arraignment. The American people are not so much interested in the number of persons in the employ of the General Government as they are in the question of cost and that of the proper performance of the necessary duties. To that end it may be as well to still further take Mr. Durham’s criticisms apart, and show how captious and ill-founded they are. For convenience sake, in this respect, the persons employed by the United States whose remuneration is not designated as salaries, or directly provided for out of the revenues collected, may be divided into the following groups :

I. Those paid by fees in whole or in part:
Officers.	Number.	Annual amounts limited by law.
Consuls or commercial agents	93	$2,500*
Pension agents.....	58	4,000*
Postmasters.....	34,047	1,000*
Land Office registers and re- ceivers	196	500†
District attorneys	84	200†
	34,478
*Out of their fees office expenses are also paid. †Besides the amount named, these officers receive a percentage on all moneys received by them.
II. Those paid entirely by fees :
Commissioners to United States courts..	1,730
Internal revenue gaugers.....	909
Clerks to United States courts.....	197
Registers in bankruptcy.....	253
Marshals.....	86
	3,175
III. Those who contract and derive profit:
Mail contractors.....	6,280
Advertisers or publishers.....	380
	6,660
IV. Without pay :
Centennial commissioners.....	96
Honorary medical and other appoint- ments in District of Columbia	30
	126
To recapitulate, there are of—
Class I	34,478
Class II	3,175
Class III	6,660
Class IV.....	126
Total force unpaid by appropriations, not salaried specifically by law, and paid only by fees, subtracting 280 district attorneys and public land officers, who receive a small specified salary as part of their remuneration, 44,159

As the total civil list has been shown to number but 67,757 persons, (according to the last Blue Book,) it follows that of persons whose salaries are designated by law, provided for by regular appropriation bills, and paid out of the revenue collected to meet the demands of Government, there are in all but 23,318 persons.

These facts, and they cannot be substantially controverted, prove on how shallow a foundation rests the outcry against a swollen civil list, and the so-called extravagance of salaries. It will prove, after all, that the salary bill is but the smaller portion of the expenses of a proper administration of this great Government. While referring to the question of labor cost, it should be borne in mind that there are quite a number of important bureaus which sustain themselves out of the receipts of their office. The Patent Office and the Consular service not only pay for themselves, but turn in a large surplus to the Treasury. Both of these agreeable facts have become so under Republican administration. The land offices materially aid in meeting their own expenses out of the fees and sales they receive. The postal service pays for more than two-thirds of its cost. Some of its branches, such as the money order business, net a surplus to the Department. The Judiciary is largely self-sustaining also. Under Republican legislation, rigid inquiry has been had into the fee system, and in all branches a maximum limitation has been placed upon the amount any one officer may receive as remuneration. This and similar measures are certainly reformatory in character. During the Democratic rule of a third of a century that party never investigated or corrected any abuse of this or similar character. In examining the aggregate of expenditures under the form of salaries it must be borne in mind that there are only 1,500 postmasters whose remuneration exceeds $1,000 per annum, and that of the remainder, all of whom are paid out of their office receipts, more than 25,000 do not receive over $100 per annum. These points might be greatly multiplied, but those given are sufficient for the present purpose. In conclusion, it seems proper to affirm that our political history has not heretofore presented as mean, petty, and base a partisanship as that which now characterizes the current actions and criticisms of the accidental Democratic majority in the House of Representatives. There is neither honor or courtesy in their dealings with opponents, or political integrity and sagacity displayed in their attitude towards the executive branches of the Government itself. The misrepresentation herein exposed fairly illustrate their senseless and unpatriotic position.

Presidents.

The following table, prepared for reference, shows the political sentiments and the date of the inauguration of each President, the length of time he lived after that event, and his age at the time of his death :

1. George Washington, Independent, inaugurated 1789; lived 10 years; age 68.
2. John Adams, Independent, inaugurated 1797; lived 29 years; age 90.
3. Thomas Jefferson, Democrat, inaugurated 1801, lived 25 years; age 83.
4. James Madison, Democrat, inaugurated 1809; lived 27 years; age 85.
5. James Monroe, Democrat, inaugurated 1817; lived 14 years; age 73.
6. John Q. Adams, Whig, inaugurated 1825, lived 23 years; age 81.
7. Andrew Jackson, Democrat, inaugurated 1829; lived 16 years; age 78.
8. Martin Van Buren, Democrat, inaugurated 1837; lived 25 years; age 80.
9. W. H. Harrison, Whig, inaugurated 1841; lived 1 month; age 68.
10. John Tyler, V. P., Independent, inaugurated 1841; lived 21 years; age 72.
11. James K. Polk, Democrat, inaugurated 1845; lived 4 years; age 54.
12. Zachary Taylor, Whig, inaugurated 1849; lived 16 months; age 66.
13. Millard Fillmore, V. P., Independent, inaugurated 1850; lived 24 years, age 74.
14. Franklin Pierce, Democrat, inaugurated 1853; lived 16 years; age 65.
15. James Buchanan, Democrat, inaugurated 1857; lived 11 years; age 77.
16. Abraham Lincoln, Republican; inaugurated 1861; lived 4 years and 1½ months; age 56.
17. Andrew Johnson, V. P., Independent, inaugurated 1865; lived 10 years; age 67.
18. General Grant, Republican, inaugurated 1869.

Tyler and Fillmore were elected Vice Presidents as Whigs and Johnson as a Republican. Their "independence" followed their inauguration as Presidents.

PROPOSED PENSIONS FOR REBELS.

Few nations have been called upon to place upon their pension-rolls so large a number of pensioners as we have. The rebellion caused a fearful loss of life and distress among those persons who responded to the call of the country to save the Union. Men who suffered the loss of limbs or of eyesight or of health in the direct line of duty, and the widows and orphans of soldiers and sailors who fell in the service, were properly provided with pensions. A pension, however, was not given so much as a reward for loyalty. It was granted more out of the gratitude of the people for the devotion and sacrifice of those who stood forth in the hour of the nation's peril and aided in its preservation.

But the men who took part in the rebellion, and fought against the Union and the cause it represented, have no such claim. To reward such men if they suffered would be a discrimination in favor of treasonous disloyalty, and place the rebel and his dependents on the same footing with the soldiers who fought and saved the Union. In order, therefore, to guard against the commission of such gross injustice a law was enacted which has been reproduced in section 4,716 in the Revised Statutes. That section reads as follows, viz:

"No money on account of pension shall be paid to any person, or to the widow, children, or heirs of any deceased person, who in any manner voluntarily engaged in or aided or abetted the late rebellion against the authority of the United States."

Now, the Confederacy, which was the product of the rebellion against the authority of the United States, having been destroyed by the Union forces in the field, has gathered its scattered elements in the National Congress; and the assembled Confederates in the House and Senate, appearing in the guise of representatives of the people, seem to be actuated by the same spirit as when the war prevailed, and to be resolved to do all they can on behalf of their comrades and their families and against the interests of the Union. Accordingly, wherever Republican legislation protected the Federal Treasury, or confined payments therefrom to persons of known loyalty, the Confederates in Congress have set themselves to reverse that legislation, and open the way for the entrance of disloyalty to seize upon the public money.

These recent efforts to extend the pension-rolls by quartering rebel sympathizers and their families upon them is explained in House bill No. 2,991, introduced by Mr. McFarland, to repeal the above section of the Revised Statutes. This bill has not attracted much attention, but its principle is so impudently and monstrosly wrong that it deserves a close examination and should be remembered. The text of the bill is as follows:

"Be it enacted, &c. That section forty-seven hundred and sixteen of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls the names of all persons who may be entitled to a pension under existing laws, notwithstanding they may have served in the rebel army prior to such service, and pay to such persons, their widows or children, a pension as provided by law in other cases, from and after the passage of this act."

It is almost always safe to assume that when a Southern Democratic member of the House or Senate desires to repeal a section of the Revised Statutes he either aims at protecting the Democratic South in its disloyalty or to reward his disloyal comrades for their treason out of the Treasury of the United States. This is not a condition of affairs that the people are likely to approve, and Representatives especially will resolve that their votes shall be cast to defeat forever the hope of treason in that direction. The bill above cited has in substance been passed by the House majority, as a report from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, which committee is presided over by an ex-rebel brigadier—Hunton, of Virginia.

If some Democratic genius could invent some plan to utilize the gas daily generated in the present House of Representatives the appropriation for lighting public buildings might be stricken out altogether. As an economic idea we commend it to the faithful.

REMINISCENCES OF PERSONS AND EVENTS DURING THE TWO TERMS OF GENERAL JACKSON'S PRESIDENCY.

No man of this country or of any other ever possessed in a greater degree the confidence of the people, or excelled in personal popularity with the masses than Andrew Jackson, of Tennessee. Politicians were not always satisfied with him, not even those who had largely participated in the success of the party that twice elected him to the Presidential office; but the people were ever with him, and believed in his honest, devoted patriotism, stood by him in every act in his administration of public affairs, when political leaders of the party were alarmed if not disaffected at times by the bold aggressive movements of the brave and intrepid soldier. It is related of a Pennsylvania farmer, who having sold, in Philadelphia, a wagon-load of products from his farm some twenty miles back in the country, was offered in payment the notes of the United States Bank, then at a premium of one per cent. over the State bank circulation, when to the surprise of the purchaser he declined to take them in payment, simply saying that General Jackson had said the Bank was bad and corrupt, and therefore he did not care to have anything to do with it.

A true and staunch friend, he never was known to abandon any one in whom he had placed confidence, or for whom he had any friendly feeling although the whole world might go against his views and opinions. He was ever the defender of the weak against the strong, and no man ever surpassed the old Hero in his chivalric appreciation of woman, or in his disposition to protect and defend her at all times against any species of aggression or persecution. This noble disposition had been increased in him in consequence of the base and dastardly attack that was made on his domestic life during the canvass for his first presidential term, and even upon the beloved partner of his joys and sorrows, whose life, it was believed, was shortened by such attacks and persecutions.

This trait in his character for gallant defense of woman was brought fully into action on the memorable embroilment in Washington society in 1831, in which the members of his Cabinet and their families were principally and immediately interested. Reference is here made to the unpleasant condition of affairs immediately preceding the dissolution of the Cabinet in that year. The rupture that had taken place between General Jackson and Mr. Calhoun, to which more particular allusion will be made further on, was soon followed by an event naturally to follow as a consequence—that of breaking up the President's Cabinet. Several members classed as the political friends of Mr. Calhoun could not be expected to remain as ministers to General Jackson while adhering to that gentleman. This dissolution of the Cabinet, however, was hastened and more immediately brought about by the embroilment in high society referred to above. The main difficulty and source of these troubles in society, as the General believed, arose from a wanton and unprovoked persecution on the part of the Calhounites, of the family of his friend and favorite minister, General Eaton, then Secretary of War, aimed as an indirect attack on himself, and similar in effect to the dastardly war made on his own domestic peace during his first candidacy for the Presidential office.

Mr. Samuel D. Ingham, the Secretary of the Treasury, visited the President at the suggestion of Colonel R. M. Johnson, of Kentucky, the reputed slayer of Tecumseh, to see if some harmonious compromise could not be made whereby he and others could remain in position—for although friends and admirers of Mr. Calhoun, and therefore necessarily and to some extent disaffected toward General Jackson, yet they seemed desirous, to use a modern phrase—to stick; but the President was far from being conciliated, and, as Mr. Ingham reported back to Colonel Johnson, he had become very violent, and, as he remarked under considerable excitement, that he would never again undertake such a mission, for the President was not only violent, but seemed to roar at him like a maddened lion. Colonel Johnson said he would go to him and see if the lion would roar at him; possibly the old Hero had roared enough for that occasion, for he received the Colonel, for whom he had a high regard, with that impressive dignity that was never surpassed by any high official in receiving those who approached him, especially under such extraordinary circumstances as then existed. Colonel Johnson warmly deprecated the course affairs were taking—that they would lead to a breaking up of his Cabinet, and feared that the people of the country would become alarmed and disaffected at so unusual an event. The President, in his determined manner, assured him that he need not entertain any apprehensions with regard to the reception of such an occurrence by the people, who would, in their accustomed common-sense way of looking at causes and effects, be but little concerned by the changes which might take place in his Cabinet.

The result was as foreseen by Colonel Johnson—the Cabinet was dissolved, and as foreseen by the President the people seemed to care but little about it. Mr. Van Buren, Secretary of State, and General Eaton, Secretary of War, being the special, personal, and political friends of General Jackson, having tendered their resignations, the balance of his Cabinet were, of course, necessitated to follow their example, thus terminating a Council to the President in which Mr. Calhoun had been largely represented, and which, consequently, could no longer be palatable to the President. General Eaton and his family went to Florida, where he had been appointed Governor, and subsequently as Minister to Spain. Mr. Van Buren went as Minister to England, and the rest of that famous Cabinet retired from public to private life, from whence they never afterward emerged.

In the election for President which took place in 1832, the successful ticket before the people bore the name of the old hero of New Orleans for President, with that of Mr. Van Buren for Vice President, and their inauguration took place amidst great party rejoicings on the 4th of March, 1833, being the second term of General Jackson.

A great change had taken place in the political as well as in the personal relations of the distinguished leaders who had figured so prominently in the exciting movements of the previous four years. Mr. Clay had again been beaten, and the political feud between him and the President had increased in bitterness, assuming constantly thereafter personal dislike and antipathy. Mr. Van Buren had succeeded Mr. Calhoun to the Vice Presidency, and was now to preside over the Senate, in which the latter was to be simply a Senator; nor was this all of the discomfiture of the ambitious South Carolinian. The strong ties of personal and political friendship that had so long existed between him and General Jackson had been suddenly and violently severed—never to be restored again. It had been discovered to General Jackson through the revelations of William H. Crawford, of Georgia, who had been a member of Mr. Monroe's Cabinet during the time that General Jackson had control of military affairs in Florida, that instead of Mr. Calhoun (also of Mr. Monroe's Cabinet) having defended him against serious charges brought up in Cabinet for transcending his powers and authority in Florida, he was for strict investigation, and for such punishment as the extraordinary circumstances demanded; and that it was Mr. John Quincy Adams who had on that critical occasion espoused his cause and defended him against any extreme proceedings on the part of the Government.

This discovery was a sad blow and a great surprise to General Jackson, for he had been for a number of years firmly under the impression that it was to Mr. Calhoun that he was indebted for such friendly aid and defense at so critical a period, and the discovery to a man of his temperament, having an extreme sensitiveness about everything that concerned his military fame, naturally awakened no ordinary indignation and resentment. A correspondence ensued between him and Mr. Calhoun, which had no effect whatever in healing the breach in their friendship; but, on the contrary, it only widened it, and the General, getting mad, abruptly closed the correspondence with the deprecatory address of Cæsar to Brutus, "Et tu Brute."

This unfortunate severance of the old ties of personal and political friendship between the President and Mr. Calhoun was in every way disastrous and fatal to the latter. Mr. Van Buren succeeded to the place in the affections of the President that had but so lately been occupied by Mr. Calhoun, and in consequence Mr. Van Buren was placed on the ticket in 1832 for the office of Vice President, with the clearly defined will and pleasure of the old hero that he should succeed him in the Presidency. This assertion of the influence and power of General Jackson, based on his unequalled popularity with the people to nominate his successor, and to have him chosen by the people, will be fully sustained by the history of the times—and that not only did this great influence and the power of his name extend to his immediate successor, but will apply also to the nomination and election of Mr. Polk in 1844.

These sudden and overwhelming reverses in Mr. Calhoun's political and personal fortunes made him well-nigh a desperate man. Seeing that he was no longer in the line of "safe precedents," and that the aspiring son of New York had stepped in and jostled him from his ambitious path, where but a short while before he seemed so secure for the high prize in view, and that there remained no possible hope for him to regain his former happy footing, he in an evil hour resorted to his celebrated nullification doctrine.

There has scarcely been in the country greater excitement than that which arose from the discussions in the Senate on the tariff question during the session of 1832-'33. South Carolina under the lead of her heretofore popular and distinguished son, Mr. Calhoun, had assumed the fearful attitude of angry and almost belligerent opposition to the execution of the revenue laws, and at no time probably had there been graver apprehensions for the future of the country than existed then. It was but the dark, gloomy omen and forerunner of what was to follow afterward in 1861, and the dread and dismay which then oppressed the hearts of all patriots simply foreshadowed the horrors that came upon the land from 1861 to 1865.

General Jackson issued his famous proclamation warning the people of South Carolina against any disaffection to the Government, or any attempt to resist the due execution of laws made by the high authority of Congress, and followed this great address by sending troops to Charleston under the command of General Scott to guarantee and enforce, if need was, the execution of the revenue laws.

During this eminently critical period threatening the national peace, Mr. Calhoun arose in his place in the Senate and made the following alarming declaration that South Carolina was in "battle array," ready to resist the execution of the iniquitous revenue laws for the collection of revenue under an unjust and unconstitutional tariff. Such was the dread and fearful impression made on the minds of Senators and the crowded audience that for a while the feeling was intensely oppressive and painful, for it was known that General Jackson was intently watching every movement on the part of the political leaders of South Carolina, and that had there been an overt act in the way of resistance, going so far as to the shedding of blood after such a speech, there was no knowing what dire results would have happened from the stern determination of the great and patriotic chief then at the head of public affairs, who it was well known would never compromise in any way for the violation of the laws of his country. It was at this momentous juncture, when Mr. Calhoun had so startled and alarmed Senators and audience, that Mr. Clayton, of Delaware, hastily penciled a note to Mr. Clay, and sent it by a page of the Senate, in these exciting words: "For God's sake save him, or he is lost."

Mr. Clayton well knew the inflexible and indomitable will and temper of Andrew Jackson, and that had there been blood shed in resisting the revenue laws after this daringly bold and almost treasonable speech, that the fate of the South Carolina Senator was already determined on, and that with such a man as Jackson in the Presidential chair there would be no compromise or vacillation in the discharge of his high and imperative duties.

Mr. Clay did save him and his State from a very fearful predicament, and in his compromise measures at that time allayed and fully quieted the storm that seemed ready to burst over the Government and the country.

General Jackson's firmness of character his determination to submit to no wrong to the Government at home or abroad, made him feared and respected everywhere. Witness the action of France in settling up long delayed arrears of debt to the United States when the old soldier and statesman had it intimated to the French Government through our minister at Versailles that the time had come for a settlement, and that no further delay could be tolerated with proper regard to our national honor.

It may not be amiss to say here that it would be of importance to the people of the United States to look well to the character of such a man, and to reflect upon the incalculable advantage of having at all times, if possible, just such a man at the head of public affairs to insure and guarantee the due observance of their rights and laws both at home and abroad; and in this connection it may be safely stated, and without fear of any possible question, that had General Jackson been in the Presidential chair when the political leaders of the South, leaving their seats in both houses of Congress, went forth to inaugurate a civil war, that they would not have reached their homes for such a purpose, nor indeed would they have dared to venture on so dire an errand if he had been President and commander-in-chief of the army and navy.

With the people of the District of Columbia, where he lived as President for eight years, he was greatly respected and beloved. They soon learned to know his inflexible justice and his fixed rule of action with regard to all transactions between the officers and employees of the Government and the people of the District. He would not allow any long continued indebtedness on the part of officials who were receiving their monthly pay from the Government, and who on account of being in the receipt of such Government pay had received credit for any kind of supplies or accommodations. Knowing this, he was very frequently appealed to by creditors against their delinquent customers, and they never failed to secure a liquidation of the indebtedness, or so secured as to guarantee a speedy payment. One of these applications to the General, and which created much amusement at the time, was that of a lady who kept a boarding-house, and with whom a young man from Tennessee, a clerk in one of the Departments, and of a family for whom the President had a warm regard and friendship, had boarded for several months without paying his board bill and with little apparent likelihood that he intended paying it very soon, and for which she was greatly in want. The General listened to her complaint very patiently, and with his usual kindness and courtesy to the fair sex, and when she had told him her story, he advised her to get the gentleman's note for what he owed her. At this the poor lady's heart sank, and she said, "General, what good will his note do me? He will care as little about paying a note as the open account I have handed him so frequently"—but her heart grew something lighter when the President told her to get the note and bring it to him—for she saw that there might be something in it. She went home and very readily got the required note, as the gentleman said he was very willing to give it, and would include the interest, as she should not lose the interest as long as he owed her hereafter. Smiling at the liberality of her debtor, she returned to the President and submitted to him the document, wondering what would be the next move towards getting her money. To her extreme surprise the President took up a pen from his office table and wrote on the back of the note his own great name—Andrew Jackson. Almost overcome by grateful surprise she arose to take her leave, when the President said to her: "Madam, you will please take the note to the cashier of the Bank of the Metropolis with my request that he will discount it at once, and that he will please to give timely notice of maturity to the maker of the note. Timely notice was given, and it is needless to add that the note was paid promptly when it became due, without taking advantage even of the usual three days' grace.

Great injustice has been done to the character and fame of General Jackson in the estimate made of him, mostly by his political opponents, especially in charging him with tyranny in the exercise of an almost ferocious will in his great public career. Nothing was ever more unfounded.

Colonel Thomas H. Benton, who of all men of their times knew him best from many years' acquaintance, and who, from having been in deadly feud with him at an early period of their lives in Tennessee, became, after he attained to the Presidential office, his warmest and most devoted friend, writes in the following interesting manner of him in his "Thirty Years View," published after General Jackson's death:

"His temper was placable, as well as irascible, and his reconciliations were cordial and sincere. Of that my own case was a signal instance. After a deadly feud I became his confidential adviser, was offered the highest marks of his favor, and received from his dying bed a message of friendship, dictated when life was departing, and when he would have to pause for breath. There was a deep vein of piety in him, unaffectedly showing itself in his reverence for divine worship, respect for ministers of the gospel, their hospitable reception in his house, and constant encouragement of all the pious tendencies of Mrs. Jackson. And when they both afterward became members of a church it was the natural and regular result of their early and cherished feelings. He was gentle in his house, and alive to the tenderest emotions; and of this I can give an instance, greatly in contrast with his supposed character, and worth more than a long discourse in showing what that character really was. I arrived at his house one wet, chilly evening in February, and came upon him in the twilight, sitting alone before the fire, a child and a lamb between his knees. He started a little, called a servant to remove the two innocents to another room, and explained to me how it was. The child had cried because the lamb was out in the cold, and begged him to bring it in, which he had done to please the child, his adopted son, then not two years old. The ferocious man does not do that! and though General Jackson had his passions and his violence, they were for men and his enemies who stood up against him, and not for women and children, or the weak and helpless, for all of whom his feelings were those of protection and support."

The great old patriot is gone from earth to heaven, and there never can scarcely ever be a name connected with the history of this country that will be more prized or held in higher estimation than that of Andrew Jackson.

True man—staunch friend, and true patriot—he loved his country and its institutions, and was, all through a long and eventful life, devoted to its honor and best interests. He loved the people, and always felt that they would stand by him in all his political acts, because they believed that he would ever serve them truly and faithfully.

In conclusion, it may be safely said that there never existed a public character who through life acted more thoroughly on the principle inculcated in the solemn and impressive adjuration of the great churchman and statesman, Cardinal Wolsey, to his friend and follower, Cromwell——"Be just and fear not. Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's, thy God's, and truth's."

ENCOURAGING EDUCATION.—As a fair sample of Democratic economy we give the following, clipped from the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, as reported to the House of Representatives, March 8, 1876, "For contingent expenses of the Bureau of Education, namely: Stationery, cases for library, library, current educational periodicals, cases for official records, other current publications, completing valuable sets of periodicals and publications in the library, telegraphing and expressage, collecting statistics, and writing and compiling matter for annual and special reports and editing and publishing circulars of information, fuel and lights, office furniture, contingencies, one thousand two hundred and ten dollars."

The Commissioner of Education called for $21,200 for the prosecution of the important work intrusted to his charge, and the Democratic committee, with a high appreciation of educational advantages, very generously gives $1,210—a sum hardly sufficient to run a country school through the winter. This cutting-down process may enable the Democracy to save the seven millions they boast of, but while they were at it they could have saved more by refusing to appropriate a dollar for Government expenses. Then, instead of boasting over a saving of seven millions, they could have held up before the astonished people a clear saving of twenty millions. Economy may be a golden virtue when properly exercised, but when practiced at the expense of public necessities it ceases to be a virtue and becomes a positive vice.

THE REBELLION AND ITS SECRET HISTORY.

We are prone to forget how deep-rooted the secession or disunion heresy is until we are aroused by the utterances of some of its advocates. We forget, too, how long the idea of disunion was cherished before an attempt was made to realize it. The following letters to Jefferson Davis from prominent conspirators, (never before published, we think) show that treason was constantly in these men's minds. It will take another generation at least to eradicate it. In the meantime the Government must be sustained, and administered by the loyal and true men of the Republic.

[Indorsement.]

A. P. BUTLER, U. S. S.

EDGEFIELD, S. C., June 16, 1851.

To Colonel Jeff. Davis :

South Carolina very much in earnest, but there is fear of division. An issue has been made before the people, making it imperative for her convention to put the State on the trial of separate secession. How could such a move affect the cause in Mississippi? And would it help or impair the strength of the States' rights men in other States? Fear South Carolina will make a vain sacrifice if she moves alone without the co-operation of other States. Appeals for counsel and suggestions.

Important!

STONELANDS, NEAR EDGEFIELD,

Confidential.

June 16, 1851.

MY DEAR COLONEL: "The looker on can sometimes see more than the gamester." Such being your situation at the time, in reference to our affairs in South Carolina, I hope I may appeal to you for counsel and for suggestions. Our people are very much in earnest, but there is fear of division and intestine contest. An issue has been made before the people making it imperative on our convention to put South Carolina on the trial of separate secession.

How will such a move affect the party of true men in your State? Will it help you, or will it impair the strength or interfere with the onward movements of the States' rights parties in other States. I believe this State could be induced to make any sacrifice for the common cause of those who contend that the General Government is a confederacy, and not a consolidated government. If it is of the latter character, then the Southern States are doomed to degraded subordination. They can hold these rights by no other tenure than sufferance. Should South Carolina move alone, without the assistance from her neighbors of co-operation, she will, I fear, make a vain sacrifice.

Give me your opinion, confidentially, as to the course she should pursue, so far as it may affect the interests of other Southern States. Do write freely.

Believe me yours, with the highest respect,
A. P. BUTLER.

COLONEL JEFFERSON DAVIS, Mississippi.

P. S. I write to you at Jackson, supposing that a letter will reach you from that place as from any other.

[Indorsement.]

J. M. MASON.

WINCHESTER, VA., September 30, 1856.

To Jefferson Davis, Secretary of War.

Requests the Secretary of War to exchange muskets with Virginia. Says in "event of Fremont's election the South should not pause, but proceed at once to immediate, absolute, and eternal separation. So you see I am a candidate for the first halter!"

Important.

SELMA, NEAR WINCHESTER, VA.,

September 30, 1856.

MY DEAR SIR: I have a letter from Wise, of the 27th, full of spirit. He says the Governors of North Carolina, South Carolina, and Louisiana have already agreed to the rendezvous at Raleigh, and others will. 'This in your most private ear.

He says further that he had officially requested you to exchange with Virginia on fair terms of difference percussion for flint muskets. I do not know the usage or power of the Department in such cases, but if it can be done, even by liberal construction, I hope you will accede.

Was there not an appropriation at last session for converting flint into percussion arms? If so, would it not furnish good reason for extending such facilities to those States. Virginia, probably, has more arms than other Southern States, and would divide in case of need.

In a letter yesterday to a committee in South Carolina I gave it as my judgment, in the event of Fremont's election, the South should not pause, but proceed at once to "immediate, absolute, and eternal separation." So you see I am a candidate for the first halter.

Wise says his accounts from Philadelphia are cheering for old Buck. in Pennsylvania. I hope they be not delusive.

Vale et Salute.

J. M. MASON.

COLONEL DAVIS.

[Indorsement.]

Anonymous—"Senex."

MEMPHIS, November 18, 1856.

Election of Buchanan only a temporary triumph! Make it available to the South; so constitute the Cabinet as to retain the sinews of power—the War, Treasury, and Navy Departments—in Southern hands, that in the event of the election of a Black Republican President in 1860 the Government must not pass to them. A Napoleonic demonstration would be called for—grab game the policy. Suggests the names of Cass, Cobb, Toucey, &c., for the Cabinet.

Very suggestive.

MEMPHIS, TENN., November 18, 1856.

HON. JEFFERSON DAVIS.

MY DEAR SIR: I congratulate you on the victory recently achieved by the Democracy of the nation. It is but a temporary triumph. The fanatical demons of the North in 1860 will again be in the field. Revolutions never go backward. We are now in the midst of a revolution, passive it is true—but a decisive battle is yet to be fought. Our Constitution does not suit the South. The privilege of slavery guaranteed to the South is the bone of contention, and heaven and hell will be brought to bear for its abolition.

We have a temporary triumph. Let us profit by it—make the most of it—so constitute Mr. Buchanan's Cabinet that the sinews of power will be available in the event of the election of a Black Republican in 1860—available to the South. See to it you Southern men about Washington that the Departments of the Treasury and War, and even of the Navy, are retained in Southern hands—for if a Black Republican is elected in 1860 the Government should not be permitted to pass into their power—a Napoleonic demonstration would, in that event, be called for—grab-game the policy. Therefore, I repeat, let certain Departments be given to true Southern men.

Some such ticket as the following, viz: Lewis Cass, Secretary of State; Howell Cobb, Secretary of Treasury; T. J. Rusk, Secretary of War; —Toucey, Secretary of Interior; F. P. Stanton or Orr of South Carolina, Secretary of Navy; General Richardson, Postmaster General; Hallet or Slidell, of South Carolina, Attorney General.

Douglas and Hunter, of Virginia, had better remain in the Senate; General Quitman ought to go to Nicaragua; A. V. Brown, who will expect something, can be sent as Minister to France; D. S. Dickinson may go with the State Department if General Cass decline, or in the Navy if preferred.

The South is proud of you as a military man and as a statesman. You may have to act the Leonidas for the South—we may have to pass through a Thermopylæ ordeal. The crusaders, infuriated with religious fanaticism, will be down upon us. They will find a Saladin to welcome them to hospitable graves! The Richards and Philips of the campaign will be glad to get back to their Yankee dams to sicken and die with traitorous remorse.

Oh! that the South were wise—that she could become united. In the next campaign the North will attempt to abolitionize not only all foreigners in the South and North—but through such men as Cassius Clay, J. Minor Botts, Rayner & Co., attempt to abolitionize all the non-slaveholders in the South. Houston, Bell, Benton, Blair & Co. will look on with complacency and give indirect aid and comfort.

Long may our Constitutional Union last is the prayer of every Democrat—but give us equality, preserve our honor, or give us a new order of things!

Excuse the liberty of a stranger.

Yours truly in the faith, SENEX.

POOR ECONOMY.—The Democratic House of Representatives want to show the people how large a saving can be made in the expenses of the Government. They have adopted a novel and simple plan to obtain what they want. They cut down salaries from ten to twenty per cent.; then cut down the force employed about twenty per cent., and the desired end is accomplished. Their plan may work great injustice to individuals and positive injury to the business of the Government, but they are after a big saving, and just how they get it, or where they get it from, are matters of secondary importance. The Commissioner of Pensions is one of the hardest worked officers of the Government. On his decision the Government pays millions of dollars to the pensioners of the land. He is required to be a man of personal integrity and ability. The disbursements made upon his settlements are about $30,000,000 a year. For this important and responsible work he receives an annual salary of $3,000. The Democrats cut it down to $2,700. This is in keeping with the shaving business in which they are now engaged.

Three hundred dollars taken from a poorly paid Government official is of itself a trifling amount, but it goes to make up the seven millions saving over which Democratic leaders will grow eloquent next fall. No doubt Pendleton, the saintly fee taker, who presides over a Kentucky railroad for the starvation salary of $6,000 a year, and pockets $74,000 fee for collecting $148,000, which he claimed was honestly due the company, will rattle the changes on this economy dodge in the vain hope that the people will turn honest men out of office in order to put rascals in.

OUR PUBLIC SERVICE.

The unfortunate disorders in our public service, and the misdemeanors and crimes committed by high and trusted officials, which have recently been revealed, will be seized by demagogues as a most welcome opportunity for the furtherance of their selfish ends. That these startling revelations have aroused the public indignation is very natural. But it is not less natural that the indignant public should be misdirected by the creation of public prejudices, from which everything is seen but the proper source of the evil, and by which a cure is promised that eventually must prove worse than the evil sought to be cured. The recently expired mania of the so-called "Civil Service Reform" is an instance sufficient to illustrate this assertion without looking for further proof from history. It behooves us, therefore, to face the evil bravely, trace it to its proper source, and then find the true remedy.

That the Republican party which saved the Union, and achieved such a far-reaching success in the progress of the Nation and of humanity in general, has become worthless, and ought to be abolished because a certain number of officials proved themselves unworthy of the trust with which they were honored by its administration, is an illogical conclusion, and of no credit to common sense. That the evil of corruption can be remedied by conveying the helm of the Government from one party to another is simply ridiculous. Such an assertion characterizes the demagogue, or his brainless echoes. The Democratic rule of the State and city of New York, past and present, does not justify the empty promises that that party would fill the Federal offices more creditably than the present administration if put in its place. Nor has the Democratic rule of Missouri, under which ex-Governor Brown still remains a defaulter to the State in a large amount, and under which $2,000,000 of fraudulent war claims have been thrown into the market, exhibited the same determination to punish the guilty parties that our General Government has demonstrated in bringing its criminals to justice. The idea that corrupt and dishonest individuals can only be found in the party in power, and that a reign of purity would commence with its removal from power, is so ridiculous that it would be difficult to believe in its existence in the brains of any human being if we did not see and hear it defended in newspaper articles and oratorical efforts.

But it would be a very poor justification for us to say to the opposing party: you have also unclean sheep in your fold, and have, therefore, no right to accuse us of the same impurity. We are merely endeavoring to demonstrate the truth that corruption is not confined within the limits that characterize a certain political party, but that it is a disgraceful element pervading the people of our Republic.

Where, then, may we look for the remedy against the startling corruption to which even our unfortunate Cabinet minister has fallen a victim? Certainly not to the Democracy, which, as a political party, has been, and is still, combatting every sound principle of government and national economy with a persistency worthy of a better cause. This party is still proclaiming, through its representatives in Congress, its unwavering adherence to the heresy of the so-called State rights, notwithstanding the same has been theoretically and practically denounced and abolished, and finally buried by the discarding of the original articles of confederation, the adoption of the present Constitution, and the victorious termination of the rebellion, crowned by the adoption of the last constitutional amendments. This party is still justifying secession, declares the suppression of the rebellion a crying injustice to the Southern States, and threatens to make the constitutional amendments, secured by the last fearful struggle of the nation, of no effect as soon as it gets the power to do so. Then the Union men will be placed in the unenviable position of rebels, provided they do not tamely submit to such a pretense and farce of a government. Can the people of the land so far forget themselves as to throw recklessly away their rights and liberties, their whole government, secured by rivers of blood and millions of money, by making that party the guardian of their highest political rights, while the confession is on its lips that it would take great pleasure in destroying them? Could we escape corruption by such a suicidal act? Is not a general demoralizing element necessarily very fruitful of individual corruption?

Reform parties have made themselves so contemptible that it requires idiocy to expect any political salvation from such pretenders. Their records show nothing but illogical phrases and questionable acts. "Reformers" as well as society need a thorough reformation before true reform can take place.

The two main factors of which our startling corruptions are the product, are society and the manner in which our public officers are rewarded, either by salaries or fees.

The recently developed calamities of official misconduct should be sufficient to cause the most thoughtless member of our gay society to stop and reflect a moment on the irresistible logic of facts. If the current of our social conduct is not soon differently directed it must terminate in a terrible catastrophe. Let the gay, gaudy, and recklessly extravagant butterflies of society remember the blood-curdling retribution that overtook the French debauchees in the "reign of terror" for their scoffing at poverty. Is it not an indisputable fact that the demands of society on our leading officials are so cruel and merciless that they are compelled to select one of two existing evils, i. e., either to live within the reasonable limits characterizing the lives of decent and respectable citizens, and be considered and treated with bitter contempt as "nobodies," because they do not make enough show, or to squander recklessly their honest income, together with any private means they may have, in order to be considered "passable in society?" Does it not require a moral Hercules to resist the temptations to corruption under such circumstances? It is a deplorable trait of the American character to estimate a man's value according to the amount of cash he can command, and the gay and glittering display he is able to make. How he came to his money, that does not concern our gay society. The only question considered of importance is : is he in possession of it? The worship of money and display goes so far that a person who has served his well deserved term in the penitentiary will be over-burdened with attention and compliments as the "hero of the day" if he can satisfy such perverted social demands. A good intellect and a noble character are of secondary consideration; and if these manly qualities cannot be supported by plenty of money and display of reckless extravagance, then they are surely not worth noticing. And this is, to a great extent, the criterion according to which the ballots are cast in a great many of our public elections. This trait of our national character can be traced from our highest to our lowest social circles, adopted in every locality and grade of society to local circumstances. Only the heroic and noble exceptions to this popular spirit are the sound foundation of our government.

May our people study the truth in time, and practically, that such money worship and money aristocracy and nobility cannot be reconciled with a democratic government or a government of the people, but must work its destruction. Reforms in our public service will only begin when the people shall consider no other aristocracy and nobility as worthy of notice and public admiration than that of brains and nobility of character; when the saying will be considered as an insult to our republican government, "It is impossible for a poor man to hold a Cabinet office." How many are to-day very profuse in their condemnations of the conduct of ex-Secretary Belknap who work at the same time with an untiring and contemptible persistence at the cultivation of the low and unworthy spirit that caused his downfall. Reform the people, and you will reform our public service! One is impossible without the other. The pretended reformer who proclaims a different modus for the eradication of our social and political evils is either a demagogue, or—an imbecile.

Not only a perverted public ambition, of which the people are as guilty as public officers, is the cause of our official corruption, but also the rate at, and the manner in which our public service is rewarded. But in the very face of this fact we see the present Congress indulging in the cheap effort of reducing our public service still further below the limits of respectability.

A man with an extensive business, who needs well-qualified clerks, is compelled to give them a respectable salary in accordance with their qualifications and the importance of the work they have to perform. Even if he has not a spark of human kindness in his breast his self-interest will not allow him to secure second-rate and unreliable assistance for a cheap compensation at the risk of having his business ruined. Our Representatives should act with the same prudence in regard to our public service, instead of inaugurating a plan of which even the most hard-hearted businessmen would be ashamed.

The present salaries of our public servants were fixed when we had no depreciated currency, and when all the necessities for our subsistence could be bought at much lower rates. The salaries of our consuls compel them, either to represent American shabbiness in foreign countries, if they are honest, or American roguery, if their consciences are of spiritual india-rubber. Many have accepted consular appointments under the delusion that a decent and respectable position had been offered to them; but when they had the thing in their own hands and could look into its real value they found themselves cheated in a foreign country. The way to fraud and corruption is very easily found under such circumstances. And is the power free from blame that sets such traps?

The legitimate pay of the majority of our public servants is low; but they are, at the same time, surrounded by so many opportunities to make up for the lack of an honest compensation for their work, that it has, in many instances, the appearance of premiums being offered for corruption and dishonesty, especially if we take into consideration the perverted practice of society heretofore alluded to.

Where could an honest and capable man be found who would be insane enough to accept a public office if the legitimate compensation of the public service should be reduced still lower, as proposed? The Government would then be compelled to select its officers from the scum of society. May the country in future be saved from such reformers and such mischievous economizing. Such retrenchment, in the wrong direction, is a striking illustration of the expression made by the German poet, Schiller: "This is the curse of the evil deed, that it must perpetuate evil."

What can be the cause of such an ill-directed retrenchment, so full of danger for our public affairs? Is it an honest but misconceived effort at economizing? It would merely be a poor recommendation of the intellectual capacities of these gentlemen, and redeem, at least, their honesty and good-will, if we could impute such a motive to their conduct. But we cannot honor them that much; because their real object is too obvious. It is the attempt of the demagogue, who begs for popularity with that class of people who estimate the value of labor according to the brute force its performance requires, and not according to its intellect and skill. How men misuse their precious gift of speech to hide their thoughts with!

Another source of corruption is our unfortunate fee system, because it works injustice to the Government and to officers alike. Officers have, in many cases, to work hard for a beggarly income, where the accidental fees on which they are dependent do not come in for various reasons. For instance, officers in consolidated land offices where little land is entered have meager commissions but a burdensome correspondence for their $500 salary per annum; while in offices where much land is entered and heavy commissions received, the officers receive the same salary for comparatively very little other work. Such unequal divisions of work and pay, caused by our fee and commission system, could be pointed out in every department of our public service. And every injustice has its bad effect.

Our unjust and corrupting fee and commission system should be entirely abolished. The only just and reasonable method would be to classify our public work and fix for every class an adequate salary. All rev-venues received in the different departments should be strictly accounted for, and no commissions or fees be allowed to officers beyond their fixed and reasonable salaries. Only under such a system, with capable and honest officers, would Government and officers receive their honest dues.

Order, uniformity, and justice in every direction on the part of the Government are the first requirements for the suppression of corruption and the foundation for a lasting reform.

Our unfortunate law-makers in our national Capitol would earn the well-deserved thanks of the nation if they could turn their attention to these and similar reforms of our public service instead of making it more contemptible through their pretended and mischievous economizing.

THE TRUTH OF HISTORY AND THE HORRORS OF ANDERSONVILLE.

The recent request made by THE REPUBLIC for the narratives of surviving ex-prisoners of war has been answered up to this writing by a mass of communications first published in local papers, or received by THE REPUBLIC direct. In every instance the writer's name, former regiment, and other essential marks of identification are given. There is something inexpressibly sad as well as shocking in the stern, deliberately stated details of premeditated cruelty these papers contain. It is almost damaging to human nature to reproduce them, but they offer the keenest proof of the demoralization which attended the support of slavery and defense of treason. These communications will be published as rapidly as may be. The one now given is from a member of the famous Sanitary Commission:

EDITORS REPUBLIC: After reading your recent appeal for testimony relating to the treatment and condition of Union soldiers in Confederate prisons, and Confederate soldiers in Union prisons, I am impelled to furnish for publication a plain uncolored narrative of a portion of my experience as agent of the Sanitary Commission during the last exchange of prisoners in the fall of '64.

On the first day of November, 1864, I went on board the "General Sedgwick" at Fortress Monroe, having permission from General Mulford to proceed, with the sanitary stores in my charge, to the point of exchange near Savannah, and there and thereafter to render assistance to the government surgeon on board in relieving the wants of those prisoners consigned to our steamer. On the 8th, with several other steamers, we sailed out of Hampton Roads. We were delayed several days at Beaufort and Port Royal, and not until the 20th did we reach our destination.

Venus Point, the point of exchange, is nothing more than a bend in the river about three miles below Savannah. Here we found three river steamers flying the Confederate flag, and two ocean steamers with the Union flag at the mast-head. The exchange was evidently in progress. One of our steamers was lashed to one of theirs and gang-planks had been laid from one to the other. Representatives of both parties to the exchange stood, book in hand, keeping record of the number exchanged; while on deck stood General Mulford and the Confederate General Hatch personally superintending the disposition of the liberated men.

My first impression was, that we must have happened on the scene at a time when the Confederates were disposing of their worst cases, and that they were reserving the hardest prisoners to the last; but afterwards found that no such classification had been attempted. The liberated Unionists were, with only now and then an exception, emaciated and insufficiently clothed. Some, unable to stand, much less to walk, were carried on stretchers on board our steamers; others were supported between stout assistants, scarcely able to move one foot before the other; many, though able to walk alone, dragged themselves along in a weak, spiritless manner, indicating a fearful lack of vitality. Nearly all bore on their haggard faces and emaciated bodies the unmistakable evidences of prolonged suffering and the consequent absence of hope or desire. Their enfeebled condition was the more striking because in such close contrast with that of the returned Confederates, nearly every man of whom was in splendid condition—their swarthiness of complexion, quick glance of the eye, and erect carriage indicating perfect health. Not one of the latter did I see who was unable to walk without assistance from one boat to the other.

But the contrast does not end here. The returned Confederates were comfortably clothed in suits furnished by the Government against which they had taken arms. But scarcely a man returned to us from Andersonville and other prison-pens of the South was the possessor of a suit of clothes entire. Very few wore any underclothing. Here and there could be seen a man scantily clothed in a dirt-begrimed blouse, and a pair of pants rudely contrived out of flour-sacks or meal-bags. Such a one was fortunate. Scores and hundreds were nothing more than a pair of grimy pants, infested with vermin, and out at the knees and seat. Nearly all were barefooted, and many without covering for the head. The skin, rough and bronzed from long exposure, was drawn tightly over their ribs and chests, which protruded so far out from the sunken abdomen as to suggest at once the chief cause of their emaciated condition—slow starvation. So wasted were their limbs that their joints seemed enormous. Their hair and whiskers had a matted, brushy appearance suggestive of dirt and vermin. Their hollow eyes and sunken cheeks told the same terrible story of suffering and deprivation. But the most painful detail of this woeful picture vividly impressed upon my mind was the expression on the faces of these sufferers. In many instances the usual dead, passive look on the prisoners' faces gave way to one of almost idiotic exultation when they found themselves once more free and under the protection of our flag. And when food was given them all the latent wolfishness in man's nature found expression in their faces.

But many, alas, had passed beyond the point of hunger; and the tender of food could not rouse them from the hopeless lethargy into which they had fallen. There they lay stretched upon couches in the cabins of the steamers to which they had been consigned, their eyes staring vacantly upon the faces of their attendants, and at the timbers overhead. Some were too weak to make known their passing wants; others were too near the end of their sufferings to be affected by desire of any sort.

There for nearly three days I watched this unequal exchange of well-clothed, well-fed, healthy men, for half-naked, half-starved, sick and dying men. Unequal exchange did I say? From a low standpoint, as one would regard two droves of cattle, such was indeed the fact; but from a loftier standpoint the exchange was to the people of the North an unmixed blessing; for were not these horribly misused men whom we received in exchange for well-conditioned men ready for service, were not these wrecks of men our brothers, whom the cartel had possibly saved from a horrible death? During those three days frequent deaths occurred among our men, and I recall not a single death among the Confederates. At short intervals the firing of a rifle in air informed us that another imprisoned spirit had been set free. The dead bodies were sewed up in blankets and lowered into the river, the swamps on either side affording no opportunity for burial.

On Tuesday, the 22d, we received our load of five hundred, who were classified as "well men," the "General Sedgwick" not having the conveniences of the larger steamers for the care of the sick. If those placed in our charge were the well men, how wretched must have been the condition of the sick!

While I was busily engaged providing clothing for the destitute, and the officers of our steamer were busy preparing for our departure, a number of these half-famished men entered the hold and broke open several boxes of army crackers, or "hard-tack," which had been placed on board by the Sanitary Commission. The scene that ensued was indescribable. Rendered wolfish by hunger, they fought savagely for possession of the food. Now and then one would climb on deck with a few crackers in his hands, devouring them with an eagerness that was pitiable to behold. He would soon be surrounded by his equally hungry comrades and compelled to relinquish his food. And thus the strife was continued. Those who gorged themselves with hard tack, and then drank freely of water, were soon afterwards great sufferers from cramping pains, their weakened stomachs being unable to dispose of its heavy load.

I never saw a happier body of men than these five hundred prisoners were while partaking of their first full meal. Full meal? Hardly. Long after our three tierces of "Sanitary soup" had been emptied, like Oliver Twist, they kept calling for "more."

On personal inspection I found that nearly all these so-called "well men" were more or less afflicted with scurvy and a complication of other disorders; and that there were more than a score of them so feeble that it was doubtful about their being able to survive the ocean voyage to Annapolis.

On the afternoon of the 22d, we started down the river. Putting out to sea, we encountered a severe storm. Our little craft rolled and pitched furiously. The surgeon and his other assistants were soon on their backs, seasick, and the care of the released prisoners devolved wholly upon me. Passing frequently through the cabins, I found nearly all suffering terribly from sea-sickness, their weakened frames fearfully racked with frequent vomitings. In several cases, I momentarily expected death would ensue. But, fortunately, the wind went down at midnight; and, though the sea continued quite rough nearly all the next day, the worst was over, and the condition of the men steadily improved.

The remainder of the trip was delightful—the ocean nearly a dead calm. On the voyage I made the acquaintance of many of the men; and from all I learned the same sad story—of crowded and shelterless quarters, of exposure to the hot sun by day and chilling winds by night, of ~~ma~~ from adjoining swamps, of impure water, insufficient and unwholesome food, of frequent tragedies enacted along the dead-line, of efforts to escape made futile and sometimes fatal by the tracking of blood-hounds; stories which the recent false assertions of ex-Confederates Hill and Davis have, in most instances, brought into public notice for the first time. (See the reports that are now constantly coming to the surface, written by survivors of these cruelties.)

Of the numerous instances of rebel cruelty that came under my own observation on that return voyage, I will relate but two.

An Englishman, a resident of Lawrence, Massachusetts, who rendered us valuable assistance in caring for the sick in our charge, showed me the prints of teeth on his cheeks, and arms, and legs, and informed me that these scars were the imprint of the teeth of blood-hounds that had been set upon his track after his attempted escape from Andersonville, some months before. He, and his comrades in this dangerous venture were tracked to the heart of a woody swamp several miles away, and were there recaptured while engaged defending themselves from the infuriated animals. His story was confirmed by several of his fellow-prisoners who stood by as he narrated it.

A New Hampshire lad of 19, whose name I cannot now recall, was among the sick on board. Before we left the Savannah river I discovered him lying upon a heap of canvas on the forward deck. He was wasted and haggard in appearance—a mere skeleton in fact. As I drew near he turned his eyes languidly toward his naked right arm, on the elbow-joint of which I discovered an old sore that had broken out afresh. On examining, I also found sores upon his hips and shoulder-blades, which his friends informed me were occasioned by the heat of the sand in which he had lain for some time at Andersonville. Around these sores, like cattle at a trough, countless body-lice had collected and were feeding upon the matter exuded. I had him taken below, cleansed, clothed and placed upon a comfortable couch; and everything was done for him that could be done under the circumstances. The storm told fearfully on his wasted frame. After the wind went down he rallied somewhat. On the last day of the voyage he talked with me of home, and of his father, and mother, and sister. At his request I wrote a letter informing them that he was on his way north, and hoped soon to reach home. Poor lad! The fatigue of the voyage, and of the ride to camp after landing at Annapolis was more than he could endure. A few hours after our arrival at Annapolis it became my painful duty to add a postscript to my letter, informing those at home that he was dead, and requesting to be informed by telegraph as to what disposition I should make of his remains.

JOHNSON BRIGHAM.

WATKINS, N. Y., March 1, 1876.

THE GRAY BENEATH THE BLUE.

Some one has recently given expression in very musical rhyme to the aversion naturally felt by the veteran Unionist, especially the ex-soldier, at being asked to vote for the men who don the blue in order to hide the gray that they are really clad in and cherish also. These brevet-Confederates are numerous, and on the whole the best specimen recently exhumed is Daniel Marcy, recently Democratic candidate for Governor of New Hampshire.

His disloyalty is more pronounced and malignant, but no more dangerous or sincere, than are the opinions held by Mr. Speaker Kerr, who was selected because he is the extremist partisan among Northern Democrats of the pro-Southern State sovereignty dogmas. Mr. Morrison, the Democratic leader of the House, shows his subserviency to the same influences by appointing, at the bidding of Gordon, the notorious Hambleton to the clerkship of the chief committee of the House. He clenches this subserviency by expunging his Union war record from the Congressional Directory, while Senator Gordon, to show his contemptuous appreciation of the fitness of things, inserts his record as a rebel general, having in a previous Congress had the good taste to withhold the same.

Mr. Marcy is only later, but no meaner, in his Southern proclivities than Representative George M. Beebe, of New York, who, when a fresh-fledged lawyer and politician, went to the Territory of Kansas in quest of fame and fortune. He settled in a Democratic county, and was elected to the Territorial Council. This was in 1860. February 11th he made a minority report against abolishing slavery. The bill was vetoed by Governor Medary. Mr. Beebe voted to sustain the veto, and was complimented by a Democratic convention for doing so, and on the 7th of May rewarded by President Buchanan with the appointment of Secretary of the Territory. On the 10th of January, 1861, Mr. Beebe, then acting Governor, sent a message to the Territorial Legislature, in which he made the following recommendation: "If God in his wrath shall tolerate the worst portent of this tempest of passion, now so fiercely raging, Kansas ought, and I trust will, declining identification with either branch of a contending family, tendering to each alike the olive offering of good-neighborship, establish under a constitution of her own creation a Government to be separate and free among the nations."

This sort of thing can only be alluded to in the way Victor Hugo makes Cambronne reply to the English demand for the Old Guards' surrender at Waterloo. These be the men, though, that get into power as Democracy reasserts itself. Look at the record of their candidate in New Hampshire: Daniel Marcy was elected in March, 1863, to Congress from the First New Hampshire district. He took his seat December 7, and on the 9th he gave his first rebel vote in voting against Washburne's resolution approving the Administration for asking to effect an exchange of prisoners. Five days afterward he voted for Fernando Wood's resolution requesting President Lincoln to appoint three commissioners empowered to open negotiations with the authorities at Richmond, to the end that this bloody, destructive, and inhuman war shall cease, and the Union be restored to terms of equity, fraternity, and equality under the Constitution. Three days later he voted for the Edgerton resolution to censure President Lincoln for his Emancipation Proclamation, and for the Harrington resolutions denying the right of the President to suspend the writ of habeas corpus. On the same day he dodged the vote on two resolutions, one of which declared it to be the duty of Congress to pay all necessary bills to support the war, and the other returned thanks to the Union soldiers for gallantry in the field.

It is not necessary to go through Marcy's record in detail, but an examination of the Globe of that period will show that on December 21, February 1, February 15, March 28, April 8, May 2, June 4, June 6, June 13, June 15, June 29 July 2, during that session of Congress he so acted and voted as to give aid and comfort to armed rebellion. But his most infamous act was on January 18, 1864. On that day Hon. Green Clay Smith, of Kentucky, introduced the following:

"Whereas, A most desperate, wicked, and bloody rebellion exists within the jurisdiction of the United States, and the safety and security of personal and national liberty depends upon its absolute and utter extinction: therefore

"Resolved, That it is the political, civil, moral, and sacred duty of the people to meet it, fight it, crush it, and forever destroy it, thereby establishing perfect and unalterable liberty."

The great body of the Democrats voted in the affirmative, but sixteen, among whom was Daniel Marcy, were so wedded to the cause of the rebellion that they voted in the negative. Among his companions were Benjamin G. Harris, of Maryland, and Alexander Long, of Ohio, the first of whom was afterward expelled, and the latter censured for treasonable utterances on the floor of the House.

Marcy made but one speech in Congress and that was on the 14th of June, 1864. Then he said to the Southern rebels that "the great loyal Democratic party would guarantee to them the pure administration of the law of the land; they should enjoy without further molestation their full and equitable rights under the Constitution. If the disloyal abolition party would humble itself in dust and ashes and purge itself from the monstrous iniquities and wash away the stains which disfigure its infamous brow, and swear that from this time henceforth and forever it would never seek to interfere with the administration and regulation of the internal police of the Southern States or of any State, and act with the Democratic party, peace would once more return to bless the land." He also had a decided opinion of President Lincoln, for he said: "I believe the name of the President will go down to posterity along with the deep execrations of all who revere and love the Union as our fathers gave it to us." Is there room or place for such as Marcy? It is not to be believed.

THE LOSS OF LABORERS TO GEORGIA.

The unsatisfactory condition of affairs in many of the Southern States presses hard upon the colored citizens. Especially is this the case in Georgia. It is said that during one week in February last the Western railroad office at Columbus, Georgia, sold 299 tickets to parties bound for the western cotton States—middle and western Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas. This makes 3,345 which have been sold from that office since December 1. In addition, 200 have been sold from the Mobile and Girard office, making a total of 3,545 which have left this section, included in a radius of fifty miles in two and a half months. Of this number not 250 were whites. This compilation embraces as many from Alabama as Georgia, as the river is the dividing line between the two States.

If the political leaders in Southern States under Democratic control imagine that they can do without the labor of colored men, what becomes of the argument urged on behalf of slavery that colored labor in the South was a necessity? The wealth of the South, especially in the cotton States, has been built up by colored labor; and now the freedmen are industrious and earn wages, that class of whites which can never look upon a black man without a desire to enslave him, makes his residence so intolerable and dangerous that he prefers to leave the State rather than endure it.

It is high time that the South should cease to be a disturbing element in politics. It is high time that the idea of good citizenship in the South should cease to be different than elsewhere. The "peculiar institution" no longer exists. What reason, then, is there for the existence of that barbaric claim to superiority which is constantly at work to depreciate the colored man, while selfishly securing all the advantages of his labor? The colored man is a citizen; and the Southern white is no more. Both claim their rights on the same ground, and both are the creatures of the law. If the law makes no distinction in the color of a man's skin, it seems strange that the country should be shocked so repeatedly by hearing that one class of citizens in the South is forced to suffer at the hands of another. The blacks are the victims of the whites, and if the truth be told, have abundant reason to complain. Is there no sense of justice in the South, no sentiment of duty between man and man, that would lead to an adjustment of differences in the interests of peace?

It is quite clear that where there is injustice there can be no prosperity. The white people of the South are injuring themselves whenever they make the colored citizens suffer. As the Southern whites constituted the Slave Power, and kept their slaves ignorant and degraded that they might never be free, now that they are free, one would suppose that their education would have been provided for as a prime necessity. But Democrat leaders do not look with favor upon educating colored men. They prefer to keep the country in hot water by denouncing the blacks as ignorant, thriftless, and idle, and either decline to collect the school tax or spend it on something else if collected. Anything rather than educate. Are not the Southern leaders getting tired of a condition of affairs in their locality which reflects no credit upon them as men or citizens? and is there not sufficient manliness in the South to lead to a change which shall put the colored people at their ease, permit them to exercise the franchise they possess, and earn their wages in peace and quietness?

Centennial.

On the 4th of July, 1776, George Washington was 44 years old; Martha Washington, 43; Sam. Adams, 54; John Adams, 41; Abigail Adams, 32; John Quincy Adams, 9; Thomas Jefferson, 33; Patrick Henry, 40; James Madison, 25; Thomas Paine, 39; James Otis, 51; Fisher Ames, 18; William Pitt, 68; Josiah Quincy, Jr., 32; Nathaniel Greene, 34; Edmund Burke, 46; Jonathan Turnbull, 36; Roger Sherman, 55; Aaron Burr, 20; Benedict Arnold, 36; George Clinton, 37; Alexander Hamilton, 19; Robert R. Livingston, 29; Philip Livingston, 60; Philip Schuyler, 43; Benjamin Franklin, 70; Benjamin Rush, 31; Robert Morris, 42; Charles Carroll, 39; Cæsar Rodney, 46; Edward Rutledge, 27; William Moultrie, 45; Horatio Gates, 48; John Rutledge, 37; Thomas Sumter, 42; Charles C. Pinckney, 30; Charles Pinckney, 18; James Monroe, 18; Tim. Pickering, 31; Anthony Wayne, 31; Israel Putnam, 58; Rufus King, 21; John Hancock, 39; Elbridge Gerry, 32; Richard Stockton, 46; George Wythe, 50; Marquis La Fayette, 19; Francis Marion, 44; Henry Knox, 26; Richard Henry Lee, 44; John Jay, 31.

WAS SECESSION TREASON?

Sometimes it is desirable to look back and learn of the past. It is only youthful arrogance and egotism which forbids us doing this. Nations like individuals may learn of their duty, take warning from mistakes, or see where they failed to grasp a situation clearly. In view of recent developments, indicating definitely the intention of the surviving defenders of the late civil war to indict the National Union and its defenders before the bar of public opinion, present and prospective, it is within the compass of fair play to bring out all the facts which will help to make the case. "Ben" Hill, Mr. Lamar, Mr. Tucker, Senators Gordon and Withers, with others, have explicitly declared that in the secession war no treason was committed. They claim to stand before the world; they expect to go down to history as men devoted to a grave principle of government, who solemnly risked all in an attempt to vindicate their principles through the destruction of one government and the foundation of another, more equitable and just in character and conditions. On the other hand, the Union men regard them as "traitors," more or less designed and willful in character; as men who either led or assisted in causeless war, which produced desolation and disaster, filling half a million of untimely graves, and burdening unborn generations with debt and sorrow. Further, it is held that the war was not for the vindication of so-called Constitutional principles, but to defend and arrogate an institution—that of slavery—repugnant to all sense of right and justice, the existence of which made the United States a scorn in the nostrils of the nations, and against which all the forces of civilization had instinctively combined.

To those holding this view, the rebellion of 1861 was nothing less than treason. The Constitution not only defined the crime of the rebellion, but bestowed the power punishing rebels.

Article III, Section 3, says:

"Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid or comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason, unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.

"2. The Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason, but no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture, except during the life of the person attainted."

In exercising this power Congress passed the act of April 30, 1790, in which it is declared:

"If any person or persons owing allegiance to the United States of America shall levy war against them, or shall adhere to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort, within the United States or elsewhere, and shall be thereof convicted on confession in open court, or on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act of treason whereof he or they shall stand indicted, such person or persons shall be adjudged guilty of treason against the United States, and shall SUFFER DEATH.

"If any person or persons having knowledge of the commission of any of the treasons aforesaid shall conceal, and not, as soon as may be, disclose and make known the same to the President of the United States, or some one of the judges thereof, or to the President or Governor of a particular State or some one of the judges or justices thereof, such person or persons, on conviction, shall be adjudged guilty of misprision of treason, and shall be imprisoned not exceeding seven years, and fined not exceeding one thousand dollars."

Chief Justice Marshall, a name revered by every American as a lover of his country, and who adorned the bench of the highest court in the Union, took occasion in administering the act, thus to interpret it:

"It is not the intention of the Court to say that no individual can be guilty of this crime (treason) who has not appeared in arms against his country.

"On the contrary, if war be actually levied—that is, if a body of men be actually assembled for the purpose of effecting by force a treasonable purpose—all those who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who actually leagued in the general conspiracy ARE TO BE CONSIDERED AS TRAITORS."

In view of the wide-spread knowledge of the long prepared and impending rebellion which existed among the Democratic statesmen, politicians, and party leaders, North as well as South, there can be no doubt that they, too, were guilty of "misprision of treason," as defined by the foregoing law. On the 10th of January, 1861, two resolutions were passed unanimously by the Central Republican Club of the city of New York as the sentiment of the great mass of the people. They were as follows:

"Whereas, a band of traitors in the Cabinet at Washington, in both houses of Congress, and in several of the Southern States of this Republic have made war against the United States; have seized forts, arsenals, and other public property; robbed the Treasury, obstructed the telegraph, and committed other acts of violence, in combination and conspiracy against the people of the United States and their Constitution of Government for the purpose of introducing slavery temporarily or permanently into every State or Territory of this Union: therefore

"Resolved, That the Constitution as it is provides the most perfect system of government known to man; that it needs no amendment, and shall have none at the beck and call of traitors, or their insolent mouthpieces.

"Resolved, That we hold ourselves ready, and tender our services to the State, or the National Government, or both, to aid to the extent of our power in crushing this formidable and wicked rebellion, determined, at at all hazards, that the Constitution shall be 'preserved, protected, and defended,' peace restored, and the blessings of liberty, of liberty of speech, and the press, fully and amply vindicated and secured."

A week after this, on January 16, 1861, Mr. F. C. Treadwell, of New York, proceeded to Washington to enter formal complaint against a large number of rebels. This complaint, legal and pro forma in its nature, was returned by the clerk of the United States Supreme Court, with the message from Judge Taney, not the written indorsement, for that would have been written evidence of his own complicity, as such cases required—that "they were improper papers to be presented to the court." The United States Supreme Court thus acted before the conspirators to give them immunity from arrest. Is it any wonder that President Buchanan hesitated when even the Supreme Bench offered sympathy to treason? By giving no warning of what they knew, the leaders of the Democracy have been guilty of misprision of treason, and have become liable to imprisonment not exceeding seven years, and to the payment of a fine not exceeding $1,000. This is the penalty of the law for such criminal delinquency.

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE ELECTIONS.

The "staff correspondent" of a leading brevet-Democratic journal, with others of the same ilk, were very busy, as soon as it became evident that the Republican party was to be crowned with victory in New Hampshire, at the recent election, is endeavoring to prove that, if so, it must be in the main due to a regular traffic in votes, which it was charged is carried on in the Granite State. To establish this charge, attention was called to the large percentage of votes cast as per population when compared with the electoral totals in other New England States. Reference was also made to the disparity of the sexes, as to numbers, known to exist in New England, as another reason for alleged frauds. The New York Tribune, editorially and by "staff" correspondence, gave wide currency to these allegations. In one letter the correspondent makes the following comparison of percentages, which, he states, was made from the "Tribune Almanac," taking in each case the highest number of votes cast at any election since 1871: "New Hampshire, one voter to 4.02 inhabitants; Connecticut, one voter to 5.32 inhabitants; Vermont, one voter to 5.63 inhabitants; Maine, one voter to 5.68 inhabitants; Massachusetts, one voter to 7.78 inhabitants; Rhode Island, one voter to 9.76 inhabitants." The authority is at fault. A better one was at hand, if a fair statement had been the object. That was the United States Census of 1870. According to that document, whose reliability even the "staff correspondent" will not assail, the total population was in that year 318,300. Of this total the males were 155,640, and the females 162,600. The number of male adults is stated as 91,016; of male citizens (voters) as 83,361. A cursory arithmetical examination will establish that, instead of the voters being, as the "staff correspondent" puts it, at the rate of one in 4.02 of the inhabitants, the ratio is really about the citizens. The frequency of elections has very much to do with the large vote, as also has the fact that nearly all offices are elective in character. Again, New Hampshire fosters State pride, by allowing her citizens liberal opportunities for retaining a domicile within her borders. This feeling is encouraged by both political parties; and the young men and others who, for business purposes, &c., are temporarily living elsewhere, do their best, as a rule, to meet the requirement of the State laws and maintain their home citizenship. It is not necessary to argue the wisdom of this policy. There are excellent arguments on both sides. It is only referred to because it is alleged to be a source of corruption. As a matter of fact, the larger proportion of such voters are Republicans. The Democrats are too unenterprising to venture far from their bleak hill-fields, and, when they do, often become converts to broader views.

That the charge of bribery and fraudulent increase of the vote is, in the main, baseless, may be seen from the following table:

Voting population of New Hampshire, according to the United States Census of 1870..... 83,361
Male adults of civic age, not voters, according to the United States Census of 1870..... 7,655

Votes from 1870 to 1876.

	Total.	No. of votes less than total of Census.
1870.....	68,471	14,890
1871.....	69,729	13,632
1872 { Governor.....	76,355	7,006
{ President.....	68,893	14,468
1873.....	67,804	15,557
1874.....	71,861	11,500
1875.....	79,206	4,155
1875—For Congress..	79,281	4,080
1876.....	80,322	3,039

The political activity and interest felt and manifested in New Hampshire, as compared with that of other New England States, will be readily seen by the following table:

The trouble with all the accusations and criticisms indulged in by the so-called "independent" press is that its chief aim is to make "points." It is conducted on the Irishman's idea of the use to which a stick should be put at Donnybrook Fair—that of hitting a head wherever you see it. The idea of a judicial judgment is a farce, and the journalist is a fool who should govern himself by any such standard. In this case the figures show that in New Hampshire political parties do not attempt to manufacture votes, but rather to animate and inspire to duty those citizens who possess or are entitled to the right of suffrage. So successful are they in this that it will be seen that the percentage of abstention from the polls is very much less, in the dullest years, in the Granite State, than it is in any one of the other five embraced in New England. The highest votes from 1870 to 1875 have already been given. The following table gives the lowest votes cast since 1870:

	Year.	Lowest vote since 1870.	No. of votes less than the Census total.
Connecticut.....	1873	86,845	40,654
Maine.....	1873	80,490	72,670
Massachusetts...	1873	131,543	171,227
New Hampshire..	1873	67,804	15,557
Rhode Island.....	1873	13,442	30,554
Vermont.....	1870	45,425	29,442

Apart from the special purpose of the foregoing, the recurrence of the lowest vote at certain periods indicates with great clearness, the rule in regard to "off years." Another could be established if the investigation were pushed further, and that is, that in every instance of Democratic victory in the New England States it comes, not as the growth of that party, but as the neglect, indifference, or anger of the Republicans, manifested, in the main, by absence from the polls, or occasionally by the growth of one or more "parasite" parties, such as the Temperance or Labor Reform movements. These merely represent ideas and questions whose germs are in or naturally belong to the great party of National Unity and Universal Liberty.

LABOR AND WAGES IN THE UNITED STATES— PROTECTION VERSUS FREE TRADE.

There is no other country in the world where labor is paid so liberally as in the United States. By many this is attributed to vastness of territory and sparseness of population. But these conditions apply also to countries where labor is poorly paid, such as Canada, Mexico, and South America. We must find a more substantial cause, and this we have in the American system of protection to home industries, which checks foreign competition and increases the demand for mechanical skill and labor at home. This policy has never been lost sight of—though sometimes thrown in the shade—since the organization of the Government. It was never more popular with the people than at present. It sustained the Government, by providing generous revenues during the trying years of the wicked rebellion and costly civil war. It secured to the industrious populations abundant employment and liberal remuneration up to the year 1872, when, under the pressing demands of a Democratic minority Congress yielded to reductions in the tariff to the extent of $30,000,000, which reduced our industries from a condition of great prosperity to extreme prostration, and deprived thousands of workmen of employment.

With these facts before them, the Democratic majority in Congress have now under consideration a bill in which another radical reduction in the duties is contemplated, with the view of destroying, as far as it is possible, the protective features of the tariff. It is hoped however that this fatal blow at our industries may be averted, and the country saved from further prostration.

If any changes in the tariff are required they are in the direction of a ten or fifteen per cent. increase in the rates, on certain articles now paying a moderate duty, and by a transfer of other commodities from the free to the dutiable list. Our imports during the last fiscal year of eight classes of dutiable goods amounted in value to $140,000,000. These were silks, woolens, cottons, linens, leather, iron and steel in their various forms, and gloves. An increase of 10 per cent. in the duties on these goods would secure their manufacture, to a large extent, at home, and give employment to thousands of now idle workmen and women. Of goods free of duty the last year's importation amounted in value to $167,180,644. A duty of 10 or 15 per cent. would cause many of the articles included in this free list to be produced at home, and prevent our gold from going abroad to pay for importations of articles we can produce ourselves. If we wish to retain a larger portion of our gold at home we must import fewer goods of foreign manufacture.

But against these heavy importations labor is still better paid in the United States than in England or elsewhere. This is significantly shown in Dr. Edward Young's remarkable book on "Labor and Wages in Europe and America," which is attracting no little attention on both sides of the Atlantic. The London Times has given it a critical examination; and, though the editor does not seem pleased at the exposure of the drinking habits and other weaknesses of our English cousins, he fails to discover inaccuracies in the figures showing the rates of wages, cost of provisions, clothing, and house rent in that country. The work is commended as a remarkable compilation of valuable statistics.

In the United States it has been generally indorsed by statesmen and journalists. Based upon its statistical tables, the following figures, showing the average rates of wages paid in the United States, may be accepted as reliable. They afford, in compact form, a large amount of valuable information. Examined in connection with the statistical tables summarized from the same work and published in the January number of THE REPUBLIC, they will show at a glance the wide differences in amount between the wages paid in the two countries, England and America. The first two tables treat of mechanical, and the third of farm labor, and embrace the entire range of the Union:

MECHANICAL LABOR.

Table showing the average daily wages, without board, paid in the several States and Territories to persons employed in the under-mentioned trades in the respective years 1860 and 1874.

STATES.	Black-smiths.		Brick-layers or masons.		Cabinet makers.		Coopers.		Carpenters.		Painters.		Plasterers.
	1860.	1874.	1860.	1874.	1860.	1874.	1860.	1874.	1860.	1874.	1860.	1874.	1860.	1874.
NEW ENGLAND STATES.
Maine.....	$1 97	$2 37	$2 30	$3 50	$1 88	$2 12	$1 74	$2 12	$2 00	$2 75	$1 92	$2 50	$2 27	$3 50
New Hampshire.....	2 08	3 44	2 50	3 87	1 63	3 00	1 75	2 67	1 75	2 94	1 75	3 75	2 00	3 69
Vermont.....	2 21	2 88	2 63	2 75	2 19	2 88	2 13	2 75	2 05	3 00	2 04	2 62	2 65	3 00
Massachusetts.....	1 91	2 83	2 42	3 67	2 00	3 16	2 25	2 37	1 98	3 02	1 94	2 83	2 42	3 38
Rhode Island.....	1 50	1 75	2 00	1 50	1 50	1 50	1 75
Connecticut.....	1 67	2 00	1 75	2 00	1 67	1 67	1 92
MIDDLE STATES.
New York.....	1 66	2 64	2 02	3 23	1 77	2 55	1 64	2 19	1 74	2 65	1 77	2 63	2 11	3 07
New Jersey.....	1 48	2 96	1 58	3 34	1 32	2 65	1 34	3 00	1 60	2 75	1 75	2 92	1 84	3 17
Pennsylvania.....	1 47	2 32	1 82	2 89	1 32	2 91	1 31	2 22	1 59	2 37	1 85	2 42	1 76	2 74
Delaware.....	1 50	3 00	2 00	3 50	1 50	3 00	(*)	2 00	1 50	2 75	1 50	3 00	2 00	3 75
Maryland.....	1 50	2 50	1 50	4 00	2 50	3 00	1 50	3 00	1 50	2 50	1 50	3 00	2 00	3 25
West Virginia.....	1 69	2 50	2 06	2 95	1 66	2 81	1 53	2 19	1 73	2 50	1 84	2 40	2 08	2 58
WESTERN STATES.
Ohio.....	1 75	2 30	2 18	3 06	1 99	2 24	1 58	2 12	1 78	2 33	1 94	2 29	2 08	2 64
Indiana.....	1 93	2 00	2 60	3 25	1 84	2 62	1 62	2 25	1 83	2 33	1 96	2 37	2 33	3 00
Illinois.....	2 02	2 81	2 73	3 69	1 97	2 83	2 00	2 75	2 03	2 87	2 02	2 56	2 49	3 38
Michigan.....	2 10	2 41	1 88	1 70	2 50	1 90	1 90	2 30
Wisconsin.....	2 28	2 50	2 54	3 00	2 01	2 00	2 03	2 00	2 13	2 50	2 08	2 75	2 49	4 00
Minnesota.....	1 90	3 00	2 41	3 00	1 96	2 50	1 86	3 00	1 89	2 50	1 96	3 00	2 33
Iowa.....	2 17	2 50	2 47	3 50	2 10	2 50	1 95	2 01	3 00	1 93	2 50	2 47	3 00
Kansas.....	2 69	3 17	3 00	2 88	2 75	2 55	2 69
Nebraska.....	2 50	3 50	2 50	2 50	2 50	4 00
Missouri.....	2 03	3 50	2 71	4 00	2 10	3 00	2 00	2 50	2 05	3 00	2 46	3 00	2 71	3 50
Kentucky.....	2 03	2 63	2 68	3 50	1 84	2 75	1 88	2 90	2 28	3 20	2 17	2 90	2 37	3 10
SOUTHERN STATES.
Virginia.....	1 40	2 20	1 75	2 00	1 68	1 88	1 55	1 63	1 74	1 70	1 80	1 63	1 71	2 00
North Carolina.....	1 50	2 50	1 83	3 00	1 50	2 50	1 00	1 50	2 75	1 50	3 00	1 67	3 00
South Carolina.....	1 67	2 50	1 71	2 50	2 17	1 56	1 90	2 50	1 85	2 50	1 90	2 50
Georgia.....	1 88	3 00	2 58	2 50	2 08	2 75	1 44	3 00	2 13	2 75	2 13	2 75	1 94	2 50
Florida.....
Alabama.....	2 30	2 25	2 83	2 50	2 25	2 50	2 67
Louisiana.....	2 70	4 00	2 60	3 50	2 12	2 50	2 50	3 00	2 70	2 25	2 50	2 50	2 50	3 00
Texas.....	2 66	3 00	3 33	3 75	3 50	2 50	2 37	2 25	2 50	2 50	2 50	2 87	3 50
Mississippi.....	2 50	3 00	2 94	3 00	2 25	2 50	2 12	2 50	2 00	3 50	3 00
Arkansas.....	2 60	3 50	2 83	4 50	2 71	3 00	2 25	3 00	2 41	3 00	2 42	3 00	2 67	3 00
Tennessee.....	2 03	3 25	2 28	4 08	2 29	2 83	1 78	2 50	2 29	2 75	2 36	2 83	2 32	3 16
PACIFIC STATES.
California.....	4 22	3 00	4 96	5 50	3 75	3 00	4 00	3 95	3 00	4 06	4 00	4 75	5 00
Nevada.....	6 80	6 00	6 80	6 00	6 88	7 00	6 00	7 80	5 00	7 80	6 00
Oregon.....	4 50	5 00	5 42	5 00	4 41	4 00	4 12	4 00	4 50	4 00	4 34	4 50	5 60	5 00
TERRITORIES.
Washington.....	8 50	4 00	8 00	5 00	6 00	3 00	5 00	3 00	6 00	4 50	6 00	5 00	6 00	5 00
Colorado.....	5 25	6 50	4 87	4 38	4 37	5 87
Dakota.....	2 25	3 50	3 25	3 50	3 00	3 25	2 50	2 50	3 00	3 00	3 50
Idaho.....	3 75	5 50	5 50	5 00	5 00	6 00
Arizona.....
Montana.....	4 00	5 00	4 00	5 00	4 00	5 00
New Mexico.....	2 50	3 75	3 00	4 00	2 50	2 75	3 00	3 00	4 25	3 00	3 50	4 00	3 00
AVERAGES.
New England States.....	1 89	2 88	2 27	3 45	1 91	2 79	1 90	2 48	1 83	2 93	1 80	2 67	2 17	3 38
Middle States.....	1 55	2 65	1 83	3 32	1 68	2 82	1 46	2 43	1 61	2 59	1 70	2 73	1 97	3 09
Western States.....	2 13	2 66	2 67	3 37	2 11	2 56	1 95	2 50	2 10	2 72	2 13	2 67	2 57	3 23
Southern States.....	2 12	2 99	2 41	3 20	2 31	2 95	1 95	2 63	2 13	2 52	2 16	2 59	2 37	2 85
General average.....	1 92	2 79	2 30	3 33	2 00	2 78	1 82	2 51	1 92	2 69	1 95	2 66	2 27	3 14
Pacific States (gold).....	5 17	4 67	5 73	5 50	5 01	3 50	4 06	4 00	5 15	4 33	5 40	4 50	6 05	5 33
Territories (gold).....	4 63	3 80	5 19	4 60	4 46	3 65	4 00	3 00	4 16	4 25	3 97	4 00	4 72	4 50
Average.....	4 90	4 23	5 46	5 05	4 74	3 57	4 03	3 50	4 66	4 29	4 69	4 25	5 39	4 91

*Piecework.

MECHANICAL LABOR.

Table showing the average daily wages paid, &c.—Continued.

STATES.	Shoe-makers.		Stone-cutters.		Tailors.		Tanners.		Tin-smiths.		Wheel-wrights.
	1860.	1874.	1860.	1874.	1860.	1874.	1860.	1874.	1860.	1874.	1860.	1874.
NEW ENGLAND STATES.
Maine.....	$1 70	$2 50	$2 32	$3 50	$1 86	$3 50	$2 09	$2 50	$1 82	$2 25	$1 80	$2 50
New Hampshire.....	1 84	2 50	2 12	3 75	1 75	3 75	1 80	3 25	1 50	3 19	1 75	3 12
Vermont.....	1 44	2 50	2 25	3 00	1 65	2 50	1 70	2 75	1 88	2 88	1 83	3 00
Massachusetts.....	1 72	2 25	2 50	3 94	1 80	2 87	1 94	2 38	1 85	3 05	2 01	2 37
Rhode Island.....	2 00	2 00	1 50	1 75	2 00
Connecticut.....	1 37	2 13	1 37	2 00	1 67	1 50
MIDDLE STATES.
New York.....	1 52	2 36	2 17	3 15	1 66	2 26	1 71	2 22	1 74	2 52	1 90	2 95
New Jersey.....	1 83	1 96	1 92	3 00	1 92	2 25	1 59	2 08	1 33	2 50	1 85	2 30
Pennsylvania.....	1 35	1 78	2 01	2 28	1 34	2 14	1 40	2 05	1 37	2 15	1 59	1 92
Delaware.....	()	2 00	1 50	2 00	()	2 50	1 50	2 00	2 50	2 50
Maryland.....	2 00	2 50	2 00	3 50	1 75	2 00	1 50	2 00	2 25	2 00	2 50
West Virginia.....	1 57	3 62	2 18	3 23	1 42	2 72	1 50	2 44	1 75	2 38	1 86	2 75
WESTERN STATES.
Ohio.....	1 59	2 08	2 28	2 89	1 59	2 30	1 74	2 16	1 72	2 00	1 96	2 38
Indiana.....	1 64	2 25	2 25	3 08	1 76	1 92	1 61	2 08	1 90	2 17	1 96	2 21
Illinois.....	1 98	2 31	2 40	3 50	1 80	2 33	1 95	2 50	2 01	2 25	2 25	3 75
Michigan.....	1 54	2 25	1 69	1 79	1 79	2 08
Wisconsin.....	3 13	1 25	2 75	4 00	2 30	1 50	2 36	2 00	2 24	2 50	2 23	2 00
Minnesota.....	1 86	2 50	2 43	3 00	1 64	2 50	1 93	1 54	2 50	1 78
Iowa.....	1 85	1 50	2 36	3 00	1 95	1 75	2 00	1 86	2 00	2 51	2 50
Kansas.....	2 12	3 25	3 25	2 50	2 17	2 50
Nebraska.....	3 00	4 00	2 75	2 87	2 88
Missouri.....	2 00	2 50	2 92	3 50	2 10	2 50	2 00	2 00	2 17	2 75	2 85	2 75
Kentucky.....	1 96	2 50	2 65	3 10	2 13	2 95	1 88	2 75	2 00	2 25	2 15	3 33
SOUTHERN STATES.
Virginia.....	1 44	1 59	2 00	3 38	1 74	2 00	1 67	1 75	1 66	1 75	1 61	2 20
North Carolina.....	1 06	3 00	1 58	1 25	3 00	1 17	2 00	2 75	1 58	2 50
South Carolina.....	1 88	2 50	2 67	2 50	2 10	2 50	2 38	1 65	2 50	2 15	2 00
Georgia.....	1 75	2 50	2 18	3 50	2 00	3 50	2 50	2 27	2 50	2 28	2 75
Florida.....
Alabama.....	2 00	3 50	1 94	2 50	2 50	2 42
Louisiana.....	1 90	2 00	3 50	2 00	2 12	2 00	2 50	2 38	2 50	2 50	2 50
Texas.....	2 33	3 17	3 75	1 92	3 12	2 50	2 75	1 75	2 50
Mississippi.....	1 50	1 50	1 50	1 50	1 80	3 00
Arkansas.....	2 08	2 00	2 42	5 00	1 83	3 00	1 90	2 17	4 00	2 17
Tennessee.....	2 20	2 33	2 53	3 42	2 03	3 22	1 75	2 50	1 75	2 62	1 85	2 50
PACIFIC STATES.
California.....	3 88	4 95	5 00	3 60	4 00	4 04	3 00	4 75
Nevada.....	5 88	4 00	7 00	6 00	6 00	3 00	5 60	6 00	5 00	8 75	7 00
Oregon.....	3 95	3 50	5 40	5 00	3 80	3 50	4 10	4 00	4 25	4 50	4 67	5 00
TERRITORIES.
Washington.....	5 00	6 00	5 00	3 00	3 00	6 00	2 50	6 00	5 00
Colorado.....	4 00	5 87	4 00	4 50	5 00
Dakota.....	3 50	3 00	3 00	3 00	3 00	3 00
Idaho.....	4 25	5 00	4 25	5 50
Arizona.....
Montana.....	4 00	8 00	4 00	5 50	5 00
New Mexico.....	2 50	4 00	3 00	3 50	3 25	3 00
AVERAGES.
New England States.....	1 61	2 44	2 22	3 55	1 74	3 03	1 84	2 72	1 75	2 84	1 82	2 75
Middle States.....	1 65	2 20	1 96	2 86	1 59	2 27	1 62	2 05	1 64	2 38	1 74	2 49
Western States.....	1 97	2 11	2 69	3 26	2 09	2 22	1 97	2 25	2 02	2 30	2 24	2 70
Southern States.....	1 81	2 27	2 51	3 36	1 84	2 75	2 06	2 25	2 07	2 67	2 14	2 42
General average.....	1 76	2 25	2 35	3 26	1 82	2 57	1 87	2 32	1 87	2 55	1 99	2 59
Pacific States (gold).....	4 57	3 75	5 78	5 33	4 47	3 25	4 57	4 00	4 76	4 17	6 06	6 00
Territories (gold).....	4 17	3 44	5 29	5 25	4 00	3 37	3 00	3 00	5 25	3 70	5 50	4 30
Average.....	4 37	3 59	5 54	5 29	4 24	3 31	3 78	3 50	5 00	3 93	5 78	5 15

*Piecework.

FARM LABOR.

Table showing the average daily wages paid for Farm Labor in 1860 and 1874.

STATES.	Experienced hands. Summer.				Experienced hands. Winter.				Ordinary hands. Summer.
	With board.		Without board.		With board.		Without board.		With board.		Without board.
	1860.	1874.	1860.	1874.	1860.	1874.	1860.	1874.	1860.	1874.	1860.	1874.
NEW ENGLAND STATES.
Maine.....	$1 07	$1 49	$0 81	$1 09	$0 94	$1 10
New Hampshire.....	1 04	$1 75	1 38	$2 25	75	$1 00	1 06	$1 50	88	$1 25	1 25	$1 69
Vermont.....	94	1 44	1 13	2 12	72	1 06	1 00	1 62	75	1 00	1 01	1 62
Massachusetts.....	1 06	1 50	1 40	1 87	73	1 05	1 05	1 50	79	87	1 13	1 50
Rhode Island.....	75	1 00	42	75	50	83
Connecticut.....	1 13	1 25	1 50	75	1 00	1 50	1 00	1 00	1 50
MIDDLE STATES.
New York.....	89	1 48	1 21	2 00	67	96	90	1 48	68	1 18	99	1 71
New Jersey.....	79	1 65	1 16	2 00	54	1 00	85	1 42	73	1 13	1 09	1 58
Pennsylvania.....	84	1 13	1 22	1 57	62	84	94	1 25	63	89	95	1 25
Delaware.....	75	1 00	1 25	50	75	1 00	50	88	1 00
Maryland.....	38	63	25	50	38	62
West Virginia.....	77	1 03	95	1 46	61	74	86	1 15	52	64	76	93
WESTERN STATES.
Ohio.....	89	1 03	1 16	1 48	65	90	92	1 25	68	82	96	1 07
Indiana.....	96	1 13	1 26	1 47	71	86	99	1 11	71	84	96	1 23
Illinois.....	1 02	1 33	1 32	1 68	75	97	1 00	1 39	78	1 06	1 06	1 43
Michigan.....	93	1 25	1 22	1 75	70	1 25	1 05	1 75	73	1 00	1 02	1 40
Wisconsin.....	1 27	1 66	83	1 20	1 01	1 41
Minnesota.....	1 42	1 00	1 73	1 50	88	75	1 14	1 25	1 10	75	1 38	1 00
Iowa.....	1 06	78	1 34	70	78	1 00	76	70	1 01
Kansas.....	1 25	1 75	1 15	2 37	1 08	1 50
Nebraska.....	1 00	1 38	75	1 25	1 00	1 25
Missouri.....	81	1 50	1 12	69	1 00	99	67	1 00	93
Kentucky.....	77	1 08	60	90	64	89
SOUTHERN STATES.
Virginia.....	60	64	1 02	80	47	47	69	67	52	54	66	76
North Carolina.....	60	1 00	63	1 25	36	75	52	33	47
South Carolina.....	53	1 00	73	1 25	40	75	60	1 00	34	75	58	1 50
Georgia.....	55	81	50	71	47	68
Florida.....
Alabama.....	63	75	88	1 00	55	50	80	75	47	75	70	1 00
Mississippi.....	60	75	75	1 00	52	60	48	50	81	75
Louisiana.....	1 00	65	1 25	1 05	1 00	65	1 25	1 05	75	1 25
Texas.....	66	87	1 00	1 25	58	75	81	1 00	54	50	75	75
Arkansas.....	75	1 03	63	92	55	81
Tennessee.....	74	97	55	75	51	71	50
PACIFIC STATES.
California.....	2 07	1 50	2 50	2 50	1 89	1 00	2 13	2 50	2 00	1 00	2 17	2 00
Nevada.....	3 50	2 50	5 60	3 50	3 50	2 50	5 60	3 50	3 00	1 50	4 00	2 50
Oregon.....	2 14	1 00	2 50	1 60	1 51	1 25	1 94	2 00	1 61	1 00	1 88	1 60
TERRITORIES.
Washington.....	3 12	2 25	4 12	2 25	1 50	3 00	2 25	2 75
Colorado.....	2 17	2 83	1 50	2 00	1 75	2 75
Dakota.....	1 50	1 00	2 00	1 25	1 25	75	1 50	1 00	1 25	1 50
Idaho.....	1 50	2 12	1 12	1 25	1 25	1 75
Arizona.....
Montana.....
New Mexico.....	75	1 00	1 13	2 50	50	1 00	1 00	1 50	60	1 25	1 00	1 75
AVERAGES.
New England States.....	1 00	1 48	1 28	1 93	70	1 03	99	1 53	61	1 02	1 07	1 58
Middle States.....	74	1 26	1 03	1 66	53	86	81	1 26	57	95	88	1 30
Western States.....	1 03	1 15	1 37	1 58	77	93	1 17	1 35	83	88	1 12
Southern States.....	67	81	91	1 09	56	69	77	89	47	63	69
General average.....	86	1 17	1 15	1 56	64	88	94	1 26	67	87	94
Pacific States.....	2 57	1 67	3 53	2 53	2 13	1 56	3 22	2 67	2 20	1 17	2 68
Territories.....	1 89	1 44	2 52	1 95	1 38	1 09	1 88	1 25	1 46	1 25	2 00
Average.....	2 23	1 55	3 03	2 19	1 76	1 33	2 55	1 96	1 83	1 21	2 34

AVERAGE WAGES IN COTTON MILLS.

The average weekly wages paid in cotton mills varies somewhat in the different States. By grouping the States in three divisions, viz: New England, Middle, and Southern—the latter including Missouri—we have the following results as the average weekly wages paid in 1874:

Occupation.	In New Eng- land States.	In the Middle States.	In Southern States.
Carding:
Overseer.....	$19 38	$14 00	$19 28
Picker tenders.....	7 38	6 88	6 19
Railway tenders.....	5 13	3 75	3 67
Drawing-frame tenders..	4 56	4 88	3 89
Speeder tenders.....	6 70	5 13	4 29
Picker boy.....	5 19	3 25	3 75
Grinders.....	9 60	7 38	7 14
Strippers.....	7 18	6 75	5 87
Spinning:
Overseer.....	20 18	13 25	18 75
Mule spinners.....	9 99	7 75	9 90
Mule backside piecers...	2 65	2 75	3 01
Frame spinners.....	4 51	3 25	3 20
Dressing:
Overseer.....	18 35	15 00	14 69
Second hand.....	12 17	10 50	7 68
Spoolers.....	4 58	4 33	4 25
Warpers.....	6 37	6 25	5 53
Drawers and Twisters...	5 81	6 50	4 66
Dressers.....	12 06	9 00	8 88
Weaving:
Overseer.....	20 97	16 50	20 09
Weavers.....	8 05	8 38	6 17
Drawing-in hands.....	6 95	5 00	4 32
Repair shop, &c.:
Foreman.....	19 57	15 00	23 00
Wood-workers.....	14 99	14 25	11 33
Iron-workers.....	14 01	13 88	14 94
Engineer.....	15 07	11 75	18 00
Laborers.....	8 56	8 80	6 01
Overseer in cloth room...	15 13	8 50	14 13

BOOT AND SHOE FACTORIES.

The following were the average weekly wages in 1874:

Occupation.	Average.
Cutters.....	$21 37
Stock-fitters.....	16 62
Sole sewing machine operators	16 33
Other sewing machine operators	14 00
Lasters.....	18 83
Second lasters.....	17 00
Heelers.....	23 25
Trimmers.....	19 33
Burnishers.....	18 83
Finishers.....	19 50
Hand-sewers.....	27 50
Shoe-cleaners.....	18 25
Packers.....	16 00
Laborers or unskilled workmen.	18 50
Apprentices or boys.....	7 00
Foremen or overseers.....	27 50
Crimpers.....
Treers.....
Bottomers.....

GENERAL AVERAGE WAGES IN WOOLEN MILLS.

The following table shows the general average weekly wages paid in woolen mills in 1869 and 1874:

Occupation.	1869.	1874.
Wool-sorters.....	$10 86	$10 94
Wool-washers	8 26	8 21
Dyers.....	11 38	10 50
Overseers.....	18 44	19 17
Carding and spinning:
Pickers.....	7 03	6 68
Carders.....	6 07	6 34
Spinners.....	11 20	8 85
Warpers and beamers.....	8 77	8 81
Reelers.....	4 61	5 20
Overseers.....	18 46	15 94
Assistants	9 75
Weaving:
Weavers	7 88	7 41
Burlers.....	4 92	4 98
Overseers.....	16 10	17 40
Dressing and finishing:
Fullers	8 77	8 76
Dressers or giggers.....	8 08	8 11
Finishers.....	9 71	8 42
Press tenders.....	9 21	8 91
Drawers.....	6 12	6 91
Brushers.....	5 12	6 69
Packers	9 02	8 57
Overseers.....	17 62	19 14
Assistants.....	10 36	9 72
Engine room, yard, &c.:
Engineers.....	12 64	12 34
Mechanics.....	15 13	15 12
Laborers, (watchmen includ- ed).....	9 88	10 73
Foremen	13 62	19 05

WEEKLY WAGES PAID IN ROLLING MILLS.

The following table shows the general average weekly earnings of workmen employed in iron-rolling mills in the United States in 1874:

Occupation.	Per week.
Puddlers.....	$28 44
Puddlers' helpers.....	11 83
Shinglers.....	20 91
Shinglers' helpers.....	10 70
Puddle-mill roller.....	18 50
Top and bottom roller.	29 10
Forge rollers.....	17 80
Merchant-mill rollers.....	34 86
Rail-mill rollers	33 92
Sheet and plate rollers.....	26 10
Second rollers.....	24 13
Third rollers.....	18 00
Furnace men or heaters' helpers.	12 47
Shearmen.....	12 67
Billeters.....	8 92
Catchers	15 43
Roughers.....	21 23
Heaters.....	29 51
Foremen or superintendents.....	29 25
Machinists.....	18 15
Engineers.....	17 15
Carpenters.....	17 32
Blacksmiths.....	17 40
Laborers and unskilled workmen.	9 50
Teamsters.....	9 67
Apprentices and boys	4 82
Hours of labor.....	57 13-16

IRON FOUNDRIES AND MACHINE SHOPS.

The following table indicates the average rate of weekly wages paid in iron foundries and machine shops in the several groups of States, and also the general average of all the States, in 1874:

Occupation.	Average in New England States.	Average in the Middle States.	Average in the Southern States.	Average in the Pacific States.	General average of the United States.
Iron molders.....	$15 89	$14 98	$17 98	$31 50	$19 04
Machinists, (best).....	16 66	16 24	19 28	34 00	20 68
Machinists, (ordinary).....	13 45	13 59	14 19	27 12	16 37
Machinists, (inferior).....	10 96	10 80	11 00	18 50	12 37
Machinists' helpers.....	9 16	8 49	8 24	18 75	10 90
Boiler makers.....	21 25	15 44	19 42	28 25	19 87
Helpers.....	8 09	9 05	8 98	17 25	11 00
Riveters.....	15 00	14 63	16 17	24 58	17 20
Holders-on.....	10 63	9 22	9 64	18 00	11 90
Flangers.....	20 00	16 50	19 07	25 50	20 07
Helpers.....	9 88	9 42	9 88	15 00	10 92
Blacksmiths.....	16 17	14 91	17 45	30 88	19 25
Helpers.....	10 21	8 86	19 28	18 63	11 41
Foremen.....	22 16	22 12	28 85	42 83	27 75
Engineers.....	14 42	13 04	16 34	23 78	16 05
Pattern makers.....	16 61	14 90	17 32	31 43	19 40
Assistants.....	11 47	10 97	11 38	25 75	13 76
Laborers, carters.....	9 53	9 49	8 02	18 44	10 28
Apprentices.....	6 07	4 75	5 09	12 92	6 09
Millwrights.....	17 87	16 87	22 96	38 00	22 58
Assistants.....		8 00	15 40	19 50	14 48
Brass founders.....	16 75	13 64	18 17	33 00	19 81
Fitters.....	9 00	14 52	17 10	35 75	18 62
Turners.....	14 00	13 40	17 00	31 25	17 98
Hours of labor per week.....	59½	59 3-4	58½	60	59 3-10

MANUFACTURE OF CLOTHING.

The following were the general average weekly earnings of persons employed in the manufacture of clothing throughout the States in 1874:

Occupation.	Average.
Head cutters for custom clothing.....	$28 34
Cutters for ready-made clothing.....	15 06
Bushelemen.....	15 57
Machine operators.....	9 75
Finishers.....	11 22
Laborers or packers.....	10 66
Apprentices or boys.....	4 75
Ready-made clothing:
On sack overcoats. { Fine.....	10 33
{ Cheap.....	9 33
Broadcloth frock coats.....	10 00
Cassimere business coats.....	9 33
Cassimere sack coats.....	8 92
Vests, woolen.....	4 44
Pantaloon, woolen.....	4 83
Shirts. { Muslin.....	8 50
{ Woolen.....	3 00
Custom-made clothing:
Sack overcoats.....	22 25
Broadcloth dress coats.....	20 33
Cassimere business coats.....	20 62
Cassimere sack coats.....	18 87
Vests.....	12 62
Pantaloon.....	15 69

MANUFACTURE OF LEATHER.

The following table shows the general average weekly wages paid to persons employed in the manufacture of the various kinds of leather in 1874:

Occupation.	Average.
Sole leather:
Tanners.....	$13 28
Beam hands.....	12 75
Yard.....	9 96
Rollers and spongers.....	13 16
Bark grinders.....	9 00
Common laborers.....	9 15
Upper and calf-skin:
.....	13 00
.....	15 40
.....	14 70
.....	17 83
nds, scourers.....	11 50
.....	12 13
.....	15 06
M Patent, and enameled leather:
nds.....	12 50
.....	14 50
Shavers.....	17 25
Sewing girls.....	6 50
Finishers.....	18 25
Colorers.....	17 25
Sheep-skins, skivers, &c.:
Engineers.....	12 27
Laborers or unskilled workmen.....	9 46
Apprentices or boys.....	4 75
Foremen or overseers.....	16 85

MANUFACTURE OF FURNITURE.

The following were the average weekly wages paid in 1874:

Occupation.	Average.
Cabinet makers.....	$15 45
Chair makers.....	11 00
Carvers.....	16 50
Turners.....	13 50
Painters.....	10 00
Upholsters.....	17 50
Varnishers.....	13 50
Scroll sawyers.....	12 16
Laborers or unskilled workmen.....	11 95
Apprentices or boys.....	16 00
Foremen or overseers.....	25 00

CARRIAGE AND CAR FACTORIES.

The following were the average weekly wages paid in 1874:

Occupation.	Average.
Body makers.....	$18 46
Carriage-part makers.....	16 70
Wheelwrights.....	16 33
Coachsmiths.....	17 50
Helpers.....	9 50
Finishers.....	15 55
Ornamenters.....	19 73
Painters.....	14 65
Trimmers.....	16 06
Stitchers.....	13 16
Engineers.....	27 00
Laborers.....	8 33
Apprentices.....	4 25
Foremen.....	23 00
Car builders:
Wood-workers.....	13 75
Blacksmiths.....	16 33
Helpers.....	6 54
Painters.....	14 25
Hours of labor per week.....

FORGE AND BESSEMER PIG-IRON WORKS.

The following table shows the average weekly wages of persons employed in the Neutral Foundry (forge and Bessemer pig-iron) in Harrisburg, Pa.:

Occupation.	Wages
Clerk.....	$12 00
Foreman or founder.....	28 00
Engineer.....	17 34
Engineer's assistant.....	11 90
Blacksmith.....	12 15
Carpenter.....	12 16
Keepers.....	11 00
Keepers' helpers.....	10 00
Fillers and cinder-men.....	9 44
Iron-weigher.....	10 11
Carters.....	7 51
Laborers.....	7 24
Conductors on ore-trains.....	9 75

COMPARATIVE RESULTS.

From the preceding tables the reader will be enabled to gather correct information showing the general average of wages paid for farm, mechanical, and factory labor in the United States. In THE REPUBLIC for January a series of tables were published showing similar results in England. The tables in both cases, are based on the larger and more complete statements presented in Dr. Young's recent work on "Labor and Wages in England and America." By a careful comparison the reader will see that, when reduced to a gold basis, the wages paid in the United States vary from fifty to one hundred per cent. above the amounts paid for similar work in England. For example, we find that the wool-sorter in Bradford receives $6.77 per week; in the United States $10.91. A wool-washer $5.08, against $8.97 in this country. For drawing and spinning wool the wages are $9.07 in Bradford, against $18.61 here. The weaver receives $7.25 in England, against $9.84 in this country, while the overseer has only $7.56, against $18.05 in the United States. In woman's labor, in woollen mills, there is an equal advantage in this country, the American factory hand usually receiving double what the English woman can earn. And the result shows about the same difference in the wages paid in the respective countries indicated through the entire range of industries.

PURCHASING POWER OF WAGES IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

In order, however, to complete the comparison, the cost of provisions, clothing, rents, &c., must be taken into consideration. By referring to Dr. Young's work for data, which, for want of space, has been omitted in the REPUBLIC articles, significant results are obtained. On comparing two manufacturing centers, such as Bradford, England, and the leading towns of Pennsylvania, in the United States, the values in all cases being expressed in gold, it will be found that the laborer in Bradford in 1874 paid $7.35 for his barrel of flour; in Pennsylvania $7 for the same quality. The Englishman's beef for roasting cost him 21 to 24 cents per pound, the American's 17; the English veal, the best cuts, was 24 cents, American, 18. English leg of mutton 24 cents, American, 16 cents. The great stand-by of the laborer, corned or salted pork, was 16 to 20 cents in Bradford, 13½ in Pennsylvania. Butter was 35 to 38 cents for the English laborer, 35½ for the American. Milk and eggs were about the same in the two countries.

In the above and other articles of provisions the American workman has a very considerable advantage. In the cost of groceries he is not so fortunate. The Englishman's Oolong tea costs him from 36 to 80 cents, the Americans 40 to 90; green Rio coffee is only 16 to 20 cents in Bradford and 26½ in Pennsylvania. Good brown sugar costs the Englishman 7 to 8 cents, the American 9½. Coal is more expensive in Pennsylvania than in the English manufacturing town, being $5.60 per ton in the former and $4.38 in the latter. In dry goods the Englishman has no advantage, his brown shirtings being 12 to 16 cents per yard, while the American's are 13 1-5; the English brown sheetings are 42 cents, the American's very much cheaper, 17 1-3. Cotton flannel is 30 to 36 cents in Bradford, only 19 in Pennsylvania. In prints the American has an advantage, his being 11 cents, against 10 to 16 for the English. Medium satinets are, however, much more expensive in America, being 58 cents to about 40 in Bradford. Boots are cheaper to the Englishman, being $2.88 to $3.84, against $4.40 in Pennsylvania. In house rent and board the Englishman's wages will go about fifty per cent. further than the American's, four-room tenements costing the Bradford laborer $5.76 to $8.20 per month, while the American must pay $9.37. If a single man he can board himself in the English manufacturing town for from $2.88 to $3.60 per week; in the Pennsylvania town, if a mechanic, he must pay $4.75. If the boarder is a woman she must pay in England $1.68 to $2.16 per week; in Pennsylvania, if a factory hand, $3.50.

It will be seen from these figures that the purchasing power of money in the two countries is not materially different in regard to provisions, groceries, fuel, and domestic dry goods, the low prices of some articles in one country being counterbalanced by the higher prices of other articles in the competing country. But when the matter of house rent and board is estimated the Englishman has a very considerable advantage, though he probably gets less for his money; that is, the American laborer gets better lodging and food than the English.

The condition, then, of the English factory laborer in a woolen and steel manufacturing region like Bradford, and also generally in other parts of England, as compared with manufacturing States like Pennsylvania and Massachusetts, would seem to be this: His money has about the same purchasing power in each country, excepting in house rent and board; in these the American is at a disadvantage of fully one-half, while on the other hand his average wage is nearly one hundred per cent. greater than his competitors. The ultimate superiority seems, then, to rest with the American factory laborer.

It may be argued by some that provisions are materially lower in England than in the United States. But when we recall the fact that about two hundred million dollars worth of provisions and bread stuffs are shipped annually from this country to England, the claim that board is cheaper in England than in the United States is shown to be without a basis. Included in these exports there is an average of one hundred million dollars worth of wheat and flour, and from thirty to forty million dollars worth of butter, cheese, and lard. These are articles that reach the table of every family, and must, of course, after paying transportation over three thousand miles, insurance, exchange, commissions, and two or three profits between the producer and the consumer, cost more in England than they do in America.

The evidence is conclusive, therefore, that labor is better paid by nearly one hundred per cent. in the United States than in England, or in any other portion of the world. And in this fact we have the secret of the constant flow of immigration from almost every other section of civilization to the United States.

Dr. Young in his recent work remarks, (page 820,) that "the great advantages enjoyed by the working men in the United States, as compared with those of the same class in the Old World, are sufficiently attested by the deep and steady current of emigration which sets toward our shores. One of the most conspicuous of these advantages consists in the equality of political rights with which the working man is here invested, and the comparatively high respect and dignity attached to his calling; but not less solid and decided are the advantages connected with abundant employment, good wages, and the substantial comforts of life. It is true that, in common with other countries where the system of credit has been largely developed, our country has had its occasional financial crises, accompanied with serious interruption to the ordinary course of commerce and industry; but such effects have been comparatively transient in their duration, and the normal condition of the country has been marked by a degree of prosperity rarely, if ever, enjoyed elsewhere; and rarely, if ever, in the history of the world has national prosperity been so largely shared by those usually denominated the working classes."

And why is labor better paid here than elsewhere? As stated in the commencement of this article, it must be traced directly and mainly to the American System of Tariff Protection to our manufacturing and agricultural industries, which secures to our own workmen the manufacture and production of nearly everything required for home consumption. We say nearly everything, although the language may be considered too sweeping while our annual imports still continue to amount in value to about $600,000,000 per annum. Still the tariff secures to our own workmen the preparation of the largest portion of the commodities consumed at home.

But with the tariff reduced, as proposed by the Morrison bill, what will be the result? Our imports will soon go up to eight or nine hundred million dollars in value per annum, taking just so much more work out of the hands of our own people, and so many more millions of gold out of the country to pay for the manufacture of these goods abroad. This will be the result, and the only result of the Democratic Free-Trade policy. Do the people wish to try the experiment?

OUR CURRENCY—BANKS AND BANKING, PAST AND PRESENT.

The medium of exchange adopted upon the landing of the Pilgrims on Plymouth Rock, 1620, in their traffic with the natives, consisted of beads or wampum, made from the periwinkle and clam-shell. There was neither restriction upon nor limitation to its manufacture, and it was received as legal tender to the amount of 12*d.* Afterward it became the prevailing currency among the pioneers, and affords the first example we have of the evil results arising from inflation, though in a very primitive degree. The shell substitute was soon over-abundant, depreciated in value, then worthless, and abolished as a nuisance in 1650.

From beads the colonists took to barter to supply the deficiency; and at one time musket-balls were used for change, at a farthing apiece. These were legal in any sums below 12*d.*

There were some features in the barter currency of that day peculiarly characteristic of a much later period. When the common products of the land were made legal tender, no one would pay specie. This was hoarded for exports, which nothing but coin would satisfy, and the lesser value applied to liquidate indebtedness; thus steadily and surely impoverishing the standard of circulating medium. Or, if any one commodity lawfully paid a certain obligation to individual, State, or nation, the poorest article of the kind was selected. Many amusing incidents in this connection are related of those early times.

The urgent need of the new country was capital—solid substantial money for the legitimate transaction of business; and having but little of this, the momentous problem, even with Mr. Winthrop, was whether, being unable to have both, it were not better to do without foreign luxuries and retain the specie. This view has its application in many a financial stress long subsequent to the colonial day.

It has been often reiterated, and it appears incontrovertible, that the losses occasioned by irredeemable currency largely exceed the gains derived from importation. The surest protection to industrial interests, to the general weal of the people, to the greatest good to all, is to keep a proper amount of national capital in coin circulation, and manufacture, or learn to do without such articles as are obtained only at the risk of crippling the resources, the energies, the progressive features of the country.

Massachusetts, in 1652, started a mint at Boston, to make what is known as "Pine Tree" coinage. The metal was chiefly procured through traffic with the buccaneers of the West Indies, who at that early date carried on a profitable trade with the colonies. This coin was below the standard of European money, the issue illegal, and though continued in operation thirty years the coins were all dated 1652.

A mint was established in Maryland in 1661, but nothing is known of its history. A bank was proposed in Massachusetts in 1686, but this, also, is obscure. In Hutchinson's History of Massachusetts Bay, however, it is recorded that this colony, in 1690, issued "paper notes" to defray the expenses of an expedition against Canada. The issue at first was moderate, and promptly redeemed upon maturity; but in 1704 the redemption was postponed two years, then indefinitely. Upon this, other issues were made for the current expenditures of the colony, and still others to loan to less fortunate communities. When once the scheme was in operation, and the tone of the people in harmony with the movement, the cost of production being light, it was deemed well enough to make the amount sufficient to cover all purposes. The ability to pay coin for this currency never once entered into the calculation, and the result was in keeping with the circumstances. Mr. Hutchinson, in his chronicle of that period, tells us, "there were special hard times in Massachusetts in 1715." He further asserts, "that of all those issues not one dollar in one hundred was ever redeemed."

This was the first experiment with a paper substitute for coin, and though this proved disastrous, the country still smarting under the depression, steps were immediately taken to repeat the hazard.

Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, and New Jersey issued paper money in 1709; Pennsylvania in 1723; Maryland in 1734, while Virginia used tobacco warehouse receipts for currency till 1755. North and South Carolina also issued paper notes early in their history.

Of all the issues at that time put in circulation Massachusetts alone attempted to meet her obligation, and she only at eleven to one.

The First Continental Congress met in Philadelphia, September 5, 1774, and deliberately proceeded to do what many a Congress has since done—just what it should not. With no plausible excuse, trade was thrown away when it should have been retained. It was decided that after December, 1774, nothing should be imported to any part of the British Empire, and from September, 1775, nothing should be exported from the same.

The short-sightedness of this legislation was soon apparent. On the eve of a great war English goods were needed for the army, and came around from the Continent and West Indies, while tobacco and lumber in exchange took a similar roundabout course.

The Second Congress, May 10, 1776, made war, but had no power to tax or borrow, and as the only available means, notwithstanding past experience, resorted to paper currency. The first issue was ordered June 23, 1775, and accompanied with a promise to pay 2,000,000 Spanish dollars. This issue was apportioned among the colonies, which were expected to redeem their quota by levying taxes. Rhode Island, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire did this entirely. New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, and Virginia did so in part. This issue, however, went on, and in January, 1777, the depreciation commenced.

Every possible means were resorted to by public officers and private committees to enforce the legal tender character of the bill, but with indifferent success. In 1779 the issue was $160,000,000. At this time the notes were twenty-eight to one; and in 1780 they were worth only two cents on the dollar.

In 1781, when Morris took charge of the finances, the notes were regarded as utterly worthless, and yet some eventually were redeemed at one hundred to one, in Hamilton's funding scheme.

This was the third attempt at a substitute for coin, and a much greater calamity than either that had preceded it. To enhance the sufferings arising from a general suspension of business, throwing thousands of men out of employment, there was an almost total failure of crops in 1779 and 1780.

In 1780, several wealthy men of Philadelphia, entering into a specific arrangement, took Government bills of exchange, and issued their own notes to purchase supplies for the army. December 31, 1781, this company was incorporated by Congress as the Bank of North America. The validity of this act being questioned, a charter was obtained from Pennsylvania, in 1783, for ten years, with a monopoly. In 1785 the State charter was repealed, but in 1787 renewed without the monopoly.

This enterprise being apparently successful, other States adopted a similar method. Massachusetts Bank was chartered in 1784; then, immediately one in New York, and another in Maryland. These temporarily relieved the pressing need of the country, and business began to revive. The industrial interests assumed a more healthful appearance, and this would have continued uninterrupted had the currency been based upon a coin valuation.

In 1787 the Federal Constitution was framed and contained this clause: "No State shall coin money, emit bills of credit, or make anything but gold or silver coin a tender in payment of debts." Thus did the wise men of that day express their condemnation of the paper system of money, and the people, groaning under recent experience, acquiesced.

The finances of that period, however, were in a deplorable condition. There was enough currency, but it had an uncertain value. The Confederation was little more than a shadow. It could not collect revenue or adjust its accounts. These were in inextriccable confusion, with no one on whom to charge the responsibility.

September 2, 1789, the Treasury Department was established, with Alexander Hamilton as Secretary. His report of the national debt, January 14, 1790, was $42,000,000 domestic; $11,000,000 foreign; States, $25,000,000.

With this formidable array of figures, and no coin sufficient for needed purposes, Hamilton proposed a National Bank. There being no other alternative, this was incorporated by act of March 3, 1791, with a capital of $10,000,000—$8,000,000 subscribed by individuals (one-fourth in specie, three-quarters in United States stock) and $2,000,000 by the Government. The charter was for twenty years, and no notes below $10 were to be issued.

Soon afterward the Government sold its interest at 20, 25, and 40 per cent. premium. This was a wonderful incentive, and speculation ran high. From 1792 to 1812 one hundred and three banks were chartered, and expansion began.

In Massachusetts this took the form of "Wild-Cat." The new financial machine was powerful, in fine condition, and worked to its utmost capacity. The stock of specie was insignificant, but this did not check the issues. The precious metal was indeed scarce, and the little that could be collected under a combination of bankers was stealthily moved from bank to bank just in advance of the inspector.

A crisis under these circumstances was inevitable. It came in 1809. Some of the banks are reported as having $20 to $40 in specie, with circulation of notes ranging from $100,000 to $500,000. Not a few of the banks had not a dollar in specie, and none of them had any very considerable amount.

The Farmers' Exchange Bank of Gloucester, Rhode Island, chartered in 1804, was a fair representation of the class, as operated at that time, and we give a citation of facts relative to this from which to reach a proper understanding of the others.

Its capital stock was put down on the record at $1,000,000. Only $19,141, however, were ever paid in, and of this the directors drew out until there was a working capital of only $3,081. One Dexter, so we are told, bought up eleven of the directors at $1,300 apiece, paying from the bank funds. He then borrowed of the bank $760,265. This was a sharp trick of a stock gambler, and threw the concern into bankruptcy. When it failed it had $86.46 in specie, with an outstanding circulation of not less than $580,000.

Similar facts were developed all over the country, and the distress was universal. A few individuals, perhaps, had made vast fortunes, but the great mass of people were thrown into a financial crash from which it took years of patient toil to extricate themselves.

The question of coinage was taken up in 1781, and August 8, 1786, a general mint law was passed; yet silver was not coined till 1794, and gold in 1795.

Coin, however, was more difficult to be obtained than paper money, and the slow but sure road to solid substantial prosperity through a currency based upon an actual gold and silver basis, redeemable at par, was not suited to the progressive ideas of those who could discern more rapid wealth through a system of fraud as practiced by banking institutions of that period. Coin could only be manufactured as the metal was obtained; but paper notes could be printed in sums to meet the wants of all.

In the midst of these reckless financial theories there were a few good men who foresaw inevitable ruin from again flooding the country with a cheap substitute for money, and did all in their power to thwart a return to the previous irresponsible banking system. Governor Snyder, of Pennsylvania, in 1813 vetoed twenty-five bank charters, but in 1814 forty were passed over his veto.

Banks now multiplied on every hand, and the chief occupation of those in the Middle States was speculating in Government stock. This was a huge swindle, carried to the fullest extent, and laid the foundation for another collapse. Had the result fallen upon these banks, or the Government, it would have been a righteous retribution; but they escaped with coffers full, while the honest hard-working people—the mechanic, farmer, and tradesman—were the principal sufferers.

New Orleans banks refused to redeem in April, 1814; those of Philadelphia in August of the same year. The Southern States went with the rest, but Ohio and Kentucky paid specie till early in 1815, and the only bank then in Tennessee continued to redeem its circulation till August, 1815.

Directly upon this, the country staggering under a worthless currency, banks increased more rapidly than ever before, and this, too, while the notes of even the new banks required elaborate quotations. Brokers had a rich harvest negotiating them.

Niles' Register, from 1814 to 1820, is full of bitter denunciation against the system of "shaving" practiced upon the people. Many incidents and illustrations might be introduced, showing the baneful influence upon the best interests of the country growing out of this inability to redeem.

In this condition of the currency, October 17, 1814, Dallas, then Secretary of the Treasury, proposed a national non-specie-paying bank. Calhoun proposed a bank on Treasury notes, which should not suspend specie payment. Dallas' scheme passed the Senate, but was lost in the House. Then a plan for a bank that should be prohibited from suspending passed both houses, and was vetoed by the President January 30, 1815. Dallas' scheme again passed the Senate February 17, 1815, but as before was defeated in the House.

Calhoun, at the next session, reintroduced the bank proposition, and assisted by Dallas, a charter was passed April 10, 1816. This bank was to have $35,000,000 capital, $7,000,000 to be subscribed by the Government in five per cent. stock; $28,000,000 by the public. Of this, $7,000,000 was to be specie, $21,000,000 six per cent. United States stock, and to issue no notes below $5. This bank Calhoun and Dallas boastfully asserted "was established to correct the currency, and be a financial providence to the country."

See how well they kept the promise. Three brief years of existence, and upon the supposition the affairs of the bank were not properly conducted, Congress appointed a committee to investigate January 16, 1819; this committee made its report, fully sustaining the charges. Thereupon the President and managers resigned, and Langdon Cheves took charge of the bank. He found the institution insolvent, and the liabilities not less than $3,000,000.

This was the key-note of another general suspension—another strain upon the country's honor, and it came with a vengeance. Twenty thousand persons in Philadelphia alone were thrown out of employment. New York, Baltimore, and Pittsburgh—great manufacturing centers—were in the same condition. The entire industrial interests of the nation were paralyzed—hopelessly prostrated through this curse of cheap substitute for money.

Niles, under date of May 17, 1823, in his Register, alluding to this period, says: "The banks were gambling hells." He further tells us that there were three grades of paper "called money" afloat at that time. The first was notes of incorporated companies that still retained some pretense to solvency; the second was notes of banks which had no local habitation, save in a name, the bills being printed in some obscure counting-room, known only to the initiated, and invariably circulated at a distance, so that by the time they reached home for redemption the bank had ceased to exist, or could not be found; the third consisted of counterfeits, and of these there was a bountiful stock.

The total amount of the three species in circulation cannot even be approximated, but the number of banks was not far from three hundred and ninety-seven.

Notwithstanding these salutary lessons, which should have taught the people better than again venturing upon the sea of an uncertain circulating medium, in 1824 all the banks expanded. Pennsylvania re-chartered its banks of 1814; a better tariff was obtained, duties rose, and a feeling of security gave to business renewed life.

In the spring of 1825 fifty-two bank charters were petitioned for in New York alone. Alabama and Tennessee were still struggling with the past, but putting forth every effort to sustain their bank circulation. Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri were hampered by the "relief" system, a code of stay laws against the collection of debts. New York and Boston were fighting these banks, hoping to obtain a monopoly, and the United States Bank increased its issue $3,000,000.

English manufacturers were prosperous, and the demand for raw material unprecedented. Cotton reached twenty-seven cents, and corn was pulled up to plant cotton. Speculation was rife, and the excess of exports over imports, in 1825, was $2,646,290.

In July the prices in England fell. It created a panic here. Fifty failures took place in New York before December. Banks failed by the score, and even the United States Bank was in trouble. The Government had $7,000,000 in coin to pay, and the money was to come through this bank. The payment was delayed. When paid, the bank was debtor to the State banks, and could not redeem its circulation. Then followed a repetition of 1819.

Niles, in his Register, under date of May 9, 1835, says that new banks opened and a period of speculation began in 1834. In 1835, he adds: "This became wild, seizing upon cotton, lands, negroes, city lots, western lands, and every form of stock;" but the administration having learned wisdom from experience, foreshadowing the inevitable result, induced most of the States to forbid notes under $5.

At that time there was supposed to be $64,000,000 of specie in the banks. In the winters of 1835-36, however, indication of weakness became apparent, and quotations began to fluctuate. A feeling of uneasiness pervaded the masses—especially affecting manufacturing and agricultural interests.

July 11, 1836, the Secretary of the Treasury issued a circular forbidding the receipt of anything but specie for public lands. Congress, fearful of the consequences, at once passed a resolution practically rescinding this order, which was sent to the President, and by him forwarded to the State Department, where it was filed March 3, 1837. But the crisis was at hand.

Early in March, 1837, an important firm in New Orleans failed, because of decline in cotton. An equally extensive establishment in New York closed its doors immediately upon the receipt of this news. This was the beginning. The whole southwest was at once prostrated, and May eighth, of the same year, a run was made on the Dry Dock Bank of New York, causing its suspension. The other banks throughout the country were forced to succumb. Gold went up to 107; all specie had disappeared, and the market was once again flooded with worthless paper.

To present in detail a description of the various effects these monetary disasters produced, the sufferings of the poor, the destruction of industrial schemes, the injury to husbandry, to every species of individual and national interests, would fill volumes. It is, however, surprising with what wonderful persistency the country, emerging from one of these reckless schemes, plunges headlong into another.

In 1838 business again revived, and a moderate feeling of security took possession of the masses. There was, however, a disposition to enter upon a more careful system of banking; but a proper solution of the currency problem had not yet been made, and further experience was necessary.

Scarcely had the country settled down from the previous shock when the United States Bank became involved in cotton speculation, and there was again symptoms of trouble in the finances. The old bank worked hard to sustain itself, but there was no coin, and the notes were sold in New York and Boston at 18 to 24 per cent. discount.

Upon this several banks failed in different parts of the country. Throughout the Western States, especially Michigan and Illinois, suspensions were numerous. The notes of several joint-stock companies were discounted at 25 to 60 per cent.

Alabama, during 1838, created a debt of $15,000,000 to found banks. This was nearly all lost. Mississippi, the same year, borrowed $7,000,000 for similar purposes, and the whole debt eventually was repudiated.

September 10, 1839, a draft of the United States Bank was refused in Paris. A respite, however, was obtained through small loans. This could not long continue. The bank owed $20,000,000 in New York, $800,000 in Boston.

A spirit of rivalry seems to have always existed among banks, and this indebtedness was promptly brought home for payment.

The pressure was too great, and October 10, 1839, the doors were closed.

This event was followed by the suspension of nearly every bank in the South and West. New England held out for a time, but finally suspended wholly or in part. Three hundred and forty-three banks, out of eight hundred and fifty, closed entirely, sixty-two partially, and over $2,000,000 Government deposits were lost.

Again we have an instance of the recuperative powers of the nation. There was a period of universal prosperity from 1841 to 1853. Business men had regained confidence and all classes expanded their engagements, many, however, going far beyond the protection of their resources. This was particularly the case of those engaged in banks and bank speculation.

The first alarm came from the discovery of the Schuyler frauds. At this time Ohio had a large circulation of bank notes, mostly of what was known as "free banks." When the contraction began, these notes came in only to find the banks unprepared to redeem them. Stronger indications of the shock were felt in 1857, upon the suspension of the Ohio Life and Trust Company, of Cincinnati, with liabilities upward of $7,000,000; and the loss of the steamer "Central America," with a million of specie, enhanced the stringency.

Following this were several failures of more or less importance, and in September a large number suspended. Stocks fell 40 to 50 per cent., and a panic ensued. This was short, sharp, and severe, but did not reach the productive powers of the country. The recovery was rapid, the reaction healthy. The losses were immense, but, as Professor Sumner says, "it was only a bad stumble in a career of great prosperity."

The public debt, January 1, 1861, was $90,500,000. There were 1,605 banks, with $429,600,000 capital, $207,200,000 deposits, $91,300,000 specie, $202,000,000 circulation, and $695,700,000 loans. The number of failures during 1861, consequent upon the seceding of the Southern States and the political excitement of the period, was 5,935, for $178,600,000.

February 25, 1863, a bill proposing the present system of national banks passed and became law, fixing the bank capital at $300,000,000. An act approved July 12, 1870, increased this $45,000,000, and January 14, 1875, all restriction on the amount was removed.

October 5, 1865, there were 66 banks in operation. December, 1874, the Comptroller of the Currency reported 2,200 banks as having been organized. 35 of which had failed, 137 closed business, and 2,028 remaining. December 31, 1874, there was one less—2,027.

The bank capital at this time was $495,800,000; loans, $955,800,000; bonds to secure circulation, $412,900,000; specie, $22,400,000; United States Treasury certificates of deposit, $133,500,000; legal tenders, $82,700,000; five per cent. redemption fund, $76,900,000; circulation, $332,000,000; deposits, $682,800,000.

July, 1864, gold reached its highest—235. May, 1865, it was down to 140.

The same startling premonitions preceding the financial disasters of the past were apparent in 1871-2, and were significant of the approaching absorption by expanding credit of the legally limited amount of paper currency.

September 8, 1873, the New York Warehouse and Security Company failed. Then one or two firms involved in railroad speculation. Confidence was at once shaken, and banks known to be carrying this species of stock were subjects of suspicion. With past experience in such matters, to suspect was to act, and a run on the deposits of these doubtful concerns was made. September 18, 1873, Jay Cooke & Co. fell under this demand, and a panic ensued.

The crisis was ominous in its effects, producing a general and widespread doubt and want of confidence, and a stagnation of business was the result. Wages were at once reduced, and workmen by the tens of thousands discharged or put upon half time. The poor, as is ever the case, were the first to suffer. There has been a marked lack of reviving courage and enterprise the past two years. Millions upon millions of money are lying idle in banks or hoarded away, held back through fear to enter upon any commercial or manufacturing engagements.

June 30, 1875, the total paper currency in circulation was: National bank notes, $351,869,008; old demand and legal-tender notes, $375,841,687; fractional currency, $42,129,424. Total, $769,840,119.

In preparation for the redemption provided for in act of June 20, 1874, there has been deposited with the United States Treasurer, for purposes of retiring bank circulation, $19,709,666.

The operations of the three mints—Philadelphia, San Francisco, and Carson City—in total for the year ending June 30, 1875, were as follows: Gold, $33,553,965; silver, $10,070,368.

Professor Sumner says: "For us the currency question is of the first importance, and we cannot solve it nor escape it by ignoring it. We have got to face it and work through it, and the best way to begin is, not by wrangling about speculative opinions as to untried schemes, but go back to history and try and get hold of some firmly established principle from which we can proceed with some degree of confidence and a certain unanimity."

Hon. John Sherman says: "Convince the commercial world that you will redeem this currency in gold when presented, and it becomes par in gold. It will then buy as much food and clothing as the best gold coin issued from the mint. Then the note and the gold will circulate side by side, the one interchangeable for the other. To accomplish this is now the highest object of statesmanship and the greatest good to all classes."

In view of the past, as we have it from history, and in the presence of the present, seen and comprehended through enlarged experience and through tests, can there be any doubt, any hesitancy, in the proper action to be taken? No man possessed of his reasoning faculties, having the indisputable proofs accumulated through a period of two hundred and fifty years without a single deviation in results, and having the best interests of his country at heart, will pronounce in favor of inflation.

THE WORK OF THE FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

SMALL PROGRESS.

April 17, 1876.—Another month is gone, and of the fourteen regular appropriation bills only the fortification bill and the diplomatic bill have passed both houses of Congress; meanwhile some of the appropriations of the last year have run out, with no provisions for the continuance of the work to which they were applied, and thus the legitimate business of the Government has been arrested, hundreds turned out of employment and plunged into the greatest distress. The public accommodation has been interfered with, and propositions have been suggested to supply the lack and avoid the wide-spread inconvenience by a resort to private contributions, in default of the most-needed and legitimate action of Congress. That such an abnormal state of things should exist is due wholly to the selfish and obstinate perversity of the Democratic majority in the House.

PROPOSALS IN CONGRESS.

The principal subjects which have claimed the attention of Congress during the last month, aside from the numerous investigations now on foot, are as follows: A vast number of petitions, memorials, reports of committees, and bills for private claimants; declaratory statements of the nationality of the Republic; final action of Congress providing for payment of interest on District bonds; discussion of the Government policy in regard to the interests of the Sioux reservation; action of the House on various matters pertaining to the District of Columbia, its railroads, business companies, and charitable institutions; debate on a proposed plan of government for the Indian Territory; debate on a post route bill in the Senate; making April 14th a holiday; discussion on the resumption of specie payments; debate on commerce, navigation, and the regulation of steam vessels, with a bill passed in the House in relation thereto; debate on the pay of army officers, also with a bill passed in the House; elaborate discussion by Senator Sherman on the value of the trade-dollar; appropriation of forty thousand dollars in aid of the Government exhibition at the Centennial Exposition; protracted debate against the confirmation of the Hawaiian treaty; memorial of the women of America who are urging the question of female suffrage, praying that in the formation of a government for the District of Columbia this feature may be incorporated; proposed amendment of the bankrupt law; proposition to restore pensions to the soldiers of the war of 1812 in the rebel States, with a bill to this effect passed in the House; a full statement of the increasing troubles on the Texas frontier, and the wrongs inflicted on property and person by Mexican invaders; appropriation for Treasury expenditures; for gas, fuel, &c., in the Government buildings throughout the country; action in regard to the receivers of national banks; debate on the proposal of a national rate of interest accordant with the exigency and demands of the times; the exposition of affairs of the mint at San Francisco; proposed action in regard to the tax on tobacco; strong debate and protest against the further granting of subsidies to railroad and other corporations; discussion on the duty of the Government to foster the interest of agriculture; action in regard to the improvement of Pennsylvania avenue; protracted debate on the proper disposition of the public lands, and introduction of the deficiency bill in the House. From such an enumeration of subjects some idea may be obtained of the immense pressure of business upon Congress and of the value of time and its economy in the progress of legislation.

SET SPEECHES.

A very large number of carefully-prepared speeches have been made, on a variety of topics, during the last month. On Tuesday, March 21st, Mr. Hubbell spoke on the question of the tariff, criticising the features of the proposed bill of Mr. Morrison, and showing, by a great variety of statistics, the wisdom of the policy of protection. On Wednesday, March 22d, Mr. Philips made a speech on party politics and the Federal Constitution, in which he attempted to show that there is a strong tendency under Republican rule toward the centralization of Federal power, to the detriment of the rights of the States guaranteed by the Constitution. On Friday, March 24th, Mr. White delivered a speech on standard money and low salaries, in which he urged that the public faith is pledged to the resumption of specie payments, and that there should be a reduction of all salaries alike. The speech was full of the sentiment of the early and economical days of the nation. On Thursday, March 23d, Mr. Durham made a speech on honesty, reform, and economy, replete with valuable statistics, showing that the annual expenses of the Government had steadily increased from 1789-1791, when they were $1,919,589.52, to 1874-1875, when they were $171,529,848.27; and that, while this was indicative of a monstrous growth of the country, it gave rise likewise to thoughtful suggestions upon the wide-spread extravagance, speculation, and temptation to fraud from which so many evils flow. On Wednesday, April 5th, Mr. Cox made a speech on the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, in which he argued strongly against the proposed transfer, and attempted to show how detrimental the change would be to the 300,000 Indians scattered over 200,000 square miles of our territory. He proceeded at great length, and adduced a variety of considerations of a telling kind against the proposition. On the same day Mr. Sparks also delivered a speech on Indian affairs, in favor of the transfer, contending that in the last two hundred and fifty years the red man has faded away before the advance of the white man, and that the present system of peace and civilization under missionary agents has proved a practical failure. On Friday, April 7th, Mr. Stone delivered a speech on "straw bids" in the contracts of the General Post Office Department, attempting to show a loss to the Government arising from abuse and irregularity in the letting of contracts. But the speech was behind the time, since months ago the Postmaster General had investigated and exposed the facts, and adopted a safer policy on the whole subject. On April 6th Mr. Gibson delivered a speech on the Hawaiian treaty, and on April 8th elaborate speeches were made by Mr. Joyce on the resumption of specie payments, by Mr. Williams on the reduction of salaries, and by Mr. Dibrell on river and harbor improvements. This range of subjects will serve to give some a more adequate idea of the vast amount of work performed, and the information collected upon the state of the country in the wondrous progress of our civilization, in the midst of conditions never before combined on so great a scale in the history of nations. Party considerations of course enter into these investigations, but it may be even doubted whether this is an unmixed evil. It is better that there should be diversity of views than unbroken despotism.

THE PAY OF WITNESSES.

The Democratic majority of the House have been so eager to hunt out fraud by the wholesale, they have summoned so many witnesses from every quarter of the country, that in the midst of their professions of retrenchment and reform they have incurred a bill of expense which is growing to be formidable, and they have asked for an appropriation of sixty thousand dollars to meet the exigency. But this item, large as it is, will be augmented to a sum far greater before the matter is ended. It seems somewhat strange in connection with this lavish expenditure on investigations that Congress should have agreed to cut down the President's salary again to twenty-five thousand dollars, besides abolishing many useful offices, and grinding the faces of Government employes to a still greater extent.

THE INDIAN DEFICIENCY BILL.

This appropriation was finally disposed of, Tuesday, March 28th, by the adoption of the report of the conference committee of the two houses, and is one of the very few appropriations which have received the sanction of law during the present session.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILWAY.

A strong case in argument has been made in behalf of this grand enterprise, but as yet without avail. On Wednesday, March 15th, Mr. Atkins, in a carefully prepared speech upon the subject, stated that within the last year a railroad convention had been held at St. Louis, composed of representatives from thirty-one States and Territories, and comprising the leading business men of the nation, and that this convention had given expression of its conclusion to Congress that there should be an open highway for all time to come for the Government and people from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. This fact, together with many others, was argued in support of the project. It was stated that from the foundation of the Government to the present time the enormous sum of $104,705,163.43 had been appropriated for railroads, canals, and wagon-roads throughout the older portions of the country, and on April 8th Mr. Woodburn followed up the subject in a speech of remarkable power, but the temper of Congress does not seem to be favorable to any present action in the premises.

FRACTIONAL CURRENCY AND SILVER COIN.

Much discussion has risen in both branches of Congress upon the proposal to retire a portion of the fractional currency and to substitute silver in its stead. On Wednesday, March 27th, Mr. Payne introduced in the House a bill to provide for the gradual resumption of specie payments, involving in part the principle of the substitution of silver for legal-tender notes, but the House refused to suspend the rules to take it up. The discussion on this subject ran through several successive days, embracing every conceivable theory for the remedy of our financial difficulties, till at length a bill providing for the deficiency in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving and for the issue of silver coin in place of fractional currency passed the House and was sent to the Senate. On April 10 Senator Sherman called up this bill, and after having explained its provisions and shown the necessity of immediate action it was put upon its passage, so that the functions of this bureau of the Treasury Department which have been for some time suspended may be resumed and a partial remedy applied to the general distress.

THIRD CLASS MAIL MATTER.

A modification of the law concerning the carrying of books, magazines, and heavy matter of all kinds by the United States mails has occupied the time of Congress. On Wednesday, April 5th, Senator Hamlin called up the bill upon this subject.

The first section declares that mailable matter of the third class shall embrace all pamphlets, occasional publications, regular publications devoted primarily to advertising purposes or for free circulation or for circulation at nominal subscription rates, prices-current, catalogues, annuals, handbills, posters, unsealed circulars, prospectuses, books bound or unbound, book-manuscripts, proof-sheets, maps, prints, engravings, blanks, flexible patterns, samples, merchandise, sample cards, phonographic paper, letter envelopes, postal envelopes and wrappers, cards, plain and ornamental paper, photographic representations, seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, scions, and all other matter which may be declared mailable by law, and all other articles not above the weight prescribed by law which are not from their form or nature liable to destroy, deface, or otherwise injure the contents of the mail-bags or the person of any one engaged in the postal service. All liquors, poisons, glass, explosive materials, and obscene books or papers shall be excluded from the mails.

Section 2 provides that packages of matter of the third class shall not exceed four pounds in weight, and shall be subject to examination and rates of postage as hereinafter provided. The postage on mail matter of the third class is to be, for all distances of one thousand miles or less, one cent for each ounce or fractional part thereof; for all distances over one thousand miles, two cents for each ounce or fractional part thereof. Every package of the third class of mail matter is to bear the post-mark of the office at which it shall be mailed for transportation.

By the third section, postages on third-class matter are to be prepaid by stamps. If, however, the postages on third-class matter mailed at an office be less than the full amount prescribed, in cases where the sender is known he shall be notified of the fact and the amount of postage due be collected from him. In case the sender is not known, and where it has not been the evident intention of the party so depositing the package to place less than full postage thereon, the package shall be forwarded, and double the amount of deficient postage shall be collected from the party to whom it is addressed or delivered at its proper destination.

Section 4 provides that the sender of any article of the third class of mail matter may write his or her name and address therein or on the outside thereof, with the word "from" above or preceding the same, or may write briefly or print on any package the number and names of the articles inclosed. Publishers of newspapers and periodicals may print on the wrappers of newspapers or magazines sent from the office of publication to regular subscribers the time to which subscription therefor has been paid.

Section 5 provides that transient newspapers and magazines shall be admitted to, and transmitted in, the mails at the rate of one cent for every three ounces or fractional part thereof, and one cent for each two additional ounces or fractional part thereof.

By section 6 the act is to take effect on and after the 1st day of July, 1876.

A number of amendments have been proposed and the question having been daily discussed by several Senators is still unfinished.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO ELECTION FUNDS.

On Tuesday, March 21st, Mr. Caulfield, from the Committee on the Judiciary, in the House, reported to the House a bill, with an amendment, making political contributions for the purposes of elections a misdemeanor, and punishing the same by fine and imprisonment. This measure has called forth a spirited discussion, and seems to be an attempt to regulate a subject so ramified and shaded off by fine degrees that any practical control of it would appear impossible. On Wednesday, March 22d, the bill was called up in the House, and, after a spirited and brilliant discussion and some amendment, was passed by a vote of 175 to 8—106 not voting.

THE LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

This bill, which is one of the largest appropriation bills for annual expenses, embracing a great variety of subjects, has been more or less daily discussed in the House for a month past. Over every department and almost every office of the Government a contest arises as to the necessity of continuing it, or, if this be conceded, as to the feasibility of cutting down the salaries and expenses pertaining to it. One of the most amusing as well as suggestive features of the debate is that which exhibits the honorable gentlemen discussing the propriety of cutting down their own salaries. This, of course, is a delicate matter, and it may turn out at last that the whole Democratic majority of the House will wheel directly about and go in for double appropriations as a measure of popularity and political effect in the country. The bill is still pending, with no prospect of conclusion.

MISSISSIPPI ELECTION.

Senator Morton, after having struggled for days and weeks to bring the deplorable state of things in Mississippi, as evinced by the last State elections, to the notice of the Senate, and after having encountered a strong opposition from Democratic Senators, has at length succeeded in obtaining the appointment of a committee of five Senators to investigate these frauds, with plenary powers to go into the State and to send for persons and papers. On Tuesday, April 4th, this committee, consisting of Messrs. Boutwell, Cameron of Wisconsin, Oglesby, Bayard, and McDonald, was appointed.

COUNTING ELECTORAL VOTES.

Early in the session Senator Morton introduced a bill providing for the counting of electoral votes for President and Vice President of the United States. It is in effect the same bill which passed the Senate in the last Congress and would no doubt obviate many of the difficulties which might prove very serious in certain contingencies. This bill has been very thoroughly discussed, and was finally passed in the Senate, Friday, March 24th. But a motion to reconsider it was subsequently made by Senator Thurman, and so the matter remains. This, no doubt, is one of the most important subjects of legislation and the final action of Congress should make such provision as will render it impossible for any serious disorder to arise in case of a contested election.

HALLET KILBOURN.

The case of this gentleman bids fair to become one of the celebrated cases of personal rights and Congressional power in the history of the country. Called before the House investigating committee on the case of what is now known as the real estate pool, he was required to produce his private books, papers, and documents that the committee might rummage them over and see if they could find anything to criminate anybody. This was on the pretext that the house of Jay Cooke & Co. having failed and being a debtor to the Government of the United States, it is legitimate to trace any transactions of the said Company with "the real estate pool" to see if any of the money belonging to the Government had been there swallowed up. No one asserted that such was the fact, nor has any one claimed a knowledge of any transaction on which such an inquiry could be based. In these circumstances Mr. Kilbourn refused to produce his books. He was brought to the bar of the House and required by its authority to produce his books or show cause for his refusal. To this demand he replied in an elaborate statement setting forth the facts of the case, at the same time signifying his willingness to answer any questions pertinent to the legitimate purpose of the investigation, and claiming the right to protection as an American citizen, under the Constitution and laws, against improper search and seizure of his person and effects. This reply was not satisfactory to the Democratic majority of the House, and they forthwith, in violation of a specific statute provided for such cases, turned him over to the sergeant-at-arms of the House to be confined in the common jail. Soon after an indictment was found against Mr. Kilbourn by the grand jury of the District of Columbia, under the statute for recusant witnesses; and then the question arose between the right and authority of the court and of the House of Representatives as to the custody of the prisoner. The House refused to turn the prisoner over to the court; whereupon the Chief Justice of the court issued a writ of habeas corpus upon the sergeant-at-arms of the House to produce the body of Mr. Kilbourn, that he may show cause, if any he has, why he should not be detained in the custody of the House. The issue of this writ and the power of the House in the premises has just been fiercely discussed in the House, and has resulted in a vote directing the sergeant-at-arms to obey the writ. Accordingly, on Tuesday, the 18th of April, Mr. Kilbourn was brought before the court to show cause why he should not be kept in the custody of the House. This is the condition of the case at the present writing.

To all unprejudiced minds the House has been acting in direct violation of an express law by which Mr. Kilbourn should have been turned over to the court; and he has thus been unlawfully confined for several weeks by the mere arbitrary will of the House. It is a case in which the rights of all citizens are involved, and ought to be a warning to the American people, who are ever jealous of such unwarranted encroachment on their constitutional prerogatives.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

During the last month the Democratic leaders in the House have been busy in preparing the articles of impeachment against the late Secretary of War, and after all the preliminaries had been arranged on Monday, April 17th, the Senate was constituted as a High Court of Impeachment, and the parties all appeared amid a great concourse of spectators. The proceedings were opened in due form and General Belknap was called to respond to the charges exhibited against him.

He answered by his counsel that he was a private citizen and denied the jurisdiction of the Senate in the premises. To this pleading the managers on the part of the House replied by requesting an adjournment of the court to Wednesday, April 19th, in order to prepare the answer of the House. Thus to-day the matter stands.

From this review it may be seen how small a portion of the necessary legislative business of the present Congress at the end of four and a half months has been accomplished. Meanwhile the country is becoming more and more demoralized and sickened. It is a strange spectacle for the thoughtful and patriotic citizens in this Centennial year of the Republic. But we still have faith in "the sober second thought" of the people. We believe in the perpetuity of our institutions and in the theory of our civilization.

REVIEW OF THE MONTH.

NATIONAL.

...It is gratifying to observe how steadily the Republican press, especially that portion of it which is sometimes sneered at by the self-righteous metropolitan journals as "provincial," keeps in mind the real character of the present campaign of slander and scandal waged under pretense of investigation by the Democratic majority of the House of Representatives. A great mistake is made in supposing that the dozen newspapers which are so euphoniously and egotistically styled the "great dailies" either lead or represent public opinion. They are sometimes able to pervert and mislead it, and sometimes, it is to be said with truth, to concentrate and intensify its force. A notable illustration of this may be recalled in the downfall of the Tweed regime mainly through the vigorous editorial assaults of the New York Times, and the very graphic and powerful satire embodied by Thomas Nast in wonderful cartoons which were, like Luther's words, "half battles." He made the crimes of Tammany so plain that the wayfaring man, though a fool, might understand. But it remains true that the editorial departments of the great dailies do not either lead or represent the average public opinion of the masses. This is true of both parties, but especially so of the Republican organization. The American people are not cavers and critics; they are creators and believers. They know well that there is not the reckless corruption charged, and a large majority have a sufficiently intelligent knowledge, of contemporaneous history at least, as to be fully aware of the fact that the affairs of the United States are, as a rule, more honestly conducted than are those of other leading nations. They know the law of cause and effect quite enough to understand how much of individual malfeasance is due to the corrupting influence of a false and speculative money-making era, and how much of it is due to the demoralizing tendencies which inevitably follow in the train of a great war. If history is philosophy teaching by example, daily journalism has become the best teacher of the inductive process the world has seen since Francis Bacon formulated his great theory into a scientific method of thought. The power of the leading dailies lies not in their editorial incubations, which, except under special conditions, have nowadays but very little weight with intelligent readers, but is found in news-gathering and news-presenting functions. Given a certain line of facts bearing on some obscure issue likely to become of importance, and let some one or more of the prominent journals present them day after day as news, apparently or actually without comment, and it will not be long before it will become apparent that the obscurity vanishes, and that the public is becoming cognizant of what they convey or teach. The power of the leading dailies, then, is no longer that of journals either of opinion or convictions, but that of the news paper only. This truth has been evident for some years past, to some at least of the more unscrupulous managers of such papers; and, as a consequence, we have witnessed the most adroit prostitution of this important function of the journalist and journal that the history even of the American press contains. It is a far more dangerous method of assault on not only party, but national character, than the editorial fashion of a former generation, so mercilessly satirized by a Trollope and a Dickens.

The people begin to understand this quite fully, and everywhere it is manifest by the care which the local press observes in sifting the facts from the insidious garb of slander and innuendo wherewith they are presented, and the hesitancy displayed in quoting, as formerly, from any one of the dozen papers whose names naturally come to our pen's tip in this connection.

THE REPUBLIC can judge fairly as to these tendencies, receiving and examining as it does over a thousand papers each week. They come from all sections, and represent various opinions, though mainly belonging to the national party. It is gratifying, therefore, to find how steadily most editors keep in view and discriminate the false and the true in the present condition of general politics. The "country" press, so called, is the best possible mirror of neighborhood opinion to be found. One statement will prove this to the dullest person. Suppose oneself to be living in an interior town of some distant State or rural district, able to subscribe to two papers and no more. What are the probabilities? Why, that one would be a daily or tri-weekly from some one of the large cities and the other the local paper.

In subscribing for the first the effort will be to obtain that paper which is most enterprising and presents the largest amount of news. This, too, without regard to its political views. At any rate, if there is a choice, it will be decided in favor of the best news paper. As to the local paper, the subscription will invariably be for that one which advocates opinions harmonious with those of the patron. Herein lies the reason for asserting that the local press best represents the average opinion. What, then, are the current opinions thus represented? They may be emphasized in this form:

A clear comprehension among all Republican and loyal newspapers, outside of the commercial center, of the fact that the vital and overshadowing issue in the pending campaign is, whether the party policies and principles which saved the Union, or those which deliberately attempted to destroy it, are or not to control its immediate future. It is clearly understood that the election in November next decides, for a decade at least, whether the pestilent doctrine of State sovereignty, with its inevitable tendencies to disruption of the Union, or that superb unifying and creative spirit and philosophy of national sovereignty which was animated into activity and vigor by the crimson forces of the struggle for liberty and union, and by which alone the Continental Republic can be preserved intact, shall be or not the permanent moulder and controller of our public affairs and administration.

Next there is equally as clear an apprehension of the necessity of honest government, the checking of abuses, the correction of systems which tend to evil results, and an honest determination to make all needed reform from within and through trusted hands—hands that have heretofore saved and never sought to destroy.

Another important fact, incidental though it be, is found in the readiness with which the Democratic thieves who are crying "stop thief" so lustily are discomfited by the reproduction of their party's own infamous record. The "country" press everywhere shows that the people know who are to be trusted by the manner in which all these pertinent facts are recalled.

...There has been a marked improvement in the tone and ability of the local press everywhere, during the past year especially. Their editors are doing their own thinking. The change in the attitude of the two Tribunes, New York and Chicago, of late years has done very much to emancipate the rural Republican journalists. In former days an editorial cue was too often implicitly followed; now, however, it is combatted. The Republican masses have not followed them since 1868; and the country press looked more to their own resources to conduct the new discussions that arose. Mr. Greeley's candidacy completed an emancipation already begun, and there is no return to the same sort of dependency that once existed.

CONGRESS.

...It is many years since the public business has dragged behind so far as at the present time. Only ten weeks of the current fiscal year remain, and not a single one of the important appropriation bills have become law. The policy which controls the Democratic majority is simply infamous in its spirit. Messrs. Randall and Holman are responsible for shaping it, and their followers are obedient, even in face of better impulses. As shown elsewhere in the present number the aim of the reductions attempted in force and salaries is not that of economy and good Government, but only to obtain a rallying cry for the canvass, or, worse still, to cripple the Administration and render it impotent to carry on the work of government. The earnestness manifested in applying party discipline and forcing the bills through the House without amendment is based upon the expectation of making party capital out of the resistance which the Republican Senate will necessarily make to such reckless legislation. The Democratic leaders and their following appear to have no other aim than that of making party capital. The Northern managers hope to repair the breaches in their fortunes constantly made by the Southern hot-spurs like Hill, Tucker, Blackburn & Co., by means of the slanderous investigations they are carrying on in secret, and though the eclat they expect to gain by their pretended economy and cutting down. They will fail of both. There never was a more pitiable illustration of demagogism than the manner in which they treat the character and reputation of gentlemen distinguished in the public service and honored in private life. It is a base and contemptible partisanship which turns aside from discussion of principles or policy and rakes the slums of slander and the sewers of defamation to assoil with filth gentlemen whose crime it is that they are political opponents, and have been or are still trusted by the American people. Secretary Bristow is the latest target. He fitly improves the malignantly discourteous spirit referred to in the following words extracted from a letter addressed by him to Representative Caulfield, of Ill., chairman of the Committee on Expenditures of the Department of Justice, before which it was reported certain accusations had been made. Mr. Bristow very pointedly writes:

"It is difficult to credit the statement that an officer of the Government who could be reached by your committee in a few minutes should be allowed to remain in ignorance of the exact character of such testimony for nearly a week, and that no opportunity to meet charges of so serious a nature should be afforded him."

...In the British House of Commons no member can be assailed in his personal or legislative honor and integrity, either by petition or direct attack on the floor, without having first been notified and being himself present and ready to respond. No petition can be read, if it makes charges against a member of either the government or the opposition, if the party assailed has not been duly notified and is present. In the American House of Representatives, however, under the guidance of the Democracy, members, either of the House or of the Executive branch of the Government, are assailed in secret, and evidence taken by inquisitorial committees from the veriest mouchards, and the first knowledge obtained by either the public or the accused is through some sensation paragraph in journals whose agents are engaged in the work of systematizing public libel. But there is a difference. In Great Britain all parties seek to conserve the honor and characters of their public men, believing that thereby the national reputation is ennobled. In America it would seem to be a Democratic rule never to avoid an opportunity to blacken the reputation of a public man, provided only he is not a Democrat, no matter what may be the effect of the slander on personal or national character.

...Two important issues are on trial at the present writing. One is involved in the impeachment proceedings against Mr. Belknap, and the other in those against Mr. Kilbourn over the writ of habeas corpus issued by Chief Justice Cartter, of the District Supreme Court. In the first, apart altogether from the questions of fact and personal or official character which are involved, an important precedent is to be made, and the Senate, sitting in its high judicial character, will decide whether or not a citizen can, now or hereafter, escape trial by impeachment by resigning an office pending the examination into alleged malfeasance and corruption. In the other case it is to be considered whether or not the Congress of the United States is the only function or body in this Government wherein rests absolute power, even though it is restrained only to the imprisoning of a contumacious witness. The President can exercise the power of pardon on his own will and motion, but he may be impeached for its misuse or abuse. The Supreme Court has the power of review, and may declare laws to be unconstitutional, thereby nullifying the work of legislation, but its members may be impeached, or Congress may so legislate as to increase their numbers or otherwise modify the adverse dicta, by changing the personnel or duties of the court itself. But the plea of the extreme defenders of parliamentary power would, in cases like that of Kilbourn, leave no review or recourse except that of the popular vote. It is to be noted that the larger portion of the votes given in support of legislative omnipotence come from the Democratic supporters of the extreme States' rights school. This fact illustrates a criticism often made on them, and that is, that when in control of the Federal Government or any portion thereof they have always been found ready to strain their powers to the utmost.

STATE AND MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS.

...The result in Connecticut could not have been unexpected by any close observer of current politics. The Republican canvass seems to have been characterized chiefly by indifference and want of skill in conducting a campaign. The Democracy shrewdly concentrated themselves on the doubtful towns in order to secure the Legislature, the election of a United States Senator being in the balances. In this policy they were successful, gaining 22, and carrying all but eight of the doubtful towns and districts. The total vote this year was but 99,600, as against 100,966 in 1875, or 1,366 less. The Republican vote was 43,516, or 1,236 less than in '75; the total Democratic vote was 51,136, or 2,132 less than the year before. The greenback vote was 2,038; the prohibition 1,910—a total "parasite" vote of 3,948. The voting population of Connecticut cannot be less than 137,000 at the present time, adding the natural increase since 1870, when, according to the census, it was 127,499. On this estimate the recent vote was 37,400 less than the full vote of the State. One fact should be noticed, and that is that the Republican vote increased in all the large towns. A canvass half as active as that in New Hampshire would have given the Nutmeg State to the Republican candidates, and the grounds whereon that statement is based justify belief in a Republican victory there next November.

[It is proper at this point to correct a blunder accidentally made in a table contained in an article to be found elsewhere in this number of THE REPUBLIC on the New Hampshire election. The male adult population of Connecticut is set down, by a mistake in copying, at 265,270. It should be 150,415.—Ed.]

...The election in Rhode Island resulted in a large Republican majority to the Legislature, but no election of Governor by the people. The majority last year against the Republican nominee, General Lippitt, was 5,522. This year he has a considerable plurality, and will be chosen Governor by the Legislature, which is five-sixths Republican, and likely to return its present influential and accomplished Senator, H. B. Anthony, to the seat he so well fills. The vote stood,

Lippitt, 8,212; Howard, (temperance) 6,277; Beach, (Democrat) 3,472; a total vote of 17,961. The total vote for Secretary of State (only two candidates) was 18,334. The Legislature stands:

	Repub.	Dem.
Senate	27	9
House	63	9
Total	90	18

Republican majority on joint ballot, 72.

...From every quarter the municipal elections have been largely favorable to the Republicans. In 45 counties of New York the returns show a gain in supervisors of 186, and of 133 towns over similar elections in 1875. During April, the Republicans carried the municipal elections in Jersey City; Lockport, N. Y; Cleveland, Dayton, Toledo, and Columbus, Ohio, the latter city for the first time. In Cincinnati "honors were easy," the Democrats electing a majority of the aldermen and board of works, the Republicans a majority of the common council and school board. About one-third more of the municipal elections in Ohio went Republican than usual; a number of Democratic towns were divided. Atchison and Topeka, Kansas, were carried by the Republicans, the former having usually been close or uncertain. At Denver, Colorado, the mayor elect is a Democrat, a majority of the aldermen being Republicans. In the Illinois elections the Republicans gain considerably, especially in the South and West. The Chicago city election was fiercely contested. It was crowned by a Republican triumph. In Michigan the result is the same, party lines being closely drawn. At Albany, New York, the result was a divided election. The election at St. Louis was non-political in character, and the nominees were nearly evenly divided. In nearly all the close or divided municipal contests it is a noteworthy fact that the school boards invariably remain in Republican hands.

STATE CONVENTIONS.

...The Republican State Convention of New York, meeting at Syracuse March 22d, attracted very general attention, owing not only to the high representative character of its membership, but also as to the earnest discussion over the question of a direct presentation of the name of Senator Conkling as the choice of the Empire State Republicans for President. Mr. G. W. Curtis led the opposition, and made a very brilliant and able speech. The Convention finally adopted a resolution presenting the name of Mr. Conkling to the Cincinnati Convention. The resolutions adopted reaffirmed Republican principles, charged the Democracy with reasserting and applauding the sentiments of unrepentant rebellion, with sending Union soldiers to the rear and promoting Confederate soldiers to the front, with deliberately proposing to repudiate the plighted faith of the Government, with being equally false and imbecile upon the overshadowing financial questions, with thwarting the ends of justice by its partisan mismanagement and obstruction of investigation, with proving itself utterly incompetent to administer the Government, and warned the country against trusting a party alike unworthy, recreant, and incapable. A resolution warmly commending the President was adopted.

...The Pennsylvania Democrats met at Lancaster on the 22d of March. A platform was adopted demanding general amnesty, and stating that the statute for the resumption of specie payment on the first day of January, 1879, is impossible, and ought to be forthwith repealed. The name of Jeremiah S. Black as a candidate for President was laid on the table. The delegation was not instructed.

...Gov. Hendricks was indorsed as a Presidential candidate by the Indiana Democratic Convention, and the following State ticket put in nomination: For Governor, James D. Williams; Lieutenant Governor, Isaac P. Grey; Judge of the Supreme Court—1st district, S. H. Buskirk; 2d district, A. G. Downey; 3d district, John Pettit; 4th district, James L. Worden; Secretary of State, John E. Neff; Auditor, E. Henderson; Treasurer, Benjamin C. Shaw; Attorney General, C. A. Buskirk; Superintendent of Public Instruction, J. H. Smart; Clerk of Supreme Court, Gabriel Schmuck; Reporter of Supreme Court, Augustus N. Martin. The platform favored the Holman money policy, and demanded the repeal of the resumption act.

...The Ohio Republicans have indorsed Governor Hayes as their choice for the Presidency, and placed the following nominations before the people: Secretary of State, Milton F. Barnes; Supreme Judge, W.W. Boynton; Member Board of Public Works, James C. Evans; Presidential Electors, Aaron E. Perry and E. H. Bohm.

The resolutions adopted sustain the Republican party, its national policy, and the Administration; demand that corruption be exposed and punished; the national credit be maintained; currency placed on a gold basis; favors a revenue tariff with incidental protection, and defends the free-school system. The second resolution reads, that the citizens of the several States of the Union are also citizens of the Nation, and are equal under the Constitution and laws in all rights of citizens, and are entitled to full and equal protection in their exercise. Among the delegates at large to Cincinnati are ex-Senator Wade and Gen. B. F. Noyes.

...The Eleventh Annual Labor Congress met at Pittsburg April 18th. One hundred and forty-five delegates were present. John M. Davis was elected President. The platform adopted urges the necessity of revoking the Burlingame treaty, characterizing its effects as little better than slave trade, and requests Congress, in order to give the co-operative scheme a fair trial, to select some branch of industry, such as that of miners and iron-workers, to which to apply such system, and appropriate therefor a loan, payable in twenty years, at a low rate of interest, not exceeding three per cent. It demands a strong protective tariff, and asks that duties be such as to protect home industry against foreign competition; declares in favor of the election of President of the United States by the popular vote of the people; demands the strict enforcement of the eight-hour law and of Congress of the enactment of stringent usury laws; heartily condemns the "store-order" system, as practiced by manufacturers, and also the prison contract system of labor; asks that Congress shall enact laws to give money due for labor precedence over all other claims; that Governments, both State and National, shall pass laws against all discriminations by common carriers, under penalty of forfeiture of charter; recommends a liberal system of internal improvement, and urges upon different State legislatures to pass such apprentice laws as will insure competent workmen in every branch of industry. After considerable discussion the convention declared against the organization of a third political party, but appealed to all workingmen to unite so as to attain the advancement of the class through existing political parties. The power of calling future conventions was delegated to a committee appointed for that purpose, and after passing a vote of thanks to the officers the convention adjourned sine die.

POLITICAL CONVENTIONS FOR MAY.

May 4.—Maryland Republican Convention, Frederick City.

May 10.—Michigan Republican Convention, Grand Rapids.

May 10.—Independent Reform Convention, Des Moines, Iowa.

May 16.—Alabama Republican Convention, Montgomery.

May 17.—National Greenback Convention, Indianapolis, Indiana.

May 17.—National Prohibition Convention, Cleveland, Ohio.

May 17.—Tennessee Republican Convention, Knoxville.

May 18.—Delaware Republican Convention, Dover.

May 18.—Kentucky Republican Convention, Louisville.

May 23.—Nebraska Republican Convention, Fremont.

May 24.—Kansas Republican Convention, Topeka.

May 24.—California Democratic Convention, San Francisco.

May 24.—Alabama Republican Convention, Montgomery. (Minority call.)

May 24.—Illinois Republican Convention, Springfield.

May 31.—Missouri Democratic Convention, Jefferson City.

REPUBLICAN CANDIDATES.

...Political observers and workers will find the following of use:

States.	Electoral vote.	Delegation instructed for.	Candidate approved.
Maine.....	14	Blaine.....
Wisconsin ..	20	Blaine.....
Indiana.....	30	Morton.....
New York...	70	Conkling.....
Pennsylv'a..	54	Hartranft.....
Ohio.....	44	Hayes.....
Virginia.....	22	Blaine.....
Mississippi..	16	Unin-
Texas.....	16	structed
Connecticut.	12	"
Vermont....	10	"
S. Carolina...	14	"
Rhode Island	8	"
Dist. of Col..	2	"
Wyoming Ty	2	Bristow.....
Montana Ty.	2	Blaine.....
Colorado Ty.	2	"

The above list includes all the conventions up to date, April 20th.

EXECUTIVE AND DEPARTMENT DOINGS.

THE EXECUTIVE.

CLERK AT THE EXECUTIVE MANSION.

Mr. C. L. Chapman, one of the most efficient clerks of the pay department of the army, has been detailed by the Secretary of War for service as executive clerk at the Executive Mansion. Mr. Chapman excels in penmanship, and possesses the ability of writing rapidly as well as beautifully. He will have abundant opportunities for the display of his powers in his new office.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

NATIONAL DEBT STATEMENT FOR MARCH.

The following is a recapitulation of the debt statement issued on April 1 :

Debt bearing interest in coin:
Bonds at 6 per cent.....	$984,999,650 00
Bonds at 5 per cent.....	710,037,600 00
	$1,695,037,250 00

Debt bearing interest in lawful money:
Navy pension fund at 3 per cent,	$14,000,000 00

Debt on which interest has ceased since maturity.....	$9,183,360 26

Debt bearing no interest:
Old demand and legal-tender
notes.....	$370,823,645 50
Certificates of deposit.....	34,230,000 00
Fractional currency.....	42,604,893 71
Coin certificates.....	32,337,600 00
	$479,996,139 21

Total debt.....	$2,198,216,749 47
-----------------	--------------------

Interest.....	$26,455,110 94
---------------	-----------------

Total debt, principal and interest	$2,224,671,860 41

Cash in Treasury:
Coin.....	$73,756,794 42
Currency.....	5,965,626 11
Special deposit held for redemption of certificates of deposit
as provided by law.....	34,230,000 00
	$113,952,420 53

Debt, less cash in the Treasury
April 1, 1876.....	$2,110,719,439 88

Debt, less cash in the Treasury
March 1, 1876.....	2,114,960,306 80

Decrease of debt during the past month.....	$4,240,866,92

Decrease of debts since June 30, 1875	$17,969,286 44
---------------------------------------	------------------------

Bonds issued to the Pacific railway compa- nies, interest payable in lawful money—Prin- cipal outstanding, $64,623,512; interest accrued and not yet paid, $969,352.68; interest paid by the United States, $30,141,513.06; interest re- paid by transportation of mails, &c., $6,781,012. 55; balance of interest paid by the United States, $23,360,500.50.

U. S. CURRENCY IN CIRCULATION.

The following is an official statement of United States currency outstanding March 31, 1876 :

Old demand notes	$68,397 50
Legal-tender notes:
New issue	$29,678,748 00
Series 1869.....	238,981,212 00
Series 1874.....	61,749,777 00
Series 1875.....	40,345,511 00
	370,755,248 00
One-year notes, 1863... ..	62,695 00
Two-year notes, 1863... ..	19,450 00
Two-year coupon notes
1863	28,000 00
	108,145 00
Compound interest
notes	340,420 00
	340,420 00
Fractional currency:
First issue.....	4,297,610 46
Second issue.....	8,119,186 99
Third issue.....	3,086,071 34
Fourth issue, first
series	4,788,490 24
Fourth issue, second
series.....	1,218,034 05
Fourth issue, third
series.....	2,860,062 75
Fifth issue.....	23,235,437 88
	42,604,893 71
Total.....	$413,877,104 21

COINAGE FOR MARCH.

	Pieces.	Value.
Gold—
Double eagles.....	188,974	$3,679,480
Half eagles.....	4,000	20,000
	187,974	$3,699,480
Silver—
Trade dollars.....	728,200	$728,200
Half dollars	78,200	39,100
Quarter dollars.....	2,672,200	668,050
Twenty cents	10,200	2,040
Dimes	3,290,200	329,029
	6,779,000	$1,766,410
Minor—
Cents.....	1,470,000	14,700

Recapitulation.

	Pieces.	Value.
Gold coinage
Trade dollar.....	728,200	$728,200
Subsidiary silver	6,050,800	1,038,210
Minor	1,470,000	14,700
	8,436,974	$5,480,580

IMMIGRATION INTO NEW YORK.

Official returns made to the Bureau of Sta- tistics show that during the month ended March 31, 1876, there arrived at the port of New York 4,881 immigrants, of whom 3,400 were males and 1,481 females. The total number of arrivals at the port during the quarter ended March 31, 1876, was 9,056, as compared with 12,449 during the corresponding period of 1875—being a decrease of 3,393. Of the total arrivals in March, 1876, there were from England, 1,068; Scotland, 209; Wales, 15; Ireland, 691; Germany, 1,732; Austria, 229; Sweden, 114; Norway, 6; Denmark, 59; Switzerland, 67; Spain, 8; Italy, 217; Holland, 70; Belgium, 13; Russia, 47; Poland, 27; Hungary, 84; China, 9; Canada, 6; Nova Scotia, 3; Mexico, 5; Venezuela, 4; Cuba, 5; Chili, Barbadoes, Curacao, and Asia, 2 each; Portugal, Finland, Turkey, Greece, West Indies, Antigua, Nassau, Bermuda, Persia, Australia, Africa and born at sea, 1 each.

REFUND OF DUTIES.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 18, 1876.

To Collectors of Customs and others:

The Department has been informed that there is a lack of uniformity at the various ports in the manner of refunding duties levied in excess on imported merchandise.

To render the practice uniform, it is hereby directed that, when duties have been once liquidated and paid, no refund of any portion of such duties, decided by this Department, on appeal, to have been exacted in excess of the amount imposed by law, shall be made, except on certified statement forwarded to the Department, for examination and settlement by the accounting officers, according to the usual course of procedure.

B. H. BRISTOW, Secretary.

ACCURATE STATISTICS OF EXPORTS REQUIRED.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 21, 1876.

To Collectors of Customs:

The attention of the Department has been called to the imperfection of the statistics of our exports, which is said to arise from erroneous manifests, shippers often clearing only approximate amounts of the goods on board, notwithstanding the penalty attached to such violations of law.

In order to put an end to such practices, and to obtain full and accurate statistics of the exports of domestic and other merchandise to foreign countries from your port, you are directed to require the masters and shippers of such goods to comply strictly with the Regulations of 1874, (Art. 964.) And in the case of those lines of steamers sailing under special regulations with a view to avoid detention and to facilitate their business generally, you will see that correct manifests of the cargoes they take shall be lodged at the custom-house.

It is important that every effort should be made, under the law, to render our statistics of this trade as perfect as practicable, and it is your duty to assist in making them so. The Department, therefore, expresses the hope that you, and the other officers of the port, will exercise due vigilance and remove all cause of complaint in the future.

B. H. BRISTOW, Secretary.

INSTRUCTIONS CONCERNING THE ISSUE OF SILVER COIN OF THE UNITED STATES IN PLACE OF FRACTIONAL CURRENCY.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

Washington, D. C., April 18, 1876.

By virtue of the authority vested in the Secretary of the Treasury by the second section of an act entitled "An act to provide for a deficiency in the Printing and Engraving Bureau of the Treasury Department, and for the issue of silver coin of the United States in place of fractional currency," approved April 17, 1876, the several officers below named are hereby authorized, upon the presentation at their respective offices, for redemption, of the fractional currency of the United States, in sums of five dollars, or multiples thereof, assorted by denominations, and in amount not to exceed one hundred dollars, to issue therefor a like amount of the silver coin of the United States of the denominations of ten, twenty, twenty-five, and fifty cents; and furthermore, upon the presentation for redemption, at the office of the Treasurer of the United States in this city, of any amount of such currency, properly assorted, and in sums of not less than five dollars, the Treasurer is authorized to issue silver coin therefor to the amount of the currency presented, or he may issue his check therefor, payable in silver at either of the offices hereinafter named, at the option of the party presenting the currency, as far as may be practicable, from time to time.

Fractional currency redeemed in silver under these instructions by any of the assistant treasurers or designated depositaries of the United States will be sent in sums of one thousand dollars, or multiples thereof, to the Treasurer of the United States in this city, the amount to be charged in the Treasurer's general coin account as a transfer of funds, and any amount of such currency, for which silver has been paid, remaining at any time in the cash of the several offices will be treated as coin assets, and in no case will such fractional currency be reissued.

Fractional currency sent by express, or otherwise, to the officers below-named for redemption in silver, under the provisions of this circular, should be accompanied by a letter of advice, stating fully the address of the sender, and how the remittance in payment therefor is desired, and, if by Treasurer's check, the office at which the check should be made payable.

The Government will not pay express charges on the silver issued, or the fractional currency presented for redemption under the provisions of this circular.

The officers herein referred to are as follows:

The Treasurer of the United States, Washington, D. C.

The Assistant Treasurer of the United States, Boston, Mass.

The Assistant Treasurer of the United States, New York City, N. Y.

The Assistant Treasurer of the United States, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Assistant Treasurer of the United States, St. Louis, Mo.

The Assistant Treasurer of the United States, Charleston, S. C.

The Assistant Treasurer of the United States, New Orleans, La.

The Assistant Treasurer of the United States, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Assistant Treasurer of the United States, Chicago, Illinois.

The Assistant Treasurer of the United States, San Francisco, Cal.

The Assistant Treasurer of the United States, Baltimore, Md.

The United States Depositary, Buffalo, N. Y.

The United States Depositary, Pittsburg, Pa.

B. H. BRISTOW, Secretary.

COLLECTION OF TEN PER CENT. ADDITIONAL DUTIES.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 25, 1876.

To Collectors of Customs and others:

The following instructions are issued for the information and guidance of customs officers:

1. Upon the expiration of one year from the date of importation of merchandise remaining in warehouse under bond, the collector and naval officer, if there be one, will cause a memorandum to be made in red ink upon the debit side of the bond account in the warehouse ledger, showing the amount of additional duties which would accrue upon the withdrawal of such merchandise for consumption.

2. In case of the withdrawal of such merchandise, or any portion thereof, for transportation to another port, a memorandum of the ten per cent. additional duties will be made upon the transportation entry sent to the collector of the port of destination, such memorandum to be entered upon his warehouse ledger in the manner above prescribed.

3. When merchandise has remained in warehouse beyond three years, and is sold pursuant to the provisions of Section 2972 of the Revised Statutes the ten per cent. additional duties will be added to and included in the duties, charges, and expenses required to be deducted from proceeds of sale before payment thereof to the owner, consignee, or agent, of such merchandise, the Department having heretofore decided that the sale of such merchandise at public auction after three years is equivalent to a withdrawal thereof for consumption after one year, and, hence, that the additional duty necessarily accrues, and must be deducted from the proceeds as provided in Article 764, General Regulations.

B. H. BRISTOW, Secretary.

ATTORNEYS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 11, 1876.

In order to secure uniformity of practice throughout the several offices and bureaus connected with this Department, hereafter no person will be prohibited from practicing as an attorney before any such office or bureau, except upon the order of the Secretary.

CHAS. F. CONANT,
Acting Secretary.

KEEPERS AND CREWS OF LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

In view of the recent disaster near life-saving station No. 4, district No. 6, North Carolina, at the wreck of the Italian bark Nuova Ottavia, off Currituck beach, in which the keeper and his crew of five of the surfmen belonging to the station, and one volunteer from the party engaged in constructing the lighthouse at Whale's Back, in addition to nine of the crew of the Nuova Ottavia were drowned, the Treasury Department calls the attention of keepers and surfmen to the importance of always wearing, when using the boats, the cork life-belts furnished for them. While commending the brave and eager spirit of the crews, the Secretary enjoins prudence in availing themselves of all the means provided for success in their perilous service, and says: "Keepers are strictly charged to see that every member of their respective crews is properly equipped with his life-belt before taking his place in the boat on occasion, and they will be held responsible for any infraction of this order."

WAR DEPARTMENT.ARMY HEADQUARTERS.

The order issued from the War Department transferring army headquarters from St. Louis to Washington has been amended so as to direct the Adjutant General and Inspector General to report to the General of the Army. The following is the order, as amended :

WAR DEPARTMENT,

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 6, 1876.

The Adjutant General will promulgate the following order for the information and guidance of all concerned :

The headquarters of the army is hereby re-established at Washington city, and all orders and instructions relative to military operations or affecting the military control and discipline of the army held by the President through the Secretary of War shall be promulgated through the General of the army, and the departments of the Adjutant General and the Inspector General shall report to him and be made under his control in all things relating thereto.

ALPHONSO TAFT, Secretary of War.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.GREAT INCREASE OF BUSINESS IN THE PATENT OFFICE.

The receipts at the Patent Office for January, February, and March of the present year were, respectively, $72,070.40, $74,651.62, and $80,459.07, making an aggregate of $227,181.09. This is, by far, the largest amount of money received in any one quarter since the office was established, and the earnings of each of the three months are larger than those of any of its predecessors. The greatest number of patents ever issued in any one week was 482 for the week ending Tuesday, February 22, 1876. The balance standing to the credit of the patent fund on the books of the Treasury Department January 1, 1876, was $886,909.62, and must, at the present time, be not short of $900,000.

To show the astonishing increase of the business of the Patent Office, it is only necessary to make a few comparisons. The whole number of patents issued in the year 1840 was 473, being nine less than the issue of the week in February above referred to. The entire receipts for the year 1849 were $80,752.98, being only about $300 more than the amount received during the past month.

In view of the foregoing facts and figures, which have been obtained from official sources, will not Congress be liable to cripple the capabilities of the only profitable bureau of the Government, and of throwing obstacles in the way of the inventive minds of the country if it gives its approval to the reductions in the Patent Office contemplated by the appropriation bill now under consideration in the House of Representatives?

THE NEW PENSION COMMISSIONER.

Hon. John A. Bentley, the newly-appointed Commissioner of Pensions, assumed his duties on April 1st. Mr. Bentley is one of the foremost lawyers of Wisconsin, was formerly attorney for the Sheboygan railroad, served four terms in the State Senate, and has held many other prominent and responsible positions. Those who have the pleasure of his acquaintance say that a better selection could hardly have been made.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT. FEES, ETC., OF THE MONEY-ORDER OFFICES NOT REVENUE OF THE UNITED STATES.

In the case of the United States against Norton the Supreme Court of the United States held that the money-order act being expressly intended for the convenience of the public, and for the better security of money sent through the mail, and directing that all moneys transferred in the administration of the act should be regarded as money in the Treasury, fees, etc., received in such offices were not revenues within the meaning of the act of 1804; and that therefore Norton, who was indicted for embezzlement of such moneys in the New York office, could not be tried under that act, which prescribed a limitation of five years; and that, as the indictment was not within two years from the date of the offense, it could not be tried under the act of 1790; so Norton goes free. Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion.

THE RIGHT OF EMINENT DOMAIN IN THE UNITED STATES.

In the case of Kohl and others against the United States it was held that the Government of the United States is vested with the right of eminent domain by the Constitution, so far as is necessary to enable it to acquire real estate within the States for purposes of forts, arsenals, armories, post offices, etc., and that a citizen or a State cannot be permitted by any act to prevent the exercise of this power.

HERE IT IS! JUST WHAT YOU WANT!

IT HAS BEEN ADOPTED BY THE PENSION BUREAU, SECOND AUDITOR, THIRD AUDITOR, AND SECOND COMPTROLLER, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

AN ALPHABETICAL LIST

OF THE

Battles of the War of the Rebellion, WITH DATES,

COMPILED FROM THE

OFFICIAL RECORDS

OF THE OFFICES OF THE

Adjutant-General and the Surgeon-General, U. S. A.

Giving the number killed, wounded, and missing in each of the important battles; Union troops engaged; names of the Generals killed and wounded in both armies. Also the total number of enlistments, number discharged, number wounded, number missing, number of deaths, number killed in battle, number of graves. Number of troops in the Mexican War, 1846-1848, number killed and wounded, number died of wounds. An Alphabetical list of the Revolutionary battles, with dates; also the number killed and wounded in each battle. With a complete Synopsis of

THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS.

Price 50 Cents. Liberal reduction will be made to Dealers.

Address

N. A. STRAIT,

Box 460, WASHINGTON, D. C.

REFERENCES.—Hon. H. M. Atkinson, Commissioner of Pensions; Hon. H. B. Strait, M. C., 2d Minn. Dist.; Samuel Ramsey, Esq., Chief Clerk Surgeon-General's Office, U. S. A.; Darling & Soule, Publishers and Proprietors of the U. S. Record and Gazette, Washington, D. C.

SAVE MONEY

By sending $4.75 for any $4.00 Magazine and THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE, (regular price $6.00,) or $5.75 for the Magazine and THE SEMI-WEEKLY TRIBUNE, (regular price $3.00.) Address

THE TRIBUNE, New York.

$77

A WEEK guaranteed to Male and Female Agents in their locality. Costs NOTHING to try it. Particulars free. P. O. VICKERY & CO., Augusta, Maine.

$5 to $20

per day at home. Samples worth $1.00 free. STINSON, & CO., Portland, Maine.

SEND 25 cents to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3,000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

$12

a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

UNITED STATES OFFICIAL POSTAL GUIDE.

Revised and Published Quarterly by Authority of the Post-Office Department.

NO. 4 FOR OCTOBER NOW READY,

CONTAINING

TWO ALPHABETICAL LISTS of all the Post Offices in the United States.

LISTS OF MONEY ORDER and Letter Carrier Offices.

FULL DIRECTIONS about Money Orders and Registered Letters.

RATES of Foreign and Domestic Postage.

HOURS OF ARRIVAL, AND CLOSING of Mails in all the Principal Cities.

DISTANCES by shortest Mail Routes between the Principal Cities.

RULINGS of the Post-Office Department during the last quarter, including

THE NEW LAW about postage on Third Class Matter, and

All the information required by those who use the Mails.

TERMS: Single copies, 50 cents; for sale at the News Stands and Book Stores. Subscriptions, $1.50 a year, received at any Post-Office, or on application to the publishers.

H. O. HOUGHTON AND COMPANY,

HURD

WAR DEPARTMENT.ARMY HEADQUARTERS.

The order issued from the War Department transferring army headquarters from St. Louis to Washington has been amended so as to direct the Adjutant General and Inspector General to report to the General of the Army. The following is the order, as amended :

WAR DEPARTMENT,

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 6, 1876.

The Adjutant General will promulgate the following order for the information and guidance of all concerned :

The headquarters of the army is hereby re-established at Washington city, and all orders and instructions relative to military operations or affecting the military control and discipline of the army held by the President through the Secretary of War shall be promulgated through the General of the army, and the departments of the Adjutant General and the Inspector General shall report to him and be made under his control in all things relating thereto.

ALPHONSO TAFT, Secretary of War.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.GREAT INCREASE OF BUSINESS IN THE PATENT OFFICE.

The receipts at the Patent Office for January, February, and March of the present year were, respectively, $72,070.40, $74,651.62, and $80,459.07, making an aggregate of $227,181.09. This is, by far, the largest amount of money received in any one quarter since the office was established, and the earnings of each of the three months are larger than those of any of its predecessors. The greatest number of patents ever issued in any one week was 482 for the week ending Tuesday, February 22, 1876. The balance standing to the credit of the patent fund on the books of the Treasury Department January 1, 1876, was $886,909.62, and must, at the present time, be not short of $900,000.

To show the astonishing increase of the business of the Patent Office, it is only necessary to make a few comparisons. The whole number of patents issued in the year 1840 was 473, being nine less than the issue of the week in February above referred to. The entire receipts for the year 1849 were $80,752.98, being only about $300 more than the amount received during the past month.

In view of the foregoing facts and figures, which have been obtained from official sources, will not Congress be liable to cripple the capabilities of the only profitable bureau of the Government, and of throwing obstacles in the way of the inventive minds of the country if it gives its approval to the reductions in the Patent Office contemplated by the appropriation bill now under consideration in the House of Representatives?

THE NEW PENSION COMMISSIONER.

Hon. John A. Bentley, the newly-appointed Commissioner of Pensions, assumed his duties on April 1st. Mr. Bentley is one of the foremost lawyers of Wisconsin, was formerly attorney for the Sheboygan railroad, served four terms in the State Senate, and has held many other prominent and responsible positions. Those who have the pleasure of his acquaintance say that a better selection could hardly have been made.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT. FEES, ETC., OF THE MONEY-ORDER OFFICES NOT REVENUE OF THE UNITED STATES.

In the case of the United States against Norton the Supreme Court of the United States held that the money-order act being expressly intended for the convenience of the public, and for the better security of money sent through the mail, and directing that all moneys transferred in the administration of the act should be regarded as money in the Treasury, fees, etc., received in such offices were not revenues within the meaning of the act of 1804; and that therefore Norton, who was indicted for embezzlement of such moneys in the New York office, could not be tried under that act, which prescribed a limitation of five years; and that, as the indictment was not within two years from the date of the offense, it could not be tried under the act of 1790; so Norton goes free. Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion.

THE RIGHT OF EMINENT DOMAIN IN THE UNITED STATES.

In the case of Kohl and others against the United States it was held that the Government of the United States is vested with the right of eminent domain by the Constitution, so far as is necessary to enable it to acquire real estate within the States for purposes of forts, arsenals, armories, post offices, etc., and that a citizen or a State cannot be permitted by any act to prevent the exercise of this power.

HERE IT IS! JUST WHAT IT HAS BEEN ADOPTED BY THE PENSION BUREAU, AUDITOR, AND SECOND COMPTROLLER,

AN ALPHABETIC
OF THE Battles of the War of
WITH DA
COMPILED FROM THE OFFICIAL RE
OF THE OFFICES OF THE

Adjutant-General and the Surg

Giving the number killed, wounded, and missing in Union troops engaged; names of the Generals armies. Also the total number of enlistments number wounded, number missing, number of battle number of graves. Number of War, 1846-1848, number killed and wounded of wounds. An Alphabetical list of battles, with dates; also the number killed in each battle. With a complete

THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER

Price 50 Cents. Liberal reduction

Address N. A. STRONG

REFERENCES.—Hon. H. M. Atkinson, Commissioner of Pensions; Dist.; Samuel Ramsey, Esq., Chief Clerk Surgeon-General's Office; and Proprietors of the U. S. Record and Gazette, Washington, SAVE MONEY UNI

PO

By sending $4.75 for any $4.00 Magazine and THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE, (regular price $6.00,) or $5.75 for the Magazine and THE SEMI-WEEKLY TRIBUNE, (regular price $3.00.) Address

THE TRIBUNE, New York.

$77 A WEEK guaranteed to Male and Female Agents in their locality. Costs NOTHING to try it. Particulars free. P. O.
VICKERY & CO., Augusta,
Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth
$1.00 free. STINSON, & CO.,
Portland, Maine.

SEND 25 cents to G. P. ROWELL & CO.,
New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3,000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

$12 a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

UNI
PO Revis

TWO AD-Offices LISTS OF Offices.
FULL D
Register RATES OF HOURS in all th DISTANCE Princip RULING
the last
THE NE Matter,
All the in

TERMS
News Sta
a year, re to the pul
H. O.
HURD

1876.

Vol. 6.

PREMIUMS.

Vol. 6.

THE REPUBLIC MAGAZINE,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Terms - - - - $2 Per Year, in Advance.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A

CLUB OF TEN SUBSCRIBERS FOR THE CURRENT YEAR AND $20,

The publishers will forward, free of cost and postage,

A Complete Set—Three Volumes—of the Republic,

HANDSOMELY BOUND, WITH INDEX.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A

CLUB OF FIFTEEN SUBSCRIBERS AND $30,

A Complete Set—First Four Volumes—of the Republic.

TO THE PERSON SENDING

THE LARGEST CLUB IN ANY MONTH,

BEING MORE THAN FIFTEEN,

A COMPLETE SET, INCLUDING THE FIFTH VOLUME,

Which closes with the December number of 1875, all neatly bound, with index, and free of cost or postage.

These propositions afford an opportunity to acquire, with little effort, the best text book extant on the science of government.

Specimen copies and prospectus will, on request, be sent free to those desiring to raise clubs.

ADDRESS

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

2
2
2419
HAT
SINGLE COPIES, 25 CENTS.

THE REPUBLIC:

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

DEVOTED TO

THE DISSEMINATION OF POLITICAL INFORMATION.

Vol. VI.—No. 4.

APRIL, 1876.

Whole No. 38.

Contents:

	PAGE
Jenks' Baby.....	209
Treason on Wheels.....	216
Republican Expenditures—Democratic Retrenchment.....	222
The Tariff—Does Protection Protect?	225
Relations of the State to Religion and the Public Schools	231
The Truth of History and the Horrors of Andersonville.....	235
Toombs and the Scalawag.....	240
Mineral Wealth of the United States.....	244
Rebel Cotton Claims—Past and Prospective Treasury Raids.....	249
The Confederate Leaders in Congress.....	252
A Model Democratic Robbery—Its Perpetrators Unpunished.....	259
The Work of the Forty-fourth Congress	260
Review of the Month.....	266
Executive and Department Doings.....	270

PUBLISHED BY

THE REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

$2 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

1876.

PROSPECTUS. Vol. 6.

THE REPUBLIC,

A Political Science Monthly Magazine.

THE REPUBLIC begins its sixth volume with the Centennial year, January, 1876.

It has grown in public favor, and has received substantial encouragement from every State and Territory in the Union.

Its early promises have been made good. Its pages have been filled with political information, with the suggestions of wisdom growing out of experience, with facts and figures carefully arranged, making a fund of knowledge, of itself, a valuable text-book to all interested in Governmental affairs.

In view of the Presidential election, which takes place in 1876, the REPUBLIC desires to increase its field of usefulness by adding to its list of subscribers. It already numbers among its readers, many of the most thoughtful and intelligent citizens of the country. The deep interest expressed by them in the work, is to the publishers, evidence of an appreciation that thousands of others would entertain of the REPUBLIC, could it be brought to their attention. Will not our friends take upon themselves the slight labor of inviting other good citizens to add their names and their influence to a magazine that is published in the interest of public morality and good government.

In the future, as in the past, the REPUBLIC will advocate an honest administration of Government, whether municipal, State or National.

It will favor loyalty, honesty, economy, and personal ability as pre-requisites for office.

It will give credit where credit is due; and impartial criticism whenever required.

It will seek to hold up intelligence as the safeguard to National safety, and will defend our free-school system as essential to its preservation.

It will advocate improvements, that experience may commend, in the education of the young; but will oppose all efforts to divide the public-school funds, or to introduce into the schools sectarian influences.

It will advocate the perpetuation of the Republican party as the best, if not the only means to secure the preservation of the Union, and the impartial execution of the laws.

It will labor earnestly to bring about such reforms as the spirit of progress may demand, and in all things seek to present those methods of administration, which the wisdom and experience of a century have confirmed.

It will give to its readers a clear insight into the various branches of Government, by a faithful record of their doings.

These are among the leading features of the work to which the REPUBLIC is devoted. It pledges anew its best energies to make the Centennial volumes worthy the Nation it serves, and the year it enters upon.

To the Republican press of the country, co-laborers in the grand mission of preserving good government, the REPUBLIC sends greeting and thanks. If increased activity can merit a continuation of the good will expressed, our brethren of the press will still extend their hands in generous welcome. The Presidential campaign will bring upon all, increased responsibilities and new demands. The REPUBLIC will bear its share and perform its duty without fear or favor, keeping ever in view, that the highest reward that patriotism can win, is the consciousness that its efforts have advanced civilization and contributed to the cause of good government.

TERMS:

THE REPUBLIC is a magazine of sixty-four pages, published monthly, at $2 a year, or six copies for $10. The postage, in all cases, will be paid by the publishers. A few copies of the back volumes may yet be obtained, either bound or in numbers. Remittances should be made by postal money-order or registered letter.

Address,

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY, Washington, D. C.

THE REPUBLIC.

Devoted to the Dissemination of Political Information.

VOL. VI.

WASHINGTON, D. C., APRIL, 1876.

No. 4.

JENKS' BABY.

Ginx's baby cried so piteously in England that the English, in a moment of maudlin compassion, sent its father to the British Parliament. That baby was the ruin of its parent. It turned his head. He is to-day the butt of the House of Commons, where no progenitorial merit is tolerated unless it "hails" from Windsor Castle—or "reigns" there.

There is another Jenks, who is envious of his namesake's political renown. He is in the House of Representatives. He, too, has been brought to bed of a baby. He calls it a Statement. Appended to it is the "testimony" of the men on whom he relies to prove that, as the Southerners say, he has a "sure-enough baby this time." This Jenks, too, has had his head turned. Turned to the rebels—in wooing mood. Will they kindly consent to make him their tool? That is his high ambition. To secure this favor he is ready to throw suspicions of fraud on honest and loyal men, who are honestly, and in a loyal spirit, doing their duty to the honest and loyal men who were wounded in driving back the rebels whose smiles cravenly he craves.

Leaving the Confederates, who created our vast pension list, who sent three hundred and sixty thousand of our soldiers into untimely graves, to do as they please with, to use or to abuse this their willing vassal, it becomes a public duty to arraign him as a bearer of false witness against the faithful servants of the Government which they so earnestly sought to destroy.

Mr. Jenks' statement is No 93 of the House Miscellaneous Documents. The reader who is in possession of it should carefully compare it line by line with this review. For the author is a man of such exact, extensive, and explicit misinformation that an exposure, to be effective, should follow every sentence of his essay on "The Transfer of the Pension Bureau to the War Department." Necessarily the answer must be longer than the charges, for his report is a sort of Leibig's Essence of Errors. It is a compact sample of every form of misstatement—by misconception, by direct assertion of what is not correct, and by ingenious indirection and implication.

I. His first misstatement is by the implication that the accounts of the Pension Bureau are not carefully kept. He says:

"$2,885,189 are claimed to be paid on arrears of pensions granted during the year, of which no separate account is kept."

"Claimed to be!" That is, it is probable that this amount is not correct—that the officers of the Bureau misrepresent the sum total, or embezzle it, or so complicate the accounts with others that it is impossible to discover any fraud—if there is fraud. It shows looseness of administration. That is the inference. What are the facts?

The truth is that arrears of pensions are not "separate accounts" by the very nature of them. When a pension is granted it dates back to the period prescribed by law. The first payment to the pensioner includes the total amount that he is entitled to from the date of his pension, precisely as if the payments had been regularly made each quarter, during the whole of the time. The payments of these arrearages, that is to say, are made in the same way, the accounts are kept in the same way, and all the business is conducted in the same way—by the same officers, with the same forms and with the same vouchers given—as the regular quarterly payments of all pensions. To keep a separate account of arrearages would only involve addition clerical work, while no new security and no further checks would be given, and no practical purpose would be served by it.

II. Mr. Jenks' second point is ingeniously involved, and is a jesuitical example of indirection. He says:

"$488,580 is paid to the officers and employees of the Bureau proper; $40,000 to the detection of fraud; $33,800 to contingencies in the office; $57,291 to examining surgeons; $427,257 to fifty-eight disbursing agencies; and $23,278 for stationery and postage of the agencies, of which $10,448 is for postage. While by law it is provided that a fee of twenty-five cents on each voucher shall be in full compensation for all services, including postage, for mailing vouchers and checks, the amount of fees paid annually by the Government for those vouchers to the several agents is $214,523."

This is masterly both in its indirection and misstatements, both in its sins of omission and commission. Let the reader note the effect of these statements in his own mind before reading the reply. A Democratic paper thus translates it:

"This item (of $10,448) is outrageously large in view of the law which prescribes a fee of 25 cents on each voucher as full compensation for all services, including postages, for making vouchers and checks. But notwithstanding this provision of the law the agents charge postage, and the Government pays them in fees for these vouchers $214,523 annually."

Now here is the impression left on the mind of any reader not familiar with the facts, that the Government is robbed out of three distinct amounts: 1st, $10,448 for postage; 2d, of $23,278 for stationery; and 3d, of $214,523 for agencies every year. This was obviously the intention of Mr. Jenks in thus presenting the statements.

What is the truth?

The items for stationery and postage, "of which $10,448 is for postage," are not on account of "vouchers and checks" mailed to pensioners, as Mr. Jenks could easily have ascertained, but are exclusively on account of the general correspondence and work of the agencies outside and independent of the business of "mailing vouchers and checks." The Bureau has the charge of 234,821 pensioners, all of whom, from time to time, have more or less incidental correspondence with the agencies. The agencies also communicate regularly with the Commissioner of Pensions, with the Third Auditor, and with the Second Comptroller. Previous to the repeal of the franking privilege the official correspondence of the pension agents with the Government Departments passed through the mails free of postage. Now such correspondence involves a nominal charge for postage. That is, the Treasury is charged, and the Post Office Department is credited with $10,448, and this postal account, it will be seen, is nominal rather than real. It costs the Government very little to carry this correspondence, because all the machinery of the post office must run whether there are many letters or none.

The postage of the agencies for mailing vouchers and checks is paid by the agencies—not by the Bureau; but exclusively from the fees allowed by law "for mailing vouchers and checks." Now, it is evident that the impression sought to be created is that the sum of $214,523 is paid to the pension agents in excess of the amount authorized by law. The truth is, that it is $67,262.20 less than the amount authorized by law. It would interest the reader to figure out this result—for no such result was ever before possible in America. No Democratic bureau ever spent less or took less than the law allowed. When salaries are due the Democrats are very loyal. They yield ready and full obedience to every statute that authorizes them to take money from the treasury.

There are 234,821 pensioners. They are paid quarterly. This involves the posting of four times that number of vouchers annually, and an equal number of checks, or 1,878,568 letters. The Revised Statutes (Sec. 4782) authorize the agents to collect, not 25 cents, but 30 cents for each voucher. Multiply 939,284 by 30 and the result is $281,785.20; while the agencies charge the Government only $214,523, or $67,262.20 less than they are legally entitled to demand!

III. Without omitting a single word, the next succeeding sentences of Mr. Jenks' statement are these :

"These officers of the pension service are 58 in number, who, by law, are entitled to an annual salary of not exceeding $4,000 each, and by a subsequent enactment 25 cents for each voucher paid by them. Each of these agencies, on an average, costs the Government about $7,700 annually, while several of the agents disburse less than the average salary. The income of many of these agencies exceeds $10,000, and quite a number almost reach $15,000, exclusive of contingencies."

No merchant ever heard of anybody paying a voucher; but Mr. Jenks, perhaps, has a wider knowledge of commercial transactions. But let that pass. Let us look at the separate misstatements of this passage:

"Several of the agencies disburse less than the average salary."

Does the reader observe how ingeniously constructed this sentence is? One would think that whereas the average salary is $7,700, many of the agents received, at least, $4,000 for disbursing less than that amount.

This is not only not true, but it is impossible.

All the money for pensions and salaries and allowances are sent to the pension agents, and their accounts are audited by the Treasury Department. They cannot retain amounts they are not entitled to, because they are disbursers and not collectors of public money. Indeed, they are not paid a salary at all; but [Sec. 4781 Revised Statutes] "two per centum on all disbursements made by them to pensioners." Here is the section:

"SEC. 4781. Agents for paying pensions shall receive two per centum on all disbursements made by them to pensioners. There shall be allowed, however, over and above such compensation, to every pension agent disbursing fifty thousand dollars annually, not exceeding five hundred dollars a year for clerk-hire, office-rent, and office expenses; to every agent disbursing one hundred thousand dollars annually, not exceeding seven hundred and fifty dollars a year; and for every fifty thousand dollars additional, not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars a year for like purposes. But in no case shall the aggregate amount of compensation to any one agent, paying both Army and Navy pensions, exceed four thousand dollars a year."

Now, unless the disbursements made by a pension agent amount to $200,000 he does not receive $4,000, but only 2 per cent. on the amount actually disbursed—which for $50,000 would be one thousand dollars, with $500 added for clerk-hire, office-rent, and office expenses. If, on the other hand, he disbursed a million of dollars his compensation would be no more than $4,000, with a small allowance for clerk hire and other contingencies. If, therefore, the nominal "income" of any pension agent is $10,000 it represents, not compensation, but the fees allowed by law for preparing and mailing checks and vouchers—which is no more, or but little more, than the cost of postage, additional clerk-hire, and other expenses.

IV. Mr. Jenks, after thus raising a spectre by the old and black art of misstatement, thus, with wizard wisdom and face grave as the skull of Mr. Yorick, deceased, proceeds to explain how the dread phantom may be sent back to its sepulchre.

"By having the pensions paid from the Bureau this whole branch of the service, involving an expense of $449,541, could be dispensed with without material detriment to the service, which, if we may judge by the past history of the Bureau, might easily be done without any increase of force; as since 1866 the force has been increased from 175 to 420 in 1875, exclusive of the disbursing agents, while the labors done by an inverse ratio has diminished in about the same proportion."

Before following the conjunctive Jenks, (who joins error to error as if afraid that each would fall if left unsupported,) into the discussion of the methods needed to secure exactness, which he opens in the last clause of this sentence, let us examine the preliminary error in this extract, and admit that "this whole branch of the service could be dispensed with, and without any great detriment to it." Why? Because the 58 agents and their clerks, or an equal number of officers, could be stationed in Washington, and the pensions could be transmitted through the Washington post office by money orders. But does not Mr. Jenks understand that there are two fatal, or at least Democratic objections to this system? Their dread names are—Centralization and Benjamin F. Butler! General Butler proposed that method, and it was rejected by Congress.

Observe : all the clerical force in the Pension Bureau in Washington is fully employed. The number of clerks should be doubled. Seventy thousand cases stand unadjudicated for want of force to examine them. Further on, Mr. Jenks says :

"Of the 70,000 applicants standing before this tribunal, hundreds, and perhaps thousands are now paupers, maintained at public charge, a standing monument of disgrace to the country which permits the wheels of justice to move so slowly."

It is even so. And the disgrace is one which Mr. Jenks now seeks to perpetuate by reducing the force under the pretext of reform. This charge will be pointed out again, and clinched, after examining a number of Mr. Jenks' other errors.

So, also, are all the pension agents kept busy, and many of them over-worked. Now, if these offices were abolished, their offices would have to come to Washington. It is only a question of locality. The work they do must be done by some one, and somewhere, and whether it shall be at Washington in one building, or in different cities, is simply a consideration of convenience.

But this is the new system of reform that Mr. Jenks has invented ; for he recommends it again in his plea for the transfer of the Bureau to the War Department.

V. Before examining his great plan of economy by taking money out of one pocket and putting it into another, it seems to be expedient to expose his additional preliminary misstatements. After the preceding question, not yet fully answered, he says :

"What should be an exact duplicate of the rolls kept at these agencies is now kept in the office of the Pension Bureau and in the office of the Third Auditor of the Treasury, thus involving triplicate labor, with no appreciable advantage to the Government or the pensioners."

This "duplication of the rolls" which so troubles the uninformed mind of Mr. Jenks is but the smallest portion of the necessary work of the financial department of the Pension Bureau. This branch of the service, which Mr. Jenks in his ignorance alike of the laws of his country and of the existing system of checks and balances devised for the security of public accounts, would peremptorily abolish upon the fictitious plea of "economy," is established under the requirements of section 3622 of the Revised Statutes, as follows :

SECTION 3622. Every officer or agent of the United States who receives public money which he is not authorized to retain as salary, pay, or emoluments, shall render his accounts monthly. Such accounts, with the vouchers necessary to the correct and prompt settlement thereof, shall be sent by mail, or otherwise, to the bureau to which they pertain, within ten days after the expiration of each successive month, and after examination there, shall be passed to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury for settlement. * *

Without this "triplicate labor" there would be no guarantees against fraud or blunders. Does Mr. Jenks desire to remove checks in the hope that his party will succeed in the next election ?

VI. Mr. Jenks now moves up his artillery. He says ;

"In the Pension office in the year ending June 30, 1866, with a clerical force of 175, about 50,000 original cases, or their equivalent, were adjudicated, being an average of about 284 to each employe. During the year ending June 30, 1875, with a clerical force of about 420, about 12,800 original claims, or their equivalent, were granted—being an average of about 31 to each employe, while 66,000 original and about 7,000 increase claims are awaiting action."

Before noticing Mr. Jenks' statement of the cause of these evils, let the facts be examined, not in the light of partisan disingenuousness, but of the published Pension Bureau records.

In 1866, as he states, there were about 50,000 cases adjudicated. But he forgets to add that the war had then just ended, and that the requirements of the law were few and simple, and that the evidence was easily accessible. These cases were mostly for gunshot wounds, and very few papers were needed—one from the War office showing that the claimant was enrolled in the service; another from the Surgeon General's office showing that he was wounded in the service; and a third from an examining surgeon defining his present disability. It was easy for a clerk to dispose of several such cases every day, especially as nearly all the States had agencies in Washington, which furnished most of the evidence without the aid of the Bureau, or in co-operation with it.

Difficult and doubtful cases were pigeon-holed to await action, when the Bureau should have more time to make careful examinations. As time went on the laws became more exacting in their demands for evidence. The State agencies disappeared, and inadmissible claims multiplied to an extraordinary extent. Rigid examinations became necessary.

In 1875, it is true that only 12,800 original cases were granted; but (and here Mr. Jenks shows his disingenuousness) it is also true that ten thousand cases were rejected, each rejected case involving even more examination than an admitted case, and that upwards of 70,000 additional claims were examined, corresponded with, and passed through a greater or less number of the stages that the law requires as leading to a final adjudication.

In 1866 most of the cases consisted of three papers. Now, before a case is settled or can be adjudicated without danger of fraud, the evidence often accumulates until it would fill an octavo volume. As time goes by it becomes more and more difficult to obtain trustworthy evidence—for now come up the complicated questions of marriage and divorce, of the legitimacy and identity of children, of the qualifications and honesty of guardians, of the dependence of surviving relatives on the dead soldier's services when he enlisted, as well as the necessity of ascertaining the medical history of the volunteer before and after he entered the army. The laws require these facts to be known before a pension can be granted. In addition to all this new work it should be remembered that every case, from the first to the last, settled or unsettled, is under the charge of the Bureau; that deaths and other events are all the time changing the character of the settled cases, and require, therefore, constant watchfulness and work. From Mr. Jenks' statement it might be inferred that the 50,000 cases adjudicated in 1866 were settled in every way—that they were not adjudicated only, but that they needed no further care, nor superintendence, nor work. The truth is, that every case admitted, whatever its character, is an addition to the work to be done by the Bureau.

It should be remembered, also, that most of the evidence now demanded is wholly outside and independent of any papers to be found in any Department of the Government, and that it must be examined and tested by educated, skillful, and trustworthy men; while the voluminous and constantly increasing correspondence and the routine work of the Bureau take up the entire time of the lower class clerks and copyists, who constitute the numerical majority of the force in the offices.

VII. Mr. Jenks then states that the delays arise from the location of the Bureau and the mode of its administration. They arise from one cause only—the want of an adequate force in the Bureau. He recommends the transfer of the Bureau to the War Department, “the source from which the greater part of the evidence comes.” Now, to begin with, this is not the fact; and, in the second place, wherever the Bureau shall be situated, not a line of copying nor other work can be saved by any transfer of it. The “weight of the evidence on which each claim is or should be granted or rejected” is not to be found in the War Department or the Surgeon General's office at all; the questions now to be settled are not wholly military, but chiefly legal questions; and even if the Bureau was in the same room in the War Department in which the “rolls” and “records” are kept, the evidence required in every case would have to be copied just as much as if it were a thousand miles away, because every case must contain, not references to other papers, but the complete record in itself. There is no other plan even possible, with a list of over three hundred thousand cases on file. An hour's examination in the Bureau will convince any business man of this fact—at least any competent and honest man of affairs—that when Mr. Jenks asserted that “the duplicate labors now performed by the War Department and the Surgeon General's office can be avoided” in any way, he showed an ignorance of the methods absolutely necessary to “insure efficiency, integrity, and intelligence,” which was not only complete and exhaustive, but dishonorable and unworthy as well, because to make it he was led to charge fraud and incompetency on men with personal and official records which need fear no comparison with his own or with those of any other member of either house of Congress.

VIII. Even the military records that are "mainly relied on" to grant a pension are not on file in the War Department, but those found in the pay-rolls that are kept in the Second Auditor's office in the Treasury Department! So that Mr. Jenks does not even know where the evidence exists. Shall the Pension Bureau be removed to the Treasury? His logic demands that course where it is confronted, not with his statements, but with the facts. Nay, more; after having been removed to the War Department because "pensions are military affairs," the Bureau should next be split in two, and one-half sent to the Navy Department because sailors are pensioners; then joined together again, and forwarded with care to the Treasury, because the chief military records are there, and because pensions are also financial affairs; and then again it should be transferred to the Department of Justice, because most of the questions to be decided require judicial examination. To satisfy Mr. Jenks it would be a bureau on wheels!

IX. Having shown that Mr. Jenks is a living encyclopedia of useless misinformation, it remains to prove that his remedies are as puerile as his statements are erroneous. The Department of the Interior was established to incorporate under one executive direction such bureaus as the Government needed which yet did not especially appertain to any of the older Departments. The Pension Bureau has relations with four Departments—War, Navy, Treasury, and Justice; but not one of them covers its whole field of work and inquiry, and not one of them is adapted by its organization to do the service that is needed for a proper discharge of the special duties that the rebellion created toward our disabled soldiers and their orphans and other dependants. If the Pension Bureau was attached to any other Department it would necessarily become an independent bureau, over which the head of the Department would have only a nominal supervision. Each of them is already large enough or its machinery is too expensive. No one thinks of transferring it to the Department of Justice, and therefore objection need not be urged to such a proposition. Every one knows, who knows what our Government is—we do not say that Mr. Jenks is aware—that the Treasury Department is now too cumbersome, and has too many interests to control, to be available for the pension service.

How is it with the War and Navy Departments? Mr. Jenks states as one having authority and knowledge, that "The duplicate labor performed by the finance division of the Pension Bureau and the pension agencies can be done by the Paymaster's Department of the army with very little addition to its present force."

Having already shown that no duplicate labor can be saved in adjudicating claims by any transfer, it remains to consider whether the army paymasters could do the duties and avoid the expense of pension agencies. Army paymasters are now stationed chiefly at military posts on the frontier—far away, for the most part, from the residences of pensioners, who chiefly live in the States where there are few soldiers and rarely a regular garrison. The transfer of the duties of the pension agencies, therefore, would require the appointment of a large number of additional paymasters, who must perform their duties according to the methods of the War Department, which were not adopted for such a service, and are entirely unfitted for it. They are so little adapted, indeed, for this duty that the War Department itself does not employ them for the payment of bounties, but uses the Post Office Department for that purpose. It can be demonstrated that it would need at least one hundred and fifty new paymasters to fill the duties of the fifty-eight pension agencies, and that each paymaster would cost the country more money than the average compensation of the pension agents. Nor is this all. Paymasters are life appointments, whereas pension agents can be removed at any time.

Mr. Jenks could easily have ascertained these facts, and in all probability knows them. It is not ignorance nor a desire for reform that has urged this change. There is too much method in the madness to justify a plea of political insanity. The purpose is twofold. By reducing the force of the Pension Bureau the arrearages will increase so much and so fast that the country, it is hoped, will one day be willing, in order to secure justice to its heroic wards, to add to the pension rolls the men who were wounded or otherwise disabled, in fighting to destroy the Republic. This is the hidden purpose of this specious plan. Again, by appointing paymasters the Confederate Democracy hope, if they can carry the coming Presidential election, to appoint to life offices a large number of ex-rebel soldiers and their allies in the North. This is the plot. It is in truth an insidious attack on the loyal pension system.

X. Mr. Jenks by elaborately erroneous evidence having convicted the Bureau of inefficiency—to his own satisfaction—ventures, but this time gently, to accuse it of deliberate fraud. "In some instances, at least," he says, "fraud prevails." But when he begins to specify he confines himself to cases of alleged inefficiency, which arise, he says, "from the want of experience in the head and employees of the office consequent upon the Bureau being administered as a political one." He then says that with each Congress new appointments must be made—that the most experienced are discharged to make way for new ones.

Supposing that this allegation were true, —it is not true, but let that pass—does not Mr. Jenks know that the same reason would require him to remove all the Treasury, Department of Justice, Department of State, and Post Office employees to the War Department? For all these Departments—and all the State governments in the United States—are administered as "political" institutions. It happens to be the American system of Government. It may be bad—Austria, Russia, and other European nations may have wiser methods—but the people of this country prefer their own system, and Mr. Jenks will find that he cannot convince them that a permanent Bureaucracy is desirable. The army by its nature is organized on despotic principles, and therefore it is filled with officers having life appointments. But the people would not tolerate this necessary evil to be made the rule in the civil departments.

Mr. Jenks states that a large number of discharges have been made since the 4th of March last, and, a few lines afterwards, complains that the number of clerks employed is larger than the law allows, and that they were not proportionally of the classes provided by law. Nothing will satisfy him. By increasing the number of lower-class clerks to hasten the adjudication of pending claims, (without thereby increasing the expense,) the Bureau, he asserts, has infringed on the law, and yet he depreciates the large and constantly augmenting number of arrearages! Again: the recent discharges have been mainly made by the present Secretary to improve the force—by the elimination of clerks who were reported to him as incompetent. But the changes are not chiefly attributable to the action of the heads of Bureaus or Departments. It requires business talent of a high order to be an efficient clerk, and many men who come well recommended and are otherwise able, prove incompetent when brought to the test. They must resign or be discharged. Others accept clerkships, and some find that they can command higher salaries in business, and leave the Bureau for that reason.

But how comes it that a Democrat should complain of rotation in office? What party first unfurled that banner? Who was it that declared the axiom that to the victor belongs the spoils? Why, it is a cardinal principle of Confederate Democracy. Who was it that turned out the crippled soldiers in the Capitol?

Mr. Jenks' illustrations of inefficiency are uncommonly ill-chosen. He solemnly declares, as if he had discovered a new outrage, that Mr. Atkinson confessed "with great frankness" that he had no experience whatever in the duties of Commissioner prior to his appointment. "Oh, my!" This is a novelty. What experience as a Congressman had Mr. Jenks himself prior to his election? What experience has any officer prior to his appointment? What experience had Captain Boynton as a swimmer before he went into the water? No man can have experience in an office before he is put in it. The question is, is he competent? Mr. Atkinson's evidence as brought out by Mr. Jenks shows that he was competent and did credit to the President's selection of him. As the one instance of Mr. Atkinson's incompetency Mr. Jenks says that he appointed Governor Furnas, of Nebraska, as a special detective. This is a cowardly mode of attack. It insinuates that Governor Furnas was not competent. Now, the truth is, that the ex-Governor has been one of the most efficient officers that the Bureau has ever commissioned. Mr. Jenks does not dare to deny this fact. The Commissioner, he says, turned off a number of skilled and experienced hands. The truth is, some were discharged for incompetency, and some resigned on account of the reduction of salaries, and that none were "turned off" without cause.

Mr. Jenks makes another general specification:

"The duties a number of others performed were very uncertain and ill-defined; but when they seemed as far as human observation could detect to be doing nothing, they would be found to have been detailed in the secret service division of the Department."

This is false. This response may seem rude, but it represents the fact.

But Mr. Jenks gloats over the discovery that two clerks were employed for a short time by the Republican Congressional Committee. This offense consists in rendering political service to a party when in Government employment. There is a Scripture which saith "Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye," and there is a member of Congress from Pennsylvania by whom it should be studied. He receives $5,000 a year, payable monthly, for devoting his whole time to the service of the Republic. He goes home after the session is over, and then, like an honest man, does he study daily the questions that demand solution in Congress? No! he attends to his own private business, and renders partisan service for months and months:—but he draws his pay regularly once a month. This honest and consistent patriot is struck with horror on discovering that a $1,200 clerk gave a part of his time to party service! The name of this saint in Congress is—JENKS!

TREASON ON WHEELS.

BY JAMES REDPATH.

Now that the tumultuous shouts of indignation evoked by Mr. Davis have died away, will you permit me, an old abolitionist, to point out the vital issue which the old chief of the old South presented in his letter—an issue of transcendent national importance that has been entirely overshadowed by the transient personal question that was intertwined with it? I do not care to waste time nor to arouse angers by asking whether Mr. Davis was or was not responsible for the cruelties of the Confederate prisons. That is a question for the courts and for history. The action of our Government announced the verdict of "not proven." As a loyal citizen, I abide by it.

JEFFERSON DAVIS AS A REPRESENTATIVE MAN.

But Mr. Davis in his famous letter showed that he is still entitled to be regarded as the representative of the present ruling power of the South; for in it he reaffirms the doctrine of State Sovereignty, which Wade Hampton, Ben Hill, Robert Toombs, James B. Gordon, Beverly Tucker, Alexander H. Stephens, and nearly all the other conspicuous Southern politicians have reannounced as their creed since their disabilities have been removed. The offense of Mr. Davis hath this extent—no more.

Mr. Davis wrote:

"The Southern people have forgotten much—have forgiven much of the wrongs they bore. If it be less so among the invaders it is but another example of the rule that the wrong-doer is less able to forgive than he who has suffered causeless wrong."

This language is not insolent, but logical. For, if the theory of State Sovereignty is right then the Nation was an invader and the South was wronged. Now, this theory rules the Southern States to-day, and it must control our Government if the Democracy succeed in electing the next President of the United States.

It sits personified in the Speaker's chair—for State Sovereignty has no abler advocate than Mr. Kerr, nor has any disciple of that school a longer or more consistent record.

Mr. Davis, therefore, Mr. Toombs, and (less offensive in his history and his method, but equally emphatic in his utterances,) Mr. R. M. T. Hunter, of Virginia, each of them distinguished men, have rendered the southern people and the Nation a greater service than they dreamed of rendering, when they came out from behind the thick curtain of silence that had been drawn around them.

THE TRANSCENDENT ISSUE.

For, we must clearly comprehend the Southern creed, not in hostility, but calmly, before a peace that will endure can be made between the Nation and the recently insurrectionary States. And this is the transcendent issue of our age. Economy, the currency, the tariff, swift and trans-continental transit, taxation of ecclesiastical real estate, and even the greater issue of compulsory education—all these are important questions, worthy of the most serious study by every citizen; but they are, each and all of them, dwarfed into Lilliputian disputes in the presence of the Southern problem. These other issues will pass away and be forgotten, and leave little sign; but the future character of the whole country will be influenced for good or evil, as we shall deal to-day with Southern political pretensions.

This issue takes precedence, also, because it involves the question of the power to decide the others.

"THE SOUTH" AS A POLITICAL POWER.

Talk with any honest and intelligent Southern voter, not of the ruling class, and you will find that the term "the South" is used at one time to denote the political organization (so potent once, and now struggling to reassert itself) which was called the Slave Power, and again as indicating the People of the South—for the most part the white people of the South—who were the greatest dupes and victims of that Power. Here lies the error which is the spring of all the misapprehensions that still retard the progress of reconciliation.

"The South," as a compact political power, founded on the theory of State Sovereignty—sometimes euphemized as State rights—should have neither courtesy nor mercy shown to it. It deserves neither pity nor respect. Its history is one long lurid chronicle of crime. It extended, defended, and "sanctified" slavery with all its wrongs and cruelties, and its rebellion. It forbade free speech, a free press, free schools in every Southern State. It kept four millions of blacks, not in slavery only, but in the most brutish ignorance. It grasped all the rich lands, and drove the poor whites to the sand hills. It kept them also in mental and social degradation. It ostracised and drove out—often murdered, oftener outraged—every Northern man who visited the South, unless he was a sycophant or a convert to their system. That "South" cursed both the North and the South. That South the Nation crushed. That South, now again rearing its hydra head, must be driven back into its cave at any cost. Half a million of men lie mouldering in their graves to-day by reason of the insurrection of this malevolent power. It has had human sacrifices enough.

THE SOUTH AS A PEOPLE.

The Southern People have the sympathy, and respect, and hearty good-will of the Nation. There is no hatred of them. They are entitled to our kindest consideration—but, the Spirit of Gush willing or not willing, no further and no longer than they disclaim the pretensions of the politicians who are trying to re-establish the power that has already drenched their land in blood. Northern men must be treated as well when they chose to live in the Southern States as Southern men are treated when they settle in the North. This is not the fact to-day. Nowhere in the North is the Southern man or woman, whatever may be his or her creed, treated with discourtesy, or socially ostracised. The statement is often made that Northern men are well treated in the South "when they don't interfere in politics." But the American who does not take an active part in politics, when there are vital principles in dispute, is unworthy of his citizenship, and voluntarily degrades himself when he permits any social power to keep him from the exercise of the franchise.

In fighting the evil power that calls itself "the South" we are fighting the battle of the People of the South, black and white, and rich and poor; for all classes of men there, and all conditions of society, have been cursed by it, and are blighted by it to-day. No rapid or real progress is possible in that regal region of our national domain until it is rescued from the grasp of this political despotism. "Intimidation," which, as Mr. Toombs boasted, keeps the negro from voting, is equally effective in keeping the capitalist from investing.

Bearing in mind the broad distinction between the South as a political power and the Southern people as citizens of the Nation—not a distinction only, but an antagonism as well—let us examine the first great project for translating the creed of "the South" into facts, as presented by the cautious, conservative and scholarly Mr. Hunter, of Virginia, and see how he re-echoes, in more decent and decorous phrase, the sentiments of Hill and Toombs, of Georgia; and in less exceptionable and irritating terms the opinions of Davis and Gordon.

I refer to his letter in favor of THE TEXAS AND PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. Hunter addresses his letter to Representative Lamar, of Mississippi, who had expressed some interest to know his opinion. He recognizes Lamar "as the man to whom the South seems to be turning its eyes as a leader to aid her with counsel, and protect and prosecute her interests in legislation."

LAMAR'S THEORIES.

Mr. Lamar used to argue, last winter, in conversation with friendly opponents, that while Republicans might be personally honest men, yet their system necessarily bred corruption by its comprehensive schemes of internal national improvement, which were always, more or less, productive of "jobs." Democracy, on the other hand, fettered by its theory of State sovereignty, while it might sometimes or often oppose plans by which the Nation might be benefited, did not afford the opportunities for frauds or peculations on the Government.

This theory has only the facts of our history for half a century—during the whole career of Democracy regnant—to oppose it:

"Just so much, and nothing more."

It will be interesting to note how the rhetorical professor will explain it away when he is called on to advocate a scheme—the most stupendous job of the session—which is bottomed on the antagonistic theory. For he is relied on to "put through" the Texas and Pacific railroad job—now, if he can, or if he dare; but after the Presidential election if prudential considerations shall restrain immediate action.

THE COST OF THE JOB.

The New York Times has shown that this scheme, sooner or later, in all likelihood, will saddle the Nation with a debt of four hundred millions of dollars, and Mr. Singleton, of Mississippi, has declared that "the South" expects Congress to adopt it.

In view of this magnificent project for proving the sincerity of the Democracy on their favorite and vaunted virtue of economy, too little attention has been paid to the arguments of its advocates, and especially to the masterly plea of Mr. R. M. T. Hunter.

STATE SOVEREIGNTY AS A RELIGION.

Mr. Hunter's letter is an elaborate plea for the prosecution of this scheme by the Federal Government, as a measure by which "the South"—not as an indivisible member of the national body, but as an independent section and an antagonistic entity—may regain its lost political power; and, therefore, it is addressed chiefly to the consideration of the theory of State Sovereignty as it affects this important project, or as it might influence the votes of its votaries. He says that he himself voted against this measure in Congress, but that although he still believes that "the harmony of the country requires the adoption of the old State rights theory," still his general views have been "modified by further experience and the results of the war." He then goes on, in sometimes indistinct but in always intelligible rhetoric, to argue that the Southern members should not let their principles stand in the way of their interests, especially on this measure—which, he says, is "one not only of a large pecuniary interest, of trade and commerce, but of empire also."

Empire—of what? of the Nation?

Hardly of the Nation; because he takes especial pains to reiterate the creed which brought it to civil war. He says:

"I hope I need not say that I mean no reproach to States' rights now, even to the Pharisees of the school, if true and sincere. I have neither the heart nor the right to cast reproach on any such. I regard the followers of this school as the soldiers of the true Cross, politically speaking, if I may use the term in this sense without irreverence, which I surely do not mean, and God forbid that I should cast a word of ridicule or condemnation on any, even the least of them."

Thus does the advocate of railway construction reiterate the ideas of national destruction!

Again, he says, and this time shows a cause why the true soldier of the cross should sometimes stoop to conquer:

"The hold of States' rights principles in the South ought not to be weakened, if it be practicable to prevent it, by interposing them unnecessarily to the accomplishment of an object so necessary to restore that section to its just share of power in the Government and its fair share of influence on the public opinion of the country. For upon these two things will depend the safety and prosperity of the South hereafter. To suppose that the contests for power or of interest between the different sections of this Union will not be continued, not by arms, it is true, but by policy and fair appeals to public opinion, is chimerical indeed. Here is a great and fair field for enterprise which it had been well if it had been more wrought heretofore. To maintain and nurse the political power and influence of the South in the common Government is a fair subject of aspiration for her representatives."

Still, always, everywhere—"the South," never the national welfare is considered. Still, "the South," as a "section," is to "maintain and nurse" a separate political power. Why, pray, should Virginia have more interest in Texas than in Minnesota? As a loyal State of the Union she has no more interest in Texas; but as a talon of the political "South" her greater interest in Texas is evident enough.

PLEA FOR THE SOUTHERN OLIGARCHY.

In speaking of "the South" these men never mean the Southern People—but only the oligarchy which brought on the rebellion and all its woes. Mr. Hunter makes this fact clear in another passage:

"The Texas Pacific road presents an instance in which by its completion the South will be vastly strengthened in capital and resources to develop its people, their industry and enterprise, and also increase in political power, not only in influence, but in voting power to protect its people and their rights through the action of the common Government. Does she not need this protection and all this assistance for her material development? Is anybody caring for her now? Has she influence or power enough in the Government to enforce a demand for the supply of her very necessities?"

What rights of all the people of any State does the Federal Government invade? It has not even done its duty in protecting the 60,000 Georgia voters whom "the South," as Mr. Hunter defines the oligarchy, intimidated and disfranchised at the last election. It has not prevented the violence and terrorism that prevailed in Mississippi, and resulted in the election of a Democratic delegation from that State. He goes on:

"Would that be the case if Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and the whole of the rich country along the line were settled, and teeming with the resources, agricultural and mineral, which such a population would develop? The levees of the Mississippi, thrown down during the war, which for so long withstood its tide and secured from the waste of its waters vast tracts of fertile country for the use of man, are still down, and there seems to be no sufficient interest felt in the subject by those who control the Government to justify the hope that they will restore them. The moral bulwarks which are the defenses of good order in all civilized society have been prostrated as low in South Carolina and Louisiana, and, indeed, for a time, in all the old slave States, as the restraints upon the Mississippi, and the waste of its worst elements on the face of society, upon which they have been turned, from its surface to its depths, is as wild and as frightful as that of the great Father of Waters himself. Would it not be of infinite value if we had enough political power to secure the correction of these evils? Give us this, and we would right the wrong ourselves. Until this is the case, is it not probable that these or similar evils will continue to occur? What measure has yet been proposed so likely to build up the power which might insure protection as this Texas Pacific railroad, and what State or person is robbed of any power if the General Government should execute it?"

THE SLAVE-PEN VERSUS THE CARPET-BAG.

The "overthrow of the moral bulwarks of society" in South Carolina and Louisiana, singularly enough, has made it impossible in those States for men to traffic in human flesh and blood; and has, somehow, with a God-like beneficence, enabled the black mother to clasp her babe to her bosom without the fear of the auctioneer's hungry clutch. It has built schools, and taught both the black and white-children to understand their duties and their destiny. It has made it possible, in every State, for Americans, of every color, whatever their creed, to utter their opinions with some safety. It has begun to abolish the hell on earth—the reign of merciless and rapacious power—which Hunter and his horde of the barbarians of civilization “nursed and maintained” in all the Southern States.

Do these advocates of State Sovereignty suppose that we have forgotten what the South was under their rule? Do they imagine, because we may believe that the negro politicians are sometimes sneak-thieves, that we have forgotten that they were red-handed robbers—sparing neither the cabin of the black laborer nor the cradle of his child? And does he believe that we consider it would be of “infinite value” to let the ruffians who slew our sons correct “these evils”—the “wrong” of establishing political approximations to just government in the South? Whatever may be the sins of the carpet-bagger they are as white as snow compared with the crimes of the oligarchy who went before them. “The South” had better not compel us to remember its history.

A DISUNION ARGUMENT.

Not satisfied with flaunting the bloody banner of State Sovereignty in our faces again, Mr. Hunter has the superlative folly to suggest, that, in the future, the construction of this Texas Pacific railway may cause a wedlock which shall produce a “vast Southern Empire,” of which it shall be the “umbilical cord.” That is to say, in non-medical language, he wants the Confederate Democrats in Congress to vote for this measure—first, because it will give “the South” greater immediate political power; second, because it will so consolidate “the South” by the creation of new States that the negro and loyal vote may be overwhelmed; and finally, because in the future these new States, backed by the power of the older Rebel States may be strong enough to secede from the American Union!

Here are his words:

“The prospect for the future, which in my opinion promises not only of harmony but of progress in the country, is that of an affiliation of friendly republics, united in the pursuit and protection of common interests and engaged in the development of peculiar interests and ideas, without let or hindrance from the common Government or the intrusion of opinion on the part of other societies, whether friendly or otherwise, to the exclusion of their own. The development of physical and moral ideas is likely to be more extensive, and the pursuit of them will be far more energetic and efficient under the influence of such friendly rivalries than if guided and directed by ideas in which the people who are most concerned do not sympathize.”

This is the general principle—here is the application:

“But there is another point of view in which this question excites what has been called the ‘land-hunger of the Anglo-Saxon,’ by which I do not mean the “union of the Roman and Sabine,” the rape of conquest, but a connection through the bonds of lawful wedlock, brought about through the easy and insensible intercourse of trade and daily social communion. The construction of this route, it is said, will establish intimate relations of trade and commerce between eight or ten of the northern provinces of Mexico and the people of the American territory through which it will pass. A vast Southern empire may thus arise, holding new relations with the rest of the world, helping to maintain justice and create large common interests amongst the members of the present Union; or perhaps establishing a new point of departure and a new balance of interests on the North American continent.”

And again:

“But, above all, it must be generally admitted that its effects would serve to redress the present unequal balance of power between the sections to an extent which I do not propose to measure. And all may be done, in my opinion, without an invasion of the rights of the States. For all these reasons I would give a vote, if I had it, to secure the assistance of the General Government to a route from Marshall, in Texas, to San Diego, on the Pacific. I would require the road to ‘prorate’ on fair and equal terms with all that connected with it, and all should be allowed to do so. But if the Federal Government should undertake to carry the road nearer to the Atlantic it should require it to connect with Vicksburg, Memphis, or New Orleans. The consequence of such a measure I do not pretend to predict or describe. This road might prove to be the umbilical cord through which a nascent empire may derive its nourishment and support from these vast and fruitful wastes, until, matured into organized being, it loses the embryo state, and they bear it, like the wild mother of the forest, without a throe or a pang."

HOW TO BAFFLE THE PLOTTERS.

This is the scheme we are called on to adopt, and this the reason why we are expected to aid "the South" to re-establish its power!

The boldness of it recalls the days when the Southern leaders obeyed the summons of President Johnson, and came to Washington from their Provisional Governments. They coolly said then that they would never pay a national debt incurred in suppressing their insurrection; that they would be willing to pay our soldiers pensions if we would put their invalids on our rolls; but as for consenting to enfranchise the colored loyalists they would see us—but their language was not parliamentary, and it is not essential to report it. They declared with emphasis enough, and some to spare, that they would never consent to it.

And now in the Democratic ranks in Congress we no longer hear the language of the Prodigal Son, but boasts of "carrying the South solid," and denunciations of the party that saved the Nation.

It is idle to sneer at these men as "abstractionists" and "theorists." They are concretionists, of the most practical type, when Colonel Tom Scott is at their head; and when the negro voter is to be overawed or assassinated, or when the Northern man is to be ostracised or whipped, they are realists such as the dark ages never surpassed in stern barbarity.

We must meet the issue that all these blind leaders of the blind have raised, and before quarreling over soft or hard money settle once and forever the issue of allegiance. They always claimed—they claim still—that allegiance is primarily due, not to the Nation, but to the State; that, therefore, it was not the hero of Nashville, General Thomas, of Virginia, who was loyal, but Robert E. Lee, the Virginian; because Thomas did not follow his State, whereas Lee anticipated her secession, and was loyal to her. General Thomas was loyal to the Nation, and therefore he was a traitor to the State!

This idea underlies all Southern politics. Until it is suppressed there can be no peace. What is virtue with us must of needs be vice to them in every national controversy. Their theory teaches them to believe that the Nation invaded the States, not that the States rebelled against the Nation.

Senator Gordon, who lately tried to break the force of Mr. 'loombs' declarations, is as outspoken in what we of the North regard as treason as the more vulgar Georgian has ever been or as he is to-day. He is an honest, candid witness, and this is what he said, under oath, to an investigating committee:

"We did not believe that the act of secession was treason. I do not believe it now. I do not expect ever to believe it.—(p. 334.)

"Question. When you surrendered did you not think you had been guilty of rebellion and treason?

"Answer. No, sir; I never had such an idea.

"Question. Did you not think that you were amenable to the law?

"Answer. No sir; not a bit of it.

"Question. As a matter of fact, did not the people of the South understand that they had been guilty of rebellion and treason, and were amenable to the law?

"Answer. No, sir.

"Question. That was not the impression in the public mind of the South?

"Answer. Not a bit of it. I do not believe there was an intelligent man in the South who believed then, or believes to-day, that he was guilty of treason, or anything that smacked of treason.

"Question. As a matter of fact, you do not think that the people down there regarded their immunity from trial and punishment, the restoration of their property, and their protection under the law, as manifestations of great clemency on the part of the Government to men who had been fighting for years to destroy it?

"Answer. No, sir, I do not think so."—[See "Condition of Affairs in the Late Insurrectionary States"—Georgia, Vol. 1, page 342, 1872.]

We are told that although there are twenty-two Congressmen who now hold their seats by having overawed the negro vote, we are utterly powerless to help ourselves, or to protect our citizens thus cheated, because these wrongs were inflicted on them under the dread sovereignty of their States. But we are not quite powerless. Let no Republican vote a single dollar to any Southern scheme—good, bad, or indifferent—until the heresy of State Sovereignty is abjured, and until the poorest negro or the most hated native Republican is as free to cast his ballot everywhere as the ex-rebel or the copperhead is in Massachusetts or New York. If our army cannot bring unrepentant traitors to terms, our treasury has arguments that can fetch them to their knees. If muskets are unconstitutional, and it is criminal to interpose bayonets between loyal breasts and the bowie knives of the banditti, we have the constitutional power to refuse to aid these defyers of the national will in carrying out their plots or plans of any kind by money taken from the national Treasury. The War Power abolished slavery; let the Purse Power protect the loyalist. It is strong enough for this beneficent service!

REPUBLICAN EXPENDITURES—DEMOCRATIC RETRENCHMENT.

It may be well to remind the critics and carpers that the business of a government, speaking of it in its administrative capacity only, is not to save money, but to expend that with which it is entrusted economically and wisely. The cry of "retrenchment" is accepted by those who take the personal view of governmental action as a sure precursor of reform. A government is a trust, not a wealth-maker; it expends, but does not produce. It may be that unwise retrenchment will prove to be a very extravagant policy. Especially is this to be feared where the policy is dictated by mere greed of partisanship, and chiefly aims at crippling the administration of public affairs in order that a two-fold result may perhaps be achieved—the saving of certain sums in current appropriations, and the raising of a cry of inefficiency, when a crippled executive is unable to perform needed work in a proper manner.

The Democratic majority in the House of Representatives are engaged in a wholesale "rule and rote" process of cutting down salaries, and the administrative force required to do the necessary work of Government. As usual with that party when attempting any so-called reform, the beginning is seen in an attack on labor. The plan upon which they are proceeding seems far better adapted to promote inefficiency than it is to produce economy. Take, for instance, the proposed reduction of salaries. The highest and the lowest are to be treated alike. The efficient but poor first class clerk now receiving $1,200 per annum is to lose ten per cent equally with the official who receives from $3,000 to $5,000 income, and even upwards. The laborer at $720, and the lady copyist, or counter, at $900 salary, are to lose proportionately the same amount as the head of the department in which they are employed. Then as to the reduction of the civil service staff. This policy again appears to be aimed at crippling the Executive much more than it does to the saving of money.

The efficient Representative from the Fifth district of Maine, Hon. Eugene Hale, who has served for several years on the Appropriation Committee, made in the early part of the present session of Congress an exhaustive statement and defense of Republican legislation and policy in the matter of appropriations and expenditures. His facts and figures were marshaled with irresistible force. The speech gives a great deal of incisive information.

A good deal of ink as well as breath is wasted annually in Democratic criticisms of Republican extravagance. Most of this is based upon the annual estimates that are required by law to be laid before Congress. These estimates always exceed the appropriations, as actually made, by from twenty to thirty millions of dollars. It should be borne in mind, however, that administrative and executive officers are charged with continuous functions. They are often required to estimate in advance for work laid out or indicated but not yet begun. This is the case, for instance, with regard to river and harbor improvements under the direction of the army engineer bureau. Surveys are ordered to be made by every Congress, the engineer making the survey estimates, of course, for its cost. In this way the annual amount asked for swells to large proportions. The criticism of expenditures based therefore on such estimates is willfully or ignorantly at fault.

Mr. Hale claims, and justly too, credit for the Republicans in Congress, since the war, of largely reducing taxation, and also of lessening expenses, separating also to the apprehension of the public mind the expenditures created by the slaveholders' war and those directly related to the normal and current necessities of Government. How great the reduction of taxation has been may be seen by the fact that in five years, from 1863 to 1868, the American people paid in national taxes alone over $2,200,000,000.

A valuable table of expenditures covering twenty years, from 1856 to 1876, is given. The culminating point of expenditures was in 1865, being $1,297,565,224.41. Ten years after, 1875, it was $274,623,392. The ratio of decrease from 1865 has been very great, as the figures show:

Year.	Net ordinary expenditures.	Year.	Net ordinary expenditures.
1866.....	$59,571,025 79	1866.....	$520,809,416 99
1867.....	67,795,707 66	1867.....	357,542,875 16
1868.....	74,185,279 39	1868.....	377,840,284 96
1869.....	69,070,976 74	1869.....	322,935,277 80
1870.....	63,130,598 39	1870.....	309,653,560 75
1871.....	66,546,644 89	1871.....	292,177,188 25
1872.....	474,781,818 91	1872.....	277,517,932 87
1873.....	714,740,725 17	1873.....	290,345,245 33
1874.....	865,322,641 97	1874.....	297,133,873 17
1875.....	1,297,555,224 41	1875.....	274,623,392 84

General James A. Garfield, when serving as chairman of the Appropriation Committee in the Forty-second and Forty-third Congress, presented an analytical statement and exhibit of the cost of that civil war, and of how large a proportion of the necessary appropriations are due to that source alone. The expenses growing directly out of the war include payment of interest on the public debt; of pensions; of collecting the internal revenue, (a system unnecessary before the war,) and of the claims for supplies, damages, &c. This class forms the first portion of our national expenditures. The second classification covers the military and naval establishments, and the third is that of the civil service proper. Mr. Hale presented in a table of expenses by years both the total and the per centage in each class or group, as follows:

	1870.	1874.	1875.
	$147,863,024 79	$154,171,130 50	$157,392,415 61	FIRST GROUP.
	53.7	53.3	54.	Amount paid directly on account of the late war.....
	46,814,499 50	58,602,305 60	53,398,023 26	Per cent. of whole for each year.....
	17.5	30.4	15.	SECOND GROUP.
	78,426,936 59	74,399,476 37	79,082,347 27	Army and Navy.....
	23.6	26.9	22.	Per cent. of whole for each year.....
	974,623,892 84	927,133,909 76	920,345,245 33	THIRD GROUP.
				Civil service proper.....
				Per cent. of whole for each year.....
				Total.....

The reductions above shown are the work of Republicans. Examining a little closer, and it will be seen that a Republican Congress had provided for the covering of unexpended balances into the Treasury at the end of each fiscal year; prohibited the use of any appropriation but for the definite purpose indicated; abolished indefinite appropriations in most instances where the practice had been handed down from Democratic days took action to prevent deficiencies, and to otherwise improve the service. These were all genuine reforms in the interest of both efficiency and economy.

The following table gives even a clearer view of the reductions that were made by the Republican majority in the Forty-second and Forty-third Congresses. The figures justify Mr. Hale's claim for the initiation of retrenchment and reform. The items are those of the civil service estimates proper, and while the purposes are not named, the amounts being given, the necessary comparisons are made complete:

Third session Forty-second Congress—fiscal year 1874.	First session Forty-third Congress—fiscal year 1875.	Second session Forty-third Congress—fiscal year 1876.
$6,636,074 61	34 88	$5,224,275 36
2,888,147 42	47 56	8,906,452 39
3,743,243 87	84 13	3,417,437 43
1,374,515 00	65 93	1,420,272 80
499,660 00	47 34	455,513 03
976,620 31	91 11	1,407,433 43
230,038 57	55 86	301,315 89
36,732,025 17	22 37	30,301,332 93
22,496,620 56	46 70	17,268,100 83
8,468,977 44	74 54	5,874,558 28
30,480,000 00	90 00	30,075,000 00
20,057,182 00	96 56	8,025,542 59
6,102,900 00	00 00	6,793,517 50
1,899,000 00	00 00	895,000 00
1,962,979 59	57 70	1,865,409 99
6,496,602 00	42 00	7,390,205 00
15,674,164 29	81 53	18,103,574 47
172,290,700 82	155,017,758 30	147,714,940 61

In an elaborate table recapitulating the acts under, and purposes for which appropriations were made at the Third session of the Forty-second and at the First session of the Forty-third Congress, Mr. Hale contrasts the character of the reductions made. For the fiscal year 1875 the appropriations were reduced for "deficiencies" from over eleven millions, the preceding fiscal year, to but little over four millions. The army appropriation was reduced over five millions; the Indian by one and three-quarter millions; for forts and fortifications the reduction was over two millions, and proportionally in other instances. The following were the totals reported, and as amended and passed:

	Total Reported.	As Amended.
Appropriations for the fiscal year 1874, passed at the 3d sess. of the 42d Congress.....	$173,200,700 82	$170,424,800 82
Appropriations for the fiscal year 1875, passed at the 1st sess. of the 43d Congress.....	155,080,491 27	151,106,128 27

These totals include for 1875 appropriations for postage and various definite sums heretofore embraced under the general head of indefinite.

In the following table, carefully rearranged from Mr. Hale's figures, so as to present both contrast and summary, the reader will be able to see at a glance the difference between estimates and appropriations:

Estimates Over Appropriations.			Excess of latter.
Appropriations 1876.	Estimates 1877.
Public works	$28,591,410 80	$11,336,348 20
Military establishment.....	33,697,178 50	5,142,190 71
Naval establishment.....	20,871,668 40	3,555,359 50
Miscellaneous	13,881,185 79	3,847,328 13
Postal service.....	9,261,602 19	905,337 19
Indian affairs.....	5,787,795 64	682,168 64
Judicial establishment.....	3,403,450 00	200 00
	90,068,286 45	25,447,992 87
Appropriations Over Estimates.			Excess of est.
Appropriations	Estimates
	193,039,881 12	192,038,820 26	1,001,500 86

It will be observed that the second table or division shows a positive reduction from the service standpoint of $1,001,560.86. The increase or excess in estimates for the ensuing year over the current appropriations, large as it may seem, is almost entirely in the class of estimated expenditures which legislation has required the several departments to report, but which it often happens, as is the case at present, there is no pressing necessity for meeting or undertaking. Of this class the item under head of "public works" is in proof. This alone comprises one-half of the seeming increase. The military and naval establishments are likely to have the pruning knife applied with severity, whether wisely or not, is a question to be settled with the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives. But examination of the estimates will show many items which come under the same category as that of public works, useful things to be done, but not absolutely required. The discretion as to appropriating rests with the legislative branch of the Government, the administrative only obeys existing laws in presenting estimates of the probable cost of either initiating or completing such matters. Under the several heads of "Miscellaneous," "Postal Service," and "Judicial" there is probably good reasons to the public service for presenting enlarged estimates. This goes without telling, if the would-be critic reflects a moment as to the nature of the duties covered thereby.

On the whole, then, there is no honest grounds for assaults on the Republican policy in any preceding Congress or in the current estimates presented by the Executive Department upon the score of extravagance or the want of a spirit of retrenchment and economy. "Spigotry" is not a safe policy. To cut down the rations of professors, and deprive poorly paid clerks of their lawful salaries is a mean and contemptible way of saving the public moneys, especially when for the purpose of organizing a partisan raid on the Executive a Democratic House spends more in paying shorthand writers and in printing investigation reports than all that can be saved in the spigot fashion. It is cheap thunder this, manufactured behind the scenes with a sheet of iron and a mallet.

When the totals are made up for the present Congress it will be found that the Republican party will not suffer by comparison. Very probably the sum total appropriated this session will be much less than the foregoing figures, but this reduction will be so recklessly made as to necessitate a large deficiency bill at the next session, as well as impair the present efficiency of the service.

THE TARIFF—DOES PROTECTION PROTECT?

The proposition of free trade is, that unrestricted trade will secure better results—that is, more wealth—to this country than protection; or, in other words, that protection does not protect. In proof, the free-trader asserts that under protection one thousand bushels of wheat will purchase but fifteen tons of iron, when without protection, or were there no duty, one thousand bushels of wheat would purchase twenty-five tons of iron; so that we lose by protection ten tons of iron or the value thereof on every thousand bushels of wheat. This has the appearance of a mathematical demonstration, and many people are deceived by it. Were it true, the argument would be ended right here; but it is not true, and to show it is untrue is the task of the protectionist.

On the assumption of the free-trader, the ten tons of difference is the duty—that is what causes it, and that is what it is. The first fallacy is in assuming that this is lost. It is not lost. It has gone into the national treasury, and has saved raising an equal amount from the citizen by direct taxation. Taking the nation as a whole, it has received for the wheat exported fifteen tons of iron and the value of ten tons of iron in gold. This is self evident, and disposes of the proposition that the nation by imposing a duty on iron sacrifices the value of ten tons on a thousand bushels of wheat. It explodes the mathematical demonstration at the start.

But this is not all. There is another self evident proposition, which is: That the cost of transporting the wheat across the ocean, the loading, wharfage, port charges, cost of ships, officers, sailors, port charges, wharfage and handling in the foreign port, and freight to the consumer abroad, and the same items of cost on the return cargo of iron, are all so much tax on the wheat and iron, but principally on the wheat, and are a dead loss to the country, except that portion of the service which may be done by citizens of the country. To these must be added all the risks of the ocean, all the losses by the sinking of ships and cargoes, and all the money made by foreign insurance companies on the whole of the export and import trade. These burdens have to be supported by the producers of the wheat and iron, and are so much loss to the property of the countries which make the exchanges. No other source for payment of these costs and losses can be imagined, and hence this consideration also explodes the theory of profit laid down by the free trader. No country can make as much by sending its wheat abroad to get iron, or cloth, or manufactured wares as by manufacturing them at home.

There is still another and stronger consideration in the case to be mentioned, which bears directly on the question of national wealth, though its relations naturally are very complex. What does a bushel of wheat represent? The answer depends on circumstances. If wheat is selling for one dollar, and the farmer having a surplus bushel lives at such a distance from market that it costs a dollar to transport the wheat, it represents nothing, and is valueless. Where the wheat commands a price which is paying, where the farmer can exchange a thousand bushels for twenty-five tons of iron, the wheat represents the labor which went to make the iron. That labor was embodied in the mind and hands of the human beings who dug the ore and manufactured it, and those human beings imply hatters, tanners, shoemakers, cloth-makers, tailors, and all sorts and kinds of mechanics and artisans and laborers. The wheat sustains the life of the iron-maker, and the iron-maker employs the hatters, shoemakers, tailors, cloth-makers, and laborers—hence the wheat represents the producing power of all these classes, amounting in value to the worth of twenty-five tons of iron per one thousand bushels, or one thousand dollars, more or less, expressed in coin. A thousand bushels of wheat represent, therefore, so much producing power in human life, or machinery, which is the product of human life. In other words, so much property.

Bearing this in mind, it is apparent that the country which raises its thousand bushels of wheat and sends them to a foreign country in exchange for twenty-five tons of iron, after the exchange has only the value of the iron left, while the country which exchanges its wheat for home-made iron has both the iron and the wheat, the latter being represented in the producing power of the hatters, shoemakers, and other operatives who have supplied the wants of the iron-maker. It ought not to require any argument to show that the building and operating of a manufactory of any kind, except ardent spirits, is a positive source of wealth to a country; but the free trade proposition denies this, and contends that it is more profitable to import goods than to manufacture them. We are purposely leaving out at this point all questions between the farmer and manufacturer and laborer in order to meet the free-trade proposition squarely on its national aspect, unembarrassed by any class interests, real or supposed. The proposition we are combating concerns the nation as a body, and however individuals may fare it cannot be true that national wealth is promoted by having its goods made abroad.

So far from the proposition being a mathematical demonstration, it becomes self-evident that the farmer and manufacturer can do better near together than wide apart, and the nation which secures all its business at home will accumulate faster than by dividing it with another nation.

The idea of protection is to build up home business. The making of hats, boots, cloth, tools, machines, and all kinds of wares is what creates business, and so far as our supplies come from abroad that amount of business at home is killed. To meet this objection the free trader says: "No; we will raise so much more grain that we will make up for the amount lost." This is pure assumption. We won't do any such thing. No purely grain-growing country ever did that, and it cannot be done. It cannot be done because of the extra costs and charges of foreign transportation; because of the fact that in exchanging commodities across the ocean there are immense losses which fall upon the producers; and because that in the exchange we part with an equivalent which, on the home theory, is retained.

There are other reasons why it cannot be done. An agricultural country cannot develop and utilize its producing force: never did and never can. A good portion of the men born into the world have no taste for agriculture, and never amount to much as farmers. There are feeble men and boys and girls who can accomplish much in the mechanic arts, who earn nothing on the farm; and it is only by diversified labor that the full producing power of the community can be called into exercise. As national wealth can only result from producing power and power that is exercised, it follows that an agricultural community which cannot possibly utilize its full working force must fall behind other countries in wealth. The example of England in manufacturing shows this on a large scale, and the purely farming towns in New England show it on a small scale. Philosophy and fact agree on this.

In shipping agricultural products abroad there is also a process of exhaustion of the soil going on which, though slow and inappreciable, amounts to an immense loss in time. Our richest lands ultimately wear out, and tracts which not many years ago were exporting wheat are now buyers of flour.

We have now said enough to explode one of the leading assumptions of free trade and to establish the necessity of manufactures as essential to the highest prosperity of the community. The experience of the country coincides with this view, as we will show further on.

In order to make the most profitable exchanges of products possible the producers must be near together. The man who sells grain needs cloth, and the man who sells cloth needs grain, and they both are benefited by being near each other. The country has to have both to insure prosperity; and this for yet another reason: the contiguity of the tradesmen with the farmers enables them to assist each other in building and maintaining highways, bridges, schoolhouses, churches, and all public works; the operatives assist in paying the taxes, which otherwise must be paid by the farmer alone, and they create a demand for a great variety of agricultural products, vegetables, and small fruits which cannot be exported, and whose value to the farmer must be lost without this home market.

To make the nation prosperous we must produce both the wheat and the iron, and everything else in our power, because only thus can we find employment for all varieties of talent.

It requires no argument to prove to a shoemaker that the importation of a large quantity of English shoes will aid to glut the market and deprive his craft of employment to the amount of the importation. These foreign goods take the place of the same quantity of American goods, and lessen American production and property to the same extent. It superadds foreign competition to home competition, as all can see, and breaks down the home artisan and manufacturer just to the extent that the importation takes place of any article which the home artisan can supply, be it shoes, hats, cloth, tools, or wares of any kind.

At this point free trade says: "Well, the effect of importation is to lessen the prices of goods; and while it may also lessen the wages of the workman he will be compensated by being able to buy his goods cheaper, and he can live enough cheaper to make up for the reduction of wages." This position is not sustained by facts. The price-lists under our protective tariffs show that goods have fallen in price and wages have kept steady.

The most prosperous years this country has known were those succeeding the protective tariffs from 1824 to 1834, from 1842 to 1848, and after 1863 to 1873, and the most unfortunate years have been those succeeding the revenue tariffs of 1832 and 1848 and the tariff reductions of 1872. The facts, therefore, do not sustain the proposition, that in consequence of cheap goods imported from foreign countries the laborer can make himself whole for the loss in wages. It is not so, and we have the reasons why: 1. Because labor is the first to suffer from a fall in prices, and the last to recover. Since September, 1872, work has been scarce, and wages low, but beef, pork, flour, and rents remain nearly the same—the concessions have been trifling, as all laboring men are aware. 2. Because the effect of heavy importations of manufactured goods of the same kinds as made in this country is not so much in the reduction of wages as in throwing the workman out of employment, so that he is deprived of the means to buy at any price, no matter how cheap goods may be. He remains idle for a time, and finally must take up some new calling, something he does not understand, or is not expert in, and so is put at a great disadvantage compared with his former condition. Experience has settled this. 3. If we concede that a fall in prices follows a reduction of the tariff, the benefit of that fall enures to the consumers of the kinds of goods on which the fall occurs. These goods are the finer and more costly kinds, such as are not used by laboring men and their families, and consequently the benefit of the reduction enures to the wealthy classes almost exclusively, and the revenue has to be made up by taxing the necessities of life, tea and coffee, which are used as much by the laboring classes as any other. The theory and the facts agree. The laborer under free trade, granting that goods can be purchased cheaper, finds taxes increased, and ability to pay diminished. He may possibly buy a three-dollar hat for two dollars, but if he cannot find employment he cannot get the two dollars, and then the price of hats is immaterial to him. Work is what he needs, and without it he can have no hat. The importation of the foreign hat has driven the home hatter into the labor market as a competitor of the laborer, and thus wages have been depressed.

And this process has enured to the benefit of the non-producer. The merchant, lawyer, schoolmaster, professor, and retired capitalist can all buy their clothes and all other goods cheaper, they can hire their help cheaper, their servants, coachman, gardeners, and mechanics who build and repair their stables and houses. The supposed interests of these non-producing classes make them favor low wages, for low wages make cheap goods, and also make them opponents of protection. On the other hand, the interests of the laboring man require protection, for the plain reason that no possible cheapening of goods can compensate him for the loss of employment, which is sure to follow large importations of manufactured goods. The fall in wages and lost time will always exceed the gain to him by the cheapening of goods.

Passing now from the general effect of a protective tariff upon national wealth and the interests of the laborer, we will consider the argument as presented to the farmer. The free trader tells the farmer that he sells 1,000 bushels of wheat and the money received for it will buy fifteen tons of iron, but adopt free trade, and he will get for the same wheat not less than twenty-five tons of iron, and other goods in proportion. This is pure assumption. There is not a particle of truth in it. No such thing would happen. It could not possibly happen except for a very short period of time, and under exceptional circumstances. The argument is, that the price of wheat to the farmer is governed by the price in Liverpool, representing the manufacturing centers whose population demands food, and that by reducing our tariff so as to invite importations of goods not only would the goods become cheaper to the farmer, but the ability to buy food on the part of the operatives in foreign countries would create an increased demand for breadstuffs and other farm products. This argument flies in the face of the proposition that manufacturers add to the general wealth of the country. This cannot be, and it also be true that it is better to get our supplies of goods from abroad. One or the other proposition must fall. We have shown affirmatively that our proposition is true, and why, and will now try to show why the counter proposition is false.

This is shown in part by the fact which we have already made plain that the amount of the duty is not a total loss but has gone into the treasury and the farmer has paid it on iron, when otherwise he would have paid it on something else. This, however, does not meet that part of the case where it is alleged that the duty has increased the price of the domestic article to the same amount of the foreign, because then no duty has been paid. But this latter statement as to increase of price is also an assumption not proved, but is contradicted by the free trader himself; for in his appeal for a tax on tea and coffee he confidently asserts that the added duty will not enhance the price a particle; and if not in the case of tea and coffee, which cannot be grown here, it certainly will not raise the price on goods which can be produced here and are subject to both home and foreign competition. In assuming that the growers of tea and coffee will pay all the duty imposed on those articles so that the price will remain the same to the consumer the advocate of free trade destroys his own assumption that a duty on manufactured goods necessarily or really compels an advance of price. The free trader disposes of his own proposition, and we are not obliged to meet an argument that has been abandoned. Nevertheless, suppose we admit that a protective duty does add to prices, as it doubtless does in some cases, does the farmer suffer in consequence? We answer, no! There is no possible loss under any conceivable state of things in the long run that is not fully compensated under the operation of the tariff. The farmer, like every business man, must look at the effect of things, not merely for a day but for a period. When the farmer plants an orchard he does not expect to sell apples from it the first year, nor the second, but he is laying the foundation for profit to come some years in the future. For the first few years there is a certainty of loss. So with a tariff. The first year or two there may be a disadvantage in some cases, but in the end never. The farmer secures compensation for his first loss or sacrifice by securing the building up of a market near at hand, where he can sell various products which will not bear long transportation: milk, fruits, poultry, eggs, wood and timber, staves, and a great variety of things which are worthless without a home market. He is compensated also by the home market, because it makes him independent of the fluctuations and influences that operate on foreign markets. The home market is his own. The foreign farmer can never come in and take it from him by underselling. The mechanics and laborers are his sure customers, and he has only the one danger, that Providence will give a larger crop than he prays for, so as to break down the price of corn. Having a home market he can diversify his productions and not be entirely dependent upon wheat and corn, beef and pork. Should there be an immense crop abroad so that it will not pay to ship grain, the home market is always there to buy his produce and supply him with money to meet his obligations. The home market is always the better of the two, for it buys vastly more, and can buy nowhere else. The farmer is sure of it all the time. If the farmer is shrewd he will not destroy or damage his best customer. That is suicide.

In showing the effect of protection upon business there is of late years the difficulty of separating the influences due to railroads, steam power, and improved machinery from those due to protection, but by going back to the years succeeding 1820 there is no such embarrassment, for there were no railroads then, and the other influences had not begun to operate in any large measure. The protective tariffs most complained of were passed in 1824 and 1828. Business had been bad, and growing bad for three years. In a report made to the Legislature of Pennsylvania in 1823 it was stated that there was going on "ruinous sacrifices of landed property at sheriff's sales, whereby lands and houses have been sold at less than half their value—forced sales of merchandise, farming stock and utensils, at prices far below the cost of production, by which numerous families have been deprived of the necessities of life and the implements of their trade." Pennsylvania was then an agricultural State. On the 24th of February, 1824, Mr. Carter, of South Carolina, made a speech in Congress, and said: "In all that region which stretches from the shores of the Potomac to the Gulf of Mexico, where all the arts of civilized life once triumphed, the arm of industry is now paralyzed. Large and ample estates, once the seats of opulence, which supported their proprietors in affluence and comfort, are now thrown out to waste and decay." "The farmer of the grain-growing States will tell you that he has large annual surplusses of grain which he is doomed year after year to see rot and perish on his hands." Mr. Garnet, of Virginia, said, "desolation is spread over the country." The Charleston, South Carolina, Memorial of February 24 says: "A feeling of gloomy despondence is beginning to prevail everywhere in the lower country."

To meet this universal depression which prevailed in New England and Ohio, as well as in Pennsylvania and the South, a tariff was proposed, and the free traders declared that it would complete the ruin of the country. Mr. Tatnall, a representative from Georgia, exclaimed: "Are you prepared by passing this infernal bill to add to a poverty which is already wearing one portion of our country to the bone for the purpose of supplying the appetites of a few pampered nabobs?" Such was the view taken of the tariff bill, but they passed it, nevertheless, and now let us look at consequences:

In 1821 Government securities were selling at seventy-five cents.

In 1830 the same class of securities sold for ninety-four cents.

In 1822 the United States Bank had on hand less than four millions of gold.

In 1830 the United States Bank had on hand ten millions eight hundred thousand in gold.

In 1822 the debt of our people to England exceeded $50,000,000,

In 1830 the English were in debt to us.

In 1822 the Government borrowed five millions to meet interest on the public debt.

In 1831 there had been paid all the interest, and sixty-six millions of the principal of the public debt.

The average increase of capital in manufactures from 1824 to 1830 was seventeen millions per annum.

In 1822 the exports of cotton were 134,000,000 pounds.

In 1830 the exports of cotton had reached 264,000,000 pounds.

In 1822 the exports of rice were 87,000 tierces.

In 1830 the exports of rice reached 171,000 tierces.

In 1822 our tonnage was 1,311,000 tons.

In 1830 our tonnage had reached 1,741,000 tons.

In 1823, the last year of low tariff, our exports were $47,000,000.

In 1830, after five years of protection, our exports reached $74,000,000.

In 1823 our imports were $77,000,000.

In 1830 our imports were $70,000,000, thus bringing the balance of trade in our favor.

The customs revenue went up in the same time from $19,000,000 to $21,000,000.

In 1822 we exported more specie than we imported by..... $6,440,000
In 1829 we imported more specie than we exported by..... 3,083,000

Difference in our favor..... 9,523,000

And this is the way the ruin went on in all branches of business. The result of it was that in the agricultural districts, where the paupers in 1821 were one to every 128 of the people, in 1831 they stood one to 344 of the population. Allowing one able-bodied man to five of population, in 1821 every 26 men had a pauper to maintain, while in 1831 there was only one pauper to 69 able-bodied men in the agricultural districts.

These figures show a general increase of business in all departments, agriculture, manufactures, banking and commerce; and they not only indicate, they prove an advance from a state of general depression and poverty to a condition of buoyancy, hope, comfort, and prosperity. The evils predicted by the free traders did not happen, the expectations of the friends of the tariff were more than fulfilled. Under the operation of the measure we became exporters of manufactured goods instead of importers; we paid the national debt instead of borrowing money to pay the interest of it; and it was done so easily that a large surplus revenue was accumulated which in 1837 was distributed among the States, amounting to $37,000,000. So manifest was our condition that the administration of General Jackson, which was reaping the benefit of the good times, became immensely popular, and in his annual messages he never failed to speak of the "cheering evidences of general welfare and progressive improvement" in a way that indicated the most perfect complacency at the situation.

All this prosperity came to an end, however, when Mr. Clay's compromise measures began to produce results. The reductions by that bill permitted foreign goods to come once more in competition with our own manufactures, and in 1837 our industries were completely prostrated and did not recover until the passage of the protective tariff of 1842.

And from these reasons, supported by these facts, it is concluded that protection does protect notwithstanding the ciphering of the "Parsee" and Mr. David A. Wells.

And now, what is the attitude of the Democratic party on the question? The Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has prepared a bill whose main purpose seems to be the same as was accomplished in the compromise of 1832. If carried, instead of a revival of industry we may look with positive certainty for a deeper and more permanent depression.

NOTE.—In regard to the matter of price as affected by duties, it turned out that after the passage of the tariff of 1824 prices on foreign goods on which increased duties were levied did not rise, but in most cases fell, and the same happened again in 1828. Mr. Samuel D. Bradford, a leading importer of Boston at that time, said: "My house are large operators, and our commercial connections are extensive in Great Britain, Russia, and India, and we imported freely in 1828, and can truly say that nearly every article we imported was actually worth less to us than in the previous year under the old duty." Other great merchants said the same, among them Windsor Fay, Grant & Seaver, Henry Gassett & Co., Horner & Dorr, F. & R. Thompson, of Philadelphia, and numerous other well-known houses. There was a decline in broadcloths, bookings, kerseys, serges, vestings, flannels, Russia goods generally, cottons, worsteds, hosiery, and blankets. Casimeres which cost importers $1.60 per yard under the tariff of 1824 were sold under the tariff of 1828 at $1.55. For several years ending 1827 the duty on molasses had been 5 cents per gallon, and molasses sold for 37½ cents. The tariff of 1828 raised the duty to 10 cents, and for the three years ending 1830, that is 1828, '29, and '30, the average price of molasses was but 27 cents per gallon. Thus do facts show how utterly false is the assumption that duties add to the cost of goods to the consumer.

SQUARING THE OLD ACCOUNT.—At the breaking out of the rebellion Democratic officeholders from the South squared accounts with Uncle Sam by running away with the balance of money and property in their charge. Now that Democracy has got possession of the House of Representatives it proposes to restore to Uncle Sam an amount about equal to the shortcomings of its early ante bellum appointees. The method proposed is an easy one. Take from the salaries of Republican officials from ten to twenty per cent., and cut down the necessary appropriations to an amount equal to the amount stolen by Southern Democrats and the accounts are squared. There is something sublime in the impudence displayed by the Democrats in carrying out their novel plan of restoration, but they will find out in the Presidential campaign that the taxing of Republicans will not cover up the sins of Democratic officials.

RELATIONS OF THE STATE TO RELIGION AND THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

ANALYTICAL SUMMARY OF ALL THE PROVISIONS IN THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES AND OF THE CONSTITUTIONS OF THE SEVERAL STATES; ALSO THE PROVISIONS OF LAW IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AND OF THE SEVERAL TERRITORIES BEARING UPON THE CHURCH, THE STATE, AND THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

In the present condition of the public mind and the wide-spread interest felt in the questions at issue, no apology is necessary for the presentation of the several Constitutional requirements now existing by which the present status of the public schools, and of the several religious sects, in their attitude toward Nation and States are defined. This presentation will be found invaluable to the editor, writer, and speaker. The student will not fail to note also the manner in which this summary illustrates the growth of public opinion to a more purely secular method of dealing with these issues than was manifested in earlier days. The only provisions to be found in the Constitution of the United States which bear directly upon the subject-matters are the following:

Article VI, Section third, directs the taking of an oath or affirmation to support the Constitution, to be taken by United States Senators, Representatives, the members of the several State Legislatures, all judicial and executive officers, "but no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States." In the amendments the Constitution provides "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion.—Art. I.

The argument has also been made that Article IX, which reads as follows: "The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people," allows the States to do what the first amendment prohibits the Union from doing, viz: establishing and maintaining a State religion. It would seem as if this interpretation was either hastily made, or obviously strained, as the Union would not be likely to stipulate that the States might, in detail, each for themselves, do that which both States and People (taking either view that is held as to the source of Federal power and Constitution) prohibit the whole—the collective States or National Unity—from doing:

PART I.—Taxation of Church Property.

Houses used exclusively for public worship shall never be taxed.—Ark., 1868.

Property used for religious purposes may be exempted by law.—Fla., 1868.

Taxation shall be uniform on all species of property taxed.—Georgia, 1868.

Property used exclusively for religious purposes may be exempted from taxation by general law.—Ill., 1870.

Property used for religious purposes may be exempted by law.—Ind., 1851.

Property used exclusively for religious purposes shall be exempt from taxation.—Kansas, 1859.

The General Assembly shall have power to exempt from taxation property actually used for church, school, or charitable purposes.—La., 1868.

All taxes upon real estate assessed by authority of this State shall be apportioned and assessed equally, according to the just value thereof.—Maine, 1820.

Taxation shall be levied on such property as shall be prescribed by law.—Mich., 1850.

Property used exclusively for religious purposes may be exempt from taxation.—Minn., 1857-8.

Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. All property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law.—Miss., 1868; Cal., 1879; La., 1868.

The property of corporations formed for religious purposes may be exempt from taxation by law.—Nev., 1864.

All property subject to taxation ought to be taxed in proportion to its value.—Mo., 1865.

The General Assembly may exempt from taxation property held for religious purposes.—N. C., 1868.

Burying grounds and houses used exclusively for public worship may be exempted from taxation by general law.—Ohio, 1850, 1851.

Property used for religious purposes may be exempted from taxation by law.—Oregon, 1857.

Churches and burying grounds are exempt from taxation.—S. C., 1868.

The Legislature may exempt from taxation property used exclusively for religious purposes.—Tenn., 1870.

All property in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value, &c., except such property as two-thirds of both Houses of the Legislature may think proper to exempt from taxation.—Texas, 1869.

The Legislature may exempt all property used exclusively for religious purposes.—Va., 1870.

Property used for religious purposes may by law be exempted from taxation.—W. Va., 1861.

The rule of taxation shall be uniform, and taxes shall be levied upon such property as the Legislature shall prescribe.—Wis., 1848.

The property of corporations shall forever be subject to taxation the same as property of individuals, except corporations for educational and charitable purposes.—Ala., 1868.

No man, or sect of men, are entitled to exclusive public emoluments or privileges from the community.—Conn., 1818.

No man, or set of men, are entitled to exclusive separate public emoluments or privileges from the community but in consideration of public services.—Ky., 1850.

Every person in the State, or person holding property therein, ought to contribute his proportion of public taxes for the support of the government, according to his actual worth in real or personal property.—Md., 1867.

The property of corporations shall forever be subject to taxation the same as property of individuals.—Neb., Church Property, 1867.

Provision may be made by general laws for securing the title to church property, so that it may be held and used for the purpose intended.—W. Va., 1861.

The quantity of land which may be held by any religious body corporate, in connection with a house of worship or a parsonage, shall not exceed five acres in the county or one acre in a town or city.—Mo., 1865.

Property can only be held by such body corporate through a board of trustees selected by themselves.—Mo., 1865.

The General Assembly may secure the title to church property to an extent to be limited by law.—Va., 1870.

No charter of incorporation shall be granted to any church or religious denomination.—W. Va., 1861.

Religious corporations cannot be established except by general law.—Mo., 1865.

The General Assembly shall not grant a charter of incorporation to any church or religious denomination.—Va., 1870.

PART II.—Devises and Successions.

The gift, sale, or devise of land to ministers or religious sects or orders, or for the support of, or in trust for, any minister or preacher of the gospel, as such, or for any religious denomination or order, shall, except as above limited, be void.—Mo., 1865.

Every gift or sale of goods or chattels to go in succession, or to take place after the death of the seller or donor, for such purposes shall be void.—Mo., 1865.

Devises of goods or chattels for such purposes, or to any person in trust for such purposes, are void.—Mo., 1865.*

Any devise or conveyance of land or other property to ministers, as such, or for the support of any religious sect, without the sanction of the Legislature, is void, except not exceeding five acres of land for church, parsonage, or burying ground.—Md., 1867.

No special provisions respecting the taxation or exemption of property held for religious purposes are found in the following constitutions:—Del., 1831; Iowa, 1857; Mass., 1780; N. H., 1792; N. J., 1844; N. Y., 1846-'67; Pa., 1838; R. I., 1842; Vt., 1793.

A summary of provisions respecting exemption from taxation of property held for religious purposes.

Churches are exempt.—Arkansas.

Churches and burying grounds are exempt.—South Carolina.

Churches and burying grounds may be exempted by general law.—Ohio.

Property used exclusively for religious purposes shall be exempt.—Kansas.

The Legislature has special power to exempt by general law in the following States:—Fla., Ill., Ind., La., Minn., Nev., N. C., Oregon, Tenn., Va., W. Va.

The Legislature may prescribe the property on which taxes may be levied.—Cal., La., Mich., Miss., Mo., Texas, Wis.

Exemptions apparently not authorized in Ala., Conn., Ky., Md., Neb.

The constitutions are silent in Del., Iowa, Mass., N. H., N. J., N. Y., Pa., R. I., Vt.

In the Territories and District of Columbia.

The legislative assemblies of Colorado, Dakota, and Wyoming shall not make any discrimination in taxing different kinds of property, but all property subject to taxation shall be taxed in proportion to its value.—U. S. Revised Statutes, Sec. 1925.

*These provisions are in the main retained under the constitution adopted in 1875, an instrument on which, however, only a minority of the suffragans in the State cast their ballots.

In Washington Territory all taxes shall be equal and uniform, and no distinctions shall be made in the assessments between different kinds of property, but the assessments shall be according to the value of the property.—U. S. Revised Statutes, Sec. 1924.

Limitations upon amount of property which may be held for religious purposes.

No corporation or association for religious or charitable purposes shall acquire or hold real estate in any Territory, during the existence of the Territorial Government, of a greater value than $50,000, and all real estate acquired or held by such corporation or association contrary hereto shall be forfeited, and escheat to the United States.—U. S. Revised Statutes, Sec. 1890.

District of Columbia.

All churches and school houses, and all buildings, grounds, and property appurtenant thereto, and used in connection therewith in the District, and any cemetery therein, held and owned by a religious society, having a known and regular place of worship, or by any incorporated association, shall be exempt from any and all taxes or assessments, national or municipal.—U. S. Revised Statutes, District of Columbia, Sec. 147.

Societies or congregations formed under the general incorporation act of May 5, 1870, for the purpose of religious worship may receive by gift, devise, or purchase a quantity of land not exceeding one acre for the erection of buildings, &c.—U. S. Revised Statutes, District of Columbia, Sec. 533.

The quantity of land authorized to be conveyed and held for the use of religious congregations prior to May 5, 1870, and subsequent to June 17, 1844, was fifty acres in the county of Washington, and three acres in the cities of Washington or Georgetown, and such property "shall not be held by the trustees of such congregation for any other use than as a place of public worship, religious or other instruction, burial ground, or residence of their minister."—U. S. Revised Statutes, District of Columbia, Sec. 456.

Part II—School Funds.

The school fund shall remain a perpetual fund, and the interest shall be inviolably appropriated to the support and encouragement of the public or common schools throughout the State, and for the equal benefit of all the people thereof, and no law shall ever be made authorizing said fund to be diverted to any other use than the encouragement and support of public or common schools among the several school societies, as justice and equity may require.—Conn., 1818.

The permanent fund for the support of public schools shall remain a perpetual fund for that purpose, and shall not be borrowed, appropriated, or used for any other purpose, under any pretense whatever.—R. I., 1842.

The school fund shall remain a perpetual fund, and the interest shall not be used for any other purpose than the support of public schools under any pretense whatever.—N. J., 1844.

The capital of the common school fund shall remain inviolate, and the revenue shall be applied to the support of the common schools.—N. Y., 1846-'67.

The revenues from the school fund and school lands shall be faithfully applied.—Wis., 1848.

Shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of common schools.—Cal., 1849.

The principal of all funds granted or intrusted to the State for educational and religious purposes shall forever be preserved inviolate and undiminished, and the income arising therefrom shall be faithfully applied to the specific objects of the original grants or appropriations.—Ohio, 1850-'51; Neb., 1867.

All school funds, however derived, shall be inviolably applied to the specific objects of the original gift, grant, or appropriation.—Mich., 1850.

School funds and moneys raised by taxation for the support of common schools shall be held inviolate, and shall be applied to no other purpose.—Ky., 1850.

The income of the common school fund shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of common schools, and to no other purpose whatever.—Ind., 1851.

All moneys raised by taxation in the towns and cities for the support of public schools, and all moneys which may be appropriated by the State for the support of common schools, shall be applied to, and expended in, no other schools than those which are conducted according to law, under the order and superintendence of the authorities of the town or city in which the money is to be expended.—Mass., 1855, (amendment.)*

The income of the school fund, and such other money as the General Assembly may provide, shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of common schools throughout the State.—Iowa, 1857.

All public school funds shall forever be preserved inviolate, and the income shall be faithfully applied to the specific objects of the original grants or appropriations.—Minn., 1857-'8.

* This provision was defeated in 1855 by a pro-Catholic combination, engineered by the Democrats. It was afterward resubmitted and ratified.

The common school fund shall be separate and irreducible, and the revenues shall be exclusively applied to the support and maintenance of common schools in each school district, and purchase of suitable libraries and apparatus therefor.—Oregon, 1857.

The increase of the school fund and such other means as the Legislature may provide, by taxation or otherwise, shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of common schools.—Kansas, 1857.

The interest of the school fund shall be annually applied to the support of free schools throughout the State, and to no other purpose whatever — W. Va., 1867.

All school funds are solemnly pledged for educational purposes, and shall not be transferred to any other fund for any other uses.—Nevada, 1864.

The school funds shall be faithfully appropriated for establishing and maintaining the free schools and university, and for no other uses or purposes whatever.—Mo., 1865.

The school fund of the State shall be kept inviolate, and appropriated only to the purposes of education.*—Md., 1867.

School funds shall be inviolably appropriated to educational purposes, and to no other purpose whatever.—Ala., 1868.

And for no other uses or purposes whatever.—Ark., 1868.

The interest of the school fund shall be exclusively applied to the support and maintenance of common schools.—Fla., 1868.

The school fund shall be sacredly preserved as an irreducible educational fund, the annual income of which, together with so much of the ordinary revenue of the State as may be necessary, shall be faithfully appropriated for establishing and perfecting in this State a system of free public schools, and for no other purposes or uses whatever.—N. C., 1868.

The income of the school fund, together with such other means as the General Assembly may provide, shall be faithfully appropriated for the purpose of establishing and maintaining free public schools, and for no other purposes or uses whatever.—S. C., 1868.

The school funds shall remain a perpetual fund, the interest of which shall be inviolably appropriated for the support of free schools.—Miss., 1868.

||* It will be perceived that this provision does not prevent the appropriation of school moneys to private schools or for sectarian purposes.

Shall remain inviolate.—La., 1868.

The common school fund shall be a perpetual fund, and no law shall be made authorizing said fund or any part thereof to be diverted to any other use than the support and encouragement of common schools.—Tenn., 1870.

The public school fund, and the school taxes provided for, shall be a perpetual fund, and shall be applied exclusively for the education of all the scholastic inhabitants of this State; and no laws shall ever be made appropriating such fund for any other use or purpose whatever.—Texas, 1869.

Religion in the Public Schools.

No religious or other sect, or sects, shall ever have any exclusive right to, or control of, any part of the school funds of this State.—Ohio, 1850-'51; Ark., 1868; Neb., 1867.

The school moneys shall never be appropriated to any religious sect for the maintenance, exclusively, of its own school.—Mass., (amendment,) 1855.

No religious sect or sects shall ever control any part of the common school or university fund of the State.—Kansas, 1859.

No sectarian instruction shall be imparted or tolerated in any school or university that may be established under this Constitution.—Nevada, 1864.

No appropriations shall be made by the General Assembly for the support of any private school or any private institution of learning whatever.—La., 1868.

No religious sect or sects shall ever control any part of the school or university funds of this State.—Miss., 1868.

No religious sect or sects shall have exclusive right to or control of any part of the school funds of the State, nor shall sectarian principles be taught in the public schools.—S. C., 1868.

Neither the General Assembly nor any county, city, town, township, school district, or other public corporation, shall ever make any appropriation, or pay from any public fund whatever any thing in aid of any church or sectarian purpose, or to help support or sustain any school, academy, seminary, college, university or other literary or scientific institution controlled by any church or sectarian denomination whatever; nor shall any grant or donation of land, money, or other personal property ever be made by the State or any such public corporation to any church or for any sectarian purpose.—Ill., 1870.

Neither the General Assembly nor any county, city, township, school district, or other municipal corporation shall ever make any appropriation, or pay from any public fund whatever anything in aid of any creed, church, or sectarian purpose, or to help, support, or sustain any school, academy, seminary, college, university, or other institution of learning, controlled by any creed, church, or sectarian denomination whatever, nor shall any grant or donation of personal property or real estate ever be made by State, county, city, town, or such public corporation, for any creed, church, or sectarian purpose whatever.—Mo., (amendment,) 1870.

[NOTE.—This amendment was ratified by the people, November 8, 1870, by a majority of 115,329. It is embraced also in the constitution of 1875.]

PART III.—Public Support of Religious Institutions.

No money shall be drawn from the treasury for the benefit of religious societies or religious or theological seminaries.—Wis., 1848.

No money shall be appropriated or drawn from the treasury for the benefit of any religious sect or society, theological or religious seminary, nor shall any property belonging to the State be appropriated for any such purpose.—Mich., 1850.

No money shall be drawn from the treasury for the benefit of any religious or theological institution.—Ind., 1851; Oregon, 1857.

Nor shall any money be appropriated for the payment of any religious service in either House of the Legislative Assembly.—Oregon, 1857.

No money shall be drawn from the treasury for the benefit of any religious societies, or religious or theological seminaries.—Minn., 1857-8.

The several towns, parishes, bodies corporate, or religious societies shall have the exclusive right of electing their own public teachers, and of contracting with them for their support and maintenance.—N. H., 1792.

All religious societies shall have the exclusive right of electing their public teachers, and contracting with them for their support.—Me., 1820.

Religious societies shall ever have the right to elect their pastors or religious teachers, to contract with them for their support, and to raise money for the erection of houses for public worship and the maintenance of religious instruction.—Mass., (amendment,) 1833.

THE TRUTH OF HISTORY AND THE HORRORS OF ANDERSONVILLE.

With no desire to arouse vindictive feelings or bitter memories are the following facts reproduced. Memories most sad, sufferings most intense, attend every page and incident of the black record. But there is a duty to be performed. The men who defended slavery, and in so doing sought to rend the American Union, have, through the mouths of their chosen representatives and their accepted leader—in the interest of a new and more dangerous movement to conquer what they failed to destroy—defiantly denied the justice of a verdict once rendered. They now seek to add insult to injury by declaring the National Government responsible for the atrocities of Andersonville, and as being guilty of greater crimes against the rebel soldiers in its hands as prisoners of war than were perpetrated in that and kindred pandemoniums.

The extracts herewith given are from a letter written by one who was a private soldier at the time, but whose education and character fitted him for a much more responsible position. Mr. Wallsh was an important witness at the trial of Wirz. The testament to which allusion is made was a small pocket volume, on the margins of whose pages Mr. Wallsh pencilled a diary, some extracts from which are here given. On his release he transcribed these notes literally, and now possesses the sacred book and the manuscript one in which his notes were written. The statements bear the stamp of truth.

It is worthy of note, at this point, that the defense of insufficient supplies, as against the charge of premeditated starvation of our men, is set at rest by the fact that during the very year in which Mr. Wallsh and his comrades were so cruelly treated, General Sherman's army of about sixty thousand men marched through the State of Georgia, one wing of it passing within fifty or sixty miles of the prison pen, and subsisted entirely from the country through which they moved.

ABUNDANCE OF PROVISIONS IN THE CONFEDERACY.

A recent letter from North Carolina, written by one who was in the Confederacy throughout the rebellion, and with ample facilities for knowing, calls attention to the following facts :

"That it was well known that there was such an outcry against the planting of so much cotton that in some cases it raised a suspicion of loyalty (that word was a very popular one in the South during the rebellion) against those who, as before the war, planted nearly all their land in cotton. The corn and pork crops were immense, and particularly so in the latter years. Money was, of course, drawn away into the rebel army. In the western part of this State, (North Carolina,) there were very plentiful crops of wheat raised. This was the case, too, in northern Georgia. Sherman found very large quantities of supplies for his army in his 'march to the sea.' It is well remembered here that it was the boast of the Confederates—the warm war ones—that upon a suggestion of the high prices of provisions in their paper money, the reply was very promptly made that the gold would bring forth any quantity of provisions, and at low prices.

"When Schofield's army came through here (1864-'5) they found vast quantities of provisions and forage, and that, too, where there had been loud talk of a scarcity when the Confederate tithing officers were round. Schofield was largely supplied as he went along. And yet provisions could not be had for Andersonville in all Georgia and Alabama—the plantation States. We here know that is all 'bosh,' if Jefferson Davis and his cohorts assert it till their tongues turn as black as their nefarious principles.

"As further evidence of the fact that there was no scarcity, let it be remembered that the accounts rendered for supplies taken by the Union armies have been many in number, and ample in amount. The Quartermaster General's office has received very many. Others have been presented through another channel. Very many are still held back, awaiting the advent to power of a different influence, when these, too, will be presented. They will reach from this locality alone many hundreds of thousands of dollars—all of them, too, for supplies to the Union army."

The evidence on this and kindred topics is overwhelming. But to return to Andersonville, what follows will bear careful perusal:

A PRISONER'S NARRATIVE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 29, 1865.

COLONEL EMERIC ZABAD, late A. D. C., Third Army Corps.

COLONEL :

* * * * *

You desire a history of my prison life while in the so-called Confederate States. I did not intend that such misery should become manifest to the world; the dictates of humanity should cast the veil of oblivion over those days of suffering, cold, hunger, and want, but as you wish it I give a few of the incidents. I fear you will find me but a poor chronicler of those days of mortal misery, awful and premeditated persecution.

About three o'clock on the morning of the 27th of November, 1863, I was captured at Brandy station, Virginia, by the notorious Mosby. He was accompanied by over one hundred of his gang, all dressed alike in our uniform. I was robbed of six months' pay which I received the day before.

* * * * *

We reached Richmond, Virginia, on Sunday, 29th November, where our misery commenced. At the Libby prison we (twenty-six prisoners) were stripped of our clothing, and underwent a rigid search. Over five hundred dollars were taken from my fellow prisoners, after which our clothing was restored, and in our worn-out and destitute condition we were consigned to Pemberton prison, opposite Libby.

For the first fortnight we lived tolerably well, thanks to the sanitary commissioners who supplied pork and hard tack (biscuits.) We were then informed that the supply was out, and we had, therefore, nolens volens, to subsist on prison fare—a small piece of corn bread daily, alternately receiving in addition some filthy, sour, and unpalatable brown soup.

I had not changed my shirt during the three months while at Richmond, and we had no soap.

About one o'clock on the morning of the 22d February, 1864, four hundred of us prisoners left Richmond, each receiving a loaf of half baked bread.

We reached Andersonville, Georgia, on the 29th February; some of our party died on the road, and we were turned into that celebrated stockade like so many cattle put into a pound.

On our journey to Andersonville we never received more than three coarse biscuits per diem; no meat, and we had to stand up in the (freight) carriages the entire journey, occasionally being turned into a field to stretch our wearied limbs whenever the train ran off the track.

There was no preparation made for us at our destination; the stockade was not provided with either shed or shelter in any shape or form, and we had to shift for ourselves as best we could. There were not two thousand prisoners confined there at this time. Two cooking utensils only were allowed to every ninety men, and each one had to wait his turn to cook his little ration of corn meal and bacon. I have often had my breakfast, in consequence, so late as ten o'clock at night.

Captain Wirz commanded the prison, than whom does not exist a more despotic and desperate tyrant, and for the most trivial offense, real or supposed, he would stop our entire rations for the day. I have often had, in consequence, to fast for thirty-six hours at a time.

In July there were

THIRTY-SIX THOUSAND PRISONERS

in the stockade, which was then only enlarged by ten acres, making in all twenty-six acres, including seven acres of swamp. The swamp was converted into a black, muddy soil by the deposit of human excrement; it was literally a moving mass of maggots. The exhalation from it was truly awful.

I have seen many men shot at by the guards. It was not unusual for me to see, when I went daily to fetch water from a course which ran through the swamp, the sentry with his gun at the ready to shoot down the first man who ventured to lay his hand on the rail of the dead line; and I have seen them aim, fire, and kill. I shall never forget seeing the heart's blood of a prisoner (he had but recently arrived) crimson that stream. It was no unusual nightly occurrence to hear five or six shots fired, nor the like number during the day. Numbers were shot down in this manner.

During the months of June and July, 1864, I have seen many men the camp, and also in the swamp; and during the month of May, before the hospitals (as they were called) were removed outside of the stockade, many weak and sickly patients fell into the sinks which were provided for their accommodation by their fellow prisoners, and smothered in the filth before assistance could be rendered.

FALL DOWN AND DIE ABOUT

The food we received was wholly insufficient, and it was equally repugnant. We suffered bad treatment at the hands of some of our fellow prisoners, desperadoes from the army and navy; men were coolly and deliberately robbed and murdered at night by these parties. Lynch law was enacted, and I saw six of these malefactors strung up together and hanged within the stockade.

I was paroled in August last, and assigned to duty in the office of Surgeon Isaiah White, where I succeeded Dorrance Atwater in keeping the official record of our dead.

I believe the late General Winder did not take command at Andersonville until the month of May, 1864, when he had those formidable fortifications and batteries erected

OVERAWING THE PRISON.

I have seen the General very often. Captain Wirz called upon him daily on official matters, but independent of any instructions he might have received from the General the man himself was equal to any emergency, any brutality that the Devil might prompt him to, or the monster's own bad heart might suggest.

The innumerable and indescribable diseases occurring among the prisoners were caused principally through want of proper food and cleanliness, combined with harsh and unmitigated cruelty.

I am aware that reports went forward to Richmond stating that the inclosure (the stockade) was quite inadequate to afford accommodation for one-third of the prisoners, and that the food was not alone improper but insufficient in quantity; and I have heard that the callous and heartless answer received from Richmond to such and the like remonstrances was that if more prisoners arrived to "cram them in."

* * * * *

Chief Surgeon White, Surgeons Stevenson, Hearndon, and Rowsie did everything in their power that professional skill could devise or humanity dictate to provide for the sick, as well in the hospital as in the stockade, where the daily mortality was equal; but in the face of insuperable obstacles and barriers, and

IN THE ABSENCE OF PROPER MEDICINES, save those indigenous to the soil, what could they do to obviate their suffering, or prevent the awful daily mortality.

I subjoin the particulars of the mortality which occurred at Andersonville, Georgia, from the opening of the stockade, February 24, to November 15, 1864. They are authentic, and may be relied upon. I copied them from the official books kept at Andersonville.

I was released at Savannah, Georgia, November 20, 1864.

Of the four hundred prisoners who left Richmond with me I venture to say fifty are not now alive to indorse my statement.

1864.	Deaths.
March.....	283
April.....	576
May.....	708
June.....	1,201
July.....	1,952
August.....	2,992
September.....	3,217
October to 15th November, 1864.....	1,151
Total.....	12,080

Very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

THOMAS WALLSH,

Late of Company F, 74th New York Volunteers.

A PRISON DIARY.

The following extracts are copied from the Testament kept by Thomas Wallsh while a prisoner of war:

1863.

Nov. 27. Captured by Mosby at Brandy station, Virginia, three o'clock, A. M.

Nov. 28. Arrived at Gordonsville.

Nov. 29. Arrived at Richmond.

1864.

Feb. 9. One hundred and nine officers escaped from confinement in Libby. It is said Colonel Straight also escaped.

Feb. 17. First batch, four hundred prisoners, left for Andersonville.

Feb. 18. Second batch four hundred prisoners.

Feb. 21. Third batch four hundred prisoners. Changed our prison quarters from Pemberton to Crew's, next adjoining. Two hundred prisoners from Belle Island joined us. They give a terrible account of that place. We expect to leave for Georgia to-morrow.

Feb. 22. Monday. Left Richmond at an early hour this morning; each prisoner received a loaf of corn bread; it was only half baked. I was very ill during the day; we traveled during the entire day and night; had to stand up during the journey. Fifty prisoners were crammed into each carriage.

Feb. 23. The train ran off the track within one mile of Raleigh, North Carolina, left the cars about five miles west of Raleigh, and camped in the woods. The guards here were kind to us. Eight small biscuits for a day's ration.

Feb. 24. Left Raleigh; received eight biscuits.

Feb. 25. Charlotte; cars again ran off the track; received two crackers (for twenty-four hours) rations.

Feb. 26. Received a corn-dodger; a piece of cooked beef about the size of a dollar piece; night cold.

Feb. 27. Intensely cold; embarked on trucks; left Charlotte; six poor fellows interred here; about three P. M., arrived at Columbia; changed trucks for cars; colored people offered cakes and pies for sale; guards drove them away.

Feb. 28. Traveled all night, and arrived ten o'clock Sunday morning at Augusta, Georgia, and received two biscuits each. There was a good deal of excitement here, young boys and old men were being drilled. On leaving this place we were served out with to-morrow's rations, six crackers and two slices of bacon.

Feb. 29. At two o'clock arrived at our destination, Camp Sumter, Andersonville, Georgia, and received two crackers. The prison contains sixteen acres of ground, but the inclosure is not yet completed. The change from Richmond appears to be a decided improvement. The place is simply a pound on an extensive scale. No shelter whatever to keep us from the inclemency of the weather.

In Georgia State, in rebeldom, there stands, Amidst pestilential air and swampy lands, A prison—a place more fit for Southern dogs Who raised its lofty walls of pine wood logs.

Mr. Wallsh makes reference to Dorrence Atwater, now United States consul at Tahiti. Fortunately this gentleman has not only preserved an authentic record, but he is himself now on his way home upon leave, and will be able to testify in person to the facts, of the brutal details of which he had abundant opportunity of knowing. Mr. Atwater published, it will be remembered, a list of Union soldiers who died at Andersonville, Georgia, and was afterward with Miss Clara Barton, the noble American woman whose patriotic services in our war, and afterward to a common humanity during the Franco-Prussian contest, entitle her to as undying fame as that which clusters about the name of Florence Nightingale, occupied in arranging and naming the graves in the national cemetery at Andersonville.

Mr. Atwater says, in a preface to the list referred to, that he was taken prisoner July 7, 1863, and five months after sent from Belle Isle to Andersonville, where in May, 1864, he was paroled and detailed in Surgeon White's office. He kept the record of daily mortality, and also made monthly and quarterly abstracts of the deaths.

"The latter one," he writes, "was said to be for the Federal Government, which" he learned afterwards, "was never received."

"THE APPALLING MORTALITY"

continues Mr. Atwater, "was such that I suspected that it was the design of the rebel Government to kill and maim our prisoners by exposure and starvation so that they would forever be totally unfit for military service, and that they withheld these facts."

Mr. Atwater determined, therefore, to obtain and keep a list of the dead, which he did, beginning to copy in August, in 1864, and bringing it with him safely through the lines in March, 1865. These rolls were used to verify and correct the lists and books afterward captured at Andersonville by General Wilson.

MISS CLARA BARTON, in the same publication, published her report of the expedition made to the prison-pen, in order to clear the grounds for cemetery purposes, and to identify the graves of our dead. Her graphic pen gives a painful description of the scenes as they appeared in July, 1865, three months after surrender. She says:

"We are wont to attribute their (the captives) chief suffering to insufficiency of food, and while this is probably just, still, to the mind of one who has looked over the scanty, shelterless, pitiful spot of earth to which they were confined, and taken into consideration the numberless trials which must have grown out of the privation of space and the necessary conveniences of life, the conviction will force itself that these latter woes fell but little short of the former. It is to be remembered that during thirteen long months they knew neither shelter nor protection from the changeable skies above nor the pitiless, unfeeling earth beneath."

* * * "Think of thirty thousand men penned by close stockade, upon twenty-six acres of ground from which every tree and shrub had been uprooted for fuel to cook their scanty food, huddled, like cattle, without shelter or blanket, half-clad and hungry, with the dreary night setting in after a day of autumn rain. The hill-tops would not hold them all; the valley was filled with the swollen brook; seventeen feet from the stockade run the fatal dead line beyond which no man might step and live. * * *

But this is only one feature of their suffering; and perhaps the lightest. Of the long, dazzling months when gaunt famine stalked at noonday, and pestilence walked at night, * * * I will not trust myself to speak; I scarce dare think. * * * But after this, whenever any man who has lain a prisoner within the stockade of Andersonville would tell you of his sufferings, how he fainted, scorched, drenched, hungered, sickened, was scoffed, scourged, hunted, persecuted, though the tale be long and twice-told, as you would have your own wrongs appreciated, your own woes pitied, your own cries for mercy heard, I charge you, listen and believe him. However definitely he may have spoken know he has not told you all. However strongly he may have outlined, or deeply he may have colored his picture, know that the reality calls for a better light and a nearer view than your clouded, distant gaze will ever get."

The earnest and pathetic appeal of the noble woman who wrote the foregoing is not likely to be unheeded, especially when the diabolism which planned and maintained such unnecessary misery and cruelty, dares to flaunt its brazen denials in the face of the still living survivors thereof. There can be no question of the deliberate character of the atrocious cruelty that was systematically practiced, nor of the other appalling fact, that such cruelty was approved and carried out under the orders of the President of the Slaveholders' Confederacy.

For a lack of medical supplies there may be some excuse. For an insufficiency of food even, at times, there might be undesigned reasons. But for the deliberate brutality which denuded the stockade inclosure of all shelter, even to a tree, and which prevented the erection of even the poorest apologies for protection from the sun and rains, there cannot be the slightest excuse presented. The responsibility of Jefferson Davis for this is proven by his adverse indorsements on the reports of the Inspector General, and by his continued marks of favor to the brutal General Winder, following close after the conduct of that person was made known by Col. Chandler and other reputable witnesses, to the rebel war department. The finger of history and the voice of mankind will emphasize the verdict against Mr. Davis.

Surmounting that Hill.

The following brief but spirited dialogue is reported as occurring between Honorable B. H. Hill, of Georgia, and General M. M. Bane, of Illinois. The latter is a well-known Radical Republican, and was a very gallant officer of the Union army. Of Mr. Hill it is unnecessary to speak. The Union surmounted that Hill from 1861 to 1865, and it is not likely to long remain an obstacle. Some friend introduced the two gentlemen as Radicals of opposite schools. Mr. Hill soon declared, as they talked, that "this idea of equality and universal suffrage will ruin the Republic."

Bane told him:

"Sir, we have put it in the Constitution, and sealed it with our blood, and, sir, it shall be kept there, and if we can't keep it there with you in Congress, we'll put you out again."

The spirit of both sections spoke in these few words. But while there is no doubt that Mr. Hill would be "put out" if necessary, it is equally as certain there will be no occasion.

TOOMBS AND THE SCALAWAG.

BY A SOUTHERN REPUBLICAN.

"The worst of all things the world ever saw, the Scalawag, the consummation of all villainy."—Extract from the speech of Robert Toombs delivered in the Representative Hall at the Capitol of Georgia, on the night of the 25th of January, 1876.

Many Democrats, apparently shocked by the fiery and vehement utterances of their distinguished leader on the occasion alluded to, attempt to explain and palliate their effect upon the civilized world as being but the vapid mouthings of an old man in his dotage.

Seeing no other excuse for such utterances on such an occasion by so distinguished an orator, they affect to pretend that it may be truly said of Mr. Toombs, now, "stat magni nominis umbra" exhibiting only a faint image of his former greatness.

A due regard for the truth of history requires that the fallacy of this statement be exposed.

Mr. Toombs to-day deservedly stands in the front rank of his profession as one of the safest counsellors and most eloquent and efficient advocates at the Bar. And it may well be questioned whether any one, holding this position, truthfully, can be said to be in his dotage.

Again, it is well known, that, prior to this speech of Mr. Toombs, the calling of a constitutional convention of the people of Georgia, while it had been agitated to a very limited extent, in a few localities, had never been considered a politic or feasible measure by the mass of the Democratic party of that State.

[EDITORIAL NOTE.—This article so clearly and moderately sets forth a certain view of the political situation, as entertained by those whom the writer ably represents, that its value cannot be questioned, even though there can be no doubt to those who, like THE REPUBLIC, endeavor to look at all things in their national and not their local aspects, that the severe censure the writer makes on Northern Republican hostility or indifference to the "native" Southern Republican sentiment is almost wholly overdrawn and without foundation. The most virulent criticisms in Northern newspapers and the most pronounced coldness exhibited by Republicans North, has been towards the Northern-born citizens of the South who are termed "carpet-baggers," or to the active colored politicians, and not at all towards those who, having served in the rebellion have since in manly honesty accepted "the situation." It is difficult for our Southern-born friends to entirely understand the absence of sectional pride or way of looking at affairs, which is a marked characteristic of the loyal States.]

But, in less than one week after Mr. Toombs made the speech quoted from above, in which he peremptorily demanded of the Legislature that it should take the necessary action to allow the will of the people of Georgia (the Democratic party according to Mr. Toombs constituting the only true people) to be heard on the question of a convention, a bill calling a convention was passed in the House of Representatives by an overwhelming majority.

Can it, then, be truthfully said that a man is in his dotage, or that his political influence and power is even waning, when the influence of his eloquence upon the minds of his constituents is such as, in one short week, to effect an entire change of views of the popular branch of the Georgia Democratic Legislature upon a question so momentous as that of calling a convention of the people of the State, for the purpose of changing the constitution, the organic law.

And does not the attempt of the apologists for the Toombs, to explain away the evil of his speech by attributing his unfortunate utterances to his dotage, come with a bad grace from men, most of whom, upon a comparison with Mr. Toombs for strength and keenness of intellect, would appear like farthing rush-lights beside noonday sun.

Evidently, Senator Gordon, one of the most prudent and sagacious of all the Confederate leaders in the South, does not consider Mr. Toombs in his dotage, or as wanting influence, for we find him availing himself of the earliest opportunity afforded him to deliver an address to his constituents deploring the effect of Mr. Toombs speech upon the minds of the thinking men of the North, and counseling them to do all in their power to counteract the effect of that speech as soon so possible.

Let, then, no true friend of American constitutional liberty, as proclaimed in the platform of the National Union Republican party, cherish the delusion that Mr. Toombs, who has ever been one of the ablest and most bitter of its foes, is in his dotage, and incapable of further effective service in the ranks of the opposition, for it must be admitted that he is to-day as strong mentally and politically as in the palmiest days of the rebellion.

When such a distinguished luminary of the Democracy finds it necessary on such an occasion to pour out upon the devoted head of the "scalawag" the choicest vials of his fiercest wrath, it may be of public interest to inquire who is the scalawag and why he incurs Mr. Toombs deepest displeasure, so deep in fact that to accommodate the full measure of his hate, to use his own language, "a deeper pit in hell must be dug for him."

First, then, who is the scalawag? In common Democratic parlance in the South, every white, whether native-born Southerner or born at the North, or elsewhere, and who had, prior to the breaking out of the late rebellion, become a citizen of one of the Southern States, who dares to advocate and vote for the principles and candidates of the National Union Republican party, is called a scalawag. No man knows better than Mr. Toombs the full meaning and scope of every word he utters—and these, then, are the men he so bitterly denounces as low dirty fellows and traitors alike to their race and section.

Observe that every Republican voter in the South does not incur this odious character and the direst displeasure of Mr. Toombs and others of the Bourbon Democracy. For Mr. Toombs in his late speech tells the colored Republican voters that he can respect them, notwithstanding in the same speech he calls them "beasts." He also in the same speech with like charity proclaims to the "carpet-baggers" that he can forgive them, for their morality is loose and he never expected any better of them.

Having thus clearly and unmistakeably identified the scalawag it remains to inquire:

Second, Why the scalawag as thus defined should thus incur the vituperation and abuse of this distinguished leader of the Bourbon Democracy of the South?

When the veterans of the Union and Confederate armies met at Appomattox Court-House on the memorable 9th of April, 1865, General Grant, the great warrior who had led the Union armies over so many hotly contested battle-fields to final victory and triumph, in that supreme hour of the nation's crisis realized the fact that the blood and treasure which had flowed so freely in the Union cause, in order to accomplish its perfect work and reach its full fruition in the blessings of heaven, must have been offered as a sacrifice, not to sectional hate or triumph, but to the full and perfect reconstruction of that Union which had been so sadly and so terribly jarred by the rude shocks of a rebellious war.

From that memorable day on which, with a delicacy of sentiment and a nobility of soul that will render his name immortal, he returned to his distinguished antagonist his sword, his every public act and utterance has given the world assurance that whatever may be the opinion of others as to the object and results of the late war, for him they meant the indissoluble Union of indestructible States and the supremacy of that Union and the laws thereof over all other political organizations and combinations whatsoever. In short, a government of the people, by the people, for the people, of the whole American nation.

He has never given the slightest intimation that he ever regarded that portion of our country comprising the States lately in rebellion as a conquered province wrested from a foreign power, but, on the contrary, has never seemed to forget that it was the land of his own misguided countrymen, who had made a gallant and heroic though unsuccessful struggle for a cause they believed to be right.

Thoroughly national himself in all his views and sentiments he realized the fact that the struggle having ended, it was the best generalship and highest statesmanship under the circumstances to inspire his late antagonists with like feelings in regard to the supremacy of the nation and its laws.

His political sagacity disclosed to him the fact, however slow others have appeared to be in realizing it, that if the Union was ever again to be restored to perfect symmetry and power the citizens and inhabitants of the States lately in rebellion would have to take a cordial and active part in the work of reconstruction, or, failing in that, the Union would be a union but in name, held together by force. And his instantaneous comprehension of this great political truth, which so many distinguished men whose ability as statesmen and devotion to the Union cannot be questioned have seemed so slow to comprehend, will forever stamp him as being as great in peace as in war, with few equals and no superior. That his policy will ultimately triumph is certain. That it has been so long in abeyance is not to be wondered at when it is remembered that some extreme men at the North opposed it upon the ground that all the people of the South who had participated actively in the rebellion were traitors who had forfeited their lives, to say nothing of their political rights, and should never again be allowed to participate in the public affairs of either the States or the Nation, while many extreme men of the South opposed it upon the ground that a State having the right under the Constitution to secede, the States remaining in the Union had no right under the Constitution to coerce the seceding States back into the Union, and that the South having been overpowered by superior force should bide her time, and, like all nations conquered by a foreign power, avail herself of the first opportunity of throwing off the yoke.

To these extreme men of either section the idea of a reconstructed Union with ex-rebels participating freely and cordially in the government of either State or Nation is alike odious. Hating each other, they hate every one who attempts to bring them together in social or political contact. These are the men who make a common fight against the "scalawag." They alike affect to doubt the sincerity of the "scalawags'" devotion to the Union and its laws. Alike they both profess to doubt the sincerity of his professions of devotion to the Union and its government, upon the ground that he is a Southerner and has been a rebel. Accordingly these extremists unite in proclaiming to the world that no respectable ex-rebels in the South are Republicans, and that the white men of the South claiming to be Republicans are low ignorant fellows and mercenary traitors.

According to their statements the only true and reliable friends the Union and National Government, and especially the Republican party, have in the South, are the men who have moved South since the war, and the colored people, or as Mr. Toombs calls them, the "carpet-baggers," and "beasts."

Now, the truth of history requires that these slanders on the ex-rebel Republicans of the South be repelled.

It should be borne in mind that the bitter and unrelenting warfare waged against the "scalawags" of the South is not so much on account of their willingness to have the Union restored as it is because they are willing and actually do participate in the efforts made to restore the Union upon the wise and just and humane principles of the National Republican party. For it is true that an ex-rebel may make Union speeches and take any number of oaths to support the Constitution and laws of the United States; nay, may even be a member of the National Legislature and yet retain his decency and respectability provided he does so as a Democrat and is bitter in denouncing Republican measures and men.

But when an ex-rebel makes Union speeches, or votes, or holds office as a Republican, forthwith, according to Mr. Toombs, et id omni genus, he ceases to be a gentleman or a patriot and becomes that "consummation of all villainy"—the scalawag. How can this be better illustrated than by comparison of the public career of Messrs. Gordon and Hill as Democrats, with that of Messrs. Longstreet and Akerman as Republicans, since the work of reconstruction commenced.

Each of these distinguished Southerners cast his fortunes with the Southern Confederacy and participated actively in the rebellion. After the war ended, diversity in the political views of these ex-rebels aligned General Gordon and Mr. Hill with the Democratic party, and General Longstreet and Mr. Akerman with the Republican party.

Messrs. Akerman and Longstreet have both held office under the Federal Government as Republicans, and for so doing have received an amount and quality of abuse from the Democratic press and politicians of the South unsurpassed in the annals of political warfare.

Messrs. Hill and Gordon are now filling Federal positions as Democrats, and yet the English language is exhausted in heaping compliments upon them by the Democratic press and politicians of the South.

Now, Mr. Toombs and Mr. Hill both realized the fact, early in the history of reconstruction that if the Union was ever to be firmly restored upon the wise, just, and humane principles of the Republican party that the ex-rebels of the South must of necessity co-operate cordially in the work of reconstruction, and both of them being bitterly opposed to the firm reconstruction of the Union upon any such basis determined to prevent it if within their power.

Accordingly as early as the summer of 1868, Mr. Toombs and Mr. Hill addressed a mass-meeting of the Southern Democracy in Atlanta, Georgia, on the subject of reconstruction.

Mr. Hill, one of the most eloquent and effective advocates in the South as well as a most subtle and ingenious politician, sounded the key-note of that warfare which was intended to prevent the ex-rebels of the South from participating actively in the work of reconstruction upon the principles of the Republican party, in a speech advising ostracism of every kind against the white man who should dare to advocate the principles of that party in the South. In that speech he is reported to have said, among other things: "I tell you, my friends, there is no peace for this country until Radicalism is crushed; not only crushed but despised; not only despised but made infamous." And Mr. Toombs made a similar bitter speech.

How well that cry was taken up by the lesser lights of the Bourbon Democracy, and what suffering and misery has been entailed upon the Republicans of the South in consequence thereof, would require volumes to depict.

Suffice it to say that thousands of ex-rebels who, prior to these memorable speeches of Messrs. Toombs and Hill, were sympathizing and acting with the Republicans, shrank back appalled into the ranks of the Democracy, so frightened and dazed by the lightning flashes of Mr. Hill's keen sarcasm and the satire and the deep thunder of Mr. Toombs' denunciations that they were stricken with "day blindness" so as to be unable to recognize a Republican on the street by daylight for years afterwards. And the persistent and unscrupulous misrepresentations of the Democratic press of the South concerning the character and standing of such ex-rebels as dared to assert their manhood by boldly proclaiming their principles and acting with the Republican party have created doubts as to the character and motives of these ex-rebel Republicans even in the minds of some of their Republican friends at the North.

And thus suspected and distrusted by their Northern Republican allies and persecuted and abused by the Southern Bourbon Democracy, these ex-rebel Republicans of the South have suffered this crucifixion of the soul for years, through a perfect storm of hate, unflinchingly. True and steadfast in their devotion to the principles of the National Union Republican party, neither ostracism in all its forms, nor defamation, nor intimidation, nor terrorism of any kind, and not even the unkind suspicions and distrust engendered in the minds of their Republican friends North by the willful and persistent misrepresentations of an unscrupulous opposition press, have ever been able to force them to desert or even waver in their support of the grand and immortal principles of the Republican party.

And thus the secret of the bitter hostility of Mr. Toombs to the "scalawag" is fully explained.

PRESENTS TO EASTERN NATIONS.—The custom of presenting gifts to the officials of certain countries, especially those of the East, at the conclusion of important treaties has been followed by our Government and those of Europe from time immemorial. The practice is an ancient one, and appears to be but another form for the expression of close friendship and esteem among the contracting parties. The United States follows the time-honored custom in its treaties with the Indians. Whether the policy is a wise one or not, it has been sanctioned by every administration from that of Washington to that of President Grant. Yet in the face of Democratic precedents, Springer, from Illinois, selects an isolated case in which certain Turkish officials were presented with gifts by our Government at the conclusion of a treaty between the two nations. Springer would have the people believe that the thing was never heard of before; that it remained for a Republican administration to inaugurate this system of foreign extravagance. Partisanship has blinded Mr. Springer to the truth. To deceive the people by presenting certain facts, and withholding others of greater importance, is to him a party obligation, and he has endeavored to faithfully carry it out.

MINERAL WEALTH OF THE UNITED STATES.

In collecting material for an exhibition of our mineral wealth special care has been taken to embody the largest practicable amount of information in the least possible space. Research has been confined chiefly to coal, petroleum, iron, copper, silver, and gold. These, from their great pecuniary value and direct connection with national progress, are among the most important elements of prosperity.

T. S. Hunt, Esq., of Boston, in a recent very interesting paper on the development of mineral resources, divides the country by a supposed line drawn north and south at the eastern base of the Rocky Mountains. To the Atlantic side he assigns "a great basin of paleozoic strata;" or more particularly designates it as "the vast appalachian coal-field, with its dependent areas of semi-bituminous and anthracite coal." Here, also, is found, "iron, copper, lead, salt, and petroleum." The Pacific half contains the more precious metals, "gold and silver among the chief products."

Acknowledging the convenience of this division the better to comprehend the subject, yet it is certain there are immense deposits of coal and petroleum already developed, of very fine quality, in the western slope. The coal, perhaps, does not reach the standard of anthracite, but it equals, and much of it is superior to that procured from the States immediately west of the Mississippi river; while the oil, so far as discovered, is fully up to that of Pennsylvania.

COAL.

Coal being among the earliest mining interests, and its proportions having reached such an extent, the aggregate valuation exceeding all other minerals combined, we shall treat it in point of prominence first.

The commercial magnitude this article of domestic and manufacturing importance has achieved is largely owing to a thorough knowledge in producing it, the multiplied applications for its uses, and a more general comprehension of its resources. Besides, a much larger experience has been had in its investigation and study than that yet acquired or given to the separating of gold and silver from the flint-quartz in the deep lodes and gorges of the west; and much less capital is required in a successful conducting of the enterprise. The work of the former covers a period of not less than one hundred and twenty-six years, while that of the latter comprises little more than a quarter of a century.

The first coal mined for mineral fuel was by the Colonies, from the Richmond, Virginia, mines, south of the Blue Ridge. It was, however, of a low grade, but produced in considerable quantity, and after the Revolution sold quite extensively in eastern cities. For many years these mines were operated with more or less profit, but now are worked only for home consumption.

The great central field of bituminous coal lies buried in the mountains of western Pennsylvania, eastern Ohio, West Virginia, and northern portions of Kentucky, having an area estimated at 58,000 square miles.

Adjoining this on the east, still in Pennsylvania, and extending into Maryland, are small areas of semi-bituminous deposits, among which may be mentioned the Blossburg, Cumberland, Broad Top, Johnstown, Towanda, and Ralston. These combined, yield about 5,000,000 tons annually.

The total production of bituminous coal from Pennsylvania mines alone, for the year 1872, was 7,442,000 tons, and of semi-bituminous, 3,000,000. Those of Ohio for the same period were 4,400,000 tons.

Anthracite coal the past few years has taken the lead, but was a long time working itself into favor. Its advantages, however, are now fully appreciated, and it ranks first among consumers, either for domestic use or for other purposes. The small region in eastern Pennsylvania where the great bulk of this coal is obtained, having an area of not more than 472 square miles, in 1872 produced 21,500,000 tons.

In Montgomery county, Virginia, there is found semi-bituminous and even anthracite coals of good quality, but the extent of deposit has never been thoroughly investigated.

Rhode Island and Massachusetts have an area of 500 square miles of the better grade of coal, including anthracite; but with the exception of one mine at Portsmouth, which in 1872 yielded 14,000 tons, this vast field is waiting proper development to make it productive and valuable.

The State of Michigan has an area of about 6,700 square miles of coal; but it is thin, of inferior quality, and mined chiefly for home purposes. In 1872 the estimated production of this State was 30,000 tons.

Illinois coal-field covers a great portion of the State extending into Indiana and Kentucky, reaches some 47,000 square miles, and in 1872 produced—Illinois 3,000,000, Indiana 800,000; Kentucky 300,000 tons.

Tennessee and Alabama have developed important areas of bituminous coal, pronounced of medium quality; while the coals of Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas are of a much lower grade. In Arkansas, however, there has been discovered beds of superior semi-bituminous coal, with a near approach to anthracite.

The Mount Vernon mine in Mendocino county, California, so far as developed, extends under about 7,200 acres of land, and is a very good article of bituminous coal. The supply is estimated to be large, and needs but the conveniences of transportation to make it important and profitable.

Mr. L. Falkenau, State assayer, has made an analysis of this coal, which we annex :

Specific gravity.....	1.292
Volatile combustible substance	40.20	per cent.
Fixed carbon.....	49.70	"
Moisture.....	6.70	"
Ashes.....	3.00	"
Sulphur.....	0.40	"

Amount of gas evolved, 37 cubic feet per ten pounds avoirdupois of coal.

The canon coal-field of Colorado yielded in 1873, 12,909 tons; and in 1874, 19,385 tons. This, however, is not as good coal as that of the Mount Vernon mine in California.

Pancake Mountain coal probably is the most promising vein of this mineral yet discovered in the Pacific slope. This mine is in Nevada, and believed to be the first true coal found west of the Rocky Mountains. This vein is said to belong to the carboniferous age, and the deposit thought to be extensive. The present product is about 100 tons a month, and sells for $12 to $20 per ton on the dump.

There are two important coal-fields in Utah, one at Castle Valley, the other at San Pete. Both of these are considered rich in deposit, and the mineral a good bituminous grade. We have no figures that are reliable in connection with the products of these mines.

Macfarlane, the very best authority, sums up the grand total of this wealth in the United States, for the year 1873, at 50,000,000 tons; while the Engineering and Mining Journal, published in New York, makes the following announcement as the total production for 1874:

Anthracite coal.....	24,281,471	tons,
Bituminous ".....	25,248,684	"
Lignite ".....	1,217,020	"
Total.....	50,747,175	"

PETROLEUM.

Without entering into any particulars of history touching this mineral, we shall simply state that the oil wells of Pennsylvania were opened in 1859, producing the first year 500,000 barrels of crude oil, which sold at 55 cents per gallon. Much excitement followed this discovery, and for the ten ensuing years the production amounted in the gross to 35,273,000 barrels of 40 gallons each, and there were in 1870 3,000 wells in operation.

In 1861 the exports of this mineral were 28,000 barrels, and for the ten years following it amounted to 14,465,000 barrels. The average price of this oil had fallen to 25 cents per gallon, but even this made the aggregate valuation $144,000,000.

Exportations for 1870 were 3,495,800 barrels; for 1872, 3,754,060 barrels; for 1873, 5,937,041 barrels, and for 1874, 5,878,578 barrels, being a slight falling off from the previous year. The amount, however, for 1874, chiefly refined oil, at the mean price of 13.09 cents per gallon, gave a total valuation for the year of $30,825,268.

The total estimated production of crude oil for 1874 was 29,282 barrels daily, equal to 10,687,930 barrels for the year.

IRON.

The iron interest of the United States has received a good share of public attention, and its resources have been largely developed.

Supplies of this metal, in more or less quantities, and of higher or lower degrees of excellencies, have been obtained from Vermont, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania; from Virginia, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Alabama; from Lake Superior, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, and West Virginia, with Missouri and Arkansas. In fact, the whole eastern half of the country is studded with immense beds of this valuable ore.

The total amount of iron produced in the United States in 1810 has been set down at 54,000 tons, against 165,000 tons in 1830. Then in 1840 it was 347,000 tons, against 600,000 tons in 1850; and in 1860 it was 919,870 tons, to 1,865,434 tons in 1870. In 1872 the grand total of iron production reached its highest figures—2,880,070 tons.

COPPER.

Throughout the eastern border of the great coal areas, embedded in the crystalline rocks, are considerable deposits of this mineral. It has been mined and treated to some extent in Vermont, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, and Eastern Tennessee. The total production, however, from all these sources has never exceeded 2,500 tons.

Lake Superior is the famous field for this metal. Here the ore is obtained in a state of comparative purity, requiring simply a mechanical process to separate it from the rock, when it is at once prepared for melting into solid ingots of copper.

These mines from 1845 (date of last opening) to 1858 yielded 18,000 tons. In 1873 it was 18,514 tons. There were thus 514 tons more taken out in the one year—1873—than for the thirteen preceding years. In 1874 there were 22,235 tons of ore mined, 83 per cent of which was copper, while the aggregate for the twenty-nine years since commencing operations was 217,134 tons.

Mr. Caswell places the production of this mineral, from Lake Superior alone, for 1874, at 17,327 tons direct, and from other ores 2,375 tons, with a grand total of 19,702 tons of ingot copper, and the exports for the same period were 4,500 tons.

We have omitted any reference to the ores of chrome, zinc, and nickel, now quite largely mined, or to the extensive salt deposits of New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Ohio, and West Virginia. These works now supply the markets of the country with this mineral, and yield no inconsiderable amount of exports. There is also granite, marble, sandstones, and roofing slate, all objects of substantial industry. But leaving the eastern half of our territory thus imperfectly represented, we turn to the west.

QUICKSILVER.

The recent scarcity, and consequent high price of this mineral has given a sudden and wonderful impetus to its production. For the past year the quicksilver excitement has been general throughout California. The easy accessibility of the mines, the broad area of country where they are located, and the profit derived from comparatively small investments, have induced large numbers to engage in the enterprise. As nearly as can be ascertained, there are forty-seven producing mines in the State, and a large number of claims giving promise of valuable developments.

A very large per cent. of this metal is consumed in the mining States and Territories west of the Rocky Mountains, and not even an approximation can be made of the aggregate production.

R. W. Raymond, however, reports for 1874 432,635 pounds of quicksilver as having been shipped "through freight" from San Francisco by the Central Pacific Railroad; 36,444 pounds from San Jose, and 47,000 pounds as "local freight." The exports by sea from 1859 to 1874, inclusive, were 365,788 flasks, valued at $14,226,411.

GOLD AND SILVER.

From among the vast number of producing mines in the State of California we have selected thirteen for special notice, either of which yield over $100,000 annually. The most prominent of these is the

IDAHO.

This is near Grass Valley, Nevada county, owned by a corporation, and worked by a 90-horse power engine. The length of location is 3,100 feet, average width of ledge $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet, length of drifts 3,988 feet, depth of working shaft 920 feet, and has 8 levels. There are 35 stamps, and the mine is in a most prosperous condition.

Mr. Edward Coleman, president and superintendent of the company, makes the following condensed report for the year ending December 7, 1874:

"During the year we have crushed 28,801½ tons of rock, of which 1,942½ tons came from the 400 level; 1,886½ tons came from the 500 level; 5,581½ tons came from the 600 level; 16,433½ tons came from the 700 level; 1,594½ tons came from the 800 level, and 963 tons from the shaft. This gave a gross yield of 36.169 ounces of gold, $631,190.56; 217 tons of sulphurets, $21,600; specimens, $38.50; gross yield of tailings, $10,989.25; gold from old copper, $692.39; total, $664,811.20."

This mine from 1869 to 1874 paid $1,603,000 in dividends.

EUREKA.

This mine, situated about two miles east of Grass Valley, and adjoining the Idaho, has a location of 1,680 feet, and is worked by a 60-horse power through a shaft 1,250 feet deep. There are 8 levels, with a total length of drift 9,000 feet, and has a capacity of crushing 65 tons of ore daily. The mine is owned by a corporation, and commenced operations October 1, 1865. From that time to September 30, 1874, they had taken out $4,273,148, and paid $2,054,000 in dividends.

Mr. William Watts, superintendent, for the year ending September 30, 1874, reports 8,130 tons of ore "milled," with a production of $205,780 in gold bullion.

EMPIRE.

This is also near Grass Valley, and like the others owned by a corporation. It has a depth of shaft 1,200 feet. There are 12 levels, and a drift of 7,900 feet. It is handled by steam power, and during the year worked 11,000 tons of ore with a product of $187,000 in bullion.

PROVIDENCE.

This is owned by an incorporated company, and located within one and a quarter miles of Nevada City. It has 3,100 feet on a vein running north and south. Width of vein at 400 feet level is 10 to 12 feet. This is said to be very rich in gold, and though there are no authentic figures given for the last fiscal year, yet Mr. Raymond estimates the production in excess of $100,000. This mine is operated by water power, and the ore treated by chlorination.

BLACK BEAR.

This mine is in Siskiyou county, in the wild northern portion of California, near Oregon. The counties of Siskiyou and Klamath, with an area of 10,740 square miles, have a population of less than 9,000. The works of this company are the largest in the section, and yielded in 1874 $211,797 in gold.

KLAMATH.

The Klamath mine is also in Siskiyou county, is owned by a company, and in 1874 crushed 15,385 tons of ore, with the result of $200,000 in gold bullion.

PLUMAS EUREKA.

This is the principal quartz mine in the county of Plumas, and is owned in England. For the year 1874 the company produced $243,949 in gold. This county, Mr. Raymond says, has not been very thoroughly "prospected," and he gives it as his opinion that the region is specially rich in precious metals, which will be more fully developed upon the completion of the wagon road now in process of construction from Oroville up the north fork of Feather river to Sierra Valley.

SIERRA BUTTES.

These works are in Sierra county, also owned by an English company, and conducted upon quite an extensive scale. The number of tons of ore extracted and treated during 1874 was 53,959 tons, yielding $470,608.

SUMNER.

This mine is in Kern county, is chiefly owned by Honorable J. P. Jones and Messrs. Burke and Strong. The patents of this company cover 11,300 feet, and the quantity of ore worked in 1874 was 5,000 tons, with a product of $200,000.

HITE'S COVE.

This is in Mariposa county. In 1870 it produced $180,000; in 1874 $160,000.

AMADOR CONSOLIDATED.

These works are in Amador county, east of San Joaquin Valley, in the northernmost tier of mountain counties. This region is particularly noted for its mineral wealth. There are in the county 9 mining ditches, in all 48 miles in length. There are 16 quartz mills, crushing from 80,000 to 100,000 tons of ore annually. The Amador Consolidated is the leading mine, and for 1874 treated 22,098 tons, with a profit of $259,971 in gold bullion.

KEYSTONE CONSOLIDATED.

This, also, is in Amador county, and in 1874 worked 25,146 tons, with a yield of $452,506.

CHARIOT.

This is the leading mine in San Diego county, and has a capacity of 18 tons daily. In 1874 2,500 tons were worked, and a bullion product effected of $138,864.

Recapitulation of the Thirteen Principal Mines.

—
n
:6
—
11
80
00
00
97
00
50
08
00
00
71
07
64
—
88
.

* Estimated.

As will be seen by the foregoing table, the annual yield of the thirteen principal mines was $3,497,288, which is but a small per cent. of the aggregate mineral production of the State for 1874, which is put down at $20,300,531.

NEVADA.

This, beyond doubt, is the richest mining district in the United States, and without entering into particulars touching the various prominent mines, we may almost declare the whole Territory one vast field of mineral wealth. Of the extent and valuation no approximation can be made. Mr. Raymond, in his seventh annual report to Congress from the Pacific coast, makes special mention of 390 different mines and mining interests with the most flattering indications of a rapid increase in number and richness of new discoveries.

The famous Comstock lode is by far the most productive yet developed.

The official report of this mine for 1874 was :

Gold dust and bullion.....	$379,933
Silver bullion	30,954,602
Ores and base bullion.....	4,117,698
Total	35,452,233

IDAHO.

The aggregate mineral wealth of this Territory for 1874, represented by counties, was:

Owyhee county.....	$900,000
Boise "	700,000
Alturas "	150,000
North Idaho and Lemhi counties..	250,000
Total	2,000,000

MONTANA.

The mining interests of this Territory are very much crippled in the absence of proper transportation. The distance to the nearest water conveyance, Carroll, on the Missouri river, is 225 miles, and it is 400 and 450 miles, respectively, to Franklin and Corinne on the railroad. This passage as yet is made by mules and ox teams. Still the mineral product of the Territory for 1874 was :

Gold shipped by express (mules) ..	$2,511,276
Silver (refined bars) " " ..	16,766
Selected ores by other conveyances	474,000
Amount taken out by miners	842,680

Total

3,844,722

UTAH.

Mr. George J. Johnson, of Salt Lake City, makes the following statement of the mineral production of Utah for 1874, and Mr. Raymond has incorporated it in his annual report :

Gold dust.....	$92,093
Silver bullion.....	803,442
Base bullion shipped out of the Territory	2,811,200
Ore shipped.....	660,960
Refining works.....	5,664
	4,373,359

Deduct silver bullion shipped by the Germania, and included above, but extracted from Nevada lead.....

461,758

Total

3,911,601

COLORADO.

Theodore F. Van Wagenen, editor Mining Review, makes the estimate of mineral products of the Territory for 1874, and which Mr. Raymond also adopts, as follows :

Gold bullion (from smelting and amalgamation works) ..	$423,563
Silver bullion (from smelting and amalgamation works) ..	1,983,207
Gold bullion (from stamp mills) ..	1,297,425

Gold bullion (from Placer work-ings).....	382,500
Ore and matte (shipped out of Territory)	1,192,815
Pig lead.....	73,676
Copper	100,197
Coal.....	1,600,000
Total	6,962,383

ARIZONA.

This Territory produced in 1874 (estimated) $487,000 in gold and silver.

1874 AND 1875.

We have not made special mention of Oregon, Washington, New Mexico, or Wyoming, but incorporate them in the following general statements :

Total Production of Precious Metals for the Year 1874.

Arizona	$487,000
California.....	20,300,531
Colorado	5,188,510
Idaho	1,880,004
Montana.....	3,844,722
Nevada	35,452,233
New Mexico.....	500,000
Oregon	609,070
Washington	154,535
Utah	3,911,601
Wyoming.....	100,000
Total	72,428,206

Total Production of Precious Metals for the Year 1875.

(Report closes December 31.)

Arizona ..	$109,093
California	17,753,151
Colorado	6,299,817
Idaho ..	1,544,902
Montana.....	3,573,609
Nevada.....	40,478,369
Mexico	2,408,671
Oregon	1,165,046
Washington	81,932
Utah ...	5,687,494
British Columbia.....	1,776,953

Total.. 80,889,037

In the preparation of this paper the writer is particularly indebted to Rossiter W. Raymond, United States Commissioner of Mining Statistics ; to Honorable H. R. Linderman, Director United States Mints ; to T. S. Hunt, of Boston, and to Colonel Elery C. Ford, Chief of Mineral Division, General Land Office. To the last named gentleman especial obligations are acknowledged, not only for valuable notes of personal observation with facts and figures, but for the full and complete report of the amount of precious metals produced in the States and Territories west of the Missouri river, including British Columbia, for the year ending December 31, 1875.

REBEL COTTON CLAIMS—PAST AND PROSPECTIVE TREASURY RAIDS.

War is horrible enough even in a righteous cause, and against an enemy who had injured you. But a rebellion against freedom and the rights of humanity was simply damnable. Had it succeeded it would have turned back the hands of the dial of time for a century. If the South could pray for its success, it was only on the same ground that the wrecker asked heaven to direct the noble ship to the rock in the direct line of which his false light had been placed. Up to the beginning of the rebellion the country had kept pace with the world's advance except in the slave States, the principles of the North being the salt which had kept the nation from the corruption of slavery by enforcing and upholding freedom. Against freedom for all men and equality before the law, the South hurled itself with a vindictive bitterness which the world could not understand, and if other nations suffered for the want of the Southern staple, it bid for their sympathy by endeavoring to provide facilities for obtaining cotton. The full extent of the bait thus offered will never be known. But enough is known to account for the expectation in the South of foreign aid. Meantime the war was made an instrument for profitable trade. Rebel cotton, cotton belonging to the Confederacy, was pledged and sold abroad for money to carry on the conflict. Cotton belonging to disloyal men was hoarded for sale when the rebellion should succeed, and cotton purchased of such men was moved for shipment at the first opportunity. When our troops penetrated the South such cotton was seized on behalf of the United States Government as enemy's property, the proceeds of which would be covered into the Treasury. The Republican party, which was in power through all the years of the war, and up to the end of the session of Congress in March, 1875, had passed laws which did more than justice in the premises. Indeed, they were often the means of putting money inadvertently in the pockets of men who deserved no sympathy whatever, for they had aided to redden the land with blood.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in his report for 1876, says that the number of bales of cotton seized after the 30th of June, 1865, the proceeds of which reached the Treasury was about 50,000, and the net proceeds thereof, averaging the same at $100 per bale, was $5,000,000. The fifth section of the act of May 18, 1872, directs the Secretary to pay to the lawful owners or their legal representatives the net proceeds actually paid into the Treasury after that date. The number of claims filed under this act was 1,336; the whole number of bales claimed is 136,877, the net proceeds of which at $100 per bale, would be $13,687,700. It is well known, says the Secretary, that a large number of persons from whom cotton was seized have made no claim whatever. Under these circumstances, he remarks, the magnitude of the aggregate of claims presented is worthy of attention.

In 1875 the Secretary reports that the number of claims filed under the act was 1,336, which have been acted upon as follows:

Allowed.....	39
Rejected.....	1,181
Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.....	96
Under examination.....	20

The amount paid out on the claims allowed, as aforesaid, is $180,358.43.

The claims now under examination will be disposed of in a short time. Upon their decision all proceedings under the act will be finally closed.

The following table contains a summarized statement of the proceeds of captured and abandoned property covered into the Treasury, and the amounts that have been awarded and paid therefrom under the several acts of Congress:

Proceeds of captured and abandoned property covered into the Treasury.....	$20,910,656 44
Awarded to claimants by Court of Claims under the act of March 12, 1863.....	$11,348,247 73

Paid to claimants by the Secretary of the Treasury under the act of May 18, 1872....	$180,358 43
Paid on judgments against Treasury agents under the act of July 27, 1868.....	39,188 17
Paid under various relief acts of Congress.....	228,250 81
Disbursed for expenses under joint resolution of March 30, 1868.	75,000 00

Total..... 11,871,045 14

Which deducted from the total amount received as above, leaves a balance of..... 9,039,611 30

Since the date of the above report the sum of $4,596.04 has been paid to claimants under the act of May 18, 1872, and which, added to the amount above stated, makes a total of $184,954.47.

The Southern Claims Commission has not been idle, nor as a general thing have the claimants from the South been at all backward, in presenting evidence on which they hoped to receive large sums from the Treasury. It is very clear that no claim ought to be admitted against the United States growing out of the destruction or appropriation of, or through damage to property, by the army or navy engaged in the suppression of the rebellion. That was the act of the South, entered upon with a full knowledge of what it involved. If the property of rebel enemies was taken or destroyed by the Federal forces, it was an act of war justified by the condition of affairs. Had there been no rebellion, there would have been no collision between the South and the Federal Government, and no devastation by armed men. The South, therefore, has no just demand on the nation for the payment of losses incurred through its own appeal to the arbitrament of the sword, and the nation can refuse to recognize such demands with perfect honor. Nevertheless, there are claims which may fairly be made, and which it is the duty of the Government to pay; and Republican legislation has prepared the way for their examination and settlement. The following shows what has been done by the commissioners:

Number of claims decided, 9,222; amount claimed, $19,263,437.51; amount allowed, $3,057,894.09; amount disallowed, $16,205,543.42.

The supreme effort of the South to destroy the Union having failed, the Treasury of the United States came out of the ordeal with a kind of fascinating safety. The war over, and the spirit of destruction allayed in the bosoms of the warriors in gray, it was far more peaceful and pleasant to rekindle that spirit and divert it to besiege the Treasury. Hands which had fired rebel bullets into the Federal ranks put aside the musket for the pen. The yelling "Tigers," and other soldiers on the Confederate side resolved to try whether the pen was stronger than the musket or the sword. Armed with that innocent weapon, which may sign a death warrant or mark the number of kisses sent by a lover to his mistress in a billet doux, they proceeded to prepare the papers for claims for presentation to the commission. But there seems to have been a limit fixed by the commission beyond which no one was allowed to pass, and there must, in consequence, have been considerable mortification, if not dismay. The short table given is full of instruction. It abounds, indeed, with lessons for all sorts of people, particularly for claimants whose disappointment it respectfully figures out. It will be observed that the amount claimed was in round numbers nineteen millions of dollars; the amount allowed was three millions, leaving a trifling difference in the shape of a believed overcharge of sixteen millions! The martial claimants or claim agents whose sad failure the table records, of course, bought their experience, and can only profit by it on other occasions. But there are claimants who have no experience in the matter at all, as yet, but who may learn much from that table when they shall follow the lead of their disappointed brethren and present papers. The Secretary refers to the holding back claimants whose elevation of soul has not reached the standard—who have not put forth their claim for a pile of greenbacks of a most astonishing height. He says: Claims against the Government have been permitted to sleep until the officers connected with the transactions out of which they arose have died or gone out of service, and have then been revived and supported by ex parte testimony of such character as to cause their allowance by the accounting officers. Such claims the Secretary recommends should be barred if not presented within a period of six years, and it is a very proper recommendation.

It is manifest, however, that the change in the composition of the House of Representatives has endangered the Treasury. Ex-Confederate participants in the rebellion are there in full sympathy with the Bourbon Democracy. A Democratic slave-owner always boasted that he was a great man, a superior being, born to command. Enlightened citizens derided the claim. The boasts of Southern superiority were despised by Republicans, who could not see any greatness in a slaveholder who lived in ease on the thralldom of others, and paid no wages to his workmen. To the Republican party the country is largely indebted for its safety and unity as a nation. But the boldness and patriotism of Republicans should be contrasted with the wretched attitude of the Democratic leaders, who have forgotten nothing and learned nothing, either through or after the war. Vigilance is more necessary at this time than at any period of the country's history. A rebellion was inaugurated; a great war was fought to put it down; a huge public debt has been created. And the purse strings are now in the hands of the enemy who fought to destroy the Union, and their party associates! Will the people tolerate a repeal of laws which have guarded the public money hitherto, and allow access to the Treasury by men who were denied before, but who may under legal sanction obtain millions? Are the people willing to have Republican legislation repealed, so that the public money may be drawn out by men who were known to be disloyal, and whose claims have been barred or rejected on that account? Will the loyal people of the nation pay rebel claims to men still disloyal, but on laws introduced by their sympathizing Democratic friends in the House of Representatives, and passed by the votes of an ex-Confederate majority placed there only through the grace and forgiveness of Republicans who have so long constituted its majority?

THE school question is logically compassed by the declaration—that the public schools are and must be sustained by the State to maintain and save the State. If any church wishes to maintain schools for its own benefit the right is not denied, but its communicants owe duties as citizens, and the maintenance of public schools is one of them.

THE CONFEDERATE LEADERS IN CONGRESS.

The following facts are compiled chiefly from the "Congressional Directory" for the Forty-Fourth Congress, a work compiled by Major Ben. Perley Poore, clerk of printing records, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, or whose records are shown by the Confederate war records now in the archives of the War Department. The authority is quoted in the following extracts from the sources above stated, and from others:

ALABAMA.—Senator GEORGE GOLDTHWAITE, of Montgomery; was adjutant general of the State of Alabama during the war.

2d District—Representative JEREMIAH N. WILLIAMS, of Clayton; entered the Confederate army in 1861 as major.

3d District—Rep. PAUL BRADFORD, of Talladega; served in the Confederate army throughout the war.

5th District—Rep. JOHN H. CALDWELL, of Jacksonville; was elected solicitor for the tenth judicial circuit by the legislature, at the session of 1859-'60; re-elected at the session of 1863-'64. This statement shows that he was an officer of the rebel State government, and also of President Johnson's reactionary movement.

6th District—Rep. GOLDSMITH W. HEWITT, of Birmingham; entered the Confederate army in 1861, and served until severely wounded at the battle of Chickamunga in 1863.

At large—Rep. WILLIAM HENRY FORNEY, of Jacksonville; entered the Confederate army at the commencement of hostilities in 1861, as captain, and was successively promoted major, lieutenant-colonel, colonel, and brigadier-general; surrendered at Appomattox C. H.; was a member of the State Senate of Alabama 1865-'66, (under the Johnson provisional government.)

*At large—*BURWELL BOYKIN LEWIS, of Tuscaloosa; served in the Confederate army as an officer in the Second Alabama cavalry.

ARKANSAS—1st District—Rep. LUCIEN C. GAUSE, of Jacksonport; entered the Confederate army in 1861, and served throughout the war, attaining the rank of colonel. This person served with Major General Fagan, of whose actions in the Steele-Rice Arkansas campaign of April, 1864, so conservative authority as Harper's "History of the Great Rebellion" states in relation to the capture of a Federal train at Marks' Mills that, according to custom, all negroes found in the command after surrender were shot. These were not soldiers, but teamsters, servants, and contrabands.

2d District—Rep. WILLIAM F. SLEMONS, of Monticello; was a member of the Arkansas State (secession) convention in 1861; entered the Confederate army in July, 1861, and served through the war. He was a brigade commander under Fagan in the campaign against Steele, in April, 1864, at Poison Springs, near Camden, Ark., when nearly two hundred men belonging to the First Kansas colored (79th U. S. C. T.) regiment were murdered after being wounded or surrendering. He was also in the campaign under Price, in September and October, 1864, by which Western Missouri and Kansas were invaded and partly desolated. The atrocities perpetrated were numerous. An account of them may be found in a rebel book published at Cincinnati, entitled "Shelby and His Men"—the author of which served with Slemons, and in the "Army of the Border," by R. J. Hinton, and "The Annals of Kansas," by D. W. Wilder, State Auditor of Kansas.

In the rebel account of the Price campaign in Missouri and Kansas the following description of the atrocities that were enacted is given. It relates to the division under "Joe" Shelby, but is true of the whole force:

"No prisoners were taken, and why should there be? * * He was fighting the Devil with fire, and smoking him to death. Haystacks, houses, barns, produce, crops, and farming implements were consumed before the march of his squadrons, and what the flames spared the bullets finished." Colonel Hinton thus describes what he saw: "They had entered Kansas. The first house across the line was the scene of a dastardly murder. An old, gray-haired minister of the gospel lay dead, with white locks reddened by his own blood. The women and children were frantic and crazed by terror and grief. The fence and outhouses were burning. The interior of the cabin presented a woe-begone appearance. A perfect saturnalia of destruction seemed to have reigned. Everything not portable had been broken * * The frightened inmates were stripped of nearly every article of clothing on their persons, or in the cabin."—Army of the Border, p. 190, 1865.

*4th District—*THOMAS MONTICUE GUNTER, of Fayetteville; was a delegate from Washington county in the Arkansas State Convention of May, 1861; served in the Confederate army as colonel Thirteenth Arkansas volunteers. He was also in Fagan's command.

FLORIDA—Senator CHARLES W. JONES; was born in Ireland. He was a brigadier-general in the Confederate army, as the Confederate War Department records establish.

GEORGIA—Senator THOMAS MANSON NORWOOD, of Savannah; was a member of the Georgia (rebel) legislature in 1861-'62. In July, 1875, the Senator delivered an address, supposed to be non-political in character, at the commencement of Emory College, Georgia. From a report of this effort published in the Democratic press of that State, it appears Mr. Norwood declared that he charged "the Yankees as having waged the last war, not for patriotism or the Constitution, but for dollars and cents. He deplored the fact that the Government was controlled 'by a low order of intellect and a low order of men'—condemned the fifteenth amendment and the carpet-bagger. The thirteenth and fourteenth amendments he declared to be probably the only permanent results of the war. He said the negro had been left among a race superior to him in every particular to work out his own destiny, and that there would never be unity of the two races; that the negro as a race would never acquire either education or wealth; that he would never occupy the same social plane with the white race; that the common school system would in time prove a failure as to the negro; that it cannot succeed except among a homogeneous people, and a people who are on a social equality; that he would never appreciate nor exercise intelligently the privileges of citizenship; that the failure to contribute to the educational fund would in time lead to separate taxation for separate schools, and the system as to this race would fail; that the next generation of them will not be equal to the present as laborers and citizens * * *

* * * In the course of time the people of the North would themselves demand of him either colonization or the surrender of the elective franchise, and the fifteenth amendment will be repealed. * * To be a harmonious people, we must be a homogeneous people; the negro as a slave was always a disturbing element, and will be an irritation in the republic as a freeman."

Senator JOHN B. GORDON, of Atlanta; at the beginning of the war entered the Confederate army as captain of infantry, and was promoted major, lieutenant-colonel, colonel, brigadier-general, major-general, and to the command of the second army corps; commanded one wing of General Lee's army at Appomattox Court-House; was wounded in battle eight times. Senator Gordon's position since the surrender, as well as his view of the act of secession, and the subsequent war thereon, have been given at length by himself in his testimony before the famous Ku-Klux Committee of Investigation. The report thus summarizes views he then held: "His testimony is that the magnanimity and deference shown by General Grant and his officers towards the army of the South at the time of and after the surrender led them to hope they would be permitted to go home, resume their places and rights as citizens, organize the State governments, and again resume their relations to the General Government, as if there had been no rebellion. After President Lincoln's death, and Johnson's announcement of his policy, they became apprehensive that some hanging and general confiscation would follow. When relieved of those apprehensions, and terms of reconstruction and the fourteenth amendment were proposed by Congress, they began to complain of want of good faith, and when terms were imposed they became sullen and defiant, looking upon the Government as having outraged them, and deprived them of their rights." General Gordon said: "We feel a sense of wrong as honorable men. We do not think we have done anything in the dark." Of secession he said: "We thought we were right. I am one of those who thought so at the time. I thought I had a perfect right to do as I did. * * By the course that has been pursued to us * * we have been disappointed, and the feeling of alienation * * has in this way been increased more than by any other one fact." Gordon declared that "We did not believe the act of secession was treason. I do not believe it now. I do not expect ever to believe it." In regard to secret organizations for the advancement of Southern interests General Gordon testified as to what he termed a "brotherhood," admitting that he was asked to become the chief in Georgia; that it was widely extended; that the members took an obligation tantamount to an oath; that it was confined to white men, and that no white Republican was found in it; that it was "mainly confined to soldiers of the army," (Confederate,) men who were "ready for any emergency," &c. The likeness of this to the Ku-Klux was unmistakable. When Gordon entered the Senate, the Republicans having a majority in both bodies, he very carefully excluded from the sketch in the "Congressional Directory" of that date all reference to his Confederate military record, while as seen above in the later Directory he states it at length. There is a Democratic majority in the House, and it is honorable to parade treason in behalf of slavery and disunion.

1st District—Rep. JULIAN HARTRIDGE, of Savannah; delegate to the Charleston Democratic Convention in 1860; was in the Confederate army during first year of the war; was a member of the Confederate Congress.

2d District—Rep. WILLIAM E. SMITH, of Albany; entered the Confederate army as a volunteer, in the Fourth Georgia Volunteers, after the State seceded; was elected captain in April, 1862; lost a leg in the defense of Richmond, at King's School-House, June 25, 1862; was elected to the Confederate Congress in 1863.

3d District—Rep. PHILIP COOK, of Americus; was elected to the State Senate of Georgia, in 1863, (rebel;) was elected a member of the State Convention of 1865, called by President Johnson; entered the Confederate service in 1861, as a private; was commissioned first lieutenant, lieutenant-colonel, colonel, and in August, 1863, brigadier-general.

4th District—Rep. HENRY R. HARRIS, of Greenville; was a member of the Georgia (secession) Convention of 1861.

5th District—Rep. MILTON A. CANDLER, of Atlanta; was a member of the State (rebel) House of Representatives in 1861-'63; of the State Constitutional Convention in 1865—the body called by President Johnson.

8th District—Rep. ALEXANDER HAMILTON STEPHENS, of Crawfordsville; was elected to the Secession Convention of Georgia in 1861; opposed and voted against the ordinance of secession in that body, but gave it his support after it had been passed by the convention against his judgment as to its policy; was elected by that convention to the Confederate Congress which met at Montgomery, Alabama, February 4, 1861, and was chosen vice-president under the Provisional government by that Congress; was elected vice-president of the Confederate States for the term of six years under what was termed the permanent government, in November, 1861; visited the State of Virginia on a mission under the Confederate Government in April, 1861, upon the invitation of that State; was one of the commissioners on the part of the Confederate Government at the Hampton Roads Conference in February, 1865; was elected a Representative to the Twenty-eighth, Twenty-ninth, Thirtieth, Thirty-first, Thirty-second, Thirty-third, Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth Congresses, when he declined a re-election; was elected to the Senate of the United States in 1866, by the first legislature convened under the new Constitution (the Johnson provisional movement), but was not allowed to take his seat. Mr. Stephens has rendered the sectional South the most important aid ever since he entered public life. In 1850 he assisted to draw up, and earnestly advocated the famous "Georgia platform," which declared that the State of Georgia "will, and ought to resist, even (as a last resort,) to a disruption of every tie which binds her to the Union, any future act of Congress abolishing slavery in the District of Columbia without the consent and petition of the slaveholders thereof; or any act abolishing slavery in places within the slaveholding States purchased by the United States for the erection of forts, magazines, dock yards, navy yards, and other like places; or in any act suppressing the slave trade between slaveholding States; or in any refusal to admit as a State any territory applying because of the existence of slavery therein; or in any act prohibiting the introduction of slaves into the Territories of Utah and New Mexico; or in any act repealing or materially modifying the laws now in force for the recovery of fugitive slaves."

In a speech to the Georgia legislature, November, 1860, Mr. Stephens said that he stood on the "Georgia platform," as he had always done since its adoption, and if the Republicans attempted by an act of Congress to exclude the slaveholders from the Territories with their slave property no man would be more willing or ready than he to disrupt every tie which bound the States together. But he advised the people to wait until the Republican policy was adopted before they tried secession. The "Secessionists" favored immediate secession. In a letter to a strong secessionist in New York he gave the following reason for advocating the policy of delay:

"The great and leading object aimed at by me at Milledgeville was to produce harmony on a right line of policy. If worst comes to worst, as it may, and our State has to quit the Union, it is of the utmost importance that all our people should be united cordially in this cause. This, I feel confident, can only be effected on the line of policy I indicated."

Before a similar body, February, 1866, Mr. Stephens used the following notable language:

"Whatever may be said of the loyalty or disloyalty of any in the late most lamentable conflict of arms, I think I may venture safely to say that there was on the part of the great mass of the people of Georgia and of the entire South, no disloyalty to the principles of the Constitution of the United States. * * * As for myself I can affirm that no sentiment of disloyalty to these great principles of self-government, recognized and embodied in the Constitution of the United States, ever beat or throbbed in breast or heart of mine. To their maintenance my whole soul was ever enlisted; and to this end my whole life has heretofore been devoted, and will continue to be the rest of my days—God willing. * * * Whatever differences existed amongst us arose from differences as to the best and surest means of securing these great ends, which was the object of all. It was with this view and for this purpose secession was tried. That has failed. * * * Our only alternative now is either to give up all hope of Constitutional liberty, or retrace our steps, and to look for its vindication and maintenance in the forums of reason and justice, instead of on the arena of arms. In the court and halls of legislation, instead of on the field of battle." * * *

Although Mr. Stephens has not publicly advocated the Confederate cause as zealously since July, 1873, as before that time, yet in his speech in Congress in opposition to the civil rights bill, January 5, 1874, and in a Fourth of July oration at Atlanta, 1875, he presented with his accustomed adroitness the arguments in favor of State sovereignty. He is the ablest of Southern thinkers and leaders, and his book "The War Between the States" is in title and contents the arsenal of that doctrine.

9th District—Rep. BENJAMIN H. HILL, of Atlanta; was a member of the Confederate States Senate, and of the Georgia Secession Convention of 1861. Mr. Hill was regarded in the Confederate Senate as the Confederate President's other self. Mr. Davis spoke of him as his "right hand." He was chairman of its judiciary committee, and reported and advocated the following resolutions or bills:

"That every person pretending to be a soldier or officer of the United States who shall be captured on the soil of the Confederate States after the first day of January, 1863, shall be presumed to have entered the territory of the Confederate States with the intent to incite insurrection and abet murder; and, unless satisfactory proof be adduced to the contrary before the military court before which the trial shall be had, shall suffer death. This section shall continue in force until the proclamation issued by Abraham Lincoln, dated at Washington on the 22d day of September, 1862, shall be rescinded, and the policy therein announced shall be abandoned, and no longer."

"2. Every white person who shall act as a commissioned or non-commissioned officer, commanding negroes or mulattoes against the Confederate States, or who shall arm, organize, train, or prepare negroes or mulattoes for military service, or aid them in any military enterprise against the Confederate States, shall, if captured, suffer death.

"3. Every commissioned or non-commissioned officer of the enemy who shall incite slaves to rebellion, or pretend to give them freedom under the aforementioned act of Congress and proclamation, by abducting or causing them to be abducted or inducing them to abscond, shall, if captured, suffer death."

Jefferson Davis issued, December 22d, 1862, a proclamation declaring outlaws General Butler and the men of his command; also consigning to death, or slavery, or capture, officers commanding and men serving in colored regiments.

To enforce this proclamation of Mr. Davis' a law was passed on the first of May, 1863, by the Confederate Congress, reported from the judiciary committee by Mr. Hill, of Georgia. Section 4 of the law reads as follows:

"Sec. 4. That every white person being a commissioned officer, or acting as such, who during the present war shall command negroes or mulattoes in arms against the Confederate States, or who shall arm, train, organize, or prepare negroes or mulattoes for military service against the Confederate States, or who shall voluntarily aid negroes or mulattoes in any military enterprise, attack, or conflict in such service, shall be deemed as inciting servile insurrection, and shall, if captured, be put to death or be otherwise punished, at the discretion of the court.

"Sec. 5. Every person being a commissioned officer, or acting as such in the service of the enemy, who shall during the present war excite, attempt to excite, or cause to be excited a servile insurrection, or who shall incite or cause to be incited a slave to rebel, shall, if captured, be put to death, or be otherwise punished, at the discretion of the court.

"Sec. 7. All negroes and mulattoes who shall be engaged in war or be taken in arms against the Confederate States, or shall give aid or comfort to the enemies of the Confederate States, shall, when captured in the Confederate States, be delivered to the authorities of the State or States in which they shall be captured, to be dealt with according to the present or future laws of such State or States."

In a late speech made in Georgia, Mr. Hill said:

"The great final struggle to settle the question whether Constitutional liberty on this continent shall be continued or not is to be fought in 1876. Can it be successfully fought with the ballot? * * * If we fail at the ballot-box in 1876 by reason of force, a startling question will present itself to the American people. * * * I tell you, my friends, there is no peace for this country until Radicalism is crushed; not only crushed, but despised; not only despised, but made infamous forever throughout America. If we must have war—if we cannot preserve this Constitution and Constitutional government by the ballot; * * * if folly and wickedness—if inordinate love of power shall decree that America must save her Constitution by blood, let it come. I am ready. But let one thing be distinctly understood, that if another war should come we of the South will rally under the old flag of our fathers. It always was our flag. We were never faithless to it, and our enemies were never faithful to it."

In his speech in the House of Representatives, January 11, 1876, Mr. Hill gave further expression to these ideas when he declared that "the South is here, and here she intends to remain. Go on and pass your qualifying acts, trample upon the Constitution you have sworn to support, abnegate the pledges of your fathers, incite rage upon our people, and multiply your infidelities until they shall be like the stars of heaven or the sands of the seashore, without number; but know this, for all your iniquities the South will never again seek a remedy in the madness of another secession. We are here; we are in the house of our fathers, our brothers are our companions, and we are at home to stay, thank God.

* * * We come charging upon the Union no wrongs to us. The Union never wronged us. The Union has been an unmixed blessing to every section, to every State, to every man of every color in America. We charge all our wrongs upon that 'higher law.' We wronged the Union grievously when we left it to be seized and rent and torn by the men who had denounced it as a 'covenant with hell and a league with the Devil.' "

KENTUCKY—7th District—Rep. JOSEPH C. S. BLACKBURN, of Versailles; entered the Confederate army in 1861, and served throughout the war. It is charged that his service was almost wholly that of a guerilla, engaged in harrying the Unionists of Kentucky.

LOUISIANA—1st District—Rep. RANDALL LEE GIBSON, of New Orleans; joined the Confederate army as a private soldier, and was promoted to the command of a company, regiment, brigade, and division.

2d District—Rep. E. JOHN ELLIS, of New Orleans; graduated in March, 1861; joined the Confederate army five days afterward, and served throughout the war.

4th District—Rep. WILLIAM M. LEVY, of Natchitoches; was a member of the State legislature of Louisiana in 1861; was a Presidential elector on the Breckinridge and Lane ticket in 1860; served in the Confederate army, participating in the engagements on the peninsula in 1861 and 1862, and thereafter, until the close of the war, in the adjutant and inspector general's department on the staff of General Dick Taylor.

MISSISSIPPI—1st District—Rep. LUCIUS Q. C. LAMAR, of Oxford; was elected to the Thirty-fifth and Thirty-sixth Congresses of the United States, and resigned in 1860 to take a seat in the Secession Convention of his State; in 1861, entered the Confederate army as lieutenant-colonel of the Nineteenth regiment, and was promoted to the colonelcy; in 1863, was entrusted by President Davis with an important diplomatic mission to Russia.

4th District—Rep. OTHO R. SINGLETON, of Canton; was a representative from Mississippi in the Thirty-third, Thirty-fifth and Thirty-sixth Congresses of the United States, retiring January 12, 1861; was a representative from Mississippi in the Confederate Congress from 1861 until 1865.

MISSOURI—Senator F. M. COCKRELL, of Warrensburg; entered the Confederate army as a colonel in the Missouri State Guard, and was promoted to major-general, serving till the rebellion closed.

4th District—Rep. ROBERT A. HATCHER, of New Madrid; was a member of the State (rebel) convention in 1862, and a member of the Confederate Congress in 1864-'65.

8th District—Rep. BENJAMIN J. FRANKLIN, of Kansas City; entered the Confederate army as a private, was promoted captain, and served throughout the war. He was an active pro-slavery politician in Kansas, being known, in fact, among those called "Border Ruffians."

11th District—Rep. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr., of Fayette; at the commencement of the late war he entered the Confederate army as a lieutenant, and was promoted successively to be captain, major, colonel, and brigadier-general. Clark served in Marmaduke's division, and was a brigade commander in the Price raid of 1864.

NORTH CAROLINA—Senator MATT W. RANSOM, of Northampton county, (post office Weldon;) entered the Confederate army, serving as lieutenant-colonel, colonel, brigadier-general, and major-general and surrendered at Appomattox.

Senator AUGUSTUS SUMMERFIELD MERRIMON, of Raleigh; was a member of the legislature of North Carolina in 1860-'61; was solicitor (rebel) of the 8th judicial district of North Carolina from 1861 to 1865.

1st District—Rep. JESSE J. YEATES, of Murfreesboro'; served in the Confederate army, and was major of the 31st regiment North Carolina troops; was solicitor (rebel) of the 1st judicial circuit of North Carolina from 1861 to 1866.

3d District—Rep. ALFRED MOORE WADDELL, of Wilmington; served in the Confederate army as lieutenant-colonel of cavalry.

4th District—Rep. JOSEPH J. DAVIS, of Louisburg; served in the Confederate army as captain.

5th District—Rep. ALFRED MOORE SCALES, of Greensborough; was a member of the Thirty-fifth Congress; volunteered at the beginning of the late civil war as a private in the Confederate army; was afterward promoted and served as captain, colonel, and brigadier-general, and for the war.

6th District—Rep. THOMAS SAMUEL ASHE, of Wadesborough; was elected in 1861 to the House of Representatives of the Confederate States, and to the Senate of the Confederate States in 1864. A Mr. Ashe, of North Carolina, voted in Congress for the repeal of the Missouri compromise.

7th District—Rep. WILLIAM M. ROBBINS, of Statesville; was an officer in the Confederate army during the whole war.

8th District—Rep. ROBERT BRANK VANCE, of Asheville; was elected a captain of a company in the Confederate service in 1861; was twice elected colonel of the 29th North Carolina regiment, and was appointed brigadier-general in 1863.

TENNESSEE—Senator DAVID MCKENDREE KEY, of Chattanooga; entered the Confederate army in 1861, and served through the entire war.

3d District—Rep. GEORGE GIBBS DIBRELL, of Sparta; was elected to the State (rebel) Legislature of Tennessee, in August, 1861; entered the Confederate army as a private, was elected lieutenant-colonel, and promoted colonel and brigadier-general of cavalry; was detailed to escort the executive officers and treasure of the Confederate Government after the evacuation of Richmond.

4th District—Rep. HAYWOOD YANCEY RIDGLE, of Lebanon; entered the Confederate army as a private in 1861, and served through the war.

6th District—Rep. JOHN F. HOUSE, of Clarksville; was a member of the Provisional Congress of the Confederate States from Tennessee; at the expiration of his term of service in said body he entered the Confederate army, and continued therein until the close of the war.

7th District—Rep. WASHINGTON CURRAN WHITTHORNE, of Columbia; was assistant adjutant general in the Provisional army of Tennessee in 1861, and was afterward adjutant general of the State, which position he held under Governor Harris until the close of the civil war.

8th District—Rep. JOHN D. C. ATKINS, of Paris; was lieutenant-colonel of the 5th Tennessee regiment in the Confederate army in 1861; was elected to the Confederate Provisional Congress in August, 1861; was re-elected in November, 1861, and again elected in November, 1863.

10th District—Rep. CASEY YOUNG, of Memphis; entered the Tennessee army as a private; was afterward appointed assistant adjutant general upon the staff of General William H. Carroll, and was subsequently assigned to the command of a regiment of cavalry in General Chalmer's division. He also served under Forrest at the time of the massacre of Fort Pillow. In a report made by a Congressional committee that investigated this atrocity at the time, the scenes that followed the occupation of the fort, which was treacherously gained by advancing under cover of a flag of truce, are thus described:

"The rebels commenced an indiscriminate slaughter, sparing neither age nor sex, white nor black, soldier or civilian. The officers and men seemed to vie with each other in the devilish work; men, women, and even children, wherever found, were deliberately shot down, beaten, hacked with sabres; some of the children, not more than ten years old, were forced to stand up and face their murderers while being shot; the sick and wounded were butchered without mercy, the rebels even entering the hospital building and dragging them out to be shot, or killing them as they lay there unable to offer the least resistance. * * * No cruelty which the most fiendish malignity could devise was omitted by these murderers. * * * The huts and tents in which many of the wounded had sought shelter were set on fire, both that night and next morning, while the wounded were still in them. * * * These deeds of murder and cruelty ceased when night came on, only to be renewed next morning, when the demons carefully sought among the dead lying about in all directions for any of the wounded yet alive, and those they found were deliberately shot." The following dispatch was sent by Forrest to Polk: "Rebels killed five hundred men, (no prisoners.) The officers in the fort were killed. Over one hundred citizens who had fled into the fort to escape conscription ran into the river and were drowned." Of the conduct of Colonel Casey Young's troops, and of himself, of course, who were under Chalmer's command, and aided in this capture and massacre, Forrest said in his official report: "I desire to acknowledge the prompt and energetic action of Brigadier General Chalmers, commanding the forces around Fort Pillow. * * He has reason to be proud of the conduct of the officers and men of his command for their gallantry and courage in assaulting the enemy's works without the assistance of artillery or bayonets."

TEXAS—Senator SAM BELL MAXEY, of Paris; educated at West Point, was elected State Senator for four years in 1861, but declined, and raised the 9th Texas infantry for the Confederate States army, of which he was colonel; was promoted to brigadier-general in 1862, and major-general in 1864; commanded the Indian Territory military district 1863-'65, and was also superintendent of Indian affairs. During the war Quantrille, the Missouri guerilla, was sheltered in Maxey's department after his atrocious massacres at Lawrence and Baxter's Springs, Kansas, placed him under the ban of outlawry.

1st District—Rep. JOHN H. REAGAN, of Palestine; was elected in 1857 a representative to the Thirty-fifth Congress from the first district of Texas, and was re-elected in 1859 to the Thirty-sixth Congress; was elected to the secession convention of Texas in 1861, and was elected, with others, by that convention deputy to the Provisional Congress of the Confederacy; was appointed postmaster-general of the Provisional Government of the Confederacy, March 6, 1861; was re-appointed on the permanent organization of the Confederate Government in 1862, and occupied the position until the close of the war; was also appointed acting secretary of the treasury of the Confederate Government.

Mr. Reagan, as rebel Postmaster General, was asked by Jefferson Davis for his views on the question of surrender during the pendency of the Sherman-Johnston negotiation in North Carolina, 1865. General H. V. Boynton, in his critical work reviewing General Sherman's memoirs, publishes a photolithographic copy of Reagan's memorandum for terms of armistice, as also his letter in response to Davis. In both these documents the most ultra State sovereignty ideas are advocated and set forth. Mr. Reagan was a candidate for delegate to the recent Constitutional Convention in Texas. This was after his election to Congress. During the canvass Judge Reagan strongly opposed the common schools, declared it unjust to tax the well-to-do in order to educate the poor; advocated the re-establishment of the whipping post as a punishment for petty larceny and petty crimes; and proposed that all other convictions should be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary, and consequent disfranchisement. This is one method of reducing the colored vote.

2d District—Rep. DAVID B. CULBERSON, of Jefferson; was a member of the State House of Representatives of Texas (rebel) in 1866, and to the State Senate (Johnson) 1866; entered the Confederate army as a private in 1862, and was promoted until he became adjutant general with the rank of colonel.

3d District—Rep. JAMES W. THROCKMORTON, of McKinney; elected to the State (rebel) Senate in 1863, and served until the surrender of General Lee; was elected a delegate to the State Constitutional Convention under President Johnson's proclamation, and was chosen presiding officer of that body; was elected Governor of Texas in June, 1866, for a term of five years; was inaugurated August 8, 1866, and removed by order of General Sheridan, August 9, 1867.

VIRGINIA—Senator ROBERT E. WITHERS, of Wytheville; entered the Confederate army as major of infantry in April, 1861, and during the same year was promoted colonel of the 18th Virginia regiment, which he commanded until retired in consequence of numerous disabling wounds, and appointed to command the post at Danville, Virginia, which position he held until the close of the war.

1st District—Rep. BEVERLY B. DOUGLAS, of Aylett; entered the Confederate army as first lieutenant in Lee's Rangers, and was successively promoted to the rank of major of the 5th Virginia cavalry.

2d District—Rep. JOHN GOODE, Jr., of Norfolk; was elected in 1860 a member of the State (Secession) Convention of Virginia, which passed the ordinance of secession; was twice elected a member of the Confederate Congress, and served in that capacity from February 22, 1862, until the close of the war; was appointed a member of the National Democratic Executive Committee in 1868, and reappointed in 1872 for four years.

5th District—Rep. GEORGE C. CABELL, of Danville; volunteered as a private soldier in the southern army; in June, 1861, he was commissioned major by Governor Letcher, and assigned to the 18th Virginia infantry, Colonel Withers, Pickett's division, Longstreet's corps; participated in most of the battles fought by that portion of the army of Northern Virginia to which he was attached; was twice wounded, and left the army at the close of the war, with the rank of colonel.

6th District—Rep. JOHN RANDOLPH TUCKER, of Lexington; was attorney-general of Virginia from 1857 to 1865. Is also borne as a captain on the Confederate army rolls.

7th District—Rep. JOHN T. HARRIS, of Harrisonburg; was a member of the Thirty-sixth Congress of the United States; was a member of the Confederate Legislature from 1863 to '65.

8th District—Rep. EPPA HUNTON, of Warrenton; was elected to the State Convention of Virginia, which assembled at Richmond in February, 1861; served through its first session, and then entered the Confederate army as colonel of the 8th Virginia infantry; was promoted after the battle of Gettysburg, and served through the residue of the war as brigadier-general.

9th District—Rep. WILLIAM TERRY, of Wytheville; was in the military service of Virginia in the "John Brown raid," in 1859; entered the Confederate army in April, 1861, as lieutenant in the 4th Virginia infantry, "Stonewall Brigade," and served during the war.

WEST VIRGINIA—Senator ALLEN TAYLOR CAPERTON, of Union; was a member of the State (Secession) Constitutional Convention of Virginia in 1861; was elected by the Legislature of Virginia a member of the Confederate States Senate, and served until the close of the war in 1865.

2d District—Rep. CHARLES JAMES FAULKNER, of Martinsburg; was elected to the House of Representatives in the Thirty-second, Thirty-third, Thirty-fourth, and Thirty-fifth Congresses, serving from December 1, 1851, until March 3, 1859; was nominated in 1859 by President Buchanan as Minister Plenipotentiary to France, and confirmed by the Senate; returned to the United States in August, 1861, and was held as a prisoner of state upon no charge or imputation against his fidelity as a minister, but from an apprehension that he would unite his fortunes with those of the Southern Confederacy; was exchanged in December, 1861, for Hon. Alfred Ely, member of the United States House of Representatives from New York, then a prisoner in Richmond; entered the Confederate army as a member of General Stonewall Jackson's staff, and served as his chief of staff until the death of that officer, having written all the official reports that bear his signature. Mr. Faulkner, it is charged, did, in 1866, or '67, take the oath then required in West Virginia before he could practice at the bar of the State courts. This oath required him to swear he had not borne arms, &c., against the Union or the State. When charged with the falsity of this, Mr. Faulkner declared he had never held a military commission; that his position was an honorary one, and that he was with Jackson only out of friendship, and because that General was very careless about his papers.

This record of the Confederate leaders now encamped in the National Capital amply justifies the belief that they are so thoroughly representative of Southern sentiment as not to be trusted with the control of the Union. In the years that have followed the war, only one man who served in the Union army has ever been elected to Congress by Democratic votes from any district in the ex-rebel States. This is a sufficient reason for fearing a united and sectional South. It is what the Democracy design. By that sign they conquer. If they elect the President it is as the servant of the men who, first failing to destroy the Union, now seek to rule it to the same end.

A MODEL DEMOCRATIC ROBBERY—ITS PERPETRATORS UNPUNISHED.

During the year 1860 Godard Bailey, a relative of John B. Floyd, then Secretary of War, was the custodian of bonds belonging to the Indian Trust Fund, held by Jacob Thompson, Secretary of the Interior, as trustee of various Indian tribes, amounting in the aggregate to $3,396,241.82. Said Bailey, during the year above mentioned, placed in the hands of Russell, Majors & Waddell the following bonds belonging to the Indian Trust Fund, viz:

Missouri 6 per cent. bonds.....	$370,000
North Carolina 6 per cent. bonds...	357,000
Tennessee 6 per cent. bonds.....	143,000

Total..... 870,000

As collateral security for the return of said bonds, Russell, Majors & Waddell deposited with said Bailey acceptances of John B. Floyd, Secretary of War, amounting to eight hundred and seventy thousand dollars, issued to Russell, Majors & Waddell on account of their contract with the War Department. See the following receipt of Russell, Majors & Waddell for the above bonds:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 13th, 1860.

We acknowledge to have received from Godard Bailey, on the 13th of July last, and at various times subsequently, the following bonds, viz:

Missouri 6's.....	$370,000
North Carolina 6's (Jan. and July)	296,000
North Carolina 6's (April and Oct.)	61,000
Tennessee 6's.....	143,000

Making a total of..... 870,000 which we agree to return to the said Godard Bailey, or to his assigns, on demand.

As collateral security for the return of the above described bonds, we have deposited with the said Godard Bailey acceptances of the Hon. John B. Floyd, Secretary of War, to the amount of eight hundred and seventy thousand dollars.

RUSSELL, MAJORS & WADDELL.

When this iniquitous act, perpetrated by one of the subordinate officers of the Interior Department, in the abstraction of said bonds was made known, it was discovered at the same time that acceptances unauthorized by law, and deceptive and fraudulent in their character, had been issued by John B. Floyd, Secretary of War, in favor of Messrs. Russell, Majors & Waddell, not only for the amount of bonds abstracted, but the records of the War Department showed that $5,339,395 of said acceptances were in circulation, making the total amount of acceptances issued $6,137,395.

The records of the War Department also showed that there was a deficit of $6,137,395 to fall upon the holders of these acceptances, or to be assumed in some way by the Government.

It also appears from the records of the War Department, that while these acceptances were being issued to the amount of millions of dollars, Russell, Majors & Waddell were regularly receiving their pay for the services performed under their contract, in money, from the Government; therefore it is evident that the acceptances were fraudulent.

For the facts contained in the foregoing statement see Report No. 78, House of Representatives, 36th Congress, 2nd Session.

THE WORK OF THE FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

DESIGNS OF THE DEMOCRACY.

It is at this date (March 13th, 1876,) quite beyond dispute that the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives have during the last month been deliberately engaged in working up capital for political effect in the current elections. They have paid very little attention to the legitimate and necessary business of Congress. Their attention has been very largely directed to the operations and reports of the numerous investigating committees which they have set on foot, and it would appear that all their ingenuity has been brought into requisition to discover the means of holding delinquent Republicans to punishment and disgrace and letting the Democratic tempters go. The result of this has been that the detective press of the country has been for weeks past reveling in a very carnival of obloquy and defamation, and personal explanations have followed each other on the floors of Congress like the waves of the sea. Just on the eve of the New Hampshire election, the first in the contest of the Presidential canvass, and in this centennial year of American Independence, of course the excitement created has been profound.

PUBLIC TIMBER AND MINERAL LANDS.

Much discussion has arisen in regard to the public policy respecting the various classes of lands granted and reserved under the legislation of Congress. But nothing definite beyond this has transpired, and no measures have been positively settled by all the long debates.

RAILROADS.

The same general remark applies to the vast railroad interests of the country. Time has been largely consumed in the consideration of what has been done and what should be done by Congress in regulating the action of roads already in operation and in encouraging the construction of those which have been projected. Little, however, has been accomplished beyond the exhibition of a vast number of plans and projects, based upon the alleged necessities of the country, and of extended statistical information in regard to the general subject.

COMMERCE AND INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

Little or nothing has been done during the last month upon these important subjects of national interest. A few propositions have been made and a few speeches delivered without any definite or practical result.

MISCELLANEOUS SUBJECTS.

Congress has been occupied with a variety of questions relating to Indian reservations, to deficiencies in the Indian funds, to the transportation of animals, the slaughter of buffaloes, the ravages of insects, the erection of an inebriate asylum, public buildings, fire insurance, pharmacy, the Washington monument, the birth-day of Washington, the Pension Bureau, the revenues of the Patent Office, the funding act, the civil service reform, the revision of the bounty system, the modification of the pension laws affecting the soldiers of the war of 1812, the safe burglary and whisky trials, the duties on imports, the revenue laws, the naturalization treaties, the proper qualification of a Speaker pro tempore of the House of Representatives, the accurate printing of the debates and speeches in Congress, the legal construction of the Centennial appropriation bill, and the correction of the revised statutes of the United States, in which codification there are found numerous errors and conflicts, which a constantly arising exigency requires to be remedied.

THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. McCrary, of the House, (February 17, 1876,) explained the nature and object of the bill for the reorganization of the judiciary of the United States. With the growth of the country and the augmentation of human transactions, a vast accumulation of business has been thrown on the Supreme Court of the United States, making it physically impossible to sweep the docket, and thus will nigh amounting to a denial of justice. In 1810 the number of cases on the calendar was 98, in 1820 it was 127, in 1846 it was 146, in 1856 it was 266, in 1866 it was 457, in the present year it is 931. Two evils are felt—the great distance of the places of the trials below from the only place of trial by appeal, and the great delay which follows, in the decision of appeals. The proposal is to create an intermediate court of appeals. To this certain other suggestions have been added, and in this condition the subject rests.

CALIFORNIA.

A spirited reply was made in the House by Mr. Page, of California, (February 26, 1876,) in reply to the allegation of Mr. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, that California had repudiated and nullified the legal-tender act, and disparaging the condition of the State in contrast with Minnesota, Iowa, and Wisconsin as the consequence. Mr. Page, while admitting that the circulating medium of his State is gold and silver, yet earnestly denied the charge of repudiating the legal-tender act. He presented a flattering view of the resources and productions of California, and fully vindicated his position in regard to her prosperity. The value of productions for 1875 was in the aggregate $123,500,000; the aggregate capital and deposits in all the banks of the State is $165,000,000. The purpose of the debate was to show that a metallic basis of currency is far better than that of paper money at a discount.

MISSISSIPPI ELECTION.

On January 20, 1876, Senator Morton, upon the question of investigating the late State election in Mississippi, presented a narrative of circumstances and statistics which seem to be well substantiated, and which disclose a reign of violence, fraud, intimidation and cold-blooded murder that would indicate the lapse of that people into a condition far worse than the most cruel barbarism. He thoroughly exposed the "white-line" policy, as it is called. The details of this system of intolerance and coercion, gathered up from many sources, show that no conceivable device was left untried to crush out the element of negro suffrage. In Yazoo county alone where there were two thousand Republican voters, only seven of these votes were polled. This is a specimen of the outrages committed over the whole State.

EULOGIES.

On Thursday, February 24th, 1876, the memorial addresses, both in the Senate and the House, were delivered on the late Hon. Henry H. Starkweather, a member of the House from the State of Connecticut, who died at his residence in Washington, on the morning of January 28th, 1876, after a brief illness. The remarks on this occasion were deeply affecting. Mr. Starkweather himself had prepared an address to be delivered on the death of Senator Ferry, of his State, but his death occurred before the day set for the eulogies on Senator Ferry, and on that occasion the remarks which Mr. Starkweather had prepared were read to the House by General Garfield. Eulogies in memory of Mr. Starkweather were pronounced in the House by Messrs. Phelps, Hale, and Garfield; and in the Senate by Messrs. English, Dawes, Sargent, and Eaton, all of whom bore the highest testimony to his character as a man, a citizen, and a Christian.

SENATOR MORTON.

On Tuesday, February 29th, 1876, Senator Morton, of Indiana, rose in the hall of the Senate to a personal explanation, calling attention to a scandalous report in the Baltimore Sun, alleging a corrupt collusion between himself and others in some matter in the Territory of Utah. Senator Morton explained the circumstances, showing that the whole statement was a base unfounded slander. The scandalous recklessness of the detective press in accusing public men upon the slightest rumor started by some infamous and unprincipled scoundrel has reached a point in our country where forbearance has ceased to be a virtue. Cannot some legislation be devised to put a stop to such a flagitious use of the power of the press?

THE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

It is a lamentable truth that at this writing (March 15th, 1876,) not a single regular appropriation bill has become a law during the present session. The Naval Academy appropriation bill is still pending in the Senate. The fortification bill, which is cut down for the coming year to $315.00, has only passed the House. The legislative bill, which proposes a reduction from $18,000,000 to $12,000,000; has just been ventilated in a few of its items in the Democratic branch of Congress. It appears as though it were the studied intention of the Democrats to cripple and derange all departments of the Government. It is difficult to perceive any wise or patriotic motive in the course pursued. The cry of retrenchment and reform is made a pretext for ignoring the very necessities of the civil service, and for producing a state of perfect impotency in the Government at the beginning of the next fiscal year.

THE RESUMPTION ACT.

Some attempts have been made to secure the repeal of the resumption act of the last Congress. Memorials from different bodies of citizens in various parts of the country have been submitted to Congress—particularly from the Boston Board of Trade and the New York Chamber of Commerce, both the latter opposing the repeal. On Monday, March 6, 1876, Senator Sherman, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, made an elaborate and exhaustive speech against the repeal. The points made in this speech are:

1. The resumption act is a solemn pledge of the nation.
2. Ought this promise be performed?
3. Can we perform it?
4. Are the agencies and measures prescribed in the law sufficient for the purpose?
5. If not, what additional measures should be enacted?

Under these heads he showed the nature of the pledge of the public faith; why public policy forbids its repeal; why a day should be fixed for the resumption of specie payments; the balance of trade, and the fallacious deductions from it; the effect of contraction; resumption through national banks; effect upon existing debts; the drifting process; why no apparent results; the state of the national and fractional currency, and United States notes; the burden of resumption; powers conferred by the act of 1875; cost of silver coin and fractional currency, and auxiliary legislation. To this speech no effective answer has yet been made.

CURRENCY AND FINANCE.

In connection with the above subject several strong speeches have been delivered on the questions of currency and finance. On Monday, February 14, 1876, Mr. Hale introduced a preamble and resolution looking to immediate further legislation in favor of resumption, which was defeated by a vote of 139 to 85, 65 members not voting. On Saturday, February 26, 1876, Mr. Riddle delivered a long and carefully prepared speech in favor of the repeal of the resumption act. He was followed by Mr. Landers, on the same side, proposing what he styled the following remedies:

1. The unconditional repeal of the resumption act.
2. An act of Congress making coin and United States Treasury notes full or equal legal-tenders.
3. An act substituting par United States notes for the national bank currency.
4. An act making par greenbacks convertible at the pleasure of the holder into a certificate of deposit or bond bearing a low rate of interest.

But the Democratic majority of the House are hopelessly divided on the question, and there is no more prospect of substantial relief to the country from this quarter than from the veriest mass of chaos that ever was.

COLORADO.

On Monday, February 16, 1876, the House proceeded to the consideration of a bill amending the enabling act of the last House of Representatives in behalf of the Territory of Colorado, and the bill with some amendments was passed. On Monday, February 28, 1876, the Senate considered and passed the House bill for the admission of Colorado as a new State into the Union.

NEW MEXICO.

On Thursday, March 2, 1876, a bill for the admission of New Mexico into the Union was considered by the Senate. Subsequently the bill was recommitted, and again reported with amendments. On Friday, March 10, 1876, the bill was discussed at length, and with some further slight amendments was passed by a vote of 35 to 15, 23 not voting. The bill now goes to the House.

HAWAIIAN TREATY.

A strong opposition has been developed against legislation to carry out the objects of the confirmation of this treaty. On Wednesday, March 2, 1876, a majority report in favor of such legislation and a minority report opposing such legislation were both presented. The discussion has taken a wide range, and been very earnestly maintained by Messrs. Wood, Luttrell, Leavenworth, Kelley, and others in the House, but like most of the questions which have elicited debate in this Congress, it is still pending with no more prospect of conclusion.

SAFE BURGLARY AND WHISKY TRIALS.

The Democrats of the House have instituted still further investigation into these scandals, and thus added to a list which now numbers more than sixty different subjects of alleged fraud and corruption which they have already undertaken to lay open to the country.

PERSONAL ACCUSATIONS.

The attention of Congress has been directed to charges affecting the character of General Schenck, of General Babcock, and of Representatives Hays and Purman. It is the most prominent feature of the action of this Democratic House. The majority seem bent on ripping open every budget of scandal and vilification which is brought to their door, no matter in what shape or from what source it comes, and perhaps this is the safest course for them, as well as for the nation. The old maxim that "it is an ill wind which blows no good," is as true in this case as ever. We have learned from some counsel of poetic wisdom that "nothing is formed in vain," and we see but little use of the Democratic party unless it be to hunt the stench of such papers as the New York Sun and the Chicago Times.

PINCHBACK.

The case of ex-Governor Pinchback, claiming a seat as United States Senator from the State of Louisiana, after hanging in suspense for a period of three years, has been finally determined in the Senate. The question was upon a resolution offered by Senator Morton to the effect that Governor Pinchback be admitted to a seat as a Senator from Louisiana for the period of six years from March 4, 1873. To this an amendment was offered by Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, to the effect that Mr. T. B. S. Pinchback be not admitted to said seat. The discussion upon this subject was protracted and earnest. The whole case of the troubled condition of affairs in the unhappy State of Louisiana was gone over again and again. That Mr. Pinchback came to the Senate with the credentials of William P. Kellogg, the only acting Governor of that State, there is no question. It was first contended that on those credentials as prima facie evidence he was entitled to be sworn in and to take his seat, and that any investigation into the validity of his right should be taken afterwards. But this view of the case was overruled, and the papers referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It was upon the resolution reported from that committee, and the amendment proposed thereon that the discussion proceeded. On Wednesday, March 8, 1876, the case was finally disposed of by the adoption of Senator Edmunds' amendment, by a vote of 32 to 29—12 not voting. The resolution as amended was then adopted by the same vote, from which it appears that some five or six Republican Senators joined the entire body of Democrats in rejecting Mr. Pinchback. That they were constrained to this course by honest motives must not be questioned. Whatever difference there may be as to the views and purposes of the Democratic minority, no one will impute sinister designs to such men as Edmunds, Christiancy, Paddock, and the Morrills. As constitutional lawyers they could not divest themselves of the responsibility with their views of the law and the facts, although they clearly saw that the political considerations were all the other way. But, nevertheless, we must accord the same high consideration to those who voted in the minority, believing them to be equally honest and, as we view the case, far more consistent in their course. And for ourselves we must express the regret that Mr. Pinchback was not admitted, since his right to the seat should have been confirmed just as much as Governor Kellogg's right has been confirmed to him.

BELKNAP.

But the great sensation for the past month has been produced in the case of General W. W. Belknap, late Secretary of War. Early in the session the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department entered upon an investigation into the administration of affairs in that Department. This committee consists of three Democrats, Messrs. Clymer, Blackburn, and Robbins; and two Republicans, Messrs. Bass and Danford. But the Democrats of the committee have been especially active in nosing about among the scandals of the detective press and the rumors floating in the air. They have been in contact and secret conclave with one and another who had anything to tell in disparagement of the conduct of affairs in the War Office, keeping the Republican members of the committee in profound ignorance of many of their movements. Thus they have been occupied for many weeks, until finally they stumbled upon a mine of corruption which has exploded the Secretary of War, General Belknap, out of office and rendered him liable to the process of the Constitution and the laws in such cases provided. This has been a big bonanza to the Democratic party throughout the country, and such a howl has gone up over the land from all the party and detective press as has not been heard before since the yells with which the rebels used to rush into battle during "the late little unpleasantness." It is, however, our duty to give the simple substance of the action in Congress in regard to this affair. On Wednesday, March 2d, 1876, Mr. Clymer, chairman of this committee, arrested the proceedings of the House by an unusual show of solemnity, and the announcement that he had a report to present of so much gravity that no delay should be made in unfolding it to the House and the country.

The report was then read, by himself, in the most lugubrious style, at the Clerk's desk, charging General Belknap with unparalleled crimes in office, upon the testimony of one Caleb P. Marsh, a rebel Kentucky Democrat, then residing in New York, and proposing resolutions for the impeachment of the Secretary. The story of this disgrace is too fresh to be repeated here. As soon as the matter was placed before the House some of the Republicans desired to consider it in order that the House might act with dignity and deliberation in the premises. But these efforts were of no avail, and under the operation of the previous question insisted upon by the Democrats, the matter was hurried through in a single hour, and the resolutions adopted by a unanimous vote. The Committee of Investigation were appointed to proceed immediately to the bar of the Senate and impeach W. W. Belknap, &c., &c. On Friday, March 3d, 1876, a message from the House was received by the Senate that a resolution of impeachment had been passed by the House, and that Messrs Clymer, Blackburn, Robbins, Bass, and Danford were appointed a committee to appear in the case. At 1 o'clock the Sergeant-at-Arms announced the presence of the committee, who advanced to the area in front of the Chair, and Mr. Clymer, the chairman, delivered their message. The President pro tempore replied, "Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee of the House of Representatives, the Senate will take order in the premises," whereupon the committee withdrew. Senator Edmunds offered the following, which was adopted:

Ordered, That the message of the House of Representatives relating to the impeachment of William W. Belknap be referred to a select committee consisting of five Senators.

The committee was named by the Chair, and consisted of Messrs. Edmunds, Conkling, Frelinghuysen, Thurman, and Stevenson.

On Monday, March 6th, 1876, Senator Edmunds reported the following from the select committee, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

"Whereas the House of Representatives on the 3d day of March, 1876, by five of its members, Messrs. Clymer, Robbins, Blackburn, Bass, and Danford, at the bar of the Senate, impeached William W. Belknap, the Secretary of War, of high crimes and misdemeanors, and informed the Senate that the House of Representatives will in due time exhibit particular articles of impeachment against him and make good the same; and likewise demanded that the Senate take order for the appearance of the said William W. Belknap to answer the said impeachment: Therefore,

Ordered, That the Senate will, according to its standing rules and orders in such cases provided, take proper order thereon, (upon the presentation of articles of impeachment,) of which due notice shall be given to the House of Representatives.

Ordered, That the Secretary acquaint the House of Representatives herewith."

The next we hear of the matter in Congress is on Tuesday, March 7, 1876, in the House, when Mr. Clymer rises to a question of privilege. He states that he and his colleagues, Blackburn and Robbins, have been summoned to appear before the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia with documents and papers to go before the Grand Jury, then in session, with a view to the indictment of General Belknap, and that having been let off by the court for the time being he comes to the House to raise the question of privilege. This led to a violent discussion upon the privileges of the House and the jurisdiction of the Court. The Democrats offered a resolution that the said committee and the members thereof are hereby directed to disregard the mandate of the Court until the further order of this House.

Mr. Hoar offered the following amendment or substitute:

"Resolved, That the said members be at liberty to attend before said court and give such evidence and produce such documents, if any they have, as relate to the charge against said Belknap for receiving a bribe from one Marsh."

A long and pointed debate ensued, which resulted in a defeat of the amendment by a vote of 130 to 84—75 not voting, and the adoption of the original resolution by a vote of 132 to 75—82 not voting. While these proceedings are in progress the Judiciary Committee of the House, to which is assigned the duty of preparing articles of impeachment, still holds back any report of its action. Marsh, the accusing witness, is allowed to flee out of the country, and the Democrats are now occupied with efforts to obtain the passage of an act which will protect any rascal who will come forward as an informer upon those officials whom he has corrupted. Meanwhile the whole process against Belknap is at a standstill, both in the courts and in Congress, through the action of Mr. Clymer's committee, sustained by the Democratic majority of the House. Never was there a more disgraceful proceeding, take it altogether, than this which is now presented to the country. The main object of the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives is too visible on the face of these transactions. After the first shock of the explosion of the scandal is over, the whole affair, as it has been managed by the bungling and unscrupulous partisans who have had it in charge, appears to have been a political trick to have an effect upon the eve of the New Hampshire election. It is most pitiable that such an officer as a Cabinet minister of whatever party should be shown to have been so complicated with the rascals around him, and it is scarcely less pitiable that the prosecution of the malefactor should be by some inscrutable arrangement of events committed to the hands of the leading representatives of the old rebel Bourbon Democracy in the present Congress. That all this is a foul blotch on the American name must be confessed with shame and humiliation by every honest and patriotic man.

BASE INGRATITUDE.—When a man betrays a trust he injures himself and wrongs the one whose confidence he has abused. President Grant had faith in Belknap. He saw in him qualities which he believed would make a good war minister. He had every reason to believe him to be a man of honor, and strong enough to resist temptation. He lifted him from obscurity, and honored him with one of the highest offices in the land. The full glare of prosperity was too much for the man thus honored. Instead of justifying the confidence of the President, he allowed his head to be turned by the desire to equal others in style and fashion. He lived beyond his legitimate income, and the same old story followed—betrayal of a sacred trust, exposure, and ruin.

REVIEW OF THE MONTH.

NATIONAL.

...It is difficult to tell which is the saddest aspect of the sad Belknap business. The fall of the ex-Secretary, involving as it does, if the act be proven, a breach of official and personal trust which is appalling; the base and degrading partisan use to which such a grave, personal dishonor has been perverted; or the infamous eagerness with which the gobemouche press have accepted every vile and distorted rumor, and by first making evidence, have succeeded in arraigning, convicting, and practically executing the delinquent official before the bar of public opinion long in advance of any possible trial by "his peers," or a "jury of his countrymen." The time-honored maxim—honored by that modern inquisition, the "sensation" press—"more honored in the breach than in the observance"—that a man is to be accounted innocent until he is proven guilty, has been utterly ignored in the case of William W. Belknap. THE REPUBLIC has no defense to make or plea to offer for the ex-Secretary of War, but it is bound, as all of all parties should be, to "nothing extenuate, nor aught set down in malice." Has this been the rule of press or partisans since this sad affair was made known? The crime with which Mr. Belknap is charged is a grave one; but it is in no sense political; it is only in a remote sense administrative; it is a breach of official trust—a malfeasance. As an act of personal wrong-doing it is one of a most disgraceful character, alike in its abuse of personal honor and grave trust, as in the petty extortion it produced on the rank and file of our small army. The first attitude of the House, majority and minority, was one of dignity, and the opinion of members as expressed on the day that Mr. Belknap was arraigned befitted the serious gravity of the circumstances. But this was only temporary. The election in New Hampshire was pending. Capital must be made. So unscrupulous was the effort that it reacted. The Star Chamber inquiry conducted by Messrs. Clymer, Blackburn, and Robbins—a violent Copperhead during the rebellion;

a Kentucky guerrilla, and an ex-Confederate soldier, and proven taker of petty bribes—has become a very boomerang, and instead of braining the President and defeating the Republican party, has recoiled on the heads of those who sent it. The records show the intent of the Democrats on that committee, for in no real and legal sense were the Republican members, Messrs. Bass and Danford, permitted to be parties to anything like a fair and impartial inquiry.

...The drag-net investigations now being conducted by the Democratic House have in no way been impeded by the minority therein, or hindered by the Executive Departments. Their partisan animus grows daily more apparent. They are in no case aimed at any direct abuse, but the several committees are merely privateers armed and provided with letters of marque, sailing free, and seeking what they may capture. It is worthy of note that so little has been developed. The secrecy of these inquiries justifies a belief in the accuracy of a suggestion that has been made, to the effect that the real purpose is to hold back the testimony until the Presidential campaign begins and then vomit forth ex parte accusations and statements. Another notable fact is this: that in nearly every case the most active men in the conduct of the investigations are those—new members—who either sought by arms to destroy the Union, or, at home in the North, living under its protection, did all they could to hinder and injure the progress and triumph of the Union cause. Another fact that will bear examination is the cost of these inquiries. What is to be saved at the spigot of reduced salaries is already running to waste at the bung-hole of costly reporting, enormous printing, and useless (to a large extent) witnesses.

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE ELECTION.

...The result of the election on Tuesday, the 14th ultimo, in New Hampshire, has not been a surprise to those who coolly watch the signs of the times. The folly of the Democracy in general, and of the South in particular, leads them to discredit the strength and earnestness of the convictions which sway the loyal millions. Busy with many things, and full of the cares and interests attaching to a high and complex civilization, they do not, as a whole, or as a rule, devote themselves to political activities with the same zest that animates the Southern and Democratic partisans. The Republican party can never be made a compact follow-my-leader organization like the Democracy. Hence its members are strongly inclined to teach lessons to those in power. It is the exercise of this inclination, sometimes wise, often otherwise, that leads the Democracy to cherish the vain delusion that the party of nationality and liberty is about to break to pieces. This is what they have been believing for a year or two past. The effect of their folly has been seen in the vain glory of the Confederate Democrats, and in the speeches of Hill, Tucker, Blackburn, et al. The loyal citizens of this country will never surrender the Government of the Union into the control of the men and party that sought to destroy it. Whenever there is a reasonable fear of such a result they will assert their will in unmistakeable terms. They are able to punish all offenders against honest administration in their own ranks. They will do it, too. But they never will permit the indignation aroused in that way to lead them into the criminal folly of surrendering the country into the hands of those who would destroy it. This was the issue in New Hampshire. This is to be the issue in Connecticut, in August next in North Carolina and Alabama, in California next September, and in Ohio and Iowa next October, and through the whole thirty-eight States (Colorado will then be in the sisterhood) next November. There can be little fears of the result. The ghastly memories of Andersonville forbid but one end. The threats and boasts made by the sectional and Democratic South insure its defeat. In the Belknap business, also, as in other things, the engineers "are hoist with their own petards."

...The past Republican vote of the Granite State is worth reproduction and comparison. The State was first carried in 1856, and has been, with three exceptions, uniformly Republican ever since. On a vote ranging from 71,556 in 1856 (the Presidential election) to 80,206 in 1875, the Republican majorities have gone from 9,115 in 1860, down to a plurality of but 172 in 1875. The Democratic party carried the Granite State (since 1856) in 1863, in 1871, and again in 1874. This was on the vote for Governor. The vote stood as follows:

		Dem.	Rep.	Maj.
1863	Governor.....	32,833	22,035	*3,798
1871	Governor.....	34,699	33,892	*807
1874	Governor.....	35,608	34,143	*1,465

*Plurality and over next highest candidate. In 1863 the Union candidate received 4,372 votes; in 1871 the Liberal Republican got 782 and the Temperance candidate 306; and in 1874 the Temperance candidate received 2,100 votes.

In each of these years examination shows that Democratic victory has not resulted from an increase in their vote, but from abstention on the part of Republicans, and by separate action on the part of those individualized movements or clans which more naturally gravitate to our standard whenever there is an overwhelming emergency. In 1862 and 1864, for instance, the Republican vote was 3,115, and 7,971 more than in 1863, while the Democratic increase was but small. In 1870 and 1872 the Republican vote exceeded that of 1871 by 1,020 and 4,860. The highest Democratic vote since 1856 was last year—a total of 39,121. The highest Republican vote was in 1868, for Governor, 39,785. Its lowest was in 1863. The smallest Democratic vote cast was in 1870 for Governor, 25,023. The Presidential votes since 1856 are as follows:

	Dem.	Rep.	Am.	Maj.
1856.....	32,789	38,245	422 Bell.	5,143 R.
1860.....	27,993	37,519	411	9,115 "
1864.....	32,340	34,382	2,182 "
1868.....	31,224	38,191	6,967 "
1872.....	31,425	37,168	5,443 "

In 1872 O'Conner received 100 votes and the Temperance candidate 200.

It is noteworthy that the vote for Governor in the spring preceding the Presidential election is, as a rule, larger than that cast for the national tickets. The only exception in the years named was in 1856. This is the general rule in all States where State elections precede in the same year that for the Electoral College.

OTHER REPUBLICAN GAINS—LOCAL AND MUNICIPAL.

...The large majority of the town, county, and city elections which have taken place this year have resulted in very considerable Republican gains.

On the 6th of March a number of elections were had in Iowa, Illinois, and Michigan. In nearly every instance the Republican candidates were elected. Des Moines, Iowa, for instance, was carried, reversing last year's vote. In the Eastern States, Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, and New York, the victories are very decided. Portland, Maine, was carried for a Republican mayor by 516 votes, the first time for several years. Bangor elected a Republican mayor by 325 majority; the Democratic candidate last year had 164 plurality. At Biddeford the Republicans gained largely. At Augusta they carried the city and every ward, electing the mayor by 350. At Belfast they had 8 majority on the mayor, and carried the two boards. In New York the gains are as noticeable. Rochester was carried for the Republicans by 2,504 majority, a gain of 2,021. Up to this writing large gains have been made in the elections for county supervisors. In the town meetings for the first week in March there were 24 more Republican supervisors elected than was the case last year. At the second week's meeting, there were 62 more chosen. The total Republican gains were 88; the Democrats, however, gained 11, and the net Republican gain was, therefore, 77.

STATE CONVENTIONS.

...A State Republican Convention was held in Indianapolis on the 22d of February. The State ticket nominated consists of the following persons: Governor, G. S. Orth; Lieutenant Governor, R. S. Robertson; for Judges, W. P. Edson, A. C. Vorhis, H. C. Newcomb, and J. F. Kibbey; Secretary of State, J. P. Watts; Auditor, Wm. M. Hess; Treasurer,

G. F. Herriott; Attorney General, J. W. Gordon; Reporter and Clerk of Supreme Court, L. D. Miller and C. G. Schall; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Professor O. H. Smith.

After recounting the record of the party, resolutions adopted declare: 1. That the Republicans of Indiana will remain faithful to the National Republican party. 2. Will not recognize the right of any State to interfere in the execution of national laws. 3. Holds the Government of the United States a nation, not a mere confederation of States. 4. National and State governments independent within their own spheres. 5. Willing and anxious to restore relations between the North and South; not willing to forgive the unrepentant, and not willing to place those who fought against the Union on equality with those who fought for it. 6. Preference to Union soldiers for office as against amnestied Confederates. 7. Believes the conduct of the civil service should recognize qualifications and integrity, not party service. 8. All men equal. 9. Insists upon religious freedom and entire separation of church and State. 10. The revenue system should be so regulated as to promote harmony between labor and capital. 11. Taxes should be heaviest on luxuries. 12. Repeal of the specie resumption act. 13. Maintenance of the present system of currency. 14. Applauds the financial policy of the Republican party. 15. Opposes payment of the Confederate debt or Confederate losses. 16. Demands economy in the administration of the State and national governments. 17. Demands faithful administration of the school laws. 18. No laws in opposition to the wish of the majority. 19. Insists on bounties and pensions for soldiers of the rebellion. 20. Approves Grant's administration. 21. Presents Senator Morton for the Republican nomination.

...The Indiana Democratic Convention has been called for the 19th of April. The following call has been issued:

1. Correct constitutional principles in the administration of public affairs, be they either national, State, or local. 2. The most frugal and rigid economy in all departments of Government. 3. The punishment of crimes and criminals of high or low degree; the impartial enforcement of the law upon all, with favor to none. 4. The protection of the labor and industrial interests of the country from the encroachments of monopolies of any and all characters. 5. The largest liberty to the individual citizen consistent with a just and vigorous administration of the laws. 6. A currency sufficient to meet the demands of trade, and which shall be alike receivable by all classes of people. 7. Equal taxation of property with just discrimination. 8. The repeal of the resumption act passed by a Republican Congress, in order that the business and commercial interests may recover their vigor and a new stimulus be given the industries and enterprise of the country. 9. The freedom of conscience in all matters of religion. No connection between church and State. 10. The punishment of malfeasance and corruption in office, without partiality or favor. 11. The nomination of none but honest and competent men for office. 12. The maintenance of our present admirable public school system, the outgrowth of the Democratic party's foresight and wisdom.

...The Wisconsin Republicans at their State Convention elected the following delegates at large to Cincinnati: Philetus Sawyer, David Atwood, Mark Douglass, and James H. Howe. The resolutions adopted promise to promote friendly feeling and harmony throughout the country; to support measures to secure the constitutional rights of all persons, including the exercise of the franchise, without intimidation or fraud. They approve of the vigorous efforts to punish official dishonesty and frauds on the revenue; declare it unwise for the Chief Magistrate to hold office beyond two terms, and accept President Grant's declaration in harmony with this principle as another claim to our veneration and gratitude; oppose impairing the credit of the nation by depreciating any of its obligations; declare that the currency of the country should, as soon as consistent with business interests and safety, be made equal to gold, and until that time should continue as a legal tender; hold that the common schools should be maintained absolutely free from sectarian contact, and finally declare that in celebrating the Centennial of this Republic it should be remembered that we are indebted not only to its founders, but to its defenders. The Congressional districts reported their delegates and electors and their action was ratified.

Mr. Blaine's name was heartily indorsed for the Presidential nomination, though no instructions were given.

... The Prohibitionists in Rhode Island have put in nomination for Governor, Albert C. Howard; Lieutenant Governor, Alfred B. Chadsey; Secretary of State, Joshua M. Ad-deman; Attorney General, Warren R. Pierce; General Treasurer, A. D. Vose.

... The Connecticut Republicans in convention have placed the following ticket before the people: For Governor, H. C. Robinson; Lieutenant Governor, F. J. Kingsbury; Secretary of State, F. A. Walker; Treasurer, Jeremiah Olney; Comptroller, Eli Curtis.

Its platform expressed fidelity to the party, denounced sectional rule, indorsed the administration, denounced corruption, and urged the punishment of offenders. On financial matters the platform states that "the greenbacks were issued under the pressure of a temporary necessity to support the National Government against treason and rebellion, and that the party is pledged to redeem them and make them as good as gold to the holder, that no stain may rest in history upon any one of the patriotic efforts of the loyal people during the war."

Further, that "the welfare of the country demands that necessary legislation be passed to carry the resumption act into effect at the time specified, either by funding the greenbacks in long bonds at the lowest practicable interest, or by using any available means to pay and cancel them."

... The Democratic nominations are as follows: For Governor, Charles R. Ingersoll; Lieutenant Governor, George G. Hill; Secretary of State, Marvin H. Sanger; Treasurer, William E. Raymond; Comptroller, Albert R. Goodrich.

The platform denounces military usurpation, a corrupt civil service, eulogizes the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives for reducing expenditures, &c., declares that public credit must be maintained, demands that public lands should be preserved for the settlers, denounces the resumption act as a Republican sham, and urges Congress to substitute for it a well-defined and practical legislation tending to an accumulation of coin as a basis for resumption or funding and cancellation of a portion of the greenback circulation in a convertible bond bearing a low rate of interest. The sixth resolution set forth the doctrine of specie basis, but quibbles in the following way: "It is therefore the duty of Congress to adopt such measures as shall lead to an early resumption of specie payments, while guarding its acts by that prudence which the interests of commercial, manufacturing, and industrial pursuits imperatively demand."

A fourth ticket, the third being that of the temperance party, has been nominated by a greenback convention held at Meriden. The platform adopted demands the repeal of the resumption act, and advocates a system by which currency would automatically regulate and limit itself. This is to be accomplished by the familiar plan of retiring national bank notes and making the currency exclusively a national issue, interconvertible at par with coin in bonds bearing low interest, the currency only to be issued when paid for, and neither Congress nor banks having any control over the amount issued.

The following ticket was nominated: Governor, Charles Atwater; Lieutenant Governor, Francis Gillette; Secretary of State, Lucien V. Pinney; Treasurer, Loren F. Judd; Comptroller, John A. Peck.

...The Ohio Prohibitionists in convention, at Columbus, February 22, nominated the following state ticket: Secretary of State, E. S. Chapman; Judge of the Supreme Court, D. W. Gage; Member of the Board of Public Works, Ferdinand Schumacher; Controller, J. C. Murdock; School Commissioner, George K. Jenkins. About one hundred delegates were present, and resolutions usual to such bodies were adopted.

...An interesting convention was held at New Orleans on the 1st of March, and following days, to consider what should be done to promote immigration to the South and West. Delegates were present from Louisiana, Texas, Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, Arkansas, Tennessee, Kentucky, Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Kansas, and Florida. The subjects considered were the best means of promoting immigration to the States of the Mississippi valley; the establishment at the port of New Orleans of an immigration bureau and depot in the interests of the States included in the call; the superior economy of the Mississippi river route for the immigrant to the interior States; the legislation needed by the different States in aid of the enterprise.

EXECUTIVE AND DEPARTMENT DOINGS.

THE EXECUTIVE.

THE REORGANIZATION AT THE WHITE HOUSE.

The position of officials at the White House may be authoritatively stated as follows: General Babcock, who never drew salary as a secretary, but drew it as an engineer officer, returns to duty, and Colonel Fred. Grant is assigned to his place. General Babcock's retirement did not create a vacancy, nor does Colonel Grant's selection create a new position. Both draw army pay. Levi P. Luckey held the office known to law as private secretary to the President. He takes A. S. H. White's place at the Interior Department, and Ulysses Grant, Jr., takes Mr. Luckey's place. Mr. C. C. Sniffin holds the same position he has always held, as assistant private secretary.

STATE DEPARTMENT.

PORTUGAL AT THE CENTENNIAL.

Information has been received from a reliable quarter that the sum of $33,000 has been requested by the Portuguese Government in the Cortes for the purpose of rendering the Portuguese exhibition as attractive and complete as possible. This sum is intended for two sections in particular, namely, the agricultural and the industrial, which two sections appear to have attracted the greater part of the attention of Portugal. According to a telegraphic dispatch the goods are nearly ready to be embarked on board a steam transport to be conveyed to Philadelphia. A pavilion is to be erected on the Exhibition grounds to serve as a bureau for the Portuguese commission. The display of wines, from present indications, will undoubtedly deserve the particular attention of those concerned in the wine trade.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

THE PUBLIC DEBT—MONTHLY STATEMENT.

The recapitulation of the statement of the public debt of the United States for the month of February, 1876, just issued, is as follows:

Debt bearing interest in coin:
Bonds at 6 per cent...... $984,999,650 00
Bonds at 5 per cent...... 697,884,750 00
$1,682,884,400 00

Debt bearing interest in lawful money:
Navy pension fund at 3 per cent, $14,000,000 00

Debt on which interest has ceased since maturity..... $18,182,080 26

Debt bearing no interest:
 Old demand and legal-tender
 notes..... $371,011,844 50
 Certificates of deposit..... 38,045,000 00
 Fractional currency..... 45,120,132 47
 Coin certificates..... 32,915,000 00
$487,091,976 97

Total debt.....$2,202,158,457 22

Interest..... $30,412,026 47

Total debt, principal and interest.....$2,232,570,483 70

Cash in Treasury:

Coin..... $70,035,772 73
 Currency..... 9,529,404 17
 Special deposit held for redemption of certificates of deposit
 as provided by law..... 38,045,000 00
$117,610,176 90

Debt, less cash in the Treasury
 March 1, 1876.....$2,114,960,306 80

Debt, less cash in the Treasury
 February 1, 1876..... 2,118,233,039 80

Decrease of debt during the past month..... $3,272,733 00

Decrease of debt since June 30, 1875 $13,728,419 52

Bonds issued to the Pacific railway companies, interest payable in lawful money—Principal outstanding, $64,623,512; interest accrued and not yet paid, $646,235.12; interest paid by the United States, $30,141,513.06; interest repaid by transportation of mails, &c., $6,724,317.
 92; balance of interest paid by the United States, $23,417,195.14.

CASH IN THE TREASURY.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 8, 1876.

SIR: In reply to the resolution of the House of Representatives of January 31,
 1876, requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish a detailed statement showing the amount of actual cash on hand in the Treasury, several depositories, and mints of the United States at the close of business on the 25th day of January, 1876, I have the honor to inform you that there were held at that time at the offices mentioned cash assets as follows:

Minor coins..... $74,769 17
 Fractional currency..... 8,755,655 44
 National bank notes..... 5,123,730 41

Legal tender notes held on special deposit for the payment of—

1. Certificates of deposit issued under sections 5193 and 5194
 Revised Statutes
 United States..... $38,145,000 00

2. Redemption notes
 of national banks failed 907,756 65

3. Redemption notes
 of national banks in liquidation..... 4,918,001 80

4. Redemption notes
 of national banks
 for reducing circulation 15,784,998 00

59,750,756 75

Other legal-tender notes..... 17,608,684 26

Gold coin..... 44,659,128 24

Gold bullion..... 10,254,409 59

Silver coin..... 11,202,258 60

Silver bullion..... 4,146,932 67

Gold notes and certificates..... 8,787,761 00

Coupons 7,007,325 56

Called bonds and interest thereon. 11,311,696 65

Checks, funded loan of 1881..... 63,543 68

Registered interest..... 592,508 50

Exchange drafts..... 350,500 00

One and two years' notes..... 5,837 33

Redeemed certificates..... 70,000 00

Vouchers—Speaker's certificates. 156,475 01

Metal-fund in mint, (currency)... 50,000 00

Unavailable, (see Finance Report, 1875, page

404:)
 New Orleans..... $680,891 53

New York..... 87,206 70

Philadelphia..... 882 50

Washington, D. C..... 47,097 65

816,078 33

In all..... 190,778,043 24

This amount does not include any money in transit, nor is the amount of Treasury drafts outstanding at that time taken into consideration.

In addition to this amount there was also an amount of public moneys in national bank depositories; but as returns thereof are made at the close of each week, the amount of such moneys at the time mentioned in the resolution can be stated only by delaying this reply for a special report from all the depository banks of the public moneys on hand at that time.

At the close of business on the 22d ultimo, three days prior to the time mentioned in the resolution, the bank depositories held of such moneys $10,140,611.61, which information it is thought will answer the purpose of the resolution.

As the legal-tender notes received for the redemption of national-bank notes do not belong to the United States, of course their amount is not in any way embraced in the monthly debt statement of this Department.

Very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW,

Secretary.

Hon. M. C. KERR,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PAPER MONEY ISSUED AND OUTSTANDING JANUARY 1, 1876.

Fractional currency.....	$44,147,072
Old demand notes.....	69,642
Legal-tender notes.....	371,827,220
National bank notes.....	346,479,756

Total..... 762,523,690

Less cash in the Treasury January 25, 1876—

Legal tender notes.....$77,359,441

Of which there was held for U. S. certificates of deposit in the national banks December 17, 1875..... 31,005,000

46,354,441

Fractional currency..... 8,755,655

National bank notes..... 5,123,730—$60,383,620

Less cash in national banks December 17, 1875—

Legal tender notes.....$70,725,077

Fractional currency..... 2,901,023

U. S. certificates of deposit..... 31,005,000

National bank notes..... 17,168,190—121,797,290

Less cash in other banks—

State banks.....$26,740,215

Savings banks... 17,858,182

Trusts companies..... 3,833,012—48,431,409

Total amount to be deducted for cash in the Treasury and in banks..... $230,462,525

Leaving amount of paper currency in circulation.....$532,061,165

BONDS HELD TO SECURE NATIONAL BANK CIRCULATION.

The Treasury now holds $356,295,750 in bonds to secure national bank circulation, and $18,721,500 to secure public deposits; United States bonds deposited for circulation for the week ending Saturday, March 4, was $79,000; United States bonds held for circulation withdrawn for the week ending Saturday, March 4, was $781,900, making a decrease in the outstanding circulation of over stand-

$2,099,- received to, $1,- 48,176.-
month to $, $101,-

BANK REPORTS CALLED FOR.

The Comptroller of the Currency has called upon the national banks for reports showing their condition at the close of business on Friday, the 10th day of March. The Comptroller has also declared a dividend of 10 per cent. in favor of the Charlottesville (Virginia) National Bank and 30 per cent. in favor of the creditors of Gibson County National Bank, Princeton, Indiana, dividends payable as soon as the necessary schedules are prepared.

EXPORTS OF PROVISIONS FOR THE MONTH OF FEBRUARY.

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics furnishes a statement of the exports of provisions for the month of February, from which it appears the total exports from Baltimore were $289,000; Boston, $1,248,982; Philadelphia, $1,025,930; New York, $5,241,000, and New Orleans, $43,073.

TRADE WITH THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The following statement of the trade between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands during the calendar year 1875 is furnished by the chief of the Bureau of Statistics. Imports free of duty, $163,747; dutiable, $1,224,503; total, $1,388,250. Among the principal dutiable articles were the following: Sugar—pounds, 21,609,556; $1,113,237. Rice—pounds, 1,768,852; $66,365. Raw wool—pounds, 109,359; $11,861. Value of domestic exports, $739,606; foreign, $43,955; total, 783,561.

GENERAL POST OFFICE.

MONEY ORDERS TO CANADA.

An arrangement has been made by the Post Office Department with the Dominion Government by which the system recently inaugurated for the exchange of money orders between the United States and Canada is extended to Newfoundland.

When a Republican is tried before a St. Louis jury and found "not guilty," it is about time that the Democratic press of the country take back some of the malignant expressions which tended to prejudice the case. If General Babcock had been found guilty the opponents of the administration would have devoted columns to the justice of the verdict. How many will have the manhood to devote a single paragraph to the justice of his acquittal?

HERE IT IS! JUST WHAT YOU WANT!

IT HAS BEEN ADOPTED BY THE PENSION BUREAU, SECOND AUDITOR, THIRD AUDITOR, AND SECOND COMPTROLLER, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

AN ALPHABETICAL LIST

OF THE

Battles of the War of the Rebellion, WITH DATES,

COMPILED FROM THE

OFFICIAL RECORDS

OF THE OFFICES OF THE

Adjutant-General and the Surgeon-General, U. S. A.

Giving the number killed, wounded, and missing in each of the important battles; Union troops engaged; names of the Generals killed and wounded in both armies. Also the total number of enlistments, number discharged, number wounded, number missing, number of deaths, number killed in battle number of graves. Number of troops in the Mexican War, 1846-1848, number killed and wounded, number died of wounds. An Alphabetical list of the Revolutionary battles, with dates: also the number killed and wounded in each battle. With a complete Synopsis of

THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS.

Price 50 Cents - Liberal reduction will be made to Dealers.

Address

N. A. STRAIT,

Box 460, WASHINGTON, D. C.

REFERENCES.—Hon. H. M. Atkinson, Commissioner of Pensions; Hon. H. B. Strait, M.C. 2d Minn. Dist.; Samuel Ramsey, Esq., Chief Clerk Surgeon-General's Office, U. S. A.; Darling & Soule, Publishers and Proprietors of the U. S. Record and Gazette, Washington, D. C.

SAVE MONEY

UNITED STATES OFFICIAL POSTAL GUIDE.

By sending $4.75 for any $4.00 Magazine and THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE, (regular price $6.00,) or $5.75 for the Magazine and THE SEMI-WEEKLY TRIBUNE, (regular price $2.00.) Address

THE TRIBUNE, New York.

$77

A WEEK guaranteed to Male and Female Agents in their locality. Costs NOTHING to try it. Particulars free. P. O. VICKERY & CO., Augusta Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1.00 free. STINSON, & CO., Portland, Maine.

SEND 25 cents to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3,000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

$12 a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

Revised and Published Quarterly by Authority of the Post-Office
Department.

NO. 4 FOR OCTOBER NOW READY,

CONTAINING

TWO ALPHABETICAL LISTS of all the Post Offices in the United States.

LISTS OF MONEY ORDER and Letter Carrier Offices.

FULL DIRECTIONS about Money Orders and Registered Letters.

RATES of Foreign and Domestic Postage.

HOURS OF ARRIVAL AND CLOSING of Mails in all the Principal Cities.

DISTANCES by shortest Mail Routes between the Principal Cities.

RULINGS of the Post-Office Department during the last quarter, including

THE NEW LAW about postage on Third Class Matter, and

All the information required by those who use the Mails.

TERMS: Single copies, 50 cents; for sale at the News Stands and Book Stores. Subscriptions, $1.50 a year, received at any Post-Office, or on application to the publishers.

H. O. HOUGHTON AND COMPANY,
Boston.

HURD AND HOUGHTON, New York.

1876.

Vol. 6.

PREMIUMS.

Vol. 6.

THE REPUBLIC MAGAZINE,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Terms - - - - $2 Per Year, in Advance.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A

CLUB OF TEN SUBSCRIBERS FOR THE CURRENT YEAR AND $20,

The publishers will forward, free of cost and postage,

A Complete Set—Three Volumes—of the Republic,

HANDSOMELY BOUND, WITH INDEX.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A

CLUB OF FIFTEEN SUBSCRIBERS AND $30,

A Complete Set—First Four Volumes—of the Republic.

TO THE PERSON SENDING

THE LARGEST CLUB IN ANY MONTH,

BEING MORE THAN FIFTEEN,

A COMPLETE SET, INCLUDING THE FIFTH VOLUME,

Which closes with the December number of 1875, all neatly bound, with index, and free of cost or postage.

ford an opportunity to acquire, with little xtant on the science of government.

prospectus will, on request, be sent free to s.

PUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

3
R419

SINGLE COPIES, 25 CENTS.

THE REPUBLIC:

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

DEVOTED TO

THE DISSEMINATION OF POLITICAL INFORMATION.

Vol. VI.—No. 6.

JUNE, 1876.

Whole No. 40.

Contents:

	PAGE
The Work of the Forty-fourth Congress	337
State Elections Preceding the Presidential Election of 1876.....	339
Indiana's War Governor.....	343
United States Patent Office	348
Increase of Wealth in England.....	351
Address to German Republicans and the German Press.....	352
Relations of the State to Religion and the Public Schools	353
The Truth of History and the Horrors of Andersonville	359
Southern Judicial Ku-Kluxism.....	362
Congressional Investigations.....	370
The Official Clerical Work in the Treasury Department.....	374
The Poverty of the South	377
Special Legislation in England	378
Domestic Commerce	379
Why not Nominate Adams?	386
Review of the Month.....	389
Hypocritical Clamor.....	396
Washington's Vetoes	397
Municipal and Town Elections.....	398
The Right of Taxation and the Railroads.....	399
Civil Liberty.....	400

PUBLISHED BY

THE REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

$2 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

July, 1876.

PROSPECTUS.

Vol. 7.

THE REPUBLIC,

A Political Science Monthly Magazine.

THE REPUBLIC begins its seventh volume with the July number.

Its publishers are pleased to announce that it has grown steadily in public favor and that it is regarded by all good citizens who have consulted its pages as a power for good throughout the land.

Its past course—consistent, fearless, patriotic—is the index of its future. It will defend the right, denounce the wrong, and endeavor to point out, at all times, the true path for all who love their country to follow.

A sentinel upon the watch-tower of freedom, it will be found at its post of duty to give the word of warning, and sound the alarm should any danger threaten the peace of the Nation.

It will favor the maintenance, by all legitimate means, of free schools, devoid of sectarian influences, and will oppose any attempt to divide the school funds, believing that such division, whether made in the interest of the Catholic Church or its opponents, will ultimately destroy the system of free education, and that civil and religious toleration on which our institutions rest.

It will do all within its power to develop true friendship between the citizens of the North and the South, and for this purpose will advocate the recognition of justice and equality before the law as the only means to secure lasting friendship and its two allies, peace and security.

The Presidential contest of 1876 will be one of the most important in our history. On its issue depends the future policy of the Government. The vital question to be answered by the people is, "Shall the party that proved faithless in war be trusted in peace, and those who saved the country be set aside for those who endeavored to destroy it?"

On this question THE REPUBLIC will take its position at the head of the loyal column, and will do its best to keep the old flag flying until the voice of the people shall announce that Republicanism—the synonym of justice and liberty—has again triumphed over the enemies of good government.

THE REPUBLIC calls upon its friends to aid it in the great work of the present and future. It desires each subscriber to send in at least one additional name to help swell its ranks, and thus add to its power and activity. Is it asking too much—in consideration of the valuable material furnished the cause—to ask that our friends everywhere exert themselves to secure for THE REPUBLIC as many new subscribers as possible?

To the Republican press of the country the magazine sends greeting and cheer. The signs of the times indicate a glorious victory in November. Let no effort be relaxed to make it complete and effective. Insist upon thorough organization, a personal canvass of all doubtful or close districts, the distribution of well-considered documents, and the practice of that vigilance which alone can secure success. If our brethren of the press will but do their duty as faithfully as in the past, victory will be certain.

For their generous confidence and warm support the publishers of THE REPUBLIC return thanks, and hope in the future, as in the past, to deserve by well-doing the good-will so often expressed.

TERMS:

THE REPUBLIC is a magazine of sixty-four pages, published monthly, at $2 a year, or six copies for $10. The postage, in all cases, will be paid by the publishers. A few copies of the back volumes may yet be obtained, either bound or in numbers. Remittances should be made by postal money-order or registered letter.

Address,

REPUBLIC PUBLISHERS

Washington, D. C.

THE REPUBLIC.

Devoted to the Dissemination of Political Information.

VOL. VI.

WASHINGTON, D. C., JUNE, 1876.

No. 6.

THE WORK OF THE FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

INVESTIGATIONS.

Another month (May 15th) has slipped away and Congress is sticking in the morass. The Democratic House has been largely occupied with the sixty or seventy investigations, more or less prominent, which were set on foot some months ago, and while very little that is new or exciting has transpired, the country has been wearied with charges and counter charges, with accusations and personal explanations without end. When the reports will be made up and submitted to the House is uncertain. Nor can it be anticipated what the tenor of them will be save from the daily rumors which float over the country. It does not yet appear who will be exonerated and who will be disgraced. The principal object seems to be to kill off all the Presidential aspirants and to make as much political capital for the approaching campaign as possible. The charges against Blaine, Bristow, and Morton have been persistently pressed, and when exploded in one direction at once trumped up in another, on the principle that "a lie well stuck to is as good as the truth." The spirit of investigation which has reached the leading departments of the Government, the Emma Mine scandal, the Government Printing Office, the Insane Asylum, and the President's House, and others too numerous to mention, has yet to reach out to a number of other institutions here and elsewhere not yet overhauled. Meantime the Democratic Doorkeeper of the House seems to be getting into hot water to a very fearful extent, and some of the prominent Democratic members who commenced these investigations with evident gusto have gradually subsided into a very quiescent state.

THE CASE OF KILBOURN.

The courts have finally triumphed over Congress on the great question of the writ of habeas corpus, and Mr. Kilbourn has been released from the custody of the House and turned over to the jurisdiction of the court. He has given bail for his appearance on his trial, having been indicted under the statute for a refusal to have his private books and papers ransacked to gratify the idle curiosity of a mousing Congressional committee. After the great writ of American liberty had triumphed Mr. Kilbourn wrote a very respectful letter to the House offering to show his books to the committee in his own office, and to submit them to any examination which they might choose to make, but the letter was treated with contempt and laid upon the table. It is not precisely known what tale of corruption the committee on the real estate pool will report to the House.

THE IMPEACHMENT.

The impeachment of General Belknap drags its slow length along. Several sessions have been spent in a skirmish between managers and counsel for advantages coveted on both sides, and in the discussion of the question of jurisdiction, which is the question pending before the Senate at the present date, (May 15th, Monday.) Should the Senate decide that it has no jurisdiction the decision will end the case. Should they decide that they have jurisdiction the trial will be vigorously pressed to a conclusion of acquittal or of guilt. It is a very grave constitutional question, and which ever way it goes will furnish a precedent for all time to come.

THE APPROPRIATIONS.

Not a single bill of the dozen yet to be acted on has become a law. It is wholly problematical when they will be finished. Whatever work has been done upon them, so far as the public is concerned, is yet entirely in the clouds. All that is known is, that two or three of the most important have been discussed for many days, and that the content between parsimony and liberality in conducting the affairs of the Government is raging in full fury. In this discussion the paramount influence is political rather than patriotic. To cripple the functions of the Government and to pour distress on many innocent persons appears to be but a minor consideration when compared with the prospect of political success and the seizure of the whole federal power of the country.

TWO GREAT SPEECHES.

During the last month Senator Sargent, on the perils of Chinese emigration, and Senator Jones, of Nevada, on the restoration of silver coin, delivered two of the most elaborate and exhaustive speeches that have ever been listened to in the halls of Congress. That of Senator Jones must become a treasure house of information on the whole subject of metal currency in all time to come. He has left but little to be said on the subject, so far as facts and statistics are concerned. He has traced the history of metal currency from old Egypt and the days of Solomon down to the present time, and has shown conclusively the fundamental connection between the use of such currency and the public prosperity of any and every nation. It is a powerful and convincing argument for as speedy a return to specie payments as it is possible to conceive.

EXCEPTIONAL VISITORS.

The approaching opening of the Centennial Exposition has drawn to the capital the vanguard of that army of strangers who will during the present season pour into the country from all parts of the world. On Monday, May 22, the Brazilian Emperor, Dom Pedro, was a visitor to the halls of Congress and surrounded by witnesses with absorbed attention the proceedings in the impeachment trial then going on. It was a notable occasion, and the reflections arising from the scene must have been mingled with surprise in the imperial mind. One thing is clear: Providence does not permit to any people a scene of unalloyed prosperity, success, and honor. The lights and shades of our glory and our shame chase each other across the national firmament.

THE CENTENNIAL.

The great event of the past month, which in common with the whole world has absorbed the attention of Congress, is the ceremony of the opening of the Centennial Exposition on Wednesday, May 10, 1876, at Philadelphia. The members and officials of Congress were among the invited guests, and special trains were provided for conveying them to the grounds. An adjournment from Tuesday to Friday was the consequence. The concourse of people assembled on the great day is variously estimated at from 150,000 to 200,000. The city was crowded with visitors, and the streets profusely decorated with banners and ensigns of every conceivable form, size, and color. The Centennial buildings are on the most magnificent scale, and filled with the products of every considerable nation of the world. The opening ceremonies were simple and grand beyond expression. The music from an orchestra of instruments accompanied by a thousand voices was a most wondrous feature. As the great volume of sound rose up and floated away on the air over the vast multitude the scene was inspiring and sublime beyond description. It would be idle to attempt any detailed account of the arrangements already made for this remarkable undertaking, or of the results which are to flow from it to the remotest ends of the earth. That such an exhibition can be made is proof of the transcendent progress of the world, for in no former age of human history would it have been possible. None of the preceding expositions could compare with this in variety and extent. This is freely admitted on all sides. That our centennial year should be thus signalized is a ground of just pride to every patriot, philanthropist, and Christian.

The two houses of Congress having witnessed the mighty spectacle returned and resumed their labors on Friday, the 12th of May. The tide of time and the rush of events stop for no man, and the interest which was so recently centered upon the city where our Declaration of Independence was signed a hundred years ago is already divided and turned to approaching events, which will decide the political contest on which we are about to enter. Meanwhile the work of Congress which must be done before the session closes is yet hanging, and the business of legislation goes tardily onward. To manage the affairs of so great a government has become simply a herculean task. Who can venture to predict the condition of the country when another hundred years shall have rolled away. Let us hope the best things, and as faithful and true citizens endeavor to submit our splendid heritage unimpaired.

STATE ELECTIONS PRECEDING THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION OF 1876.

Political interest inevitably concentrates itself at the opening of a Presidential campaign on the States which hold during the year regular elections prior to the Presidential election itself. It is not intended to speculate on the chances of any particular candidate or of parties, but to present the facts on which political calculations can properly be made, and then to urge, by reasonable argument and as conclusive citation and illustration as possible, what action may be necessary, or what result may properly be claimed, as helpful or probable in the progress of the principles and policy herein defended and supported. To that end the tables that follow will be of value. It cannot be denied that during the last three years there has been a series of marked rebuffs administered to the party in power. It is not essential to deny that such rebuffs have been the result of dissatisfaction on the part of Republicans themselves. But it is necessary, in order that there may be a right comprehension of the present situation, to call attention to the undeniable fact that a very large proportion of the decreased Republican vote is due to two causes—the indifference always felt in State elections by a very large body of citizens, and the increase in civic absenteeism which has been produced by the reaction inevitable after twelve years and more of continuous public excitement. This latter is a growing evil, and with the increasing activity and importance of our complex business and professional interests, threatens to become more serious. A very instructive review can be obtained by a comparison of the voting population in each State as reported by the United States census of 1870, the presidential vote of 1872, and the State votes of 1874-'5-'6. The State elections indicated will show the rising and falling of the feeling to which reference is made.

The receding of this feeling is very apparent. Of the twenty-two elections held since August, 1875, thirteen of them were triumphantly carried by the Republicans. Nine are recorded in the Democratic column. Of these, five, at least, California, Connecticut, New York, Oregon, and Mississippi, ought to be carried for the nominees presented by the National Republican Convention at Cincinnati. The Empire State elected a Republican legislature last year, and the town elections during the present year have shown a remarkable Republican activity, resulting in a general victory. The elections for supervisors are watched with very great care, as indicating the drift of public opinion on the issues of an impending national campaign. Connecticut can be carried by the Republican party with proper local organization and active effort. In California the Republicans united ought to be masters of the situation. In Mississippi there is a legitimate Republican majority of at least 30,000. The shotgun policy pursued therein by the Democratic White League may prevent this majority from voting; but at any rate an honest effort must be made to vote, and then legislation may be had hereafter to cure with the appropriate punishment such crimes. It must be so framed that even a technical Supreme Court, that divideth on the letter in order to kill the spirit, may not be able to decide it unconstitutional.

Since the Presidential election of 1872, forty-six regular elections have been held. Of these the following table shows that the Democracy or opposition have carried twenty-five, and the Republicans twenty-one. So it appears that in 1873 and '74, the opposition carried fifteen States and the Republicans but eight; while in 1875, and up to April of the current year, (1876,) the Republicans carried thirteen and the Democracy nine; a majority of the latter being fairly, as for the Presidential fight, to be classified among the "doubtful" States, at least.

Besides the regular elections, special polls have been had in the States of Arkansas, (October, 1874,) California, (October, 1875,) Connecticut, (October, 1875,) Missouri, (November, 1875,) and Colorado, (October, 1875.) Of these only that of California was for the election of a State officer. It resulted in a Republican triumph. In Arkansas and Missouri the ballot was for the rejection or ratification of new State constitutions. The Democracy by whom they were framed triumphed at the polls. The vote in each State was very light. The Connecticut vote ratified constitutional amendments framed by a Republican legislature. Nebraska ratified a new State constitution. New Jersey and Kansas approved several amendments, and North Carolina elected a constitutional convention. Each of these results were favorable to the Republican party. North Carolina and Texas are placed in the following table, the former as Democratic. The latter elected State officers and ratified the Bourbon constitution recently framed. It appears, therefore, that out of the fifty-one general and special elections held since that for President in 1872, twenty-seven were carried by the Democracy and twenty-four by the Republicans.

The following statement exhibits at a glance these facts:

Table showing the party results at the several elections, regular, Congressional, or special; held since the Presidential election of 1872.

States.	Republican.		Democratic.		Last Presidential elec'n.
	No.	Years.	No.	Years.	R.	D.
Alabama.....	1	1874-'5	1
Arkansas....	2	1874	2
California...	3	1873-'5	3
Connecticut...	4	1873-'4-'5	4
Delaware....	5	1874	1
Florida.....	1	1874	5
Georgia.....	6	1874	2
Illinois.....	2	1874	6
Indiana.....	7	1874	7
Iowa.....	3	1873-'4-'5	8
Kansas.....	4	1874	9
Kentucky....	8	1874-'5	3
Louisiana...	5	1874	10
Maine.....	6	1873-'4-'5	11
Maryland....	9	1873-'4-'5	4
Massachu'ts	7	1873-'5	10	1874	12
Michigan....	8	1874-'5	13
Minnesota..	9	1873-'4-'5	14
Mississippi..	10	1873	11	1875	15
Missouri....	12	1874	5
Nebraska....	11	1874-'5	16
N. Hamps're	12	1873-'5	13	1874	17
Nevada.....	13	1874	14	1874	18
New York...	15	1873-'4-'5	19
New Jersey..	14	1875	16	1874	20
N. Carolina..	15	1875	17	1874	21
Ohio.....	16	1875	18	1873-'4	22
Oregon.....	19	1873-'4-'5	23
Pennsylv'a	17	1873-'5	20	1874	24
R. Island....	18	1873-'4-'5	25
S. Carolina..	19	1874	26
Tennessee..	21	1874	6
Texas.....	22	1873-'6	7
Vermont....	20	1874	27
Virginia....	23	1873	28
W. Virginia..	24	1874	29
Wisconsin..	21	1875	25	1873-'4	30
Special Elections.
Arkansas....	26	Oct. 1874
California...	22	Oct. 1875
Connecticut	23	Nov. 1875
Missouri....	27	Nov. 1875
Colorado....	24	Oct. 1875

It will be observed that in the States of Massachusetts, Mississippi, New Jersey, North Carolina, Nevada, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin, that the parties have alternated in triumphs, the latest, however, being with the Republicans. This indicates the re-aroused interest which the Presidential year brings with it, and shows also that merely local disaffections are not always or often to be regarded as evidences of permanent change in national politics. In Nevada the Republicans carried the Representative to Congress and the Democrats the Governor. In California, as in Wisconsin, the opposition success, though set down as Democratic, was in fast largely composed of disaffected Republicans—made so on railroad issues.

To complete the analysis the following will be of service. It will enable the reader to estimate the probabilities, and to reach reasonable conclusions :

Table showing electoral vote, that of the several parties, and the total vote in each State voting during the year 1876, prior to the Presidential election in November, in the same year.

States.	Electo- ral vote.	Republican.	Democratic.	Other votes.	Total vote.	Date of election.
Alabama.....	10	83,929	107,119	201,048	November, 1874.
California.....	6	31,922	61,509	20,753	113,683	September, 1875.
Connecticut.....	6	43,516	51,136	3,948	98,600	April, 1876.
Georgia.....	11	33,161	83,347	126,508	October, 1874.
.....	15	164,903	182,154	15,233	362,289	October, 1874.
.....	11	123,068	98,359	219,952	October, 1874.
.....	11	90,795	120,976	217,771	October, 1874.
.....	7	57,085	63,213	110,298
.....	3	31,228	15,091	46,317
.....	5	41,719	38,124	420	80,263
.....	10	84,181	98,217	182,398
.....	23	297,817	292,278	2,503	592,633
.....	8	9,106	9,378	19,681
.....	4	8,213	8,472	1,182	17,867
.....	5	36,563	13,258	6,277	56,097
.....	5	23,874	37,823	61,697
Texas*.....	8
Colorado†.....	3	October, 1876.
	145	1,276,418	1,170,484	60,970	2,513,872

*No official statement of the vote for this State is at hand. The election was a special one, called to ratify or reject the new constitution and elect State officers thereunder. The vote was not full, and the Democratic majority about 50,000.

†Colorado voted for delegates to a constitutional convention, and elected a Republican, majority 71.

In further elucidation of the situation the following is presented :

Table showing results of latest elections had in States that hold State elections prior to the general election in November, 1876, with the month of said election.

States.	Repub- lican.	Demo- cratic.	Next elec- tion, when—
Oregon.....	1	June.
Kentucky.....	2	August.
North Carolina.....	1	August.
Alabama.....	3	August.
Maine.....	2	September.
California.....	3	October.
Indiana.....	4	October.
Iowa.....	4	October.
Ohio.....	5	October.
Vermont.....	6	October.
Nebraska.....	7	October.
Georgia.....	5	October.
Colorado*.....	8

*This Territory has framed its State constitution, and will vote during the summer on its ratification and for State officers. It will then be admitted by proclamation. The Constitutional Convention was carried by the Republicans.

The total vote at the last Presidential election was 6,457,315. The total vote in the above table is very nearly two-fifths of the vote of 1872. By far the larger portion of the total recorded under the head of "other votes"—60,970—will naturally be added to the Republican vote on national questions. If there lingered any doubt of this at the beginning of the present year the conduct of the Confederate Democracy in the House of Representatives must have dispelled it long since. A brief analysis of this vote will illustrate this assertion. The "Independent" vote in California was entirely a local Republican disaffection. That of Indiana in 1874 was nearly of a similar character. The Connecticut vote is one-half at least affiliated, on national questions, with the Republican party. So also with the fragmentary temperance votes in Iowa, Ohio, and New Hampshire. The Rhode Island vote—6,277—is avowedly Republican in character. In Oregon the opposition votes—1,182—were cast for a Republican, the division being personal and local. If 50,000 be taken from this column and added to the Republican total it will not, by any means, be an over-statement. This, then, will make a total division between the parties, as per the latest polls had, in the States above tabulated, as follows :

Republican.....	1,326,418
Democratic.....	1,187,454
Being a Republican majority of.....	138,964

By the figures, as given in the table itself, it will be seen that the Republicans have an actual majority, as follows :

Total Republican vote.....	1,276,418
Total Democratic.....	1,176,484
Total other votes.....	60,970
	<hr/> 1,237,454

Republican majority 38,964

In truth the majority is really much larger. In North Carolina, for instance, the vote of 1875, upon the election of delegates to the constitutional convention, was much heavier than that of the State election of 1874, and resulted in a Republican majority of over 19,000. The Republican vote in Texas was also increased. As part of the res gestæ, the following table of votes cast for President in 1872, in the same States as have been embraced already, will be of value :

States.	Grant.	Greeley.	O'Conner.	Other votes.	Total vote.
Ala.....	90,272	79,444	169,716
Cal.	54,020	40,718	1,068	95,806
Conn....	50,638	45,880	204	206	96,928
Georgia	62,550	76,356	4,000	142,906
Indiana	186,147	163,632	1,417	351,196
Iowa ...	131,566	71,196	2,221	204,983
Ken.....	88,766	99,995	2,374	191,135
Maine..	61,422	29,087	90,509
Nebr'ka	18,329	7,812	26,141
N. H....	37,168	31,424	100	68,692
N. C. ...	94,304	69,474	163,778
Ohio....	281,852	244,321	1,163	2,100	529,436
Oregon..	11,819	7,730	572	20,121
R. I.....	13,665	5,329	18,994
Texas ..	47,406	66,500	2,580	116,486
Verm't.	41,481	10,927	593	53,001
W. Vir'a	32,315	29,451	600	62,366
	<hr/> 1,303,720	<hr/> 1,079,276	<hr/> 16,892	<hr/> 2,306	<hr/> 2,402,194

The foregoing table shows the relative difference of votes as cast in the elections held during 1874 and 1875, and in the spring elections of 1876, as compared with the totals of the Presidential party votes of 1872. The following summary presents an illustration of this :

Parties.	Totals of latest vote from 1874 on.	Total Pre-sidential vote 1872, by parties.	Opposition Increase over 1872.	Republican Decrease from 1872.
Republican.	1,276,418	1,303,720	27,302
Democratic.	1,176,484	1,096,168	80,316
Other votes.	60,970	2,306	58,664
	<hr/> 2,513,872	<hr/> 2,402,194	<hr/> 138,980	<hr/> 27,302

Total increase of opposition votes over that of 1872.....	138,980
Decrease of Republican vote from 1872..	<hr/> 27,302

Total increase of the latest votes over that of 1872.....	111,678
---	---------

The difference is slight as between the two totals, and if the 50,000 which legitimately belong to the Republican party on all national questions be taken from the 60,970 found in the column of latest votes, and they be added to the Republican vote, it will be found that the national party has not, for a Presidential race, lost a voter, but in reality shows an increase of at least 22,000. Taken for all in all, the prospects of the nominees of the Republican National Convention are quite encouraging.

MUD THROWING.—Political mud throwers are hard at work. No reputation is safe from their attacks. Should a saint appear on earth and these political buzzards suspect a leaning toward the Presidency, the saint would soon become a sinner if persistent lying could bring about the transformation. From the present indications the coming campaign, on the part of the Democrats, is to be no exception to the rule—mud throwing against the Republican party in lieu of legitimate argument. It has failed in the past ; it will fail in the future.

SLANDER.—The public man who tries to answer every slander set afloat against him will be kept as busy as a thin-skinned fisherman on a salt meadow in mosquito time. He may kill off a dozen tormentors, but a hundred will come to their funeral. Happy is the man who can sit unmoved in the presence of partisan malice, and feel that his record is all right, and that the confidence of the people in his integrity cannot be shaken by the idle breath of slander.

LUCKY LETTERS. — Anti-Tilden Democrats are trying to prove that the letter T will not win in the Presidential race. The indications are that all letters will be unlucky in the Democratic alphabet this year. The Centennial year has opened the eyes of the people. Patriotism is to be again called to the front, and this means a glorious Republican victory.

INDIANA'S WAR GOVERNOR.

The folly of the Confederate Democracy and their associates in Congress becomes every day more evident. Being themselves atheists and unbelievers, in regard to all political principles and acts which purport to be grounded on motives of human well-doing and the welfare of all the people, they cannot of course comprehend the character of the nation they now in part misrepresent. In their vain attempts to besmirch the good name of political opponents, and to drag down into the mire of corrupt motives and acts all the heroic services of the war period, they succeed only in re-invoking the sacred associations of that period and re-arousing the slumbering spirit of patriotism and devotion. They illustrate the Hebrew declaration that the "heathen rage and the wicked imagine a vain thing." Commencing with Hill's defense of Andersonville and the Confederate atrocities there, they have run the entire gamut of impolitic absurdities and outrages, until at last Representative Springer, of Illinois, in the vain attempt to become the champion slanderer of his party, evokes the manes of Indiana treason, and brings from the mouth and memory of Senator Oliver P. Morton the following trenchant statement of the conduct of Mr. Springer's friends.

Truly, the brevet Confederates like he of Illinois "work better than they know," in their haste to return to the vomit of that subserviency and sycophancy to the rebel South which has characterized the Northern and Western Democrats.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to read an article from the New York World of last Saturday, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the paper referred to, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

MORTON NEXT—ANOTHER PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE'S HONESTY IMPUGNED—ALLEGED MISAPPLICATION OF TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS.

[Special dispatch to the World.]

WASHINGTON April 28.

Several days ago a correspondent of the World was informed that there were important documents in the Second Comptroller's office of the Treasury which would reveal another Republican presidential candidate, Senator MORTON, in an unpromising light. The correspondence, whatever it might be, was between MORTON and one of the State agents in Indiana during the war, and is on file in the Department.

The facts of the case, as alleged, are these. In the Thirty-seventh Congress an act making an appropriation to pay the expenses of transporting and delivering arms and munitions of war to the loyal citizens of the States of which the inhabitants now are or hereafter may be in rebellion against the Government of the United States, and to provide for the expense of organizing them into companies, battalions, regiments, or otherwise, for their own protection against violence, insurrection, invasion, or rebellion, was passed July 31, 1861. Two million dollars were appropriated under this act. It will be observed that the title is very loosely drawn, and is susceptible of various constructions. Among the list of war expenditures in connection with the above is this item: "For supplying transportation and delivery of arms and munitions of war in States in rebellion against the Government of the United States, O. P. MORTON, Governor of Indiana, $250,000." Indiana was never in rebellion against the Government of the United States, and it was a query why MORTON should have had $250,000 when there was no purpose under the statute making the appropriation for which the money could have been legally expended.

It was brought to the attention of the correspondent that in the Indiana Legislature of 1861 some difficulty had occurred between the Democrats and the Republicans. The two parties were a tie in the senate and the Democrats had a majority in the house. The Republican senators broke the quorum to prevent some party legislation, and the time of the session slipped by until compelled to adjourn without the transaction of any business. No appropriations were made, not even for the expenses of running the State government. Everything seemed to be in danger of coming to a stand-still in Indiana, when MORTON made a trip to Washington, and upon his return to Indianapolis he opened the paymaster's office and began to pay the expenses of the State government. No one except MORTON's bosom friends knew where he got the money; but very few know to this day. The proper way to have obtained money to run the State machinery would have been to convene the Legislature for the purpose of passing appropriation bills. This the radical MORTON would not do, as the Legislature was Democratic. That MORTON obtained his money from the two million dollar appropriation above referred to is certain; that he misapplied $250,000 the correspondence in the Treasury Department will show. Three unsuccessful attempts have been made by members of Congress to obtain this correspondence. Secretary Bristow, perhaps with a desire to avoid doing anything that would injure a candidate in the presidential race, for which he is an aspirant, seems to be unwilling that it shall be made public. Upon the first request for the correspondence Mr. Bristow signified a wish that Mr. MORTON should know what was coming before any steps were taken in the case. The member prosecuting the search acquiesced, and was soon interviewed by MORTON, who was considerably excited, demanded to know if a public investigation into the affair was to be made, and said he should summon witnesses from Indiana to testify in his behalf. He did telegraph for a man by the name of Sturm, who arrived in this city to-day. Sturm was arsenal agent in the State during the war. Another attempt to obtain or at least examine the correspondence pertaining to the case will be made on Monday, and Secretary Bristow will do well to open every avenue that can place light on the transaction. It will be investigated by Mr. GLOVER's committee on the real-estate pool.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, the President of the United States in the spring of 1863 advanced to me $250,000 to enable me to carry forward military operations in the State of Indiana. Of this sum I expended $133,302.91 in the service of the State and with which I charged the State in my settlement with it, and the remaining $116,697.09 were not expended. This amount I returned to the Treasury of the United States, as is shown by the following voucher and receipt:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 11, 1865.

SIR: Yours of the 6th instant, inclosing a duplicate certificate of deposit issued by the First National Bank of Indianapolis, Indiana, in your favor, No. 360, date of the 6th instant, for $116,697.09, on account of moneys due and refunded to the United States, has been received.

I am, very respectfully,

GEO. HARRINGTON,
Assistant Secretary.

HON. O. P. MORTON,
Indianapolis, Indiana.

The $133,302.91 which I had expended on behalf of the State were paid back to the Government by giving the Government credit for that amount upon advances which had been made by the State in the conduct of the war, which advances were duly audited by the Treasury Department and allowed as just and valid claims against the Government in favor of the State. This settlement and final adjustment of the whole sum of $250,000 are shown by the following voucher and quietus from the office of the Second Auditor of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
SECOND AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
November 8, 1865.

SIR: The charge of $250,000 on the books of this office on account "supplying arms to loyal citizens in revolted States" has this day been closed on the books of this office, to wit, by a deposit by you of $116,697.09 and a transfer of $133,302.91 of funds from the books of the Third Auditor's office to your credit on the books of this office.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JNO. M. SIMS,
for Auditor.

His Excellency O. P. MORTON,
Governor of Indiana, Indianapolis, Indiana.

From these vouchers it will appear that the whole sum of 250,000 was accounted for and repaid to the Government.

It will be proper in this connection to state the circumstances under which the $250,000 were advanced to me by the President and the use made of it, to show that it was not misapplied.

At the October election in 1862 in Indiana the Democrats carried the State by a majority of over 10,000, electing a large majority in each branch of the Legislature and their candidates for the State offices. The Democrats had the Legislature, all the State offices, and the judges of the Supreme Court, and possessed the whole power in the State government except the executive. When the Legislature assembled, in the first week in January, 1863, its conduct was characterized by the most intense hostility to the administration and to the prosecution of the war. I sent my message to the two houses on the second day of its session. The Senate received, read, and printed it in the usual way. The House refused to receive it and directed the clerk to return it to me, and on the next day adopted a resolution approving the message of Governor Seymour, of New York.

The revolutionary policy thus inaugurated was pursued with increased violence and open disregard of constitutional obligations. The time was chiefly consumed by the introduction of disloyal resolutions, the utterance of factious and treasonable sentiments, intended to excite the people against the Government and destroy its power to suppress the rebellion. On the 17th of February a bill was introduced into the House which was intended to strip me as Governor of all military power in the State. It provided that all the arms should be placed in the custody of the auditor, treasurer, secretary, and attorney-general of the State, to be kept, issued, or disposed of only by them. It deprived the Governor of all power to call out the militia for any purpose whatever. It provided that all officers of the militia should be appointed and commissioned by these four State officers, and not by the Governor, as required by the constitution of the State. It provided for the repeal of the existing militia law, the dissolution of all brigades, regiments, and companies formed under that law, the surrender of their arms into the hands of the agents to be appointed by the four State officers, and rendered null and void all outstanding commissions. In short, this bill transferred to the four State officers the military power which was vested in the Governor by the constitution, was revolutionary and unconstitutional in every feature, and intended for disloyal purposes. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time by a strict party vote.

The legislative history of this bill could not be better given than in language employed by the Union members of the Legislature in their "Address to the people of the State:"

The military bill had come from the midnight caucus to the House; had been printed and forced to its engrossment without the change of a word or letter, all amendments and substitutes had been voted down; all references to committees had been refused, although every other bill of a general character that had gone to a second reading had been referred to some committee: the previous question had been sustained, the gag applied, and all debate cut off, and the bill engrossed. Nothing was left for us but to sit by and see this infamous measure passed through, the revolution consummated, and civil war begun, or to quietly retire and leave the house without a quorum; there was no other peaceful and constitutional remedy. If it had been left to the courts to annul it before the question could have been determined the law would have done its work.

The military power once in the hands of the conspirators, it would be a matter of no importance what the courts might decide; and if the question took the course of others before the Supreme Court it might be months or years before the decision was made. The path of duty was the path of safety, and we had no doubt nor hesitation as to the course we should pursue.

We were willing and anxious and repeatedly proposed to the majority to return and pass the appropriation bills with all other legitimate and lawful legislation; but they replied to us contemptuously that they intended to pass every one of their ultra measures before they took up the appropriation bills.

The military bill violated absolutely no less than seven plain and vital provisions of the State constitution, and subverted entirely the scheme of government invented by the framers of that instrument. Its passage would have been an act of revolution inevitably attended by civil war and a collision with the Government of the United States.

It had become manifest that the Democratic members of the Legislature were determined to pass the bill at all hazards, which would unquestionably have resulted in civil war. I could not and would not surrender my powers as Governor under the constitution, nor could the Government of the United States afford to have me do so, for the purpose of the proceeding was to neutralize the position of Indiana in the war and to take her out of the line of loyal States Northwest of the Ohio river. The very pendency of the bill and the avowed purpose to pass it caused the most intense ferment, and at once threatened the peace and safety of the State. I could veto the bill, but a simple majority could pass it over the veto, so that that would amount to nothing. The Republicans had barely enough members in the House of Representatives to break the quorum and break up the Legislature. Consultations were had with the Republican members of the Legislature and leading Republican citizens from different parts of the State, who were summoned for that purpose, and it was the deliberate judgment of all, in which mine fully concurred, that the passage of the bill would involve the State in civil war. The Republican members of the House therefore withdrew from the body to prevent the final passage of the bill. All the appropriation bills to carry on the State government, except one to pay the per diem and mileage of members, had been kept behind this military bill, so that when the Legislature adjourned there were no appropriations made for any civil or military purpose. There was plenty of money in the State treasury, but it was locked against me. I made an appeal to the people of the State, setting forth the situation and asking them to furnish me with money to carry on the State government, to support the militia, and organize troops for the United States. The county commissioners in the county of Marion, in which the capital is located, came forward and advanced me $20,000 out of the county treasury. This example was followed by many other counties in the State, by several banks, railroad companies, and by individuals, until a large sum of money had been raised. Under the constitution the Legislature met but once in two years unless convened in extra session by the Governor, and the next session in course would not begin until January, 1865.

After obtaining all the money I could from the counties and other sources, I made a calculation and found that I would lack about $250,000 to carry me through to January, 1865, and to make my position secure came to Washington to see if I could not obtain that amount from the Government of the United States. After a careful review of the situation by the President, Mr. Lincoln, and the Secretary of War, Mr. Stanton, the President advanced me the sum of $250,000. They both agreed that Indiana was threatened with rebellion and that the condition of the State came directly within the letter and spirit of the act of Congress approved July 31, 1861. Mr. Stanton declared to the President with great emphasis that if Indiana lost her position as a loyal State the final success of the Government in suppressing the rebellion would be endangered, and that the Governor must be sustained at whatever cost or hazard. The history and character of the transaction is shown by the following extract from my annual message to the Legislature of Indiana in January, 1865:

Upon the adjournment of the Legislature I found myself unprovided, with the exception of a small balance of the military contingent fund, with money or appropriations for military purposes. New regiments could not be raised under the requisitions of the Government, nor recruiting carried forward, without the use of large sums of money. The legion (militia) had received no pay for their services from the beginning of the war, and the organization could not be successfully continued unless payment was made, and the men reimbursed for their actual expenditures, for which the appropriation for the legion fund, made in 1861, was inadequate. The southern border was still disturbed by threats and danger of invasion, and such steps were to be taken, if possible, as would guarantee peace and security to our people. In this dilemma, I determined to apply to the President for an advance under an appropriation made by Congress, on the 31st of July, 1861, which act is in these words:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of $2,000,000 be, and the same is hereby appropriated, to be expended, under the direction of the President of the United States, in supplying and defraying the expenses of transporting and delivering such arms and munitions of war as in his judgment may be expedient and proper, to place in the hands of any of the loyal citizens residing in any of the States, of which the inhabitants are in rebellion against the Government of the United States, or in which the rebellion is, or may be threatened, and likewise for defraying such expenses as may be properly incurred in organizing and sustaining, while so organized, any of such citizens into companies, battalions, regiments, or otherwise, for their own protection against domestic violence, insurrection, invasion, or rebellion."

After a full consideration of the condition of affairs in Indiana, the President advanced to me, as a disbursing officer, out of said appropriation, the sum of $250,000. It will be perceived that this money was not paid to me as a loan to the State or an advance to the State upon debts due to her from the General Government, and creates no debt against the State whatever, but that in theory it is an expenditure made by the president, through me, as his disbursing agent. It has, however, been disbursed exclusively in the name and for the benefit of the State, in the payment of necessary military expenses, for which the State should have made ample appropriations. I have advanced to the paymaster of the State forces, at different times, the sum of $171,061.88, of which the greater portions, however, has been reimbursed to me by the General Government, upon my filing, in the proper Department, the receipted pay-rolls of the Indiana legion for services rendered in the war. For a detailed account of the expenditures of the military fund the Legislature is referred to the financial report of Hon. W. H. Terrell, financial secretary, which is herewith submitted, and to the vouchers on file in this department. All of these expenditures were laid before the auditing committee, appointed by the late Legislature, for examination, and received their approval. As will be shown by the report, I had on hand, on the 1st day of January, 1865, of the military fund, the sum of $115,487.28, and the question is now presented as to the proper method of settlement with the Government for this fund. One of two ways may be adopted. First, by returning to the Government the balance of the fund unexpended, and by settling with it for the amount expended, upon vouchers of expenditures, after the same shall have been approved by the Legislature, and this would be in accordance with the theory upon which the money was originally advanced by the President. Second, by paying into the State treasury the unexpended part of the fund, and treating the whole as an advance to the State, to be accounted for by her in her general settlement with the Government for advances made. This latter plan is, in my judgment, more consonant with justice and the honor of the State, the money having been expended for purposes for which the State was honorably and patriotically bound to make provision.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

The total amount of cash received by me is	$1,026,321.31
I have disbursed—
For civil purposes, on vouchers	$190,644.93
For military purposes, on vouchers	702,420.15
Total	892,065.08
Leaving a balance in my hands of ..	124,256.23

Of this balance, $8,783.95 belong to the funds received on account of civil expenses and $115,487.28 on account of funds received for military expenses.

In conclusion on this subject, I respectfully request that a joint committee of the two houses be speedily appointed to investigate the civil and military expenditures I have made since the adjournment of the last Legislature, and to examine the vouchers for the same on file in my department, and that the Legislature will make prompt provision for the repayment of the money I have borrowed for public purposes. It was advanced from patriotic motives, with a full reliance upon the good faith of the State for its reimbursement, and without it the machinery of the State government could not have been kept in motion.

A joint committee of the two houses, embracing some of the ablest Democratic members, was appointed, as requested in my message, who patiently investigated all my accounts, including the expenditure of $133,302.91 which I had obtained from the President, and unanimously reported them correct, taking no exception even to the amount of one cent. The unexpended portion of the $250,000 which I had received from the President and which I described in my message as the military fund, but which was erroneously stated in the message as $115,000 instead of $116,000, I did not pay into the State treasury, as suggested in the message, but refunded directly to the General Government, as before shown; and the $133,302.91 which I had expended for the State were settled with the Government by giving credit to the Government for that amount on the indebtedness of the Government to the State, as before shown. After the full examination of my accounts the Legislature made appropriations to pay my borrowed money and the debts I had contracted; also the sum of about $600,000—the exact amount, however, I am not able to state from memory—which I procured Messrs. Winslow, Lanier & Co., of New York, to advance in the payment of the interest upon the bonds of the State during the years 1863 and 1864, the payment of which interest had been withheld by the auditor and treasurer of the State. During these two years all payments for civil and military expenses of the State, including the benevolent institutions and the penitentiaries and excepting only the salaries of public officers, were paid upon my own check through a financial bureau established in my office, the State auditor and State treasurer declining all co-operation.

My course was approved by the people of Indiana by my re-election as Governor in October, 1864, by a majority of more than 20,000 and by the election of a Republican Legislature and Republican State officers. The intermediate history between the events I have described in the spring of 1863 and the meeting of the Legislature in January, 1865, I will refer to but briefly, although it is extraordinary in its character and unlike that of any other State.

The State was honey-combed with secret societies formerly known as Knights of the Golden Circle, but at that time as Sons of Liberty. They claimed in 1864 to have 40,000 members in the State, were lawless, defiant, plotting treason against the United States and the overthrow of the State Government. In some counties their operations were so formidable as to require the militia to be kept on a war footing, and throughout 1863 and until the final explosion and exposure of the organization in August, 1864, kept the whole State in an uproar and alarm. So bold were their demonstrations through the summer of 1863 that General John Morgan, of Kentucky, was induced to invade the State with his forces, in the belief that there would be a general uprising in his support. In 1864, so numerous were these treasonable organizations and so confident were they of their strength, that they matured a plan for a general uprising in the city of Indianapolis on the 16th of August, to be under cover of a mass meeting of the Democratic party, to be attended by the members of these organizations from all parts of the State. The plan, as shown by subsequent confessions of some of the leading conspirators, was on that day to release about seven thousand rebel prisoners confined in Camp Morton, seize the arsenal and arm these prisoners, overturn the State Government, and take possession of the State. This plan could not be kept secret. It was developed some three weeks before the time fixed, and was abandoned by the leading conspirators, and orders issued countermanding the march of their forces upon Indianapolis. Subsequently the discovery and seizure of a large amount of arms and ammunition collected at Indianapolis for treasonable purposes, and the seizure of the records and rituals of the order of the Sons of Liberty, giving the names of the principal conspirators, and the arrest of some eight of the ringleaders, had the effect to break up and destroy the power of the organization; and I regret to have to state that in the list of the principal members of this organization were found the names of three of the State officers, into whose hands the Legislature of 1863 had attempted to place the whole military power of the State. Upon the trial of these ringleaders before a military tribunal appointed by the President under an act of Congress, some of them turned State's evidence and disclosed the full character and extent of the conspiracy. Four of them were convicted and sentenced to death, one of whom made his escape; another was pardoned outright by President Johnson, and two others, Bowles and Milligan, had their punishment commuted by President Johnson to imprisonment for life, but were afterward released by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States to the effect that the military commission had no jurisdiction to try them for the offense. There is a large volume of unpublished history showing in detail the operations of these organizations, who were their aiders and abettors, and the connection they had with the politics of the day.

It may be proper to state here that the Democratic Legislature of 1863, before its sudden adjournment, had appointed an auditing committee of its own members to audit and supervise all of my accounts and expenditures for military purposes, which sat almost continuously until January, 1865, and that this committee did audit and approve every one of my expenditures, including that of the $133,302.91 of the fund obtained from the President. The same Legislature also appointed a committee to investigate all my expenditures and accounts from the beginning of the war up to January, 1863. This investigation was prosecuted with great diligence until late in the spring of 1863, and after the breaking up of the Legislature. Failing to find anything wrong in my accounts, to the amount of even one cent, the Democratic majority of the committee refused to make any report at all; but the Republican minority made a report indorsing and sustaining my official conduct in every particular.

THE TRADE of California and China, as carried on through the port of San Francisco, shows the following results:

The total of imports from that country for 1875 was $4,688,797; of exports, $8,542,720, divided about as follows: Imports of coffee, $162,823; of opium, $757,640; of rice, $1,141,462; of silk, raw and manufactured, $315,706; of sugar, $183,656; of tea, $518,926; miscellaneous, $1,608,584. Exports of flour, $571,271; of ginseng, $577,109; of gold and silver coin and bullion, $5,674,907; of potatoes, $13,315; of quicksilver, $942,522; of all other commodities, $605,569. The imports fell off $26,875 over 1874, but the exports increased $717,865. This year the increase of exports promises to be still greater.

THE Chamber of Commerce of Charleston, South Carolina, on May 16th, adopted resolutions opposing the passage of the bill to carry into effect the Hawaiian treaty on the ground that the removal of duty on rice will seriously injure the rice planters and throw out of employment thousands of colored laborers. A delegation was appointed to proceed to Washington and lay the facts before the Senate.

The foregoing table shows accurately the business of the office for the time specified—the number of applications, the number of caveats filed, the number of patents issued, and the amount of cash received and expended. For the last few years the expenses of the office have been increased by the reproduction of old drawings, which are now being first traced and then photographed, which, when completed, will make a uniform set of records and greatly facilitate the current work.

As an indication of the growing increase in the business of the office since the first of January last we present the following statement of moneys received and expended, applications and caveats filed, and patents granted during January, February, March, and April, 1876:

Date.	Applica- tions filed.	Caveats filed.	Patents granted.	Cash received.	Cash ex- pended.
January, 1876.	2,173	267	1,391	$72,070 40	$52,624 80
February, 1876.	2,337	305	1,914	74,651 62	52,076 34
March, 1876....	2,575	345	1,441	80,459 07	56,553 16
April, 1876	2,268	234	1,499	68,415 19	52,965 54

Statement of receipts and expenditures during the quarters ending March 31, 1875 and 1876.

Month.	1875. Receipts.	1875. Expenditures.
January	$61,385 22	$60,991 68
February	60,116 24	50,864 91
March.....	70,122 86	63,397 45
	191,623 82	174,754 04

Excess of receipts over expenses March 31, 1875, $16,869 78.

Month.	1876. Receipts.	1876. Expenditures.
January	$72,070 40	$52,624 80
February	74,651 62	52,076 34
March.....	80,459 07	56,553 16
	227,181 09	161,253 80

Excess of receipts over expenses March 31, 1876, $65,927 29.

Total amount of appropriation proposed by the Committee on Appropriations for the next fiscal year, $895,220.

Total amount of receipts for the year 1875, $743,453.

The above, taken as a standard, shows an excess of receipts over expenses of $48,233.

Estimated receipts for 1876, $800,000.

THE PATENT OFFICE AND THE CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION.

Judge Duell, the present able and efficient Commissioner of Patents, with commendable promptness and pride, has completed extensive preparations to have the office as fully represented at the exhibition as the space allotted to him will permit. The room assigned to the use of the Patent Office contains 10,000 square feet, from which aisles and passage-ways are to be deducted, leaving but about 4,000 square feet for actual use in the exhibition of models. Under the immediate supervision of Mr. E. H. Knight, who has been intrusted with these responsibilities, there have already been selected and sent to the Exhibition about 5,000 models. These embrace all the principal classes, such as agriculture, (of which harvesters is the principal feature,) steam, wood-working, metallurgy, and metal working, navigation, (including a model of the first steam propeller that crossed the ocean,) civil engineering, land conveyance, (vehicles,) railways, hoisting, mills and presses, mechanical movements, journals and bearings, textile, (including the model of Whitney's original cotton gin, patented in 1791,) sewing machines, calorifics, chemistry, electricity, (including Morse's original model of the telegraph apparatus,) leather working, clay, stone working, printing, household, &c.

The old screw printing press on which Dr. Franklin worked in London in 1724, and which has been standing in the Museum of the Patent Office since 1842, is on exhibition in contrast with the Web printing machine.

The great feature of the exhibition will be the "Patent Office in miniature," which will contain a complete set of files, records, blanks, &c., for the transaction of the daily routine business of the office. This will show the modus operandi of obtaining patents in the United States, and the business will be conducted in strict conformity to the rules and practice governing the business of the national Patent Office. The "miniature" will be supplied with a corps of competent officers and clerks, who will make it a specialty to explain to visitors the whole minutiae of the system.

The indefatigable efforts of the Commissioner, and of those gentlemen whom he has called to his assistance, to make this branch of the exhibition both attractive and interesting, and to successfully demonstrate the practical working of the office under the laws and rules regulating the same must meet with popular approbation.

Raw Silk.

According to statistics compiled by Dr. Engel, director of the Berlin Bureau of Statistics, the production of raw silk during the years 1872, 1873, and 1874 was as follows :

Countries.	1872.	1873.	1874.
	lbs.	lbs.	lbs.
France	1,401,000	1,207,800	1,608,200
Italy	6,875,000	5,139,200	6,292,000
Spain	376,200	286,000	309,300
Turkey	243,500	416,800	811,800
Syria	236,500	380,000	375,600
Greece	14,080	89,600	28,600
Georgia, Persia, and Kurdistan...	242,000	697,400	880,000
China, (exports)...	7,447,000	6,819,800	8,096,000
Japan, (exports)...	1,586,200	1,579,400	1,210,000
East Indies, (ex- ports)	1,262,800	1,069,200	935,000
Total	19,685,000	17,584,000	20,547,000

This leaves out California, which has of late years produced an appreciable amount of raw silk, manufacturing the same also.

INCREASE OF WEALTH IN ENGLAND.—A recent British Parliamentary return which has just been issued gives an effective bird's-eye view of the progress of that nation in material wealth since 1814. In that year the gross annual value of the lands, houses, quarries, mines, canals, and gasworks of Great Britain was £60,138,330; in 1844—and here we get fairly into the railway era—it had mounted to £95,300,248. The figures for 1854 embrace the United Kingdom, and cannot, therefore, properly be compared with those for 1814 and 1844. The necessary corrections for Ireland can, however, be roughly made without much difficulty. The valuation for 1854 is stated at £124,871,885; ten years afterwards it stood at £161,397,345; and in 1873 the total was £212,922,851. So with incomes from trades and professions. The ascertained total in 1814 was £37,058,989; in 1844 it was £65,095,191; in 1854, £91,280,131; in 1864, £124,075,550; and in 1873, £197,237,339.

ADDRESS TO THE GERMAN RADICALS AND REPUBLICANS OF THE UNION, AND TO THE GERMAN FREE PRESS.

The great danger which threatens the Republic, in the increasing power of the reactionary Democratic party, demands a harmonious co-operation of progressive German-Americans and a vigorous opposition to the Democracy.

The Democratic party is the decided enemy of national education, which unquestionably forms the foundation of all intellectual, political, and industrial progress of the Republic; the Democratic party, in league with the dark forces of Vaticanism, seeks to demolish those thoroughly Republican institutions, the public schools; the Democratic party denies the American nationality and declares literally, "that every true Democrat utters the detestable word 'Nation' only with disgust;" it places the sovereign States above the nation; the Democratic party is in continued rebellion against the achievements of the late bloody war of secession; the equal political and civil rights guaranteed to all citizens have already been brought to naught in the Southern States by the Democratic party; the purity of the ballot-box has been defiled by it, with the murder of many thousands of Republicans; the honor and credit of the nation is threatened and endangered by a Democratic inflation of rag money. In short, the Democratic party is the reactionary and Bourbonistic element of the Republic, having its head center in the rebel States, which are still spurring out the poison of sectional hate at the Union.

In the forthcoming important election, two and only two parties are opposed to each other: the Democratic and the Republican. To prevent the impending danger of a Democratic victory, a coalition of all liberal-minded Germans with the Republican party is necessary. Every breach will be a gain for the Democratic party.

Notwithstanding the wrongs and errors which Republican politicians have committed, the Republican party has nevertheless always proclaimed and defended progressive principles. Its principles are: equal rights to all; the resumption of specie payments; the maintenance of the honor and credit of the nation by prompt payment of the public debt in coin; civil service reform; national sovereignty above State sovereignty; national education and the free public school system, prohibiting the division of public school funds for sectarian purposes; the purity of the ballot-box, the guarantee of the elective franchise, as well as of the attainments of the late war.

The core of the Republican party is sound and capable of progression.

On the 14th of June next the Republican party will assemble in National Convention at Cincinnati. The German element will then have an opportunity of making, by a hearty co-operation, its influence for national progress felt. We therefore propose that the German Radicals and Republicans, personally or by representatives, convene in Cincinnati on the 10th day of June, reporting at the office of the Cincinnati Freie Presse. Subjects of the highest importance will present themselves for the consideration of this convention. We mention only the following: the labor question, the emigration and naturalization question, the Presidency, the accountability of Representatives, religious, social, and industrial liberty, the taxation of church property, etc.

We request of such German papers as coincide with the import and object of this address to support our proposition, and earnestly co-operate for the accomplishment thereof.

THE GERMAN REPUBLICAN CLUB.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 3, 1876.

CARL ROESER, JR.,
President.

C. F. SCHMIDT,
J. H. SCHULTHEISS,
Vice Presidents.

L. EISINGER,
Recording Secretary.

CARL STIERLIN,
Corresponding Secretary.

DR. F. W. BOGEN,
Treasurer.

RELATIONS OF THE STATE TO RELIGION AND THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

ANALYTICAL SUMMARY OF ALL THE PROVISIONS IN THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES AND OF THE CONSTITUTIONS OF THE SEVERAL STATES; ALSO THE PROVISIONS OF LAW IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AND OF THE SEVERAL TERRITORIES BEARING UPON THE CHURCH, THE STATE, AND THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Second Division.

PART IV.—Public or Private Support of Religion.

The Legislature is empowered to authorize the several towns, parishes, bodies corporate, or religious societies to make adequate provisions, at their own expense, for the support and maintenance of public Protestant teachers of piety, religion, and morality. (Obselete.)—N. H., 1792.

No person or sect shall be compelled to pay toward the support of the teachers of another sect or denomination.—N. H., 1792.

No man ought to, or of right can, be compelled to attend any religious worship, or erect or support any place of worship, or maintain any minister, contrary to the dictates of his conscience.—Vt., 1793.

No person shall by law be compelled to join or support, or be classed with or associated to, any congregation, church, or religious association.—Conn., 1818.

No man shall be compelled to attend any religious worship.—Del., 1831.

No man shall be compelled to contribute to the erection or support of any place of worship, or to the maintenance of any ministry, against his own free will and consent.—Del., 1831.

No man can of right be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or to maintain any ministry, against his consent.—Pa., 1838.

No man shall be compelled to frequent or to support any religious worship, place, or ministry whatever, except in fulfillment of his own voluntary contract.—R. I., 1842.

No person shall, under any pretense whatever, be compelled to attend any place of worship contrary to his faith and judgment.—N. J., 1844.

Nor shall any person be obliged to pay tithes, taxes, or other rates for building or repairing churches or other places of worship, or for the maintenance of any ministry.—N. J., 1844.

Nor shall any man be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or to maintain any ministry, against his consent.—Wis., 1848.

The Legislature shall pass no law to compel any person to attend, erect, or support any place of religious worship.—Mich., 1850.

Or to pay tithes, taxes, or other rates for the support of any minister of the people or teacher of religion.—Mich., 1850.

No man shall be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or to maintain any ministry, against his consent.—Ky., 1850.

No person shall be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or maintain any form of worship, against his consent.—Ohio, 1850–51.

No man shall be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or to maintain any ministry, against his consent.—Ind., 1851.

No person shall be compelled to attend any place of worship, pay tithes, taxes, or other rates for building or repairing places of worship, or the maintenance of any minister or ministry.—Iowa, 1857.

Nor shall any man be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or to maintain any religious or ecclesiastical ministry, against his consent.—Minn., 1857–8.

Nor shall any person be compelled to attend or support any form of worship.—Kansas, 1857.

No man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship, place, or ministry whatsoever.—W. Va., 1861–72.

No person shall be compelled to erect, support, or attend any place of worship, or maintain any minister of the gospel or teacher of religion.—Mo., 1865.

No person ought to be compelled to frequent or maintain any place of worship or any ministry.—Md., 1867.

No man shall be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or to maintain any ministry, against his consent.—Texas, 1869.

No person shall be required to attend or support any ministry or place of worship against his consent.—Ill., 1870.

No man can of right be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or to maintain any minister, against his consent.—Tenn., 1870.

No man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship, place, or ministry whatever.—Va., 1870.

The General Assembly (the Legislature, W. Va.) shall not enact or pass any law requiring or authorizing any religious society, or the people of any district within this Commonwealth (W. Va., State) to levy on themselves or others any tax for the erection or repair of any house of public worship, or for the support of any church or ministry.—Va., 1870; W. Va., 1861–72.

But it shall be left free to every person to select his religious instructor, and to make for his support such private contract as he shall please.—Va. 1870; W. Va., 1861–72.

Religious Protection.

Every denomination of Christians demeaning themselves quietly, and as good subjects of the State, shall be equally under the protection of the law.—N. H., 1792.

All religious societies, or bodies of men that may be hereafter united or incorporated for the advancement of religion and learning, or for other religious and charitable purposes, shall be encouraged and protected in the enjoyment of the privileges, immunities, and estates which they in justice ought to enjoy under such regulations as the General Assembly of this State shall direct.—Vt., 1793.

Every society or denomination of Christians shall have equal rights and privileges, &c.—Conn., 1818.

All religious sects and denominations demeaning themselves peaceably, and as good citizens of the Commonwealth, shall be equally under the protection of the law.—Mass., (amendment,) 1822.

It shall be the duty of the General Assembly to pass suitable laws to protect every religious denomination in the peaceable enjoyment of its own mode of public worship.—Ohio, 1850–51; Neb., 1867.

Every religious denomination shall be protected in the peaceable enjoyment of its own mode of worship.—Ark., 1868.

It shall be the duty of the General Assembly to pass suitable laws to protect every religious denomination in the peaceable enjoyment of its own mode of worship.—S. C., 1868.

It shall be the duty of the Legislature to pass such laws as may be necessary to protect every religious denomination in the peaceable enjoyment of their own mode of public worship.—Texas, 1869.

Establishment of Religion.

There shall be no establishment of one religious sect in preference to another.—N. S., 1844.

The General Assembly shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.—Iowa, 1857.

No religion shall be established by law.—Ala., 1868.

No form of religion shall be established by law.—S. C., 1868.

The Legislature shall not confer any peculiar privileges or advantages on any sect or denomination.—Va., 1870; W. Va., 1861–72.

No preference shall ever be given by law to any religious establishment or mode of worship.—Pa., 1838; Wis., 1848; Minn., 1857–8; Kansas, 1859; Tenn., 1870.

No preference shall ever be given by law to any religious societies or mode of worship.—Ky., 1850; Ind., 1851; Texas, 1869.

No preference can ever be given by law to any church, sect, or mode of worship.—Mo., 1865; Fla., 1868.

No preference shall be given by law to any Christian sect or mode of worship.—Conn., 1818.

No preference shall ever be given by law to any religious sect or mode of worship.—Miss., 1868.

No preference shall be given by law to any religious societies, denominations, or modes of worship.—Del., 1831.

No preference shall be given by law to any religious denomination or mode of worship.—Ill., 1870.

No preference shall be given by law to any religious society.—Ohio, 1850–51; Neb., 1867.

No subordination of any one sect or denomination to another shall ever be established by law.—N. H., 1792.

No subordination nor preference of any one sect or denomination to another shall ever be established by law.—Maine, 1820.

No subordination of any one sect or denomination to another shall ever be established by law.—Mass., (amendment,) 1833.

PART V.—Freedom of Religious Opinion, Conscience, and Worship.

No subject shall be hurt, molested, or restrained in his person, liberty, or estate for worshipping God in the manner and season most agreeable to his own conscience; or for his religious professions or sentiments: Provided, He doth not disturb the public peace, or obstruct others in their religious worship.—Mass., 1780.

No subject shall be hurt, molested, or restrained in his person, liberty, or estate for worshipping God in the manner and season most agreeable to the dictates of his own conscience; or of his religious profession, sentiments, or persuasion: Provided, He doth not disturb the public peace, or disturb others in their religious worship.—N. H., 1792.

No one shall be hurt, molested, or restrained in his person, liberty, or estate, for worshipping God in the manner and season most agreeable to the dictates of his own conscience, nor for his religious professions or sentiments, provided he does not disturb the public peace, nor obstruct others in their religious worship.—Me., 1820.

No person shall be enforced, restrained, or burdened in his body or goods, or otherwise suffer, on account of his religious belief.—R. I., 1842.

Perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and no inhabitant shall ever be molested, in person or property, on account of his or her mode of religious worship.—Nev., 1864.

Note.—This provision is irrevocable without the consent of the United States and of the people of Nevada.

No person ought, by any law, to be molested in his person or estate on account of his religious persuasion or profession.—Mo., 1865-75.

No person ought, by any law, to be molested in his person or estate on account of his religious practice, unless, under the color of religion, he shall disturb the good order, peace, or safety of the State, or shall infringe the laws of morality, or injure others in their natural, civil, or religious rights.—Md., 1867.

No inhabitant of this State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his religious opinions.—Ga., 1868.

Nor shall any man be enforced, restrained, molested, or burdened in his body or goods, or otherwise suffer, on account of his religious opinions or belief.—Va., 1870; W. Va., 1861-72.

Every man shall be free to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and to profess, and by argument to maintain, his opinions in matters of religion.—R. I., 1842.

Full liberty in religious concerns declared.—R. I., 1842.

The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State to all mankind.—N. Y., 1846-67.

The exercise of religious profession and worship shall be forever free.—Conn., 1818.

The free exercise of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall be forever allowed.—Cal., 1849.

The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed.—Nev., 1864.

All persons are equally entitled to protection in their religious liberty.—Md., 1867.

The free exercise and enjoyment of all religious profession and worship shall forever be allowed in this State.—Fla., 1868.

The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination, shall be forever guaranteed.—Ill., 1870.

All men shall be free to profess, and by argument to maintain, their opinions in matters of religion.—Va., 1870; W. Va., 1861.

Perfect freedom of religious sentiment shall be, and the same is hereby, secured.—Ga., 1868.

The free enjoyment of all religious sentiments, and the different modes of worship, shall ever be held sacred.—Miss., 1868.

Among the natural rights, some are in their very nature inalienable, because no equivalent can be given or received for them. Of this kind are the RIGHTS OF CONSCIENCE.—N. H., 1792.

No authority can or ought to be vested in any power whatever that shall in any case interfere with, or in any manner control, the rights of conscience in the free exercise of religious worship.—Vt., 1793.

No human authority can, in any case whatever, control or interfere with the rights of conscience.—Pa., 1838; Tenn., 1870.

No human authority ought, in any case whatever, to control or interfere with the rights of conscience.—Ky., 1850.

No human authority can control or interfere with the rights of conscience.—Mo., 1865.

No human authority should, in any case whatever, control or interfere with the rights of conscience.—N. C., 1868.

No human authority ought, in any case whatever, to control or interfere with the rights of conscience in matters of religion.—Texas, 1869.

No power shall be vested in or assumed by any magistrate to interfere with or control the rights of conscience in the free exercise of religious worship.—Del., 1831.

No person shall be deprived of the inestimable privilege of worshipping Almighty God in a manner agreeable to the dictates of his own conscience.—N. J., 1844.

The legislature shall pass no law to prevent any person from worshipping Almighty God according to the dictates of his own conscience.—Mich., 1850.

No law shall, in any case whatever, control the free exercise and enjoyment of religious opinions or interfere with the rights of conscience.—Ind., 1851.

No law shall, in any case whatever, control the free exercise and enjoyment of religious opinions or interfere with the rights of conscience.—Oregon, 1857.

And, therefore, all men are equally entitled to the free exercise of religion according to the dictates of conscience.—Va., 1870.

Nor shall any control of or interference with the rights of conscience be permitted.—Wis., 1848; Minn., 1857-58; Kansas, 1859.

Nor shall any interference with the rights of conscience be permitted.—Ohio, 1850-51; Neb., 1867.

Every individual has a natural and inalienable right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience.—N. H., 1792.

All men have a natural and inalienable right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences.—Me., 1820; N. C., 1868.

All men have a natural and inalienable right to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences.—Pa., 1838; Mo., 1865; Ky., 1850; Ohio, 1850-51; Neb., 1867; Texas, 1869; Tenn., 1870.

It is the right of all men to render worship in the mode most consistent with the dictates of their own consciences.—Conn., 1818.

All men have by nature the right of worshipping and serving their Creator according to the dictates of their consciences.—Del., 1831.

All men have a natural and inalienable right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences and understandings, as in their opinion shall be regulated by the word of God.—Vt., 1793.

Every person has the natural right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience.—La., 1868.

All men shall be secured in the natural right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences.—Ind., 1851; Oregon, 1857.

No person shall be deprived of the right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience.—Ala., 1868; S. C., 1868.

The right of every man to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of his own conscience shall never be infringed.—Wis., 1848; Minn., 1857-8.

The right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience shall never be infringed.—Kan., 1859.

Marriage.

No contract of marriage, if otherwise duly made, shall be invalidated for want of conformity to the requirements of any religious sect.—Cal., 1849.

PART VI.—Religious Tests.

No other oath, declaration or test (than the oath of office) shall be required as a qualification for any office of public trust.—Cal., 1849; Mich., 1850; N. Y., 1846-47; Ill., 1870.

No religious test ought ever to be required as a qualification for any office of profit or trust in this State, other than a declaration of belief in the existence of God;* nor shall the Legislature prescribe any other oath of office than the oath prescribed by this Constitution.—Md., 1867.

(*NOTE.—The oath of office prescribed by the Constitution of Maryland does not embrace such declaration.)

No political or religious test, or other than an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and of this State, shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under this State.—Tenn., 1870.

No religious tests shall ever be required as a qualification for any office of public trust under the State.—Wis., 1848; Minn., 1857-8; Texas, 1869-75; Me., 1820; Del., 1831; N. J., 1844; Iowa, 1857; Ind., 1851; Oregon, 1857; Neb., 1867-75; Ohio, 1850; La., 1868.

No religious test as a qualification for office shall ever be required.—Miss., 1868.

No religious test shall be required for any office of public trust, nor for any vote at elections.—Kan., 1859.

No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to vote or hold office.—Ark., 1868.

No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification of any voter at any election in this State.—Minn., 1857-8.

No religious or political test shall ever be required as a qualification for jurors.—Tenn., 1870.

The General Assembly (or the Legislature) shall not prescribe any religious test whatever.—Va., 1870; W. Va., 1861.

No man shall be disqualified from holding any office on account of his religious belief.—R. I., 1842.

No person can, on account of his religious opinions, be rendered ineligible to any office of trust or profit under this State.—Mo., 1865.

No inhabitant shall be prohibited from holding any office or public trust on account of his religious opinions.—Ga., 1868.

Competency of Witnesses.

No person shall be rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity in consequence of his opinions on the subject of religion.—Wis., 1848.

No person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief.—Cal., 1849.

No person shall be incompetent to be a witness on account of his religious belief.—Ohio, 1850–51; Neb., 1867.

No person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief.—Mich., 1850.

No person shall be rendered incompetent as a witness in consequence of his opinion on matters of religion.—Ind., 1851.

Nor shall any person be incompetent to testify on account of religious belief.—Kan., 1859.

No person shall be rendered incompetent as a witness on account of his opinions in matters of religious belief.—Nevada, 1864.

No person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness on account of his opinions on matters of religion.—N. Y., 1866–67.

No person shall be rendered incompetent to give evidence in consequence of his opinion upon the subject of religion.—Arkansas, 1868.

No person shall be rendered incompetent as a witness on account of his religious opinions.—Fla., 1868.

No person shall be rendered incompetent as a witness or juror in consequence of his opinions on matters of religion, nor be questioned in any court of justice touching his religious belief to affect the weight of his testimony.—Oregon, 1857.

No person shall be rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity in consequence of his opinion upon the subject of religion.—Minn., 1857–8.

No person can, on account of his religious opinions, be disqualified from testifying, or serving as a juror.—Mo., 1865.

PART VII.—Religious Opinions Not to Abridge Rights.

No person shall be deprived of any of his rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified from the performance of any of his public and private duties, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of his opinions on the subject of religion.—Iowa, 1857.

Nor can any man be justly deprived or abridged of any civil right as a citizen on account of his religious sentiments or peculiar mode of religious worship.—Vt., 1793.

Religious opinions shall in nowise diminish, enlarge, or affect any civil capacity.—R. I., 1842.

No person shall be denied the enjoyment of any civil right merely on account of his religious principles.—N. J., 1844.

The civil rights, privileges, or capacities of any citizen shall in nowise be diminished or enlarged on account of his religion.—Ky., 1850.

The Legislature shall not diminish or enlarge the civil or political rights, privileges, and capacities of any person on account of his opinion or belief concerning matters of religion.—Mich., 1850.

No person shall be denied any civil or political right, privilege, or capacity on account of his religious opinions.—Ill., 1870.

Opinions in matters of religion shall in nowise affect, diminish, or enlarge any civil capacities.—Va., 1870; W. Va., 1861–72.

Religious Disqualifications.

No person who acknowledges the being of God, and a future state of rewards and punishments, shall, on account of his religious sentiments, be disqualified to hold any office or place of trust or profit under this Commonwealth.—Pa., 1838.

No person shall be deemed incompetent as a witness or juror on account of his religious belief, provided he believes in the existence of a God, and that, under His dispensation, such person will be held morally accountable for his acts, and be rewarded or punished therefor, either in this world or in the world to come.—Md., 1867.

No person shall be eligible to the office of Governor, or be capable of being a Senator, who is not of the Protestant religion.—N. H., 1792.

All persons who deny the existence of Almighty God shall be disqualified for office.—N. C., 1868.

No person shall be eligible to the office of Governor who denies the existence of the Supreme Being.—S. C., 1868.

No person who denies the existence of the Supreme Being shall hold any office under this Constitution.—S. C., 1865.

No person who denies the existence of a Supreme Being shall hold any office in this State.—Miss., 1868.

No person who denies the being of a God, or a future state of rewards and punishments, shall hold any office in the civil department of this State.—Tenn., 1870.

Clerical Disabilities.

No [ordained] clergyman, or [ordained] preacher of the gospel of any denomination shall be capable of holding any civil office in the State, or of being a member of either branch of the Legislature while he continues in the exercise of the pastoral or clerical functions.—Del., 1831.

No person, while he continues to exercise the functions of a clergyman, priest, or teacher of any religious persuasion, society, or sect, shall be eligible to the General Assembly.—Ky., 1850.

No minister of the gospel, or priest of any denomination whatever, who accepts a seat in the Legislature as representative, shall, after such acceptance, be allowed to claim exemption from military service, road duty, or serving on juries by reason of his said profession.—Texas, 1869.

No minister of the gospel, or priest, of any denomination whatever, shall be eligible to a seat in either house of the Legislature.—Tenn., 1870.

PART VIII.—Recognition of God.

Acknowledging the goodness of the great Legislator of the Universe, &c.—Mass., 1780.

Acknowledging the good providence of God in permitting the enjoyment of free government.—Conn., 1818.

Acknowledging with grateful hearts the goodness of the Sovereign Ruler of the Universe, &c.—Me., 1820.

Grateful to Almighty God for the free exercise of the right to choose our own form of government.—Ind., 1851.

Grateful to the Supreme Being for the blessings hitherto enjoyed, &c.—Iowa, 1857.

Grateful to Almighty God for our civil and religious privileges.—Kansas, 1859.

Grateful to Almighty God, the Sovereign Ruler of Nations, for our State government, &c.—Mo., 1865.

Grateful to Almighty God for the free exercise of the right to choose our own form of government.—Miss., 1868.

Grateful to God for our civil and religious liberty.—Ark., 1868; Ill., 1870; Md., 1867; Minn., 1857–8; R. I., 1842.

Grateful to Almighty God for our freedom.—N. J., 1844; Wis., 1848; Cal., 1849; Ohio, 1850–51; Ala., 1868; Neb., 1867.

Grateful to Almighty God.—Nev., 1864; S. C., 1868.

Grateful to Almighty God, the Sovereign Ruler of Nations.—N. C., 1868.

Acknowledging and invoking the guidance of Almighty God, the Author of all good government.—Fla., 1868.

Invoking the favor and guidance of Almighty God.—Ala., (preamble), 1868.

Invoking the favor and guidance of Almighty God.—Va., 1870.

Obligations of Religious Worship.

It is the right as well as the duty of all men in society, publicly, and at stated seasons, to worship the Supreme Being, the great Creator and Preserver of the Universe.—Mass., 1780.

[NOTE.—The provisions of the constitution of 1780 enjoining attendance upon public worship and providing for the compulsory support of "Protestant teachers of piety, religion, and morality," were abrogated in 1833.]

Nevertheless, every sect or denomination of Christians ought to observe the Sabbath, or Lord's day, and keep up some sort of religious worship, which to them shall seem most agreeable to the revealed will of God.—Vt., 1793.

It being the duty of all men to worship the Supreme Being, the Author and Preserver of the Universe, &c.—Conn., 1818.

It is the duty of all men frequently to assemble together for the public worship of the Author of the Universe.—Del., 1831.

It is the duty of every man to worship God in such manner as he thinks most acceptable to Him.—Md., 1867.

That religion, or the duty which we owe to our Creator, and the manner of discharging it, can be directed only by reason and conviction, not by force or violence.—Va., 1870.

"Morality and piety, rightly grounded on evangelical principles," commended.—N. H., 1792.

Piety and morality enjoined.—Del., 1831.

The public worship of God and instruction in piety, religion, and morality promote the happiness and prosperity of a people and the security of a republican government.—Mass., (amendment), 1833.

Religion, morality, and knowledge essential to good government.—Ohio, 1850–51; Neb., 1867.

Religion, morality, and knowledge, being essential to good government, &c.—Ark., 1868.

Religion, morality, and knowledge are necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind.—N. C., 1868.

PART IX.—Restriction upon Liberty of Conscience.

The liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of the State.—Cal., 1849; Conn., 1818; Fla., 1868; Ga., 1868; Minn., 1857–8; Nevada, 1864; New York, 1846–67.

The liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be construed to dispense with oaths or affirmations, or excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of the State.—Ill., 1870.

Shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, nor to justify practices inconsistent with the good order, peace, or safety of the State, or with the rights of others.—Mo., 1865.

Shall not justify practices inconsistent with the peace and moral safety of society.—S. C., 1868.

Shall not be construed to justify acts of licentiousness injurious to morals, or dangerous to the peace and safety of the State.—Miss., 1868.

Official Oaths.

The constitutions of the following States make provision for "oaths or affirmations:"—Ala., 1868; Ark., 1868; Cal., 1849; Conn., 1818; Del., 1831; Fla., 1868; Georgia, 1868; Iowa, 1857; Ill., 1870; Ky., 1850; La., 1868; Me., 1820; Md., 1867; Mich., 1850; Minn., 1857-8; Miss., 1868; Mo., 1865; Nev., 1864; N. J., 1844; N. Y., 1846-67; N. C., 1868; Ohio, 1850-1; Oregon, 1857; Pa., 1838; R. I., 1842; S. C., 1868; Tenn., 1870; Texas, 1869; Vt., 1793; Va., 1870; W. Va., 1861; Wis., 1848.

Persons being "of the denomination called Quakers" may affirm.—Mass., 1780-1821.

[NOTE.—The Constitution of 1780 required a declaration of belief in the "Christian religion."]

Quakers, and persons scrupulous of swearing, may affirm.—N. H., 1792.

The mode of administering an oath or affirmation shall be such as most consistent with and binding upon the conscience of the person to whom administered.—Ark., 1868; Ind., 1851; Oregon, 1857.

That the manner of administering an oath or affirmation to any person ought to be such as those of the religious persuasion, &c., of which he is a member generally esteem the most effectual confirmation by the attestation of the Divine Being.—Md., 1867.

The manner of administering an oath or affirmation shall be such as is most consistent with the conscience of the deponent, and shall be esteemed by the General Assembly the most solemn appeal to God.—Ky., 1850.

THE TRUTH OF HISTORY AND THE HORRORS OF ANDERSONVILLE.

BROOKLYN, IOWA, February 28, 1876.

EDITOR REPUBLIC: I have read the Davis letter written in denial of the charges of Blaine, and in support of Hill, of Georgia, touching the treatment of the prisoners in the South during the late war. I desire, as one of those who passed through the horrors of Andersonville and other prisons of the South, to deny each and every allegation in Davis' letter contained pertaining to such treatment.

While I may not answer his letter in detail, neither may I present one so well written, this communication has the merit of being true in every particular, which his has not. I belonged to the Ninety-second Regiment, Illinois Mounted Infantry, and occupied a position on General Kilpatrick's staff, while he commanded the Third Cavalry Division, D. C., under Sherman. I was, on the 19th of October, 1864, at Vining Station, Georgia, while shipping ammunition from Atlanta to Cartersville to supply the division for the Savannah campaign, taken prisoner, in company with forty-six others, by the First Mississippi Cavalry. My sword and revolvers I surrendered. My hat, watch, money, and pocket knife were taken from me forcibly by different members of the command. We were hurried across the country to Oxford, Alabama, where I was despoiled of my boots, coat, and vest, and put in charge of Lieutenant Will. D. Stone, of Clanton's scouts. Lieutenant Stone treated me handsomely, (and often,) and was a soldier and a gentleman. From Oxford we went to Selma, and thence to Castle Morgan, at Catawba, Alabama, on the Alabama river, about one hundred miles above Mobile. There, with twenty-one hundred others, I was incarcerated in a brick cotton warehouse, surrounded by a pine log stockade. We were allowed the freedom of the stockade during the day, but at night were driven into the building, and were crowded so that it was impossible to lie down in any but a cramped position. Our food consisted of a pint of coarsely ground cornmeal, and about eight ounces of beef per day per man. We had no cooking utensils, excepting pieces of board, upon which we spread our meal mixed with water, and propped up in front of a meager fire until it became warm through, and roasted our beef by holding it upon sticks in the blaze. This was my first experience of prison life, and I tired of it very shortly. In company with a few adventurous spirits, I formed a conspiracy to overpower the guards and escape to Mobile. Fifty of us banded together for that purpose, and the arrangements were perfected. Sunday morning at half past one o'clock was the time fixed upon, but a renegade Kentuckian, who was with us, betrayed us, and on Saturday afternoon I was led from the prison with a rope around my neck, and brought before the commandant, Captain Henderson.

Here I was speedily arraigned, tried, and, according to real or fancied rules governing the prison, condemned to be hung. Captain H. very kindly gave me permission to live two hours, in order to prepare for death, during which time he visited me, and offered me my life if I would divulge the nature of the plot and the names of my fellow-conspirators. This I refused to do, telling him I preferred a speedy death by the rope to a lingering one by starvation. I gave him the address of my parents in Carroll county, Illinois, and requested that he inform them of my fate. When brought out of the jail Henderson informed me that on account of my youth, (I was then but nineteen,) and that so long as no overt act had been committed he would remit my sentence, but would send me to Andersonville. I left the castle in company with six hundred others, and went up the river to Montgomery, thence by rail to Columbus, Georgia, when, under cover of the darkness, Lieutenant Colonel Showers, of the Ohio Seventeenth, Lieutenant Hudson, of the Iowa Seventeenth, Harvey Hart, of an Indiana regiment, Patrick Welsh, of an Iowa cavalry regiment, and myself, escaped. Traveling by night, more by instinct than else, for the nights were dark and rainy, and we did not dare to travel by day, we made our way north, expecting to strike Atlanta. The negroes furnished us food, and the blood hounds bayed behind us for five days and nights. The falling rain helped us to keep in advance of the dogs, but sometimes we were so closely pursued that we would have to wade in streams and run in a zigzag course for hours together. At Lagrange, Georgia, Hudson and Showers got separated from us, and we never saw them afterwards. I heard since that they made their way through safely. We were recaptured near Newnan, and put in the county jail, a wooden structure, not very secure. The floor of this we tore up, and got out at dawn, but in trying to get into the woods were retaken by some cavalry and put on board a train for West Point, Georgia. I was handcuffed, and shackled and fastened by the hands to the top of the car, and in this way rode to West Point, over a hundred miles. Thence to Andersonville, where I staid but one night, the prisoners having been sent to Millen and Salisbury, to keep them out of Sherman's way. I got, however, a cursing from Captain Wirz before I left; on general principles, I suppose. On my arrival at Millen, the commandant, Captain Cameron, put me under guard outside of the stockade, and kept me there three days, saying if he put me in with the rest I would probably get up another insurrection as I had at Castle Morgan. At the end of that time, however, I was turned into the stockade, and was there three days with nothing to eat, excepting what some members of my own regiment, who were there, divided with me out of their own scanty pittance. I spoke to Captain Cameron about it, and he told me to go to hell. I didn't go, however, being as near to it then as I cared to be. He was a Scot, and I made myself known to him, and he then assigned me to a company, and I fared somewhat better. Our rations consisted of six ounces of tainted beef per day to the man, and cornmeal mush. The latter was prepared outside the gates in large iron kettles, by first partially filling the kettles with dirty water from a swamp, then shoveling in the meal without salt. It never was allowed to cook, but as soon as it became thick was shoveled into wagons, hauled into camp, and dumped out into piles on the sand, and whosoever could crawl to the heaps and eat were welcome. Numbers of poor fellows who were helpless and could not get to the disgusting mess literally starved to death where they lay.

Another thing that damns them to eternal infamy was, that after emptying a wagon-load of this stuff upon the sand they would fill the box with the corpses of those who had died through the night, piling them up like dead dogs, drive out, and throw the bodies from the top of the wagon into a trench, and then, in the same wagon, haul in another load of mush. This may seem beyond belief, but is strictly true; and Jefferson Davis, nor any other rebel, dare appear before any of the survivors of those woeful days and deny it. From Millen we were sent to Savannah, and there were divided, about half going north to Salisbury, the remainder, myself among them, were sent south to Blackshear. On the road down, with five others, I escaped by jumping off the train at Screven in the darkness. Two of those went north to meet Sherman, and we four started for Brunswick, on the Atlantic coast, intending to find our blockaders. We were out fourteen days, and were picked up by some rebel coast-guards within hearing of the gunboats at the mouth of Turtle river. Of that trip space will not allow me to write. I was carried to Blackshear, and by Captain Bledsoe's orders kept guarded by myself four days. At Blackshear I saw a prisoner shot dead by a rebel guard for passing too close to him while going after water. A thousand men will bear me testimony to that cowardly and brutal act; and the guard who perpetrated it was not even reprimanded. Thence to Thomasville, where we lay in a swamp for three weeks, with the water sometimes so deep we dared not lie down for fear of drowning. Here I saw the work of the bloodhounds. Two of our boys had escaped, were overtaken by the dogs, and brought back. One of these men had his cheek torn away, and his arm bitten through and through; the other had the calf of his leg stripped to the bone by these same dogs, and they were put into camp with the rest of us without medical treatment of any kind, and both died in a few days. Mr. Davis may not have seen this, but he knew that dogs were used to recapture the fugitives.

From Thomasville we went to Albany, and there, on Christmas eve of 1864, we were loaded into box-cars, one hundred men to the car, the doors locked, and started for Andersonville, one hundred miles north. The horrors of that fearful night cannot be described. Without food or water, suffocating, and crowded so thickly that if one man fell he was trampled to death instantly. The roar and surging of the cars, the yells for air, the shouts, curses, and horrible blasphemies of men who had lost their reason, but above all could be heard the shrieks of the poor wretches who sank down and were being trampled out of all semblance to humanity, can never be forgotten by those who took that fearful ride. On Christmas morning, when the church-bells in our peaceful homes were pealing the glad news of a Saviour born, we emerged from our living tombs; and we carried out from my car alone twenty-seven dead bodies, victims to "man's inhumanity to man." The other cars throughout the train furnished their quota of corpses. Who will lift up his voice in defense of this brutality, or dare deny it? If any one, I here denounce him as a traitor and liar. That morning the fatal gates of Andersonville closed upon us. To many this change was a death-knell, and the rattle of their chains sent a chill to the stoutest heart. We filed slowly in, to die; aye, to die; it was a living death.

I had heard of this den; had heard of the horrors of prison-pens of the South; had seen some of them, too; but never realized the condition to which men could be reduced. The pinched, shrunken faces, blackened with smoke, from which gleamed wild, ferocious eyes, the bony, claw-like hands, the fleshless frames clothed in filthy rags, all told of the work starvation and exposure had wrought. Our food consisted of three gills of cornmeal and four ounces of raw beef per man per day, and once a week each got a tablespoonful of molasses. We were allowed to go out under guard, two men from each squad of twenty-five, each day to gather wood, which we had to carry in upon our backs, sometimes a distance of a mile, and were not allowed to stop and rest on the way. If a man gave out he would have to throw away his wood and go in without it, and eat raw meal and beef until his turn came to go out again. I have seen the water freeze an eighth of an inch thick in the swamp that ran through the camp, and many a night had to walk around for hours to keep from freezing to death. We were without shelter of any kind, and burrowed in the wet sand like coyotes, the cold winter rain falling upon us almost constantly; ate once a day the meager fare mentioned before; never free from the most fearful gnawings of hunger; and here let me say that no person can imagine the terrible feeling of hunger, unsatisfied for a moment, unless experienced. No hope of succor, nothing before us but a lingering death by starvation. How many prayers for speedy death went up from that noisome prison; how many poor fellows lay down on the sand and refused even the meager fare in order to hasten the end. Davis says that the photographs exhibited of the survivors were spurious. This, like the rest of his letter, is untrue. Some of the men whose likenesses were taken I knew in prison, and I have seen the likenesses, and the only difference I could see was that it did not show enough. No instrument could depict fully the wolfish expression, the wild insane glare of the eyes of an Andersonville prisoner.

When I was captured I weighed one hundred and fifty pounds. I kept my health very well while in prison; but Andersonville fare reduced me in six weeks to less than ninety pounds, and so weak that a walk of fifty yards would compel me to sit down and rest. Once, General Imboden, the Virginia guerrilla, while prison inspector, in company with Captain Wirz, came into the stockade to see the "damned Yankees." A dog followed them in, and was caught, killed and eaten in presence of those rebel officers. I was fortunate enough to secure a portion of the canine. At another time Wirz came in, and some one sang out, "More beef." In an hour orders were promulgated that no more rations would be issued to us until the person who uttered the objectionable words should be sent out for punishment. We stood it for one day, and then hired a poor devil to go out and offer himself for our sins. He went out, and was put into the stocks for two days. Stopping our rations was a favorite pastime with Wirz. About the 1st of April I was taken out and placed in Captain Wirz's office as clerk, to make out a list of the prisoners for exchange. I was there several days, and being sometimes left alone in the office, and being of an inquiring turn of mind, took occasion to look at the Captain's papers. I found there official communications from the War Department, at Richmond, regarding the treatment of the prisoners and the amount of food to be given them, and I found also private letters from men high in authority in the rebel Government touching the same question; and I can here truthfully say that the horrors of Andersonville, of Libby, of Millen, and Tyler, and all the others, were due mainly to instructions received from Richmond. Captain Wirz—who, I must say, treated me somewhat kindly—told me that he was simply following out the instructions he received from his superiors. Davis could not, probably, have found a fitter tool to carry out his designs against the lives of our soldiers than was Wirz; but the curse rests with the chief, not the subordinate. Hill, of Georgia, claimed that it was impossible for his Government to supply us with more food, on account of the stringency of the Federal blockade. I know this to be untrue, for on the 18th of April I passed through Oglethorpe, ten miles north of Andersonville, where the supplies for the prison were in store, and there was cornmeal in sacks and salt beef and pork sufficient to have furnished the whole prison with full rations for six months, at the very least. He says, also, that they kept no bloodhounds at Andersonville. This is absolutely false. They did keep from ten to twenty, under charge of a man who made it his business to run them, and many a fugitive was returned to prison through their agency. I have seen the hounds and conversed with their keeper. One day, while out after wood, I passed through the prison hospital. It was, if anything, worse than the prison. Old, dilapidated tents, that let in the wind and rain from all sides; no beds, except board bunks, partially filled with straw, damp and unwholesome and alive with fleas; the sick huddled together, with no covering except the rags they wore, and all under the care of Dr. Mudd! To go to the hospital was to go to the grave. We left Andersonville on the evening of the 17th of April, and started for Macon; but that place was in the hands of General Wilson's (Billy) cavalry, and, on account of the armistice of General Sherman, could not move for our deliverance. We were shipped south to Albany, thence on foot to Thomasville, and by rail to Olustee, Fla., where I went to headquarters again and prepared another exchange list. There I heard of the assassination of President Lincoln and the surrender of Lee. The authorities at Jacksonville refused to receive us for exchange, and a New York lieutenant and myself receipted for the Confederate Government for about twenty-six hundred men; and they shipped us to Baldwin by rail, and, escorting us to the White House, half way to Jacksonville, turned us loose. April 29th, 1865, I saw the old Stars and Stripes, after a lapse of about eight months of privation seldom experienced by man. Of the forty-six taken with me on that 19th of October, only seven of us lived through it. The rest starved in Andersonville.

Respectfully, yours,
DON R. FRAZER.

SOUTHERN JUDICIAL KU-KLUXISM.

The extracts accompanying this are from a communication designed, not for publication, but for the information of gentlemen interested in the well-being of the Southern States and people. There is, however, so clear an analysis of the situation of the freed population therein that its publication could not be withheld in propriety. The statements made by the writer in relation to the judicial conspiracy now progressing, for the gradual disfranchisement of the former bondsmen, and for their permanent subordination, deserve and will receive wide attention. The writer is "native and to the manner born," a gentleman of high character, at present occupying a prominent judicial position in his native State, and his statements may be relied upon as those of a calm, judicial observer, with ample opportunities of understanding the subject on which he writes. For obvious reasons, all indications of name or residence are withheld. The fact that such a course is necessary to insure freedom from personal outrage and social oppression is in itself sufficient proof of the character of that Democratic reign of terror which the old Southern leaders have restored. It is a reproduction, in even more hideous forms, of the ante bellum conditions. But to the communication. The writer says:

I have read many well written articles in the various leading newspapers of the North, and studied and examined the speeches made by Senator Morton and other leading politicians of the Union, but as yet I have failed to find anything contained in any of these speeches or newspaper articles, and well written communications of reporters and correspondents, (sent South to gather information,) which unravels and exposes the full depth of the hidden policy of the Southern Democracy. The atrocities of Ku-Klux Klans and White League combinations have been fully exposed, and perhaps one-tenth of their murders and other crimes against the colored and white Southern Republicans reported, but there has been no report made of an organization, tenfold more dangerous and destructive to the liberties, rights, and even lives of the colored people of the South. I know of no better term or name to apply to this organization than "Judicial Ku-Kluxism," because under color of law the law-making bodies and the judiciary of the South are to-day surely accomplishing what they failed to do by midnight assassinations of Republicans, in this, that by murder they have simply taken the lives of their victims, with some danger of prosecution therefor in the Federal courts, but by judicial Ku-Kluxism they take the liberties and political rights of freedmen, and thus reduce them to a state of slavery equally as bad, if not worse, than their former slavery. Before I enter into details and give you undeniable proof of this well organized system of judicial Ku-Kluxism, and its daily record of conspiracy and persecution against the freedmen, I shall first classify the colored people of the South into three separate and distinct classes:

First. This class comprises all of that portion of the freedmen who were formerly owned as slaves by masters who taught them trades, and gave them ample opportunities to learn something of the business affairs of life; in fact, often attending to the management and overseeing, or superintending of the farm labor of other slaves of their masters, and seeing to the gathering of crops and preparing cotton for market.

This class have generally exhibited more thrift and enterprise than any other class of the freedmen, many, or perhaps a majority of them, own small farms in the country, or homes in the towns and cities of the South. This class, I think, compose about one-tenth of the entire colored population.

Second. This class comprise about four-tenths of the freedmen, and were formerly held as slaves by masters who fed and clothed them well, but forced them to work to the full extent of their power, and gave them no opportunities to learn anything beyond hard farm labor. This class are to-day industrious, but know nothing of thrift, economy, or the business qualities of life, and if they make good crops they are easily defrauded out of the bulk of its proceeds by merchants, doctors, and landlords.

In fact, this class are the most lucrative source from which the landlords and merchants of the South derive their profits and gains.

During slavery stringent statutes prohibited merchants from trading or bartering with slaves unless they had a special order or permit from their masters. Clothing, food, and every necessity was bought and provided for by the master of his wholesale merchant, while the small or retail merchant traded with and derived his profits almost exclusively from the non-holding slave element of the whites. The rebellion changed all of this, and the small towns and cities of the South have in populous colored districts grown and increased in wealth and population to a wonderful extent since the close of the rebellion. We have stores at every cross-road, and our merchants are composed of Jews, and men of every nationality. These men, like vultures, await the gathering and incoming of the cotton crops, and in various ways induce the freedmen to exchange the proceeds of the greater part of it for worthless goods and "gew-gaws." If towards the latter part of July the indications are good for a full cotton crop the merchants begin to open credit and take liens upon the cotton crop, and if their accounts do not take quite all of the cotton raised by freedmen they often run them up by selling a few more "gew-gaws." By law the landlords have an expressed lien upon all of the produce raised by the tenant upon his premises for rents and supplies furnished, and it is not often that the tenant has anything left after he has fully paid up his rents, and accounts, doctors, etc., because having no education he cannot tell whether these accounts are fairly rendered and added up or not, and as I shall presently show it is useless for him to appeal to the courts of the country for redress, even if he could see and show frauds in such accounts.

This class of freedmen generally own their teams, wagons, and farming implements, and bare supplies to enable them to make their yearly crops with, but beyond this property line and mark they seldom go, and not many of them seem to think it possible to become the owners of good homes, nor, indeed, is it in the interests of the large plantation owners that they should buy homes, because they are the most profitable of all other classes of tenants, either black or white.

The third class comprise about five-tenths or full one-half of all the colored population, and were formerly held as slaves by masters who half clothed, half fed, and worked them almost day and night, in fact treated them in every respect more like brutes than human beings, inflicting the severest punishments for the most trivial offenses, frequently giving them from one to three hundred lashes with heavy leather straps or bull whips, literally cutting the skin and flesh into gashes.

The moral status of this class is to-day at a very low ebb, and they furnish two-thirds or more of all the colored criminals that are daily filling our penitentiaries and prisons.

This class own nothing beyond bare clothing, and as farm tenants everything is furnished them (such as teams, farming tools, and all supplies) by the landlord, and at the end of the year the landlord takes for his share of rents one-half of all the produce raised by such tenants, and then deducts from the tenant's half or share of produce the price of all food and clothing furnished during the year to the tenant. This generally takes all the produce of the tenant and often leaves him in debt, and in a starving condition. Being ignorant of business tact and thrift, this class cannot realize the reason why they are thus stripped of all their labor year by year and left either to starve or steal, hence they do often resort to petty thieving, and as such crimes are always so awkwardly and openly done, they are easily detected, indicted, and convicted without mercy, and the highest penalties of the law inflicted upon them. During slavery starvation often forced slaves to steal from their master's neighbors, and this was winked at by these slaveholders, and if they (the slaves) were detected in robbing smoke-houses and corn-cribs they were generally whipped or punished more for being so caught or detected in such thefts than for the act of stealing. Is it any wonder, then, that thieving should be so common now among this class of freedmen, who were actually forced to do it and encouraged in it while slaves?

I have now fully explained to you the real condition of the colored population of the South, and shall now explain and show you how Judicial Ku-Kluxism is slowly, quietly, and surely reducing the third and second classes to a system of slavery, and wholly disenfranchising them of all political rights.

The Constitution of this State (and I believe of other States) denies all political rights, and excepts from jury service, and the right to testify as witnesses in any of the courts, all men who have or may hereafter be convicted of a felony, unless such disabilities shall be removed by act of the legislature. Now, since this State has passed into the hands of the Democracy any kind of a theft from a house, or the stealing of hogs or cattle, without regard to value, has been by recent legislation made felonies, punishable with from one to ten years' confinement at hard labor in the penitentiary. Before the rebellion the theft of cattle or hogs were by law simply misdemeanors, punishable by fines or imprisonment in the county jails, unless the value of such property exceeded twenty dollars. It is, then, very plain and obvious that the changes in the laws referred to were made to reach the freedmen, who generally steal a few bushels of corn or a hog, the value of which in a large majority of cases seldom exceeds twenty dollars. It is not often that freedmen are made either grand or petit jurors, and the juries who try them are generally composed of men who do not reverse the old rule of law in regard to them, i. e., "that it is better for ninety-nine guilty men to escape than to punish one innocent man." It is hardly possible for a freedman to get a fair trial and even-handed justice before a Democratic jury, unless he has been really guilty of some outrageous crime; and such juries would always rather convict ninety-nine innocent freedmen than to let one guilty man escape. The summoning of juries is made the duty of sheriffs and constables, and as these officers, or at least nine-tenths of them, are Democrats, they summons only such Democrats to serve as jurors as they know will carry out the policy of wholesale convictions of freedmen. I have for the past four years closely watched this judicial Ku-Kluxism, and often witnessed freedmen convicted by the scores for trifling offenses, while white men guilty of murder, and other high offenses against the law, were acquitted by the same juries. Any wealthy white man who is known to be a good Democrat can commit crime with impunity. By continuances of his case, and a crooked administration of the law, such men can generally evade punishment, and where any kind of a penalty is inflicted, it is always the lightest allowed by law. I know of at least sixty murders committed in this county by white men, and a majority of them were of a cold-blooded character, yet out of this number not one has been hung by law, and only one that I remember was sent to the penitentiary, and he was in a short time afterwards reprieved. How different with freedmen. There is no delay of law. Our State prison is overflowing with them, so much so that they are hired out to planters. To see large plantations worked by this convict labor, superintended by armed guards, one is vividly reminded of the days of slavery, and, indeed, it is nothing less, and I am firmly convinced that this system of slavery will become more general year by year, unless some check is put to it. I do not pretend to say that the freedmen are guilty of no crimes, but I do assert that not one-third of those convicted deserve the severe punishment and penalties inflicted so summarily and speedily upon them; and were they honorably and justly dealt with, and paid for their labor, not one-half, nay, not one-fourth of the real crimes done by them would be committed at all. But this mode of procedure is one of the methods by which the Democracy revenge themselves upon the freedmen for their devotion and fidelity to the Republican party, and it excels in cruelty the midnight assassinations of their murderous organized Ku-Klux Klans; because by the former system they forever disfranchise freedmen, and force them into slavery; whereas by murdering them outright an end would come to all their suffering and miserable existence.

SECOND LETTER.

[THE REPUBLIC presents a second communication on this subject. Its statements substantiate the author's charge of conspiracy against the liberty and rights of the freed people. The writer, a man of calm and judicial judgment, is in a position to know whereof he writes:]

In my last communication I fully explained the manner in which the freedmen are indicted, tried, convicted, and sentenced in the wholesale by the Ku-Klux judiciary, and compelled under color of law to serve out long terms of imprisonment at hard labor, not in the State prisons, but upon private plantations. I shall now give you indisputable evidence of the manner in which these colored convicts are fed, clothed, worked, and used in this their second state of slavery. I shall also show that there is not the least authority or shadow of law that authorizes the hiring out and working of convicts, except upon public works, yet contrary to and in the face of all law, hundreds are so hired out. Unremitting labor from daylight until dark is exacted and wrung from them by their so-called guards, who are in fact overseers. Here upon the plantations, surrounded with guards and bloodhounds, these colored convicts daily undergo tortures and punishments which equal, and in many instances excel, the barbarities and cruelties of the infamous Spanish inquisition. In proof of these assertions I shall give you the evidence of one of the convicts as stated to me by him after his discharge, and the sworn statements of an ex-guard of the convicts, and also extracts from the report of one of the inspectors of the Texas penitentiary.

The ex-convict stated that he was worked one year on a railroad and two years on a plantation, and confined two years in the walls of the prison employed as a cook. While on the railroad the convicts worked from early dawn until dark, their rations consisted only of corn bread and boiled beef. The least neglect of duty or disobedience was punished by the lash, wooden racks, etc., and as many as two hundred lashes were often applied at one time. The wooden racks were made in the shape of a cross, with the addition of a movable iron pin placed in the lower part of the upright beam. The victims were placed astride of the iron pin, which was so adjusted as to barely allow him to touch the ground with the tips of his toes, and his arms were stretched and securely fastened to the ends of the cross beam above. In this position the victims would endure the most excruciating agony for an hour and upwards, and when taken down from the "horse" their manhood would be often crushed. In many instances they would remain forever afterwards utterly imbecile. On the plantations the punishment chiefly inflicted was the lash, and when a convict escaped he was generally recaptured by the bloodhounds, and always severely bitten and torn by the dogs when caught, in order to make the hounds more ferocious and untiring when in pursuit of a fugitive. On one occasion this ex-convict says that a prisoner who had been twice recaptured by the dogs in his attempts to escape was on the second recapture brought back to camp, and placed inside of an inclosure, and his fellow convicts, twenty-eight in number, drawn up in line in plain view; the bloodhounds were then turned loose upon him, and he was torn and mangled by them to such an extent that he died in a few days afterwards from the effects of his wounds. Sick convicts were forced to work as long as they were able to stand, and when they fell fainting from the effects of the intense heat of the sun, and the heavy labor, they were often cruelly beaten and taken back to camp, where, for the want of medical treatment and attention, the majority of them would die in filth and awful suffering. I will not undertake to give you any thing near the sickening details of the cruelties inflicted upon the convicts as narrated to me by this ex-convict, nor can I remember the number of convicts he says were killed during his confinement. I think however he stated that he witnessed the killing of eighteen prisoners. Under the laws of Texas, the testimony of a convict cannot be taken or admitted as evidence in any of the courts of the country, hence no matter how brutally they are punished or maltreated they cannot appeal to the courts for relief.

The guards or overseers who maltreat and murder the convicts under their charge are not likely to turn State's evidence against each other, therefore there is no remedy for these outrages against these unfortunate wretches. Though the testimony of a convict is not allowed in the courts, yet I shall now show that the evidence of this ex-convict is more than substantiated by legal testimony from men whose positions enabled them to see and know something about the inhumanity practiced upon colored convicts.

About one year ago one of the guards employed to guard and oversee prisoners working outside of the prison became so disgusted with what he saw while on duty that he resigned his position, and made some startling disclosures under oath of the horrible barbarities and inhuman punishments inflicted upon the colored convicts while he was a guard, and in his presence.

His statements were published and illustrated in some of the newspapers of the country, and no one ever attempted to deny their truthfulness, therefore I shall refer to what he said and published to the world, viz: "On one occasion, a sick convict calling for medicine and water was so severely beaten by one of the guards that he fainted, and to restore him to consciousness the guard threw a shovelful of red hot ashes and live coals upon him. * * * Constant and unremitting labor from daylight until dark was extorted and wrung from the convicts by every species of punishment that human malignancy could invent. * * * The sick would die for the sheer want of attention. * * * Rags and vermin were all the convicts had to cover them. Starvation was often resorted to, and the convicts were not at any time more than half-fed, their food consisting of the coarsest corn bread with the bran baked in it, and beef often spoiled or badly tainted. Convicts were shot down for the least insubordination; and often driven to frenzy and madness they would sometimes offer resistance in order to force their guards to shoot them down, and thus end their horrible sufferings."

J. K. P. Campbell, one of the inspectors of the Texas penitentiary, in his report made on the 31st day of January last to Governor Coke, says: "I regard it as unfortunate that the Legislature did not appropriate the necessary funds to commence the construction of the two additional penitentiaries, and I would recommend that it be done at an early day, on the assembling of that body in April next. The number of convicts received and registered here for the year ending August 31st, 1875, averages 81 per month, making 972 received in one year." Referring to the condition of the penitentiary, the report says: "The buildings are all in bad repair. * * * Nearly all of the roofs leak. During last year, after a continuous rain, I have seen the cells in the north end of the prison dripping with water, and hence unfit to be occupied, yet prisoners do occupy and sleep in them. * * * The ages of the convicts vary from 11 to 69 years of age, and full one third are under 25 years of age. The great majority of convicts employed in agricultural labor are NEGROES; all those employed or hired to PLANTERS ARE NEGROES.

"It now being impossible to confine within the walls of the prison all prisoners on hand, outside labor is a necessity, and as there is no law authorizing the working of convicts outside of the walls except upon public works, I would suggest that a law to that effect be passed. * * * At many of the outside camps the lash has been very freely applied, and from all I can learn very cruelly. * * * At the Lake Jackson plantation I saw three trusty convicts whose backs were cut to pieces in a most shocking manner. * * * The lash has been freely used at the farms in Walker county. You cannot convict or punish the guards for their brutality to the convicts under their charge for the want of witnesses, because our laws prohibit the testimony of any person who has been convicted of a felony." (See Paschal's Digest of the Laws of Texas, article 3109.)

In regard to the rations furnished convicts the report says: "At one of the plantations in Brazoria county, where the planters have hired some 80 or more convicts, the food sent to 24 men for dinner could have been consumed by four or five men. The most rations were hog chitterlings, with a portion of the excrement still on them, and only half cooked. No coffee, sugar, tea, or milk is given to convicts. The rations furnished are generally corn bread and beef." In regard to clothing the report further says: "At many of the camps I visited no washing had been done for weeks, because the prisoners had but one suit per head, and they and their quarters were filled and reeking with vermin, and having no changes of clothing they had to endure their filth and vermin as best they could. Shoes are seldom or ever furnished at all. * * * The clothing consists of cotton stripes about as heavy as common osnaburgs—pants, shirt, and jacket. No underclothing or socks are furnished, and the clothing is the same, both summer and winter. At the Lake Jackson plantation the convicts had not changed their clothing for ten weeks, and their lower extremities were naked. * * * They are not well supplied with bedding; the convicts in some instances have only a straw mattress, with no blankets or covering of any kind, and are thus often compelled in winter to sleep upon the bare boards and cover with their mattresses."

In regard to the manner in which escaped convicts are recaptured, the report says: "From the camps at which BLOODHOUNDS are kept very few prisoners escape, and if they do escape they are soon caught. I will simply state to your excellency that at some three or four camps bloodhounds are kept for the purpose of hunting down escaped convicts." Referring to the manner in which the sick convicts are nursed and treated the report says: "As a general thing the sergeants of outside camps treat the sick. * * * This is, to say the least of it, an economical plan. Last fall a convict who had been sick at an outside camp with the pneumonia for a week or more was brought to the prison, and died in less than twelve hours after his arrival in the prison. No physician had visited him at the farm. In another case a convict who had attempted to escape was shot in the body and was kept on the farm where he was wounded a week or more after he was shot, and that, too, in warm weather. He, too, died in twenty-four hours after his arrival at the prison hospital. With the proper treatment he would have recovered, because his wound was not necessarily mortal. The prison hospital is a very unsuitable building and should not be used for that purpose. It is just over the bake-oven and cook-house, with a metal roof overhead. I have been in this hospital during the summer months, when the heat was so great that it almost cremated the unfortunate sick confined there. I have been told by convicts that they had rather remain in their cells, when sick, and be neglected, than to be placed in the prison hospital. *

* * At the Lake Jackson plantation I found 65 sick out of a force of 185. These men had no medical attention at the time, and occupied the same building with the well convicts; and the attention required by the sick prevented the other men from obtaining the sleep required by laboring men. On visiting the prison force at work on the Overton and Henderson road I found 53 sick out of a force of about 200. * * A great many convicts who have died or been killed are buried along the line of this road."

Speaking of the number of hours' labor required per day of the convicts the report says: "In the summer months the convicts are worked from daylight until dark, which is about thirteen hours per day."

The report further shows that in one year 109 convicts died, 28 were reported killed, and 182 not accounted for. Perhaps the majority of the 182 were also killed. In one year Governor Coke has pardoned 96 convicts, 15 of whom were convicted for murder or manslaughter, 52 for theft, 5 for rape, 2 for arson, 10 for an assault with intent to murder, 8 for swindling, forgery, and other offenses. Out of this list I do not think there are many colored names, if any. Governor Coke doubtless believes that all negroes should and ought to be placed into some form of slavery. This executive clemency is bestowed only upon genuine Democrats, and in proof of this I will present two cases in which his pardoning power was invoked and asked for by petition, and the result of the petitions. Last year an old colored man upwards of 78 years of age was convicted and sentenced to two years' imprisonment in the penitentiary for voting twice, though the evidence upon the trial of his case clearly showed his innocence. The sentence was considered so unjust that a large number of both whites and blacks signed a petition showing the injustice of the verdict of the jury, together with the great age of the old man, but no attention was paid to the prayer of the petitioners, and the matter finally ended by the negro dying on some of the farms before he had served out six months of his time. This old victim of Judicial Ku-Kluxism was previous to his conviction an active and outspoken Republican worker, and on days of election took an active interest in distributing Republican tickets among his own color, and exhorting them to be unwavering in their fidelity to the Republican party. Now for the other case: A short time after the conviction of the freedman referred to a young white man was tried and convicted for murder and sentenced to five years' imprisonment at hard labor in the penitentiary. Although the murder was clearly proven, yet before he had served out six months of his time he was pardoned by Governor Coke. This was because his parents were wealthy, and influential Democratic politicians and attorneys signed his petition and urged his pardon. These two cases are personally known to me.

The wholesale conviction of freedmen for trivial and pretended crimes, together with the hellish cruelties and brutalities inflicted upon them while convicts, when compared to the manner in which white men guilty of higher crimes escaped punishment altogether, clearly shows that the members of the White League and Ku-Klux organizations when serving as jurors understand how to acquit offenders of their own orders, and how to convict freedmen, whether guilty or not. I suppose that not less than one thousand negroes have been murdered in this State by white men since their emancipation, and yet there is not an instance on record where a single one of these murders have been punished at all for such crimes. On the other hand a freedman who murders a white man seldom escapes capital punishment.

Sometimes the mobs cannot wait for the sentence of death to be executed upon a negro murderer. Some time in June last a negro murderer, who had been tried and sentenced to the gallows for the murder of a white man in Milson county of this State, was taken from the county jail (after the sentence of death had been passed upon him by a legal tribunal) by an armed mob supposed to be about 200 in number, and burnt to death. There was no excuse for this brutality, because the murderer was securely ironed, and confined within an iron cell, the walls of which were double. Besides being closely confined in a strong jail, he was surrounded by guards both day and night, and there was no chance of escape. The sentence of death would have been executed upon him in less than eight days after he was taken out by the mob and burnt. Notwithstanding the large number of the mob engaged in this horrible outrage, not a single one of them have been arrested, and I doubt very much whether any future grand jury will ever investigate or notice the affair at all, because it is more than probable that pains will be taken to stock the grand jury for several terms with the perpetrators of the outrage.

I could recite several other instances of the horrible cruelties practiced upon the negroes of the South, but think it unnecessary, because I have already fully substantiated by proof—which I respectfully challenge any one to truthfully deny—that the Ku-Klux and White League organizations of the South, by subverting law and the courts of the country, carry out under color of law the very purposes and objects sought to be accomplished by their disguised midnight assassins in their past deeds of murder and arson upon the white and colored Republicans of the South. It is an indisputable fact that to-day there is a political South corresponding with the late Southern Confederacy, and wholly antagonistic in every respect to the loyal States of the Union, which overcame the rebellion. Gradually but only too surely the leaders of the late Southern Confederacy are once more resuming complete and almost undisputed power over the new political South. The great masses of the late conscript soldiers of the rebellion still blindly follow and obey the behests of their old leaders. Nothing is left undone to throttle Republicanism, and to subvert all of the objects and acts of reconstruction. Thousands of white men, warned by the constant and unremitting persecution of Republicans, dare not vote or act with the Republican party. To-day at least one-fourth of the freedmen in this and probably other States cannot vote the Republican ticket, and I doubt not but that the same or even a larger proportion in other Southern States are either intimidated from voting at all, or are forced to vote the Democratic ticket. The loyal people of the North and West cannot know anything near the extent of the fearful persecutions and bloody tragedies enacted against the Republicans of the South by the Ku-Klux and White League organizations, because nearly all of the press of the South is controlled by these organizations. Hence not one tenth of the political murders is ever published, and where such crimes are exposed the press palliate and excuse them. The basest falsehoods and calumnies are daily invented and widely circulated against Republicans by the press of the South, while on the other hand their midnight assassins of Republicans are either openly applauded on their crimes concealed. Did not all of the Democratic press of the South sneeringly deny the existence of the Ku-Klux organizations until their infernal crimes were well established by the conviction and confession of many of the members of the Ku-Klux Klans? I do not charge that every Democrat of the South is a member of the Ku-Klux Klans or White League, but I do charge that all of the members of these lawless combinations are members and the most zealous supporters of the Democratic party, and that the very purposes and objects of these organizations is to suppress the further growth of Republican principles by murder, persecution, and other unlawful means. Any one is badly mistaken who thinks that these organizations do not number a very large membership, and to-day are well organized and ramified throughout the South.

Well may the Republicans of the South tremble at the base possibility of these Ku-Klux and White League leaders and their allies of the North once more assuming control of the National Government. In that event the lives of the white Republicans would not be safe a single moment, while the so-called liberties and rights of the freed-men would be wholly disregarded and swept away. Notwithstanding all of the dreadful persecutions and bloody tragedies enacted against the Republicans of the South, not an instance can be shown where they have ever organized into secret societies for the purposes of revenging their innumerable wrongs and retaliating them by resorting to midnight murder, arson, and rapine upon the Ku-Klux and White League assassins. The Republicans of the South may have been guilty of wrongs, but granting the truth of all charges made against them by the Ku-Klux organs, even then these wrongs would be trivial indeed when compared with the wholesale crimes of the Democracy. When we remember that many of the old leaders of the Democracy under the reconstruction acts of Congress availed themselves of the opportunity while the Republicans were in power in many of the Southern States to obtain official promotion under pretense of conversion to Republicanism, we cannot wonder at peculation, fraud, and corruption in some of the reconstructed State governments. The majority, if not all, of these pretended Republicans have, upon the restoration to power of the old Confederate element, returned to their old party fealty, and to-day the Republican party of the South is no longer cursed and dishonored with the men who have brought past discredit upon the cause of human liberty and progress.

CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATIONS.

Investigations occupy a large space of the public attention at the present time, not however on account of the disclosures which are made in consequence of them, but from the sensational manner in which they are conducted, and the paltry partisan, and the wholly unjustifiable purpose by which they are instituted. Investigation, examination, search, with the desire to obtain important information may never be challenged. This is one thing; but when there exists a foregone determination to affix a stigma upon a party or an individual, out of revenge, or to promote the party advantages and prospects of a rival organization, it is quite another thing, and becomes fully as pernicious as in the other case it is beneficial. In the one case the object is a desire for needed truth; in the other a determination to create scandal, regardless of truth. When the latter is the animating purpose, the method must correspond to the design, and secrecy, trickery, detraction, insinuation, aided by more or less invention and downright lying, necessarily take the place of fairness, honor, and a sacred regard to innocence and personal virtue.

In order to determine, therefore, the nature of the purpose which is at the bottom of any investigation there is no need to look beyond the methods employed in conducting them, and if they are found judicious, patient, open, and just to parties implicated it may be inferred that behind them stand uprightness, judicial impartiality, and that patriotic regard for the public welfare which is high above all party and personal considerations.

In relation to the investigations now going forward, it is well known that the Democratic majority expressed beforehand an intention to blacken the character of the Administration, and to drive investigation into every crack and crevice and corner for the discovery of material to render it obnoxious to the people.

The method has exactly harmonized with this avowed intention. In the first place the House committees were studiously selected with a view to investigation rather than public business. They were organized and proceeded to business by the unusual and informal manner of proceeding without the knowledge or the presence of the minority, by examining witnesses in secret, by giving no chance to the minority to ask questions, and to obtain explanations which could clear up or modify the dark features of the testimony or expose the tergiversation and lying and perjury of the witnesses; by shutting out the public and the press; by giving out and perverting for publication the most damaging portions of the evidence, in many cases unaccompanied by mitigating testimony, or facts which were in flat contradiction thereof; by the use of witnesses manifestly influenced by revenge and malice, more or less of whom were of infamous or, if not, of doubtful character for honesty and truthfulness, and some of whom confessed to having been hired to manufacture lies and accepted payment for various iniquities involving theft, fraud, and perjury, and, worse than all, by exaggerating the stories, and getting into the papers most given to falsehood and unfairness accounts of the same entirely at variance with the record and the general tenor of the developments.

Such has been the method of these investigators from the start, showing lowness of intent, simple, naked, vulgar partisanship, without manliness, without openness, without candor, with a reckless disregard of the honor of the country and private right to the last degree unworthy, indecent, and unjustifiable.

In the Belknap case the Democrats on the committee examined Marsh without the knowledge of Bass and Danford, the Republicans, coached him to suit themselves, and then, after a cursory rehearsal with these members present, the chairman aided him to get out of town in the first train, in a manner strongly suspicious of impropriety at least, and utterly at variance with the demands of the public good, which could only be met by the President coming to the rescue and getting him back through a promise of immunity for rascalities which he had confessed perpetrating. The cases of Bell, Webster, Whitley, Nettleship, partly fools, but largely rascals, are illustrations of the same nature, and are too well known to need particularizing here. We merely allude to them as confirming the view taken at the commencement of this article. Now, the history of the two parties in the last fifteen years shows that the Democratic party in its present role is not on its native heath, and is neither doing justice to itself, to the Republicans, to the country, or to the cause of free institutions. Historically the Democratic party is not an investigating institution, and the Republican party is, the records being abundant in evidence on these points, and admitting of no cavil or doubt. The Republicans have never desired to shield rascals, and notwithstanding many infamous villains have seen their way to gain through its ranks, and some Republican officials have not been able to resist the temptation of the times, the general elements of lawlessness and iniquity do not take kindly to the organization, and on election days its strength in our large cities, or elsewhere, is not found in the thieves' dens, low grogeries, and kindred establishments, its newspapers are not found in such places, but what literature they submit to have around is furnished by Pomeroy's Democrat and the feeble imitators of that vile sheet, all of whom get their support from other than the Republican party. This is an unwelcome truth, but too well known to be seriously disputed. As a result of this condition of things, rascality per se, the Democrats do not much investigate. Only Republican rascality excites their virtuous indignation, and this not because it is rascality, but because it is Republican.

Looking back a little, this will be found to be so. They find twenty thousand dollars, not Government money, but the profits of a post-tradership, taken by Belknap a high crime and misdemeanor worthy of impeachment; but the Democrat who is to move the impeachment of John B. Floyd, Democratic Secretary of War, who stole guns, ammunition, arsenals, and munitions of war by the million dollars worth, has not, after the lapse of fifteen and a half years, yet put in an appearance. They are alarmed at the alleged thievery of Robeson, not proven, and ready to despair of the country on account of it; but the Democratic Secretary of the Navy who handed over to the enemies of the country ships, steamers, clothing, navy-yards, houses, and other property by the wholesale, has not yet provoked any Democrat to put on record a motion for resolutions of censure. The bond-stealing Secretary of the Interior, Jake Thompson, awaits in calm patience the Democratic committee which is to investigate him, by no means anxious that his case, though long first in order of time, shall be concluded before Delano has been overhauled and punished.

And there are other cases quite pertinent to this inquiry. Many people can remember when Andy Johnson was President, and that office-brokers thronged the White House selling patronage right under the peculiar nose of that illustrious functionary; when pardon-brokers, not always of the most proper sex or immaculate reputation, were disposing of pardons for money under the same olfactory and eminent protection, until the country sickened with the scandal and nauseated at its very mention, and when other offenses were charged of so grave a nature that these seemed almost too insignificant to speak of, and an investigation before a high court of impeachment was proposed by the Republicans, every Democrat voted against it, and not a mother's son of them gave his voice in favor of calling him to account. The Democrat and carpet-bagger Steedman was made collector of New Orleans, and defaulted in the sum of half a million, and other Democratic collectors stole enough more to make double the amount of losses under the four years of Johnson to the four years of Lincoln and the seven years of Grant; and though Johnson never pursued one of them, and no committee of Democrats ever made inquiries for them, Johnson was welcomed to the Senate as a Democratic brother who came in with skirts cleaner than the driven snow, and his Administration was pointed at as one to be remembered with affectionate and permanent regard by all lovers of purity and all friends of governmental reform.

The notorious sale of pardons by a disreputable female who was in high favor with the White House clique, and went in and out at the Executive mansion, did not seem to detract in the least from the high respect and steadfast friendship of Democrats for Andrew Johnson, and they never allowed any vulgar rumor or any positive charges to excite them to action intended or calculated to establish the proof of these things, or any others in that connection.

The cases of extravagance and improper use of funds by Democratic officials are too numerous to be even mentioned in this article. A few must suffice. Take the celebrated McGarraghan case, which some people pronounced a fraud and some thought otherwise, but in which Judge Black, Buchanan's Attorney General, paid an almost unknown, obscure lawyer named Hartman the sum of $19,000 to prosecute an appeal, which the Supreme Court instantly threw out as worthless. This was before the war, when that sum was as valuable as $35,000 at the present time, or ten thousand dollars more than the amount deemed proper by the present House of Representatives for the compensation of the President of the United States, and yet thrown away in a worthless case upon a common lawyer by the United States Attorney General, has never stirred the righteous indignation of Hiester Clymer, Proctor Knott, or any one of the present guardians of the public interest in search of wrong-doing in high places.

Or take the case of that eminent Democrat, Hon. Nathan Clifford, who, from the 18th of March, 1848, to the 6th September, 1849, one year and about five months, drew for services in Mexico the snug little sum, as personal compensation, of $31,259.20 in gold, when, according to the opinion of Mr. Randall's committee, $10,000 per annum is ample compensation for a minister to the Court of our Southern neighbor.

The case of James Buchanan, who, discovering an error in the adjustment of his account as Minister to England, informed the Department that he could not conscientiously take the money, let it lay in the Treasury to his credit for five years, and until his retirement from the Presidency, and then, during the civil war, when the Government was in a strait for funds, sent a demand to the Comptroller of the Treasury for the money to be remitted to him at Wheatland, may not be commonly known, but is suggestive of the high tone of Democratic virtue, as manifested by the representative men of that party when they hold the high places of Government.

When the annexation of Texas was mooted by the Democratic party that interesting nation was much in the condition of the ancient prodigal son or his distinguished successor in disposing of the circulating medium of the country, his Highness the Prince of Wales, and had out scrip amounting to the sum of ten millions of dollars which was worth nothing, and nominally quoted and sold in the market at about fifteen cents on the dollar. As Texas was played out nationally and financially she was annexed by joint resolution; that is, we resolved to grab her bodily, and all the arrangement of terms was a bold, unblushing farce, designed to permit of the manipulation of this ten millions of dollars in the interest of the men who were to furnish the votes for annexation. An abundance of Texas scrip was accordingly supplied to parties in the city of Washington, and was set floating about the halls of Congress within easy reach of members whose votes were to determine the annexation with the privilege of the country paying eighty-five cents loss on every dollar of the ten millions. The Democratic Congress considered this a good trade financially, and they closed the bargain in a hurry. The moment the resolutions of annexation passed every man knew that Texas scrip would be worth par, dollar for dollar, and we will not so insult the common sense of this country as to affirm that the men who saw what a good trade they were making for the country did not also see what the scrip would be worth the moment Uncle Sam assumed the obligation to pay it. Did a Democratic Congress ever inquire how many members who voted for annexation were holders of this worthless scrip, and voted a fortune into their own pockets, for which every man, woman, and child in the United States were compelled to pay taxes until the whole ten millions were sponged out of them? This, the foulest robbery, the unblushing swindle, was also the most astounding instance of bribery and corruption that ever disgraced the annals of a nation, and the Democratic party with a majority in both houses never raised a committee, never summoned a witness, never called for any body's books, and never put anybody in jail for connection with the affair.

These cases are notorious, and they prove conclusively that the Democratic party is not by instinct, or intention, or habit what may be called præ-eminently an investigating concern, notwithstanding the recent symptoms of zeal in that line which have been manifested by the committees of the present House. It has confined itself exclusively to investigating its opponents, and when nothing can be done in that line it goes at once out of business and is heard from no more.

With the Republican party it has been different. The Republicans do not defend scoundrels because they may belong to the party. We are not disposed to assert that all has been done which should have been in exposing frauds and correcting abuses, but as a general thing the party has not spared its own friends. Andy Johnson was elected by the Republicans, but the moment he betrayed their confidence and commenced his games in chicanery, they went for him, and his scalp was only saved by the solid vote of the Democracy.

When it was alleged that there were heavy frauds in connection with the Choctaw and Cherokee indemnity, the Republicans were prompt to create a committee of investigation, who made an elaborate report, and gave a full exposé of the whole thing, without whitewashing a single member of the party. When it was alleged that Samuel A. Way, one of the richest men in Boston, Moses Williams, Wm. F. Weld & Co., the heaviest merchants in Boston, and Phelps, Dodge & Co., and the Clafins, big Republican merchants, were undervaluing goods and depriving the revenues of the country of the proper legal duties, they were all, at once and promptly, compelled to answer in court or pay the penalty provided by law. When there were responsible men found making charges against the directors of the Union Pacific Railroad, did not the Speaker of the House leave his chair, take the floor, make the case a privileged question, and bring in a resolution demanding an investigation; and did not that committee present resolutions of censure against Oakes Ames, who had been a large contributor to campaign funds, and disgrace him before the public?

And the Republicans have raised committees to investigate the conduct of the war, the Ku-Klux affairs in Mississippi, affairs in Louisiana, the post office defalcation in New York, the Board of Public Works in the District of Columbia, and given a unanimous vote for the impeachment of Belknap. Have they not prosecuted the distillers of crooked whiskey, sent Joyce and McDonald and Avery and McKee to prison, and created general consternation all along the line of illicit manufacture of spirituous liquors? Have not the robbers, Seth Johnson, Hodges, Halleck, Hartwell, Ottman, been arrested, tried, and punished? Has not the unanimous voice of the Republicans in Congress been given for the impeachment of Belknap, and does not the utterance of Grant, "let no guilty man escape," find a cordial and unanimous response from the press and rank and file of the party?

It would not be strange that the President and others should find it hard to admit that men whom he and they have been on intimate relations with can have been guilty of crime, and slow to accept as proof the statements of malicious and unworthy persons which have been made against such officers. This is but human nature, and is defensible. It is the same honorable trait which causes a wife to doubt the guiltiness of an accused husband, and to suspend judgment against him until the evidence admits of no doubt. This is no proof of complicity in crime, nor is it proof of an intention to screen the guilty and defeat the demands of justice. The Republican party has shown its disposition to expose fraud and punish the wrong-doers. It is the only party that has done this, and its tendency and the tendency of its opponent are widely apart, and too clearly marked is the line of distinction to permit any mistake in the premises. It exposes and punishes its own partisans with the same rigor that it metes out deserved justice to Democrats who smuggle themselves within its fold for the purpose of theft and plunder.

The general demoralization of society has affected official life, and many men have fallen, many unsuspected officers have been found unworthy; but, after all, the Government loss has been small, and, allowing for the difference in the magnitude of business since the war, the losses have been less than under other Administrations, while the detections and convictions have been far greater, owing to the fact that the Republican party is the enemy of speculation, and wherever the frauds and swindlers are found intrenched it makes an immediate move upon their works, and compels an unconditional surrender.

THE OFFICIAL CLERICAL WORK IN THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The immense business of the Treasury Department at Washington fairly staggers calculation when looked at in the aggregate, and few experienced clerks in ordinary mercantile houses can form any conception of its vastness or of the system by which it is accomplished. Most persons have an idea, however, that not much is done in that great granite pile, and that whatever is done is so insignificant that a single individual, called the Head of the Department, has his eye on the whole machinery, and personally superintends the labor performed, and keeps within his head an accurate knowledge of all that transpires. The total force in the Department varies from time to time, and may be stated at somewhere from 2,000 to 2,500 persons. The working force is divided into offices, with clerks ranging from 10 to 250, among whom the work is apportioned, each office having its separate and appropriate functions and duties. By taking a single office, and that a small one, one of the smallest in the Department, and examining its machinery and operations, we shall be able to conceive some idea of what the institution must be as a whole, and we shall be able to judge whether the labors are of much or little importance. When the Committee of Appropriations presented the bill for cutting down the compensation and reducing the force in the Department, Mr. Mann, the Deputy Fifth Auditor of the Treasury, prepared a statement of the business of that office, and a protest against the proposed reductions affecting his bureau, which answers very well as an illustration for our present purpose, and which is here subjoined:

PROTEST AGAINST THE REDUCTION OF SALARIES IN THE OFFICE OF THE FIFTH AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY.

The proposition to reduce the clerical force of this office by abolishing the two heads of divisions and making a total reduction of nine employes, will, if carried out, do the office great injustice, and be likely to seriously injure and retard the public business. There can be conceived two reasons only why any discrimination should be made, neither of which apply to the office. These are, that, the office being small, heads of divisions are not required, or the work is of that unimportant character that less capacity and responsibility in the clerks is demanded in the conduct of business.

In regard to the first reason: It appears, from the organization of the other bureaus where the work is of importance, that a principal clerk is provided for each ten or twelve of force, viz:

Office.	Force.	Principal clerks.
Second Comptroller	48	4, being 1 to 12.
First Comptroller ..	39	4, being 1 to 10.
Commis'er Customs	21	2, being 1 to 10.
National Banks	19	2, being 1 to 10.
Supervising Arch't.	9	3, being 1 to 3.
Fifth Auditor	28	0

If any reason can be given why each ten clerks in these other offices require a chief or supervising principal clerk that does not apply to this office it is not known to me.

In regard to the second imagined reason, I have to say that there is no auditing office of the Treasury which, in the complicated character of the work and the amounts adjusted, seems to call for a higher order of clerks than this office. All the accounts with foreign ministers, secretaries of legations, consuls, and commercial agents are adjusted here.

These officers have the privilege of making drafts from time to time on the Departments of State and Treasury, which they sell to bankers, and which come to the Treasury through third parties. In order to prevent losses by overdrafts and improper drafts, the state of the accounts has to be examined and considered by the clerks in this office, and the clerks in the Treasurer's office have no check on errors or overdrafts, but must pay the sum called for by the warrant. This business must be seen to by careful, accurate, and reliable men. The accounts of ministers, chargés, and secretaries exceed $300,000 per annum, contingencies $77,000. The accounts of consuls for compensation are over $540,000, for fees about $700,000, loss by exchange $8,000, relief of seamen $44,000, extra wages $47,000, estates of persons deceased abroad $21,000, and sundry other accounts of a miscellaneous character, which last year amounted to about two and three-quarter millions of dollars.

The foreign accounts are made up in foreign countries as various as the countries where our officers are stationed, and the exchange is constantly varying, requiring clerks of judgment and capacity to attend to the proper adjustment of them.

The internal revenue last year was $110,000,000, the customs $157,000,000. But the customs revenue is collected mostly in a dozen principal ports, while the internal revenue is from one hundred and sixty-six districts in the interior, and employing thousands of officers, who are paid by fees, commissions, special allowances, salaries, and per diem. The nature of the business is such that many collectors have to be changed frequently, suits have to be instituted, and the accounts for suits have to be made up by the clerks in this office; and when they are tried the district attorneys, judges, and juries, not being acquainted with accounts, have to be instructed by the clerks who settle them. The case of the Government depends wholly upon the capacity and integrity of the clerk who appears as a witness, and upon the explanations he can give. This requires the highest order of ability, and through the blundering of an incompetent clerk the Government might in a single case lose more money than would pay the proper salary of half a dozen good clerks for as many years. There were made up in this office last year sixty cases for suit, involving great care and much labor to get them into such a form as is required to enable the court and jury to comprehend them. Besides these there were eighty-eight final adjustments of an intricate nature, involving the revision of accounts of the whole of the collectors' term of office, covering from one to fourteen years' service.

I find by the records that, for the four years which ended with the close of the Administration of Mr. Buchanan, the average force of this office consisted of eight clerks, and that they adjusted during the period 5,261 accounts, being 167 accounts annually for each clerk. For the four years ended June 30, 1875, there were adjusted 56,670 accounts, on which were employed an average of twenty-six clerks, the other clerks being employed in counting coupons, copying and recording reports, examining the records and tax-lists of the direct tax commissioners in the insurrectionary States, and other casual and incidental work; making an average of 544 accounts per year for each clerk, being more than three and one-fourth times the amount performed during the former period, allowing the accounts to average the same in amount of labor required. In point of fact, however, the accounts require more labor than formerly. Those of the diplomatic and consular division are about the same, but the internal revenue accounts are much heavier. The total sum passed upon in 1861 was less than one million dollars, while in 1875 it had reached to six hundred and seventy-eight millions. (It will be understood that a considerable portion of this appears in three accounts, and is therefore involved three times; also, that sometimes a clerk may work months on a single account, and can settle several each day of another class; but this affects equally both periods.)

Appended is a classification of the accounts adjusted in this office, an examination of which will show that the work is neither small nor unimportant:

Classification of Accounts Adjusted in the Fifth Auditor's Office.

United States foreign ministers.
 United States consuls.
 United States consular agents.
 Relief of destitute American seamen.
 Passage of destitute American seamen.
 Contingent expenses of State Department.
 Publishing the laws in pamphlet form and in newspapers.
 Expense of editing the Revised Statutes, &c.
 Expenses of rescuing American citizens from shipwreck.
 Stationery, furniture, &c., for Department of State.
 Contingent expenses of United States consulates.
 Contingent expenses of foreign intercourse and missions abroad.
 Books, maps, and lithographing for Department of State.
 Salaries and expenses of tribunal of arbitration.
 Survey of boundary between United States and British Possessions.
 Salaries and expenses of the United States and Spanish Claims Commission.

Salaries and expenses of the United States and Mexican Claims Commission.
 Maintenance of the light-house at Cape Spartel.
 Awards to British claimants and expenses.
 Salaries and expenses of Court of Alabama Claims.
 Interpreters to the consulates in China, Japan, and Siam.
 Marshals for the consular courts in Japan and China, Siam and Turkey.
 Rent of prisons for American convicts in Japan, China, Siam, and Turkey, &c.
 Interpreters, guards, and other expenses at the consulates at Constantinople, Smyrna, Candia, Cairo, Jerusalem, and Beirut, in the Turkish Dominions.
 United States bankers' accounts, London.
 Expenses of the eighth and ninth censuses.
 Contingent expenses office Commissioner of Patents.
 Photo-lithographing for Patent Office.
 Plates for Patent Office Official Gazette.
 Copies of drawings, office of Commissioner of Patents.
 Tracings of drawings, office Commissioner of Patents.
 Expenses of packing and distributing official documents.
 Preservation of the collections of the surveying and exploring expeditions.
 Contingent expenses of the Post Office Department.
 Compensation accounts of collectors of internal revenue.
 Revenue accounts of collectors of internal revenue, which includes statements prepared for suit against defaulting collectors, involving much labor and care.
 Disbursing accounts of collectors of internal revenue to United States storekeepers.
 Salaries in office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue.
 Miscellaneous expenses of Internal Revenue Bureau.
 Counsel fees and expenses, moieties and rewards.
 Salaries and expenses of supervisors.
 Salaries and expenses of revenue agents.
 Salaries and expenses of surveyors of distilleries.
 Fees and expenses of gaugers.
 Taxes erroneously assessed and collected.
 Fines, penalties, and forfeitures received and disbursed by the Secretary of the Treasury.
 Moneys refunded on lands sold for taxes and redeemed.
 Moneys refunded under private acts of Congress.
 Moneys refunded, tax on spirits destroyed by fire.
 Moneys collected in insurrectionary districts refunded.
 Direct tax accounts of States and commissioners.

Disbursements of direct tax commissioners.
Certificates for drawbacks on merchandise exported.

Commissioner of Internal Revenue for revenue stamps for distilled spirits.

Commissioner of Internal Revenue for revenue stamps for tobacco, snuff, and cigars.

Commissioner of Internal Revenue for revenue special tax stamps.

Commissioner of Internal Revenue for revenue beer stamps.

Commissioner of Internal Revenue for revenue adhesive stamps.

Expense of engraving and printing stamps by Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Expense of engraving and printing stamps by bank-note companies.

Expense of stamp paper, &c.

Redemption of internal revenue stamps.

Agents' accounts for adhesive stamps sold.

In view of the facts herein presented, I respectfully protest against the reduction proposed in the pending bill, feeling satisfied that it cannot be carried out without detriment to the service.

THE POVERTY OF THE SOUTH.

Southern Democratic newspapers, Congressmen, and other vehicles of such public opinion as exist in that section, are continually "exalting their hour" over the poverty of the South. In view of the constant recurrence of good crops, the increase of manufacturing industries, the additional amount of bank capital reported for several years past, the growth of small farms, towns, and retail stores, etc., in all directions, this outcry does not seem to be well grounded. The last cotton crop, now being marketed, has already reached to 3,813,000 bales, and will probably reach an aggregate of 4,500,000. There has been an increase of 440,000 bales exported over the preceding crop. Prices have not ruled high, but are not unprofitable.

The truth is that the outcry about Southern poverty has a two-fold source: one is political, and the other is of the social class or caste character. Take the latter, and it will be found that the growlers are the former plantation barons and their dependents, who have been unable to adapt themselves to the new order of things, and as a rule are poorer than they were. For political reasons the Confederate Democratic leaders are continually encouraging the cry of poverty, sectional and personal, among their associates and followers. It increases the hostility to the Union, or rather the national party and sentiment, on the existence of which the "lost cause" sentiment is fed.

The Congressional branch of this talk is adroitly managed. Two points are aimed at. These are to relieve the South as far as practical from the payment of taxes or revenue to the General Government. Hence the reduction of the force needed to collect the taxes on whisky, tobacco, &c. But little can, however, be done in that direction. The other branch is very industriously worked. The Congressional Record shows the activity of the men who attempted to destroy the Union in the present endeavor to plunder its Treasury.

Southern war and other claims to the amount of many score of millions are all ready. The House has already passed a bill restoring thereto Southern men who were borne on the pension-rolls in 1861. The Confederate brigadiers all voted for the payment of arrearages.

An attempt has already been made to put in train a measure to secure the refunding of the direct war tax on lands collected under the act of Congress of August 5, 1861, imposing a tax of $20,000,000 upon the various States, under which nearly $16,000,000 were collected. A resolution was offered and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, where an examination showed the purpose of the Confederate proposer. The law provides that any State or Territory might assume the duty of collecting the tax and pay its proportion into the National Treasury, in default of which it became the duty of the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint commissioners to make the necessary assessments and collections. All but Colorado and the eleven rebel States assumed the responsibility, and paid their quota, except New York, Wisconsin, Kansas, California, Colorado, Washington Territory, Utah, and Oregon, from which there is a small unadjusted balance due the United States, amounting in the aggregate to $1,237,317. This balance will undoubtedly be properly settled, but the ex-rebel States do not show well, as the following table illustrates ;

States.	Quota.	Uncol'd.
Virginia.....	$937,550	$260,396
North Carolina.....	576,194	173,144
South Carolina.....	363,570	140,869
Georgia	584,367	502,167
Florida.....	77,522	71,027
Alabama	529,313	529,313
Mississippi	413,084	343,137
Louisiana	385,886	75,022
Texas	355,016	197,055
Arkansas	261,886	102,983
Tennessee	669,498	66,654
Total	$5,153,886	$2,661,776

Recapitulation.

Balance due from loyal States.....	$1,237,317
Balance due from rebel States.....	2,661,776
Total	$3,899,093

In 1865 the collection of the tax was suspended until January 1, 1869, but no further attempt has been made to renew the collecting. The design of the measure is not only to save the ex-rebel States from the uncollected amount of $2,661,776, but also to pay back the $5,153,886 already collected from them.

A kindred measure is that to secure a refunding of the cotton tax—over $60,000,000 in amount. The powerful lobby behind this scheme have shrewdly kept it back during the present session, but it may be expected to reappear next winter, to be urged with great persistency in the closing days of the ex-Confederate House.

Other measures, such as the extravagant appropriations for Southern rivers and harbors, the Southern Pacific and related railroad schemes, with their demand for guarantying interest to the extent of $400,000,000, are being urged as measures of relief for the poverty-stricken South. Their refusal will be as persistently presented as a proof of Northern and Union hostility to that section.

Both views are false. The South is not poverty-stricken, and the loyal North is not hostile to that portion of a common Union. The country is everywhere suffering from a partial paralysis of business ; but the South is, on the whole, better off than any equal portion of the agricultural North and West, all other things being considered. The ex-rebel States paid out for wages to farm laborers alone, during the year 1875, not a cent less than $120,000,000. In former days this large sum was converted to the use, in the main, of the 300,000 persons who owned the slaves, and of the small class of free workers, etc., created by the system. Of course the old South—the privileged few—are not as rich, but the masses are better off than ever before, be those masses white or colored. The poverty of the South is but little more than a party cry. Fair investigation will prove this assertion. It is as well not to be deceived.

THE following figures show to what extent the English Parliament legislates, and how extended is the habit of "special" legislation. The measures designated as "local bills" are simply acts of incorporation, or laws to the same effect. It is shown by a recent Parliamentary paper that the capital by shares and loans on the 266 local bills presented in a recent session was 49,944,307*l*. In 1866 the number was 634, and the capital 175,490,646*l*; in 1867 the number 321, and the capital 42,638,775*l*; in 1868 the number 228, and the proposed capital 25,207,356*l*; in 1869 the number 212, and capital 29,221,706*l*; in 1870 the number was 244, and capital 23,676,499*l*; in 1871 the number 280, and the capital 29,719,190*l*; in 1872 the number 304, and the capital 86,444,831*l*; in 1873 the number 334, and the capital 86,893,943*l*; and last year 281, and the proposed capital 63,365,240*l*.

The effect of this pressure for local and special privileges is the same as in the United States. It creates powerful lobbies, whose attorneys are known in London as parliamentary agents, and it brings into the electoral field ambitious and scheming barristers and shrewd business manipulators, who get into the House of Commons as members for the sole purpose of forwarding their profitable schemes.

THE DAWN OF JUSTICE.—After months of laborious investigation, and a heavy outlay of money, the Democratic House of Representatives have found scarcely anything to justify the wholesale charges which the opposition had raised against the Republican party. Its administration of power has been marked by integrity and ability, and the more its opponents investigate the more clearly is this claim established. Human government cannot be faultless, but the management of public affairs by the Republican party has more than justified the faith of its early friends. It has been true to freedom, true to the nation, and true to the people who have trusted it.

DOMESTIC COMMERCE.

Two important documents were published to the world in 1776. One was of a purely public character, the joint effort of the wise and good men of that period, entitled the "Declaration of Independence of the United States of America;" the other was the work of a single man, a poor obscure Scotch professor, under the title of the "Causes of Wealth of Nations," by Adam Smith.

It has been confidently asserted that had the last mentioned production been issued fifty years earlier the first would never have been written; for the causes which led to its composition would not have existed, or if they had arisen would have been remedied without the arbitration of arms.

It was a lack of the simple acknowledgments of mutuality of service that led to the separation. It was an almost inexcusable ignorance of this powerful auxiliary of national prosperity that created the wrongs out of which grew the Revolution. Had these principles been understood as laid down by Mr. Smith in his treatise, had they formed a part of the common education of the English law-makers of that period, no such results could have been reached.

Commerce, whether between individuals, states, or nations, exists and can be maintained only because of the benefits arising to each party through the exchange. Had the British ministry comprehended the vast magnitude of this interchange of products there would have been no interference with, or restrictions placed upon colonial manufacture.

The persistent enforcement of measures calculated to cripple the energies and resources of the new country, to make them subservient only to the interests of the English aristocracy, threw obstacles in the way of a free exchange of commerce, provoked revolution, and the result was a confederation of the States.

These erroneous theories, perverting the true nature and functions of trade by substituting stringent and unreasonable exaction, were particularly noticeable in English statesmen of a century ago; and a similar spirit of incompatibility to the higher grades of national development largely influenced the actions of Great Britain up to within the last ten or fifteen years.

Through all the various enactments for the government of commerce this injurious and false idea stands out conspicuous, that what one nation, or community of the same nation, gained by an interchange of commodities another must lose: and not only was this contracted view of the subject inculcated in English dealings with foreign countries, but enforced between different sections of the empire. The policy of England toward her American colonies was of this character, and here we have an illustration of the dangers arising from the restriction of the control of public affairs and the rights of suffrage to the privileged few.

For many years England was governed by this class, by men whose claim to rule was mainly founded upon the possession of property. War at this time was a prevailing occupation, and the profession of arms wielded a potent influence, carrying its successful votaries to the highest distinction. It was a period when the management of the Empire rested with the fortunate few, ostensibly for the safety and welfare of the many; while in fact it was the debasing of the many, and the aggrandizement of the favored few.

Engaging in mercantile pursuits was scarcely respectable, and the tradesman was looked upon as occupying a social position too low for recognition. In this condition of landed privileges, and of lineal bigotry, many of the great commercial and manufacturing centers of the Kingdom were unrepresented in the Government.

The success of the American colonies in achieving their independence was a lesson the English nation did not readily comprehend, and for half a century following struggled on with the same international notions, putting forth every exertion to control the commerce of the world. Gigantic wars were inaugurated and prosecuted with vigorous determination in the mad career to restrain and cripple this powerful source of internal wealth. These efforts, however, served only to burden the people with enormous taxes, which even to this day retard the progress and are the main causes of the poverty of so large a portion of the inhabitants of the British Isles.

It was fifty years subsequent to the publication of Mr. Smith's "Wealth of Nations" before the more enlarged ideas of commerce, as set forth by him, began to be understood and a reform to commence. About this period, under the lead of Huskisson, a series of modifications and changes were inaugurated, which have in a measure relieved England from the meddlesome and ill-advised legislation previously so conspicuous; and yet only within a very few years has English commerce been truly free and prosperous.

As late as 1820 it is said there were over two thousand enactments on the statute-books of Great Britain unrepealed which had been enacted at various times for the regulation of commerce; but the strangest of all strange things is, how England should have held to and maintained for so long a period these ruinous theories while such an example in the opposite direction was presented in the history of the Dutch Republic.

Heedless of the benefits a change of policy was certain to bring, a spirit of jealousy seems to have taken possession of the English law-makers, and increased vigilance was manifested in opposing with even more stringent measures fundamental principles that should have enlisted their hearty co-operation. This bitter determination to rule or ruin led to two expensive wars, and produced the first funded debt of the Empire.

The same arbitrary disposition, the same ignorance of the true functions of trade, was imposed upon the American colonies, resulting in resistance and independence of the latter. Failing to acknowledge their error, blind to the benefits certain to arise from the most liberal encouragement of industry, the opposite was adopted, and another attempt made to coerce the infant country into the narrow gauge of their own limited views upon commerce. Resistance again ensued, and the war of 1812 followed.

Finally, by sheer force of progress, as developed through the common people in their deal one with another, in the same or between different communities, and in examples shown in the rapid advance of other countries, the English Government began to comprehend the malign effect their obstinacy to a unison of action in the furtherance of a more liberal policy in the interchange of commodities was having upon their own industries.

Under this pressure the more absurd ideas governing commerce were gradually laid aside, the more objectionable features repealed, and England began the advance toward a higher excellence in her restrictions, not only upon dependent colonies, but with the world.

Fully appreciating the importance of the Declaration of Independence, and the existence of a free and liberal government, the fact is patent that the great and unprecedented progress made in all the branches of national industry, as developed in the first century of the Republic, is but an imperfect realization of the principles of liberty and progress therein embodied.

Our forefathers severed their connection with the mother country because of obnoxious restrictions upon commerce, yet for years persistently clung to the errors that led to the separation; and notwithstanding the advance of the century, the "half way place" has not been reached.

The adoption of the Constitution, in 1787, incorporating a provision that, no State should enact laws to restrain, or in any way interfere with the exchange of commerce between the States, was the first important step looking toward a true union.

Previous to this period the vast territory comprising the several colonies was not free from petty regulations and laws respecting the interchange of commodities; and yet enough had been achieved through this imperfect liberty to insure the material wealth of the country, and secure its perpetuity even against the machinations and corruption of slavery.

Without entering upon any discussion, pro or con, with reference to the policy of absolute free trade between nations, or questioning the right to maintain a properly regulated tariff for the protection of home industries, a succinct treatise upon the subject of domestic-interchange of commodities will engage our attention.

It is important, in this connection, that we should fully understand the terms "Commerce" and "Manufactures." These words are often, and by persons of acknowledged ability, accepted as synonymous; yet to one whose conception of manufactures is confined to vast factories for the working of cotton, wool, iron and steel, has a very narrow conception of what constitutes the true manufactures of the country. Or, to one whom the word "commerce" suggests merely the thousand steamers, barges, and sails, laden with products, with goods, articles, and commodities of general use from far away places, plowing the ocean between foreign ports, has an equally faint and imperfect realization of what constitutes commerce.

Men serve each other through the interchange of commerce. It is a transaction in which both parties derive benefit, parting with an article not needed for one desired.

A prominent writer upon this subject says :

"True commerce in useful things lies at the foundation of human welfare, and unless a good and wholesome subsistence is possible, there can be neither spiritual, intellectual, nor æsthetic culture, and such a subsistence is only possible to the mass of men by means of an exchange of products."

Scattered broadcast over our fair land is a mighty host of free, industrious farmers, manufacturers, and artisans, plying their various trades and occupations, steadily swelling the great volume of commerce, which, under the benign influence and protection of a free people, is sweeping us on to a future excellence in the advance of science, of art, of self-government and self-reliance, as superior to that now attained as what we have reached is beyond the bigoted views of the mother country in her dealings with the colonies.

In order to obtain some idea of the extent of simply two branches of our domestic commerce tabular statements are annexed, selecting the champion county of each State and giving the number of establishments, the amount of capital invested, the outlay for materials, with the gross products:

MANUFACTURES.

County and State.	No. of establishments.	Capital invested.	Materials used.	Gross products.
Mobile county, Alabama.....	272	$1,099,435	$1,300,574	$2,760,390
Pulaski county, Arkansas.....	77	240,185	250,880	688,003
San Francisco county, California...	1,223	21,170,956	20,046,321	37,410,829
New Haven county, Connecticut...	940	29,445,640	22,054,303	45,156,181
New Castle county, Delaware.....	459	9,995,175	9,184,544	15,093,131
Duval county, Florida.....	105	419,450	1,090,425	1,883,225
Chatham county, Georgia.....	98	1,148,075	1,009,511	2,805,771
Cook county, Illinois.....	1,440	39,372,276	60,362,188	92,518,742
Marion county, Indiana.....	740	8,303,185	9,776,656	16,642,105
Scott county, Iowa.....	340	2,117,750	2,008,740	3,455,479
Leavenworth county, Kansas.....	220	1,187,148	1,101,743	2,411,073
Jefferson county, Kentucky.....	801	11,129,291	10,369,556	20,364,250
Orleans county, Louisiana.....	911	5,751,985	4,566,543	9,980,278
Cumberland county, Maine.....	676	6,121,547	10,905,522	16,557,581
Baltimore county, Maryland.....	2,759	26,049,040	36,144,425	59,219,933
Suffolk county, Massachusetts.....	2,546	47,311,906	59,384,305	111,380,840
Wayne county, Michigan.....	1,191	14,732,160	15,336,259	26,217,685
Hennepin county, Minnesota.....	314	3,908,550	3,913,214	6,810,970
Warren county, Mississippi.....	212	609,818	674,165	1,237,217
Saint Louis county, Missouri.....	4,579	60,357,001	87,388,252	158,761,013
Douglas county, Nebraska.....	229	1,127,555	1,254,323	2,968,747
Story county, Nevada.....	73	1,036,200	3,604,343	4,928,170
Hillsborough county, N. H.....	564	13,443,890	17,586,821	25,330,611
Essex county, New Jersey.....	1,198	22,606,662	29,255,062	52,108,958
New York county, New York.....	7,624	129,952,262	178,696,939	332,951,520
New Hanover county, N. C.....	93	943,220	1,427,829	2,069,804
Hamilton county, Ohio.....	2,469	42,646,152	44,876,148	78,905,980
Multnomah county, Oregon.....	307	1,573,875	1,297,847	2,698,817
Philadelphia county, Pennsylvania.	8,184	174,016,674	180,325,713	322,004,517
Providence county, Rhode Island ..	1,503	54,485,967	55,147,483	85,142,032
Charleston county, North Carolina.	224	1,538,539	1,264,731	2,431,763
Shelby county, Tennessee.....	757	3,155,957	2,738,062	6,644,137
Galveston county, Texas.....	91	710,950	678,980	1,214,814
Chittenden county, Vermont.....	300	3,760,520	3,643,707	6,537,230
Henrico county, Virginia.....	595	5,503,525	6,720,104	11,436,616
Ohio county, West Virginia.....	286	4,011,590	6,836,387	10,765,859
Milwaukee county, Wisconsin.....	828	8,109,199	11,649,995	18,798,122
District of Columbia.....	952	5,021,925	4,754,883	9,292,173

Quite as interesting an exhibit in agriculture as that shown in manufactures will be observed from the following table, selecting, as before, the county in each State producing the most, and giving the number of acres of improved land, the value of the farms, with the gross agricultural receipts:

AGRICULTURE.

County and State.	Improved land.	Value of farms.	Agricultural production.
Montgomery county, Alabama.....	222,200	$3,793,895	$3,403,332
Pulaski county, Arkansas.....	62,702	2,633,509	2,046,987
San Joaquin county, California	428,061	7,874,365	4,376,673
Hartford county, Connecticut.....	278,436	28,289,158	6,220,911
New Castle county, Delaware	203,167	24,573,079	4,004,098
Jefferson county, Florida.....	73,113	1,044,805	904,921
Houston county, Georgia	154,433	2,539,566	2,250,743
La Salle county, Illinois.....	533,724	25,274,479	5,502,502
Boone county, Indiana	126,942	8,974,665	3,814,552
Clinton county, Iowa	323,182	12,964,845	3,909,589
Douglas county, Kansas.....	94,852	6,689,989	3,514,452
Jefferson county, Kentucky	152,494	17,253,897	2,631,076
Tensas county, Louisiana.....	77,724	3,223,840	2,493,250
Penobscot county, Maine	297,263	10,324,213	3,880,532
Baltimore county, Maryland	226,040	29,181,762	3,447,945
Worcester county, Massachusetts	370,386	22,495,282	6,551,411
Oakland county, Michigan	336,060	25,554,239	5,154,231
Olmsted county, Minnesota.....	202,008	7,308,111	2,877,800
Washington county, Mississippi	70,119	6,002,270	3,818,040
Saint Louis county, Missouri.....	132,556	28,409,635	3,566,476
Cass county, Nebraska	65,195	2,886,152	1,408,406
White Pine county, Nevada	5,815	120,400	226,129
Merrimack county, New Hampshire	335,882	12,096,577	3,120,292
Burlington county, New Jersey.....	180,775	23,616,049	4,908,839
St. Lawrence county, New York	664,823	37,661,214	9,598,071
Edgecombe county, North Carolina	108,019	3,353,471	2,348,276
Hamilton county, Ohio.....	158,028	27,723,353	4,306,248
Douglas county, Oregon	132,657	1,791,723	674,094
Lancaster county, Pennsylvania.....	462,833	70,724,908	11,845,008
Providence county, Rhode Island.....	93,415	9,245,106	2,140,477
Barnwell county, South Carolina.....	383,140	4,589,974	4,099,460
Shelby county, Tennessee.....	164,431	9,987,974	4,169,342
Washington county, Texas	122,833	3,765,786	1,872,244
Windsor county, Vermont	398,106	13,193,240	3,479,098
Augusta county, Virginia	222,843	10,232,552	2,130,430
Harrison county, West Virginia.....	147,488	6,935,258	1,302,545
Dane county, Wisconsin.....	396,900	21,111,058	5,706,491

When we have added to the first table here presented the statement that the aggregate amount of capital invested in all the manufactories of the United States in 1870 was $2,118,208,796, yielding in gross $4,232,325,442, some realization may be had of the vast magnitude of this branch of industry; and to the last exhibit—that of agriculture—we append the fact that the gross product of the entire United States for the year named was $2,447,538,658.

The various interchanging of all these articles produced from the workshop and the farm constitutes the chief bulk of our domestic commerce; and it is estimated, from the best possible authority, that the aggregate values carried over the seventy thousand miles of railroad exceed $10,000,000 annually. And for this service, together with that paid as transportation of passengers, the sum of $526,000,000 was secured to the railroad corporations in 1875.

This commerce, over a country differing as widely as almost any section of the earth's surface in soil, climate, and condition, in rates of interest, taxes, and wages, has yet called into existence this immense system of railways, at an expense of not less than $4,000,000,000, and over which exchanges of goods were made in 1875 amounting to 200,000,000 tons.

In the production of cereal crops—the most important of all agricultural interests—the question of labor has ceased to be a matter of concern. The hard, persistent toil of earlier days is now neatly executed through mechanical inventions, requiring few field-hands in proportion to the amount of work heretofore thus performed. Had it not been for these new methods, supplanting the tedious, tiresome operations of other years by a system of horse-power and machinery, executing more work with less help than formerly, and doing it better even, the war for the preservation of the Union might not have been so successful. A large per cent of the million men at one time in the loyal army were from the industrial elements of the country, and had not the means been provided through the inventive genius of the age to make their places good on the farm and in the workshop a famine would have ensued, and there would have been no equipments or munitions of war for the army. Instead of this, the power of production and the facilities of transportation had been so largely increased that, had the fields and manufactories alone been considered, it would not have appeared that a single man was absent from his accustomed avocation. In fact, the war brought into existence new energies, new incentives to action, and at no time since the formation of the Government were the Northern States more prosperous in every department of home industry than during the four years of the slaveholders' rebellion.

There is one other prominent feature in our national growth which is worthy of notice as being closely allied to the advance of the higher departments of science. As a less number of men are needed in tilling the soil, a greater per cent. can be employed in the store, the factory, and in the studio. And in this there is an explanation of the greater relative increase of these industries over that of agriculture, necessitating a steady concentration of population in commercial centers. Men once engaged in professional, mercantile, or mechanical occupation rarely exchange it for the more hardy toil of the farm, while the country lad intuitively inclines toward the metropolis. It is in the order of events—from the very nature of our free institutions, where every man is the architect of his own future—that this concentration should continue. Ideas of life, in all its varied phases, have kept fully up with the advance of the age in other particulars. The slow plodding career of the farmer is illy suited to the rapidly developed purposes of the young men of today, and, throwing aside the dusty garments of husbandry, the boy turns his face toward the city. Eagerness for wealth and distinction, the allurements of popularity and applause, the spirit of independence and of self-reliance, were born with the rising generation, and you could no more stay the onward march than you could move the fixedness of the north star.

Notwithstanding this predisposition of our native-born youth to seek higher fields of general usefulness, the great prairies of the West, the broad expanse of our thinly-populated Territories, are being rapidly settled by solid, substantial sons of toil. Forests are being swept away, swamps drained, and fields of rich, waving grain deck the hills and valleys far away toward the setting sun. Cities, towns, and villages are springing up where a few short years ago the buffalo fed in undisturbed tranquillity, and the Indian roamed in all his native wilds; railroads are being built, highways constructed, and the white cottage of the thrifty pioneer dots the frontier with gems of industry, pressing on and on, until in a few more decades the eastern and the western slopes will have joined farms upon the apex of the Rocky Mountains.

A large per cent of these sturdy settlers are immigrants from foreign lands, to whom every courtesy and encouragement are extended, and who already are numbered among the most industrious elements of the country.

This is a fruitful theme, and full of interest, but being only indirectly connected with the subject under consideration, I leave it to take up, respectively, a few specific articles of commerce for a more thorough comprehension of their extent and importance in our midst.

It will readily be conceded that the aggregate result of all commerce is the compilation of small transactions. Take, for instance, the man or boy who leaves a half-pint of milk at your door every morning. This of itself seems a very small commercial deal, and yet it represents a commerce almost equal in this country to the aggregate sum of our foreign importations.

The system of cheese factories is purely an American invention. In 1857 Mr. Jesse Williams, of Oneida county, New York, erected the first establishment of this kind. In April, 1860, there were 21 in operation. In 1866 there were 500 in the State of New York alone, and the capital incidentally involved amounted to $40,000,000. In 1870 there were 1,300 factories in the United States, producing 55,000 tons of cheese, which, with the gross value of dairy products for that year, exceeded $400,000,000, and the exports of cheese for the same period were in excess of 90,000,000 pounds.

In 1870 the gross yield of the three principal articles was as follows: Milk sold, (to factories and customers for private consumption,) 235,500,599 gallons; butter made, 514,092,683 pounds; cheese, 53,492,153 pounds.

New York was at the head in this article of commerce, having 1,350,661 milch cows, producing 135,775,919 gallons of milk, (reported sold,) 107,147,526 pounds of butter, and 22,769,964 pounds of cheese. Pennsylvania was second, with 706,437 milch cows, giving 14,411,729 gallons of milk, (sold,) 60,834,644 pounds of butter, and 1,145,209 pounds of cheese. Ohio was the next on the list, having 654,390 milch cows, yielding 22,275,344 gallons of milk, (sold,) 50,266,372 pounds of butter, and 8,169,486 pounds of cheese.

The first cotton mill in America was erected at Nottingham, N. H., in 1770, by Mr. Arkwright, and worked by horse-power. In 1771 he built another, attaching water-power, and then still another in 1787. In 1807 the whole number of spindles in the United States was estimated at 4,000; in 1808 at 8,000. In 1815 the three States—Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut—had 165 factories and 119,510 spindles. In 1831, 795 factories and 1,246,500 spindles were reported for the whole country. In 1840 there were, in total, 2,285,000 spindles; in 1850, for New England States alone, 2,728,000; in 1860, (from total of census report,) 5,035,798 spindles, and in 1870, 7,114,000. In 1874 (July 1) there were 9,415,383 spindles, of which 8,927,754 were in the Northern States and 487,629 in the South. The cotton crop of all the States in 1791 was 189,316 pounds, against 2,000,000,000 pounds in 1859 and 1,204,798,000 in 1870. The total extent of our commerce in cotton manufactures for the year ending July 1, 1874, was 149,000,000 pounds of thread yarns and twines; 707,000,000 yards of sheeting, shirting, and similar plain goods; 306,000,000 yards of twilled and fancy goods, osnaburgs, jeans, etc.; 588,000,000 yards print cloths; 33,000,000 yards gingham; 30,000,000 yards ducks, and 6,000,000 bags.

The gross yield of wool for 1870 was 100,102,387 pounds, clipped from 28,477,951 sheep, being an average of 3.52 pounds per head. Ohio was the champion State in this article, producing 20,539,643 pounds, from 4,928,635 sheep; California 11,391,743 pounds, from 2,768,187 sheep; and New York 10,599,225 pounds, from 2,181,578 sheep. For the manufacture of woolen goods in 1870 there were 2,891 establishments, having a capital of $108,998,000, and yielding a product of $177,963,000.

The manufacture of silk has recently become an important branch of industry, and already is a prominent article of commerce. In 1870 there were 86 establishments of this character in the United States, having a working capital of $6,231,130, and using $7,817,559 of raw material. From this was produced 1,026,422 yards of silk goods; 3,224,264 yards of silk ribbon; 370,031 pounds of machine silk; 127,590 pounds of spool silk; 19,000 pounds silk thread, in all amounting to $12,210,662 in valuation. The annual yield has since doubled, and now reaches in value about $25,000,000.

Another quite extensive article of commerce, and also of late origin, is sewing machines. The ninth census puts down 49 factories devoted to this business, with $8,759,431 capital; $3,055,786 material consumed, and $14,097,446 in products.

Iron, in all its various forms, is one of the staple articles of commerce, and though at the present time there is a depression in this particular branch of industry, yet the production is of great magnitude, and upon the revival of business certain to succeed the establishing of the currency upon a basis in which full confidence in the integrity and good faith of the Government shall have been secured, the turnaces and forges, the blooms and the rolling mills, will again open to a new life and a greater prosperity than ever before. Our figures show the condition of this interest in 1870, prior to the crisis of 1873. At this date there were 82 iron blooms in successful operation, having $4,506,733 capital, and yielding $7,647,054 product. There were 310 rolling mills, with a capital of $54,774,615, receipts $120,311,158. Iron forges numbered 104, with $4,620,959 capital and gross return $8,385,669. Of pig iron there were 386 establishments, using $45,498,017 in materials, with a result of $69,640,498. In the construction of cast iron, 2,654 factories were at work, consuming $48,222,550 in materials, and yielding $99,843,218.

The manufacture of steel is also worthy of special notice. In 1870, there were 30 manufactories of this article, having an aggregate capital of $5,166,003, and producing 1,185 tons of puddled steel, 1,100 tons of blistered steel, and 28,069 tons cast steel.

The manufacture of pneumatic or Bessemer steel, chiefly in rails for railroads, is represented in the following statistics: In 1849, 24,314 tons; 1855, 138,674 tons; 1860, 205,038 tons; 1865, 356,292 tons; 1870, 620,000 tons; 1872, 941,000 tons, and 1873, 850,000 tons.

The traffic in and interchange of all these various commodities of manufacture and agriculture, together with the innumerable other articles, small of themselves, perhaps, but large in the aggregate, made by busy hands of amateur artisans, or worked by the needle of the industrious housewife during spare moments from her daily routine occupation, go to make up the vitality, the life of the nation, and constitute the great aggregate of domestic commerce.

This interdependence of the States, the free untrammelled exchange of commerce, and the service which each renders the other, is the potent power that has raised the country to a standard of wealth, of population, and of strength with a rapidity unprecedented.

The deep rich soil of the West produces such abundance that even now with all the means of transportation and intercommunication portions of the old crop are often retained on the farm till the ensuing year. And there are many instances where the farmer, far remote from railroad or water conveyances, can obtain but a trifling sum for his corn. Under these circumstances it not unfrequently is used for fuel. This is rather an evidence of economy than waste, for while it is the best, it is at the same time the cheapest he can obtain.

Here is where the swine is wholesomely fed; here is where that staple of the country is produced. Fattened upon corn, surfeited with unadulterated milk, the meat is solid, sweet, and good. These hogs when ready for market are gathered into droves, driven to the nearest railroad station, and shipped to the East, an ever ready and profitable market. Here, aided by that one crop so famous in New England—ice—the pork is prepared for consumption, then again shipped to the mechanic and workmen of the North, to the tradesmen and freedmen of the South, and to the artisans of the world wherever our ships of commerce float. This is not all: The blood carefully preserved at the slaughter-house, is dried to powder in a few hours by an ingenious process, and this sent to the Southern States, where it is mixed with the phosphatic rocks of the coast, and serves to increase the production of cotton—that staple which enters so largely into the wearing purposes of the common people. This is commerce; this is men, communities, and States serving each other, and yet each deriving benefit from the exchange.

One hundred years ago a small fleet sailed out of a New England harbor, laden with muskets, red flannel, beads, and tobacco. Their destination was the extreme northwest coast. On the voyage the cargoes were divided into bund'es, each containing a musket, a piece of flannel, some beads and tobacco. On the northern coast these articles were exchanged with the Indians for furs, the rate of exchange being one package for a bale of fur skins. This accomplished, the fleet sailed away for China. Here the furs were exchanged for teas, at equally as high a rate of profit as had been made upon the old muskets and flannel; and then, after a long, long interval, this pioneer commercial enterprise returned to Boston with the result—of the venture. Under this system of commerce tea was a luxury enjoyed only by the few. Now it is within the reach of all, and a general article of consumption.

To-day a telegram is received in New York from St. Petersburg calling for flour and meat for the Russian army. The merchant in New York on whom the demand is made telegraphs to San Francisco, and the articles required are promptly shipped from that port. A banker's credit, furnished by the Russian Government, is transferred in a moment to China, and the same day the tea starts from Canton for America. In a few short weeks this tea, having passed over the Pacific railroad, is being consumed by the productive element of the country; at the same moment the Russian soldiers are feeding upon the flour and meat given in exchange. This is modern commerce.

It has been truly said: "The end of all commerce is an abundant and general consumption, not only of the necessary articles of subsistence, but of the comforts and luxuries of life; and the material prosperity of the country is to be gauged by the amount of its annual consumption more than by the magnitude of its accumulation."

The attempt even to approximate the wealth and progress of the country by any system of figures or calculations is a difficult task. The report furnished by the Census Bureau is utterly fallacious taken by itself. There is but one true standard by which to measure substantial prosperity, and that is by the amount of life's comforts and luxuries which the wages of workmen, equal in intelligence and skill will purchase.

The amount of manual exertion that a hundred years ago served to procure a bare subsistence would now insure early competency and exemption from toil. The industrious craftsman now soon becomes the master. Commerce and invention, with the division of labor, have procured an abundance, and by separating the functions of those who work with the head from those who toil with the hands the common people are raised to a comparative competency.

The Republic has solved the problem of commercial success, achieved a triumph over the productive forces of nature, and the promises of future material wealth are indeed grand. All that is now requisite to a comfortable subsistence for man or woman are prudence, intelligence, health, and integrity.

WHY NOT NOMINATE ADAMS?

The Civil Service Reformers, so-called, have a very grand ideal, with a very indefinite plan, and a totally inadequate conception of the difficulties which lie in the way of the accomplishment of their desires. Some of their ideas are conflicting, some are impossible, and not a few are impracticable in a country like ours. In a late interview of Mr. Charles Francis Adams with a reporter we get at his notions of the matter in a very concise form, and his notions are fairly representative of his class. Not to use his precise language, his idea briefly is, that he is not a party man, and for this reason, he being qualified by character, talent, education, experience, and other requisites, is not wanted as a candidate for President by either party, and stands no chance whatever of getting the nomination. He has evidently a correct notion of the case. The fact is just so.

Now the leading Reformers, Bowles, White, James Freeman Clarke, and the others, are unanimously of the opinion that Adams, because of his independence of party, being otherwise qualified, is the very man who should be nominated. At the same time they concede the impossibility of nominating him by shouting for Bristow, who, though a good man, is admitted to be a party man, and must depend upon a party nomination to be elected. By this concession they at the start admit the impossibility of carrying out their highest ideal, their no-party plan, and of taking a candidate solely on his merits. Adams admits that he is not wanted.

They see that he is not wanted, and at once they commence to cater to the supposed popular taste or prejudice, or whatever it may be called. They are compelled to introduce the arts of the politician which they so much affect to despise. They find that there is a machine to be run, though they dislike machinery in politics very much. Indeed, the mission they started on was to abolish machine politics, and break down altogether the machine-runners; but they cannot take the first step without an organization, without committees, and funds, and caucusses, and they get up conferences, and lay plans, which, when laid by others, they stigmatize as "pipe." But the building of an organization they soon find is a great work, involving time and thought, and money and men, and as they have not these at command in sufficient proportion they wisely resolve to get the control of some existing organization, and use that to enforce the ideas which they have adopted. So far, then, they find themselves obliged to do exactly as the politicians do, and the very things which they denounce the politicians for doing. They have to manage, and it is management which is the offensive thing. They have to practice the arts of the politician, and it is those arts which have caused the mischief. They are opposed to stealing, and yet they begin by attempting to steal an organization.

By this we mean simply that they propose to take command of one of the two parties, neither of which they created, and which are in no sense their property, rather than to accomplish their ends by building up another organization. They will do as the others do in this respect, use a little judicious strategy.

This brings us back to the starting point, that, in a country like ours, the ideas and methods of these men are impracticable where they are not impossible. The case of Mr. Adams is settled simply by the fact that he is not wanted, and he is not wanted, not because he is not a good and able man and an accomplished statesman, and a person of integrity, but because he has not been a party man, and this leads to the consideration of the reasons for the disability. Why is a non-party man condemned? Is there any propriety, or any sense in it?

The reasons are ample and obvious—probably they are sound, as they are certainly effectual. At the outset we may say that government by the people implies that the people take a sufficient interest in affairs to look after them; that to most public questions there is a right and a wrong side; that in order for the government to succeed, and the people be satisfied with it, the right side must generally prevail; that the adoption of the right side by some and the wrong side by others creates parties; hence the very necessity for government involves the certainty of parties, and must as long as there is a wrong and right side, and people who adopt the wrong. In this condition of things the man who takes the wrong side is ruled out of the administration of affairs by the deliberate judgment of those who believe in the right. This is so sensible that even James Freeman Clarke and Carl Schurz propose to rule out Morton, Conkling, and perhaps Blaine, on that very ground, and if they do this, of course the great majority of people who are confessedly party men must do the same. Well, next to being on the wrong side of public questions, not to be on the right side is in public opinion an offense which cannot be pleasing. To be on the fence is not a popular lodgment. It looks like cowardice, or incapacity to judge, or weakness, or a sacrifice of principle to gain the support of God and the devil, or indifference to right and wrong that is disgraceful, or dangerous, or contemptible. In a republic a man is expected to show his colors, and he who does not do it is regarded as lacking convictions and earnestness, or else as being governed by sinister or unworthy designs.

Mr. Adams evidently assumes a superior merit for having occupied a position so lofty that few have been able to attain unto it; but because he has been neither cold nor hot, but lukewarm, have the people spewed him out of their mouths. His kind of merit is not liked. The people like frank and outspoken men, and they will not attach themselves to the man on the fence, to the man who is first on this side and then on that, who is wavering and unsettled and uncertain, and not to be depended upon.

It may be said that Mr. Adams is a man of such habits and character that he can be trusted. Trusted to do what? What is best of course. But this means what is best as viewed by Mr. Adams, and not what is best as viewed by the people themselves. It is an abdication of the function of government by the people to Mr. Adams, who is to be taken, not for what he represents of the people, but because he is independent of the popular influence, and boasts that he has always been on his own hook, and intends to be. The people feel this if they do not see it, and this is why Mr. Adams is the failure that he confesses, and that everybody realizes. They do not like that kind of a politician, and they ought not to. The man who goes to the caucus, who mingles with his fellow men, interests himself in their plans, and does his part toward helping on the movements of the time, shows that he is of the people and belongs to the people. The man that fails to do this is quite likely to be forgotten in proportion as he forgets his duties and evades his responsibilities, and manifests his indifference to the real work of political life.

It is the habit of the class of reformers to which Mr. Adams belongs to lament the retirement from politics of the scholars of the country, and it is claimed by them that the educated men do not have their proper influence in our public affairs. They ascribe this to the dismal fact that politics have fallen into vulgar hands and are so managed as to excite the disgust of the educated and refined and compel them to this course or to a sacrifice of their self-respect. But they mistake the fact altogether. The scholar is not excluded from politics only as he voluntarily excludes himself. The trouble is that these men, like Mr. Adams, when they are voted down, or give advice which is not accepted, or are chosen to the second place when they aspired to the first, not only get disgusted, but show their disgust, lose their tempers, and render themselves unfit for further use by the people. They become grumblers and scolds, and no-party men, and reformers, and sore-heads. They simply fall out of line and let the great army of the people march on without them. They seem to expect that the people are to do all the work and they are to come in and enjoy all the honors and emoluments. They decry politics as base and unworthy business, set the example of keeping out, and then go about weeping because the scholar is without influence, and things are going to the bad in consequence. This is all there is in that.

Admitting, therefore, that there must be parties, as we are compelled to so long as there is a wrong side in politics, the question of party management is the first one to be considered. The reformers have their plan, though they have not reduced it to a simple formula. It crops out in various newspaper articles and speeches, however, and there is no difficulty in arriving at what it is. The first point is not to have any caucus, and that instrumentality is denounced as unworthy if not base. But the caucus not being preventable, the next thing to do is to bolt its nominations unless you are absolutely suited, which being impossible unless yourself is nominated, necessitates a bolt anyhow. Beyond this there does not appear to be any settled principle save that it is deemed high evidence of wisdom to permit those who do not belong to the party to have the management of it, or at any rate to hold the offices and reap the honors.

It being so obvious that a party managed in this way is doomed to defeat every time, an argument is not needed. These men in 1872 forgot their first principle in their first attempt to get into power, and went into a caucus, but they rallied on the second, and bolted the nomination of poor Greeley, who forsook the practice of a long life to please them and secure a nomination; or a part of them did, while the remainder fell back on the reserve principle, and took into partnership all the old and confirmed enemies of reform to manage matters in case they had won a victory. How they would have managed had they obtained power can be seen by the way the same fellows have conducted the present House of Representatives, and comment is unnecessary. We need no further illustration of that method of managing a party.

To manage parties properly we must be guided by the results of experience, and that teaches the necessity of combining various elements, making more or less concessions to prejudices, to diversified interests; to arranging, in greater or less degree, the ambitions and the whims of men; the yielding sometimes to what seems notional, and the proper dividing of the honors and the emoluments of office among the different classes who are qualified, and by character and ability are fit to have them. No set of men can hold power in this country that neglects these things.

The eminent and learned gentlemen who lately met in New York to consider what is to be done assume that somehow they are the few righteous, and only by their wisdom can the country be saved. They were not delegated by anybody to meet and act, and they had nothing in common but the instinct of aristocracy, which demands leadership by virtue of a wisdom which is a pure assumption. Their wisdom, single or combined, has never originated a policy, and most of them are men who have tried to figure in public life and were not able to secure a constituency, or men who, on getting positions have been speedily kicked out. That they are honest men and good citizens need not be questioned, but they are too erratic and crotchety for party leaders, and they are too feeble to carry the country without the aid of party. They are for sound money, for the payment of the national debt, for having good men in office, but they would so conduct a campaign as to secure the election of men who are for unsound money, for repudiation, and who would fill the offices with the Hambletons, Smiths, Fitzhughs, and other fellows who are reckoned "bigger men than old Grant." They have the right to meet and use their influence for whom they please, but if they wish to have the government in the hands of the friends of national unity, respect for law, honest money, and honest payment of the debt, they had better keep in the background until the people call them to the front; a merit which they have thought worthy of mention as a good qualification in a Presidential candidate, but whose application to their own case they wholly failed to see; modesty not being one of their eccentricities.

REVIEW OF THE MONTH.

NATIONAL.

...The one event of importance during the month past has, of course, been the successful opening of the Universal Exhibition at Philadelphia, in commemoration of the first Centennial Anniversary of American Independence. Perhaps no one illustration will so vividly point the changes made during the century past than the position assumed by and the recognition accorded to the mother country, with which we were so sorrowfully at war one hundred years ago. The Second Continental Congress—the immortal assembly which adopted the Declaration of Independence—met at Carpenter's Hall, Philadelphia, on the Tenth of May, 1776, and on the Tenth of May, 1876, two hundred thousand persons, embracing representatives of every race and of most nations known to the civilized world, met in the beautiful Fairmount Park, in the midst of the myriad-gathered trophies of industry and utility, art and beauty, to greet the Nation's natal Century day. It is a notable fact that the foremost foreign guest should be Great Britain, and that here, on American soil, is gathered the amplest representation ever seen of the skill and industry, the genius, culture, and progress of the English-speaking peoples of the world. The American World's Fair is in truth the largest industrial possible triumph achieved of the Anglo-Saxon stock. John Mitchell once spoke of it as the "Anglo-Saxon bully that strides the world like a Colossus." The works here gathered are indeed colossal, however far removed, thank God! from the other attribute. The British government and people seem to have outvied all their past efforts in order to place in our midst the fairest and fullest representation to be had of their industrial, technical, artistic, and social life, progress, and skill. Not only the mother country, but all her wondrous brood of nurslings are with us—the giant children of the Australian Island-Continent; the patient and swarming Anglo-Indian communities from under the tropics, grave with the weighty task that is always with them; our neighbors of the near Canadas, and the nascent Confederation of South Africa, just pointing the way to the inevitable task that awaits the world's continent opener—the English colonizer—of bringing the almost unknown interiors of that continental peninsula, through traffic and travel, into close relations with modern civilization. It is fitting and fine, too, that the British exhibits should be only next to our own in extent, and that together we present such an evidence of the power for use, the capacity for civilization, the means of serving mankind, as none others of the great race stocks can excel, even if they anywhere or anyhow can equal. That the first social recognition should come from the representative here of Great Britain was appropriate, while it was pleasing to see how very generally the English Union-Jack—the flag of the nation—could be seen twined fraternally with that of the United States.

...We must not forget nearer lessons in the largeness of the cosmopolitan spectacle. One comes from the century's dawn, bearing the memories roused by the then most eloquent tongue of the land, and the other poured out in unbroken melody from the sweet-voiced solo singer on that wonderful opening day.

...When the Second Continental Congress met on that memorable Tenth of May, 1776, which was the forerunner of so much that is great, there rose in the assembly a man of rustic appearance and somewhat ungainly withal, who proceeded to address the delegates. It has been recorded that the Secretary and others, who knew him not, were annoyed at this rude stranger's apparent unfitness for the task he had assumed. "Fools," they thought, "rush in where angels fear to tread." But Patrick Henry's tongue, for it was he, touched with Promethean fire, soon held all spell-bound, as in grave but eloquent speech he pointed out the dangers and duties before the Congress. His closing sentence comes back with appealing force in these days and with recent and surrounding memories, clearly and solemnly across the "hundred-terraced height" on which we now stand: "As FOR ME, I AM NOT A VIRGINIAN, BUT AN AMERICAN!" Mingling and meeting therewith comes the music-breathing words of Lanier's cantata. Hark! how the poet through the singer's notes bears out and completes the lessons of that sentiment and of the mighty federative Republic which has arisen thereon. Columbia or the Century, whosoever may be the dramatic interpretation of the poet's apostrophizing voice, asks—

How long, Good Angel, O how long?

Sing me from Heaven a man's own song!

And then the reply comes, as is fitting, clear, alone, above all, and in the rare melody only of the human voice:

"Long as thine Art shall love true love,

Long as thy Science truth shall know,

Long as thine Eagle harms no Dove,

Long as thy Law by law shall grow,

Long as thy God is God above,

Thy brother every man below,

So long, dear land of all my love,

Thy name shall shine, thy fame shall glow!

Patrick Henry, the Virginian patriot, and Sidney Lanier, the Georgia poet, across the century, completely express the prophetic lessons of American history—safety and stability only through unity and liberty, even though those they may represent, past or present, have often been chief obstacles in the way of the final consummation which waits on our progress.

...There is one part of the opening ceremonies to which it would appear no exception can be taken. The speeches were brief and fitting—THE PRESIDENT'S being, as becomes him, simple and strong, modest and manly. But the music was in all respects worthy of the occasion. Wagner's great March would have been admirable, indeed, had Theodore Thomas been able to have secured and trained in time two hundred instruments instead of fifty. The choral singing, however, seems to have been regarded almost as perfect. Whittier's simply melodious hymn was given through the accompanying music with the effectiveness of some of the old and massive Gregorian chants. Lanier's cantata meets more adverse criticism, not musically so much as verbally. The poet was largely hampered by the necessities of his occasion, and of the medium through which to the multitude he was alone to be expressed. A great deal of cheap wit has been expended on the cantata as a poem—unjustly, too. It is, dramatically considered, a noble poem, somewhat mystical or transcendental in character and expression, and with its thought involved to some extent, and therefore lacking in the noble simplicity which best befits music. To that extent it was not wholly appropriate for the occasion. But after all the poet may not find ability to understand for all, even though he possesses that of expression. The attempt at witty criticisms are as a rule of the cheapest sort. Mr. Lanier, even if he did not rise quite to the occasion in clearness and simplicity, as he certainly does in originality and vigor, shows clearly that with artistic experience he is sure to meet all the demands the future may make on his genius.

POLITICAL CONVENTIONS—REPUBLICAN.

...The State Republican Convention of Massachusetts, held at Worcester, April 26, was a body marked by the ability and earnestness of the attending delegates. It selected a delegation at large for the National Convention, unpledged as to persons, and instructed only as to the character of the nominations. The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That this Convention leave the delegates of Massachusetts to the Republican National Convention unpledged and uninstructed in respect of individual candidates for President and Vice-President of the United States, but expects and requires them each and all to work and vote for those candidates, and those only, whose characters give unquestionable assurance to the whole country that they will be faithful and zealous to maintain the equal rights of all citizens under the Constitution, to bring about the resumption of specie payments at a date not later than that already fixed by law, and to effect a thorough and radical reform of the civil service, to the end that the administration of public affairs may be characterized by efficiency, economy, and purity.

...On the 27th of April, the Republicans of Arkansas held a spirited convention at Little Rock, by which body delegates were appointed to the National Convention and instructed to vote for Senator Morton's nomination as President. The platform asserts allegiance to the Republican party and the equal rights of citizens of the several States, without regard to birth, color, race, or previous condition; favors an honest and economical Government, and prompt punishment of official dishonesty, and good common schools; and charges the Democratic party with robbing the State of school funds.

...On the same day the Republicans of California met at San Francisco and selected their delegates, approving by resolutions the candidature of Mr. Blaine. The reports received show that the convention represented a reunited party. It adopted a platform expressing confidence in the Republican party; approving the prosecution and punishment of official dishonesty; deprecating Chinese immigration and favoring such a modification of the Burlingame treaty as will effectually prevent a further influx of Chinese; favoring a return to metallic currency, and the restoration of silver coin to its constitutional equality with gold as a legal tender, and the payment of the national debt in gold.

...The Republicans of Oregon met in convention at Portland, May 3d, and nominated for Congress, Richard Williams, and for Presidential electors, W. H. Odell, J. W. Watts, J. C. Cartwright, and Judge R. P. Boise. The delegates to Cincinnati were instructed to vote for Mr. Blaine.

...May 5th, the Georgia Republicans convened in Atlanta and selected delegates to the National Convention, as well as appointed State committees, general and executive. In both selections they appear to have been governed by the wish to secure the strongest men, most representative of their condition and circumstances. Colonel Bryant, of Savannah, was selected as chairman of the State Executive Committee. It adjourned without nominating a Governor or an electoral ticket, recommending a convention for that purpose to assemble in Macon before the first of August.

...The Maryland Republicans met May 4, at Frederick City. The resolutions adopted express gratitude that all investigations have failed to touch the honor and integrity of President Grant, whose administration has been wise, patriotic, and prudent in the reduction of the public debt, and the adoption of measures looking to an early resumption of specie payment. They pledge the votes of Maryland to Blaine as the candidate for President, and commend Bristow for his efforts to expose and prevent corruption. The delegates were directed to vote for Blaine as long as there is reasonable hope for his nomination.

...The Michigan Republican Convention which met at Grand Rapids, May 10, vied with that of Massachusetts in the c' of its delegates and the earnestness displayed. Delegates to Cincinnati were selected and left unpledged. The following was adopted:

*Resolved, That * *  While we are willing to waive personal preferences, our delegates must never consent to commit Republican principles to any standard bearer of doubtful position, or who does not in his own character afford assurances of practical economy, honesty, and purity in all matters of administration.

...The Republicans of West Virginia, at their Convention, Clarksburg, May 11th, complimented Mr. Bristow and indorsed Mr. Blaine's candidacy. Ex-Senator Willey and ex-Governor Stevenson are among the delegates selected.

...The Tennessee Republican Convention met at Nashville May 17th. Uninstructed delegates were chosen for the National Convention. A strong feeling in favor of Senator Morton was manifested. It was decided to postpone State nominations until after the Democratic Convention met in August.

...At Montgomery the Republican Convention called by the anti-Spencer committee, of which ex-Governor Smith is chairman, met on the 17th ultimo. It was decided to make nominations regardless of the other wing, and to select delegates to Cincinnati. This State is the only one that will have a divided delegation. The following nominations were made:—Thomas M. Peters, governor; J. J. McLemore, secretary of state; J. S. Clarke, attorney general; W. B. Harris, state treasurer; C. Cadle, jr., auditor; J. H. Houston, superintendent of education. Delegates at large for Cincinnati, and sixteen delegates from the eight districts were selected. No instructions were given.

...The Republicans of New Jersey met at Trenton, May 17, adopted vigorous resolutions, and selected delegates for Cincinnati. They were uninstructed, but are understood to favor Mr. Blaine.

...The Kentucky Republican convention met at Louisville on the 18th. The attendance was large and the delegates were enthusiastic. The feeling in favor of Mr. Bristow's candidacy was unqualified, but no instructions were adopted.

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTIONS.

...The Nebraska Democrats indorsed the nomination of Governor Tilden. They met at Lincoln, April 21st.

...On the 26th of April, Governor Tilden's convention met at Utica, New York. Morrissey and the anti-Tammany Democrats were excluded, John Kelly and the Tammany sachems ruling the convention. It was in session and adjourned, on passing what it was convened for, by electing a delegation to secure the nomination of S. J. Tilden as the Democratic candidate for President.

...The Oregon Democratic Convention met on the same day, selected its delegates to St. Louis, leaving them unpledged, though leaning to Tilden, and renominated Representative Lafayette Lane to Congress.

...The Georgia Democrats met in Congressional district conventions on the same date, and elected delegates to St. Louis. The general tendency was to indorse Gov. Tilden's candidacy.

...The South Carolina Democracy convened at Columbia May 4, one hundred and seventy-six delegates being present, representing all but two counties. The Grange element, which it is to be feared is being used in all the cotton States as a political instrument and for the wage-oppression of the colored laborer, was represented in the person of D. W. Aiken, master of the State Grange, an unreconstructed Confederate Democrat, who was chosen temporary president. The delegates to St. Louis were left uninstructed, and a platform of strict party character was, after heated debate, adopted.

...The Nevada Democracy, at their State Convention May 15, selected a delegation unpledged to candidates, Tilden and Thurman were the first and second choices of the delegates. Anti-Chinese resolutions were adopted.

...The Ohio Democracy met at Columbus May 17. The convention was large. A sharp contest had preceded its meeting, the friends of Governor Allen and Senator Thurman having worked hard to control it in behalf of their candidates. George H. Pendleton was selected as permanent chairman. Allen's friends carried the convention, adopting minority report. Two reports were presented, the majority (twelve) favoring a return to specie payment when it can be accomplished without serious business disturbance; also opposing a fixed day of resumption and urging that the charters of national banks be not renewed, legal tenders to be substituted for their circulation. The minority report demands repeal of resumption act; early substitution of greenbacks for bank notes; circulation to be issued only by the General Government; three-sixty-five convertible bonds; a graduated income tax and tariff for revenue only. It urged the nomination for President of Governor Allen. The following were placed in nomination: Secretary of State, William Bell; Judge of the Supreme Court, William E. Finck; Member of Board of Public Works, H. P. Clough.

...The Iowa Democrats met on the 17th and elected delegates to St. Louis. They were uninstructed. A resolution favoring early resumption was adopted.

INDEPENDENTS—GREENBACK—LIBERALS.

...State conventions were held during the month past in Detroit, (May 3,) Topeka, Kansas, (May 4,) Des Moines, Indiana, (May 10,) and at Nashville, (May 13,) by which delegates were selected to the (so-called) National Independent Convention that convened at Indianapolis May 18. This body represents the Greenback theorists. It has been manipulated in advance for Judge David Davis, of Illinois, who in 1872 was nominated by the Labor Reformers at Columbus, Ohio. Others favored straight nominations, and the names of Peter Cooper, General Benj. F. Butler, William D. Kelley, General Spinner, and Senator Booth, all of whom favor the interconvertible bond plan in some form, were brought forward as Presidential candidates. Two hundred and thirty-nine delegates, representing nineteen States, were present. Thomas J. Durant, of Washington, presided as permanent chairman. The platform favors an interconvertible bond, increase of currency, abolition of national bank circulation, and repeal of resumption act. Peter Cooper and Senator Newton Booth were nominated for President and Vice-President.

...A body of gentlemen calling themselves the Liberal Republican National Committee met May 8th at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York. A small number of those appointed as such committee by the Cincinnati Convention of 1872, holding proxies from others, were present. The inevitable Californian, promoted from an ex-Secretary of State to an ex-Lieutenant Governorship, (which he never held,) who has not been in that State to reside for nearly ten years, was a prominent member of the conference. Ex-Governor Warmoth, who is certainly without, politically speaking, a local habitation or name, was also among the confreres. This gathering must not be confounded with the "National Reform League," or indeed with John Cochrane's Liberal shop "over the way," which, it will be seen, repudiates Ethan Allen and his confreres. The following call was adopted, and afterward practically nullified by the resolution that follows:

The National Liberal Republican Committee appointed by the convention held in Cincinnati in May, 1872, being fully authorized so to do, hereby orders that a National Liberal Republican Convention be held in the city of Philadelphia on the 26th day of July, 1876, at 12 o'clock.

Each State is invited to send to such convention a representation equal to the number of its Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

All citizens who desire to perpetuate the national honor and the national prosperity; who are in favor of the equality of all men before the law, of whatever race, color, religion, or politics; who desire the permanence of the Union and the Constitution with the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments, and are opposed to reopening any of the questions of the late fratricidal war, long since regarded as settled; who believe that in time of profound peace the civil authority should be supreme; that the civil service of the Government should be so reformed that honesty, capacity, and fidelity shall constitute the only valid claim to public employment, and that to secure this no President of the United States should be a candidate for re-election; who believe that all laws of imposts should be for the purposes of revenue only, and adjusted so far as possible with impartiality as to all sections and interests; who are in favor of a speedy return to specie payment, as demanded alike by the highest considerations of commercial morality and honest government; and, above all, who are in favor of honest men at the head of the Republic to carry out honest measures, are cordially invited to join in sending delegates to this National Convention.

The present demoralized condition of the public service, the startling revela-corruption, and the consequent prostration of all industrial interests, more than confirm the warnings of the Liberal Republicans in the campaign of 1872, and have vindicated their efforts then made for national reform. The work of political purification then defeated yet remains to be done. In this work each elector, as a patriot, must perform his part. The citizen must rise above the partisan. Allegiance to country in this hour of trouble is a higher duty than allegiance to party. It is necessary that the peculator be eliminated as a controlling power in party politics, that office may again become the post of honor and not the avenue to crime. Both of the old parties have a pernicious history that makes them equally impotent for further public good. While all things are possible, it nevertheless seems improbable that reform will be secured "within party lines." While this is to be hailed with joy if accomplished, experience gives but little cause to hope for it. The reformed convict is not usually the best citizen, nor will a reformed party be the best exponent of morality. The party that badly needs reformation needs burial. Out of the ruins of both of the decaying organizations true reform must come, and in such a way that the conscience of the nation will approve; otherwise all efforts will be in vain. The nominees, in the purity of their characters, must be the guarantors of the principles they profess, and for their support when placed before the country we cordially welcome the co-operation of all patriotic citizens, without regard to previous political affiliations.

ETHAN ALLEN,

Chairman National Liberal Republican Committee.

Resolved, That if after the Republican and Democratic Conventions have been held in June next, one or both of these parties shall seem, in the judgment of our chairman, Mr. Ethan Allen, to have responded to the principles and aims of the Liberal Republican organization, both in measures and men, in that event our chairman, after further conference with this committee, is hereby authorized by proclamation to annul the call for a national convention this day ordered. But after said conventions, their actions being unfavorable to reform, he is empowered to take such action in furthering the call for a convention this day ordered as he may deem necessary.

...The New York State Liberal Executive Committee met the next day, and declaring that as "no Liberal organization is known to have survived in any State, except in the State of New York," that the committee thereof "fail to recognize the organized existence of the Liberal Republicans whom, in their national capacity, that body aims to represent and direct," and then

Resolved, That in view of the formidable influence with which events have invested the men of independent opinions in the politics of the country, and of the importance of unity of action in their efforts for reform, we advise the Liberal Republicans of the State of New York to await the action of the approaching conventions in Cincinnati and St. Louis, with the purpose of directing their support to any unobjectionable Presidential candidate thereby nominated, or in default thereof, of participating with other non-partisan or independent electors in whatever feasible movement shall seem to promise the delivery of our National Government and institutions from the ravages of corruption.

When the reform doctors disagree, how can the politicians succeed?

...Two really notable gatherings have been held in New York city. One was convened by a letter signed by Messrs. Schurz, Grosvenor, Horace White, and others who led in the Cincinnati movement. The other met at the call of the "National Reform League." The Republican party is nowhere, by platform, declaration, or action, in opposition to the views put forth in either call or expressed at the gatherings alluded to.

An address has been issued by the Reform League's Executive Committee, which reads as follows:

The National Reform League is a popular movement, intended to unite and transform into action that sentiment of the people which everywhere demands reform in the civil service and honest government.

In the accomplishment of its purposes it does not aspire to competition with either of the existing parties in the wielding of political power, but pledges itself to constant and earnest efforts for the overthrow of every influence, whether represented by parties or individuals, which has a tendency to foster or promote corruption.

As an organization formed by representatives from the different States it will seek to give such expression to the demands of patriotic and independent citizens as shall secure through the agency of the existing parties, or by such other means as it may be necessary to adopt, a policy in harmony with the best sentiment of the people.

Its members regard with alarm the state of affairs which permits the election of venal and incompetent men to positions of trust, the bartering, for unworthy considerations, of appointments to places of honor and profit, and the consequent shameful malfeasance in office. They look upon the corruption by which these things are rendered possible as a cause for immediate and indignant action on the part of the great mass of the people who do not recognize as their proper representatives the trafficking politicians into whose hands the management of the national affairs has so largely fallen.

They believe that the redemption of the country from the hands of those who have thus betrayed the trust of the people demands the exercise—through the existing parties if possible, independently of them if necessary—of a power vested in the hands of those whose utterances shall represent the intelligence and patriotism of the country; and whose work, uninfluenced by the hidden machinery of party politics, shall be open, honest, and thorough.

Thus believing the members of the National Reform League will stand pledged to the use of all legitimate means for securing the nomination and election to the Chief Magistracy of the nation, and to all minor offices, National, State, and local, of men who shall worthily represent the people and the institutions of the United States. * *

This is signed by Henry Randall Waite, J. G. Holland, Franz Sigel, George H. Putnam, R. Heber Newton, George Cary Eggleston, and Kinahan Cornwallis, of New York; James Freeman Clarke, Henry T. Cheever, and Henry F. Bishop, of Massachusetts; M. S. Dudley, of Connecticut; Samuel C. Anderson and R. W. Weeks, of New Jersey; John Sill, of Pennsylvania; James D. Browne, of Virginia; R. Brinkerhoff and M. D. Harter, of Ohio; and John W. Hoyt, of Wisconsin. These gentlemen compose the Executive Committee.

...At the conference held on the 15th May, under the Carl Schurz call, among the officers appointed were the following:

President—Theodore D. Woolsey. Vice-Presidents—G. G. Fogg, New Hampshire; C. W. Willard, Vermont; H. L. Pierce, Martin Bremmer, Julius H. Seelye, Mark Hopkins, James F. Clark, Massachusetts; Leonard Bacon, Joseph Cummings, Connecticut; R. Hazard, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Rhode Island; W. C. Bryant, John Jay, O. Ottendorfer, E. Salomen, Branford R. Wood, Cyrus W. Field, Charles Butler, and Samuel Osgood, New York; Thomas Balch, Henry Lea, A. M. Welsh, Pennsylvania; ex-Governor Miller, J. D. Cox, Ohio; Colonel Martin, Indiana; John D. Bryant and Robert Collyer, Illinois; M. M. Davis and F. W. Horn, Wisconsin; John McNeil and Joseph S. Rollins, Missouri. Secretaries—H. C. Lodge, Massachusetts; F. A. Walker, Connecticut; H. A. Brown, Pennsylvania; A. Thieme, Ohio; Thomas Clark, Missouri.

All the New England names are those of gentlemen who have always been identified with the Republican party. So also with most of those from New York. Ottendorfer has always been, and still is, a German Democratic leader. Mr. Rollins, of Missouri, has had no regular associations, sometimes acting with both parties, for a long time past. Nearly all the others who participated are still affiliated with the Republican party. It is worthy notice that however exaggerated may be the appeals made, yet all these efforts looking to reform come from those who are in full accord with the principles and policy under and by which the Republican party have accomplished so much.

There were a great many Jeremiahs in the assemblage, and a dismal picture was drawn. President Woolsey, who thinks honor does not belong to a Democracy, declared that the country blushed with shame. The meeting was to decide how to remove the blushes. Carl Schurz described himself and associates as on the fence, afraid of the mud on the either side. Dr. Osgood didn't like the odor from the White House and made a wry speech thereat. Mr. McVeigh thought the confreres were boys in politics and thought they would do better to be personal and definite. He wanted to recommend Mr. Bristow. Mr. C. F. Adams, jr., didn't see it, and would wait for a report from their committees. A Philadelphia Henry Brown declared that a rigorous course of politics had excluded every respectable man from office in that city. He forgot to mention that a rigorous abstention from voting by from fifty to one hundred thousand respectable citizens thereof had more to do with it. Dr. Bacon wanted the country's debts paid, and Professor Seelye did not believe the American people either "fallen or degenerated." There were some cases of corruption, but very few. A courageous, self-forgetting man as President would reform even these. Colonel Higginson thought the Re-party would do well, it only needed stirring up; and busy Wm. Welsh, of Pennsylvania, thought the people were not slaves but in the hands of office-seekers. The conference seemed to be a confusion of tongues, indeed.

After deciding against all Presidential making, the conference adopted an address, which begins by a declaration that no new party organization is sought. Most of those represented adhere to old and cherished associations, and would be best gratified by seeing candidates nominated having the requisites now esteemed imperative. But the moral reform of our public concerns is above all party considerations. The presentation simply of a choice of evils is a prolific source of public corruption. It renders possible that subtle tyranny of organization which must be broken. The address earnestly hopes that all efforts within party lines for reform may be successful, but is not hopeful to that end. Demonstrations must be made in their aid. An appeal is therefore made to all agreeing to organize, and manifest their opinion in or out of party lines. Let every effort be made to influence nominating conventions in the best way to aid the Republic's best interest. It closes and is signed as follows:

Our generation has to open the second century of our national life, as the fathers opened the first. Theirs was the work of independence; ours is the work of reformation. The one is as vital now as the other was then. Now, as then, every true man must have the courage of his duty.

CARL SCHURZ, Missouri, Chairman.

MARTIN BRIMMER, Massachusetts.

L. F. S. FOSTER, Connecticut.

PARKE GODWIN, New York.

JOHN W. HOYT, Wisconsin.

Published by order of the conference.

Signed by

THEO. WOLSEY, President.

If it were not irreverent, the parallel to the spirit of this occasion might be found in the parable of the Pharisee, who made broad his phylactery and raised his voice aloud, thanking God he was not as other men, even as this publican—Republican we should say the modern Pharisees meant.

...The Prohibitionists of Kansas have put the following ticket in the field: Governor, Col. John P. St. John; Lieutenant Governor, Wm. Fairchild; Auditor, Hon. P. I. Bone-brake; Secretary of State, M. E. Hudson; Treasurer, John Francis; Superintendent Public Instruction, Professor B. F. Mudge; Associate Justice, Judge D. J. Brewer.

...A National Prohibition Convention met at Cleveland, Ohio, May 17. The attendance was not large. Green Clay Smith, ex-Member of Congress from Kentucky, was nominated for president, and G. F. Stewart, of Ohio, for vice president. The platform adopted urged an amendment of the Constitution so as to make prohibitory legislation universal and permanent; conclusion of treaties with foreign Powers to prevent the importation of liquors; abolition of class legislation; reduction of rates of postage, telegraphs, transportation, and travel; suppression of gambling; abolition of polygamy and the social evil; national observance of the Sabbath; compulsory education; use of the Bible in the public schools; complete separation of Church and State; settlement of international disputes by arbitration; prison reform; direct election of the President by the people; protection and equal rights to immigrants; issue of paper money only by the Government, and redeemable on demand in specie; reduction of expenditures; and thorough investigation of corruption.

HYPOCRITICAL CLAMOR.—The country is about sick of the hypocritical clamor about political corruption. There is less now than fifty years ago. The standard of public morality is higher than ever before. If a few spots, ugly-looking to the eye, are found on the surface, it is because the people are searching for them. Never since the beginning of the Government have the people been so vigilant and so deeply interested in political affairs as at the present time. This has led to a higher standard of merit in public men. Officials who, twenty years ago, could have enriched themselves without detection can find no rest or comfort now. It is safe to say, that, considering the immense transactions of the Government, the vast interests involved, the hundreds of millions yearly expended, that the percentage of official dishonesty is smaller now than under the most favored period of our national existence. The cry of "Thief, stop thief!" comes from those who are thieves themselves, who hope, by raising a false alarm, to keep the vigilant eye of the people off their own rascally purposes. Depend upon it, this cry of public corruption comes either from Democrats who wish to get their arms into the public treasury, or from sore-headed politicians who see no chance of their personal promotion except through the formation of a third party, that shall be run in their interests and under their management.

WASHINGTON'S VETOES.

We are asked, "Did George Washington ever exercise the veto power during his Presidency; and if so, under what circumstances?"

Washington "exercised the veto power" twice. His first veto is dated April 5, 1792, and returns to the House of Representatives "an act for an apportionment of representation among the several States according to the first enumeration."

It was the first act under the Constitution for an apportionment of representation among the several States. In the House, (which embraced such men as James Madison, Elbridge Gerry, William B. Giles, Fisher Ames, Theodore Sedgwick, Fred. A. Muhlenburg, Nathaniel Macon, Thomas Sumter, and Thomas Tudor Tucker,) a very animated and interesting debate had occurred upon its passage, and the wide difference of opinion expressed witnesses the speculative character of the notions then held upon the subject by leading men.

The Constitution had fixed the minimum ratio at one representative to every 30,000 persons. According to that ratio under the apportionment of the new census the number of members of the House would be increased to 113, which some feared was dangerously large, and moved to strike out 30,000 and increase the ratio to 35,000, and to 40,000. A lively debate ensued.

Some urged that the existing representation was too small to secure the liberties of the country; that if the number be small a majority may be the more easily corrupted; that the people expected an increase in the representation; that an increased representation would be a security against corruption; and the necessary additional expense in the increased total of the pay of members would be trifling as compared with the benefits; that the expense would be more than compensated by the shortening of the session, as a larger number would have a greater capacity for work and by the greater security to the liberties of the people. Indeed, the existence of the Union might depend upon the fullness of the representation. Hence they favored the retention of the Constitutional minimum of 30,000.

Others again contended that an increased representation would positively endanger the liberties of the republic; that the total of pay would not only be increased, but the number of officers would be increased, and every man would wish his friend provided for; that corruption would necessarily be the consequence; that the corruption of the French Assembly was owing to its large numbers; that a very numerous representation would weaken, if not destroy, the State and Federal Governments; that an increase would divide and diminish the responsibility of the House, make it too unwieldy, and retard public business. Hence, they moved to increase the ratio of representation.

A jealousy or fear of the Executive cropped out strongly with some. The Federal Government was "already pretty highly seasoned with prerogative"—already overshadowed the popular branch, and with a small representation, and its manifold forces of corruption, would soon destroy its integrity. Others again saw in an energetic government the only guaranty of the blessings of liberty; but Mr. Giles was the strongest exponent of the Democratic notions of the period. He said:

"An inequality of circumstances produces revolutions in government—from democracy to aristocracy and monarchy. Great wealth produces a desire of distinctions, rank, and titles. The revolutions in property in this country have produced great inequality of circumstances. Government has contributed to this inequality. The Bank of the United States is a most important machine in promoting the objects of this moneyed interest. This bank will be the most powerful engine to corrupt this House. Some of the members are directors of this institution, and it will only be by increasing the representation that an adequate barrier can be opposed to this moneyed interest." * * * "The strong Executive of this Government ought to be balanced by a full representation in the House."

The result of the debate was the passage of a bill which Washington was compelled to veto, principally because it violated the Constitution "in allotting in eight of the States more than one in every 30,000."

In the House, the vote upon the passage of the bill over the President's veto was: Yeas, 23; nays, 33; Fisher Ames, Elbridge Gerry, Theodore Sedgwick, and Artemas Ward voting for its passage, and Wm B. Giles, Nathaniel Macon, James Madison, Fred. A. Muhlenberg, Thomas Sumter, and Thos. Tudor Tucker voting against its passage.

The second veto is dated February 28, 1798, and returns to the House "an act to ascertain and fix the military establishment of the United States," partly because it discharged from the military service men without providing means for their payment from the date of the law and that of their muster out, but chiefly because of the inconvenience and injury to the public interest by mustering out men engaged in a necessary and important service.

MUNICIPAL AND TOWN ELECTIONS.

The drift wood floating on a stream indicate often the force of the current. Straws, says the old adage, show which way the wind blows. With all due respect to the local self pride which may be affected by being looked at as drift wood or straws, it is worth while to note somewhat in consecutive order the results of the various local elections throughout the country during the past three months.

From the beginning of the current year (1876) the great majority of the municipal elections have, as is usual in the Presidential period, been decided on partisan proclivities and interests. It is not, as a rule, a good year for Independents, and the rule holds more than good at the present time.

The New England town elections all tended toward one point—an increased Republican activity. In New Hampshire especially their results clearly indicated the later triumph had in the State. In Connecticut, too, they gave reasonable hope of a similar result. The disappointment seems due to apathy and want of capacity in conducting the campaign. The Maine elections were very significant, the city of Portland, among others, being carried by the Republicans the first time for several years.

In the State of New York elections for supervisors are always closely watched by the politicians who "make slates" and forecast probabilities. Especially is this the case in the Presidential year. The Republican party made large gains, carrying nearly one hundred more supervisors than it did in 1875.

Along the whole line of cities and States, especially those regarded as doubtful, the Republicans made clear and positive gains.

In Michigan, for instance, where last spring the reaction almost reached to the "bed-rock," the political complexion of the supervisors elected is more than satisfactory. The results given in forty-six counties of that State as compared with last year will prove this. Counting the liberals and independents as Democrats, and in the forty-six counties alluded to the Republicans gained fifty-six supervisors. The totals were as follows:

	Total No. of Supervisors.
	1875.	1876.
Republicans.....	472	528
Democrats.....	333	279
Majority.....	139	249

The county elections in New Jersey follow, as a general thing, the same rule as those of New York. At the elections last fall, when members of the Legislature and sheriffs were to be elected, the result was an almost complete reversal of the Democratic gains of the year preceding. At the recent local elections the same result is seen. A majority of the counties elect Republicans.

Mercer county gave a marked victory. In Jersey City, the Republican mayor was elected by about 400 majority against a Democratic majority last year of 3,000. In Union, Passaic, and Morris counties the Board of Chosen Freeholders will be Republican.

But Indiana, as a decidedly "doubtful" State, has been watched with great interest. The results of the municipal elections therein surprise even the most sanguine Republicans. The city of Indianapolis was carried by a Republican majority of 4,315, and this, too, in the face of an apportionment expressly made by a Democratic Common Council to prevent it, and in despite of a violent riot designed to deter voters.

The Republicans also carried Lafayette, Fort Wayne, South Bend, Terre Haute, Laporte, Richmond, Rochester, Wabash, Franklin, Warsaw, Lebanon, Crawfordsville, Elkhart, Greensburg, Greencastle, Shelbyville, Kokomo, Bloomington, Connorsville, and Madison out of the twenty-five principal places in the State. Plymouth, Valparaiso, Logansport, and New Albany alone were carried by the Democracy. In Shelbyville, usually Democratic and the home of Governor Hendricks, the Republicans carried every ward. There were many other changes quite as striking.

Similar reports come from all quarters. The Illinois town elections were generally in the same groove. So with those of Kansas, Nebraska, California, etc. If, as political managers, these indications are signs of significant portent, then the prospects for a Republican victory, through hard work and strong nominations, are very encouraging.

THE RIGHT OF TAXATION AND THE RAILROADS.

The Supreme Court has recently rendered a very important decision, unanimous in character and delivered through Mr. Justice Miller. It was on a case of appeal, taken by certain Illinois railroads, against the right of that State under the new constitution, and by means of the State Board of Equalization, to levy certain taxes on such corporations, under the following provision:

Sec. 10. The rolling stock, and all other moveable property belonging to any railroad company or corporation in this State, shall be considered personal property, and shall be liable to execution and sale in the same manner as the personal property of individuals, and the General Assembly shall pass no law exempting such property from execution and sale.

Mr. Justice Miller's decision and review establishes the following important propositions:

First. Neither irregularity in the proceedings, excess in the valuation, nor hardship of the law, if it be constitutional, nor any grievance remediable by a suit at law will authorize an injunction against the collection of taxes.

Second. This rule is founded on the principle that the levy of taxes is a legislative and not a judicial function, and also in the necessity that the taxes, without which the State cannot exist, should be regularly and promptly paid into its treasury.

Third. The same rigid rule would probably not apply to taxes levied by municipal corporations for corporation purposes.

Fourth. No injunction preliminary or final can be granted to stay collection of taxes until it is shown that all the taxes really due have been paid or tendered without demanding a receipt in full.

Fifth. The Constitution of Illinois declares in express terms that certain persons and corporations engaged in special pursuits may be taxed by a general law, uniform as to the class upon which it operates, and under this provision a statute is not unconstitutional which prescribes a different rule of taxation for railroad companies from that for individuals.

Sixth. Nor does it violate any provision of the Constitution of the United States.

Seventh. The capital stock, franchises, and all the real and personal property of corporations are justly liable to taxation, and a rule that ascertains the value of all this by ascertaining the cash value of the funded debt, and of the shares of the capital stock, as the basis of assessment, is probably as fair as any other.

Eighth. Deducting from this the assessed value of all the tangible real and personal property, which is also taxed, leaves the real value of the capital stock and franchise subject to taxation as justly as any other mode, all modes being more or less imperfect.

Ninth. It is neither in conflict with the Constitution of Illinois nor unequitable that the entire taxable property of the railroad should be ascertained by the State Board of Equalization, and that the State, county, and city taxes should be collected within each municipality on this assessment in the proportion which the length of the road within such municipality bears to the whole length of the road within the State.

Tenth. The courts cannot substitute their judgment as to valuation for that of the Board.

Eleventh. The Supreme Court of Illinois having decided that the law complained of in these cases is valid, this court adopts that decision as a rule to be followed in the Federal courts.

Twelfth. Does it follow that in cases where the proceedings are faulty or illegal that a court of equity will enjoin the collection of the whole tax, when it is obvious that a large part should be paid, and if not paid the complainant would escape taxation altogether? The question is important because the immense weight of taxation rendered necessary by the debts of the United States, of the several States, and of the counties, cities, and towns, has resulted very naturally in a resort to every possible expedient to evade its force. It has been repeatedly decided that neither the mere illegality of the tax complained of, nor its injustice nor irregularity, of themselves give the right to an injunction.

The United States has a complete system for the correction of injustice to tax-payers, but there is no place in it for application to the Courts until after the tax is paid. An act of 1867 covers this point particularly. This is a wise policy. It is founded on the simple philosophy derived from the experience of ages, that the payment of taxes has to be enforced by summary and stringent means against a reluctant and often ill-advised sentiment. No court of equity will, therefore, allow its injunction to issue to restrain their action, except where it appears that the enforcement of the tax would lead to a multiplicity of suits or produce irreparable injury, or, when the property is real estate, throw a cloud upon the title of the complainant before the aid of a court of equity can be invoked. The Court will always incline to require a clear case of equitable relief before it will sustain an injunction against the collection of a tax, which is part of the revenue of a State.

But there is another principle of equitable jurisprudence which forbids in these cases the interference of a court of chancery in favor of complainants. It is that universal rule which requires that he who seeks equity at the hands of the court must first do equity. It is clear that the road-bed within each county is liable to be taxed at the same rate that other property is taxed. Why have not complainants paid this tax?

Before complainants seek the aid of the court to be relieved of the excessive tax they should pay what is due. Before they ask equitable relief they should do that justice which is necessary to enable the court to hear them.

It is a satisfaction that our judgment concurs with that of the State Court, and leads us to the same conclusions. The decrees in all these cases are reversed. The cases are remanded to the Circuit Court, with directions to dissolve the injunction granted in each case and to dismiss the bills.

Justice Miller's reputation as a jurist, already so high, will be greatly enhanced by this luminous exposition of jurisprudence as applied to the relations of the State and the railway system. Step by step, in that broad and popular sense without which no political truth can become a practical rule of action in a democratic society, we are coming to an acceptance of the great fact that railroads, like telegraphs and banks, are in no just sense private enterprises or property, but public trusts, chartered by the State and deriving their only vitality from such action, "charged with remuneration for private capital invested, or run by private corporations because the public feel that to be the most convenient method of management." This doctrine once accepted offers open roads to correct all evils arising from present or future monopolies. The profit made is of course taxable, as are also the means of making it.

CIVIL LIBERTY.

In October, 1840, Robert H. Morris, then Recorder of the city of New York, proceeded in the night time to the house of a citizen and demanded of him certain papers which were sealed in a package, and had been delivered to that citizen by an individual against whom a criminal complaint had been made before the Recorder, "which complaint did not involve the charge of having unlawfully obtained the papers" so demanded. The citizen hesitated to deliver the papers. The Recorder then declared to him that if he did not deliver the same, he, the Recorder, would search for the papers and forcibly seize them by virtue of his authority as a magistrate. Under the coercion of this threat the papers were delivered to the Recorder.

Governor Seward promptly removed the Recorder from office on the ground that he had clearly violated the constitutional right of the citizen to be secure in his person and papers.* The Governor held that any search warrant for the private papers of the accused, "which papers were not alleged to have been lawfully stolen or unlawfully acquired," would have been a violation of the most sacred private rights and of the most cherished principles of civil liberty, and that the seizure of the papers without warrant on oath was a flagrant aggravation of the offense. The Attorney General discussed the grave question in a luminous report of the case. It is needless to say that the Recorder was a Democrat, and that he committed the outrage in the interest of the Democratic party, which afterward elected him Mayor of the city of New York.

We all know where that party stands, to-day, on the question of Civil Liberty. A citizen of Washington refused to deliver up his private papers unless some charge under oath was made that those papers were in some manner connected with crime or feloniously or unlawfully acquired.

For thus claiming his constitutional rights he was for a political object only sent to the common jail and there imprisoned like a felon!

[*See Constitution of the United States, Amendments, Article IV.]

THE REPUBLIC:

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

DEVOTED TO

THE DISSEMINATION OF POLITICAL INFORMATION.

VOLUME VI. From January to June, 1876.

PUBLISHED BY

THE REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

INDEX TO VOLUME VI.

A	Page.	D.	Page.
re.....	46	Democratic House, The.....	82
drope and.....	47	Doings, Executive and Department.....	55, 137, 207, 270, 332
uper of the House of.....	80	Democratic Promises vs. Performances.....	86
ul Men.....	122	Debts, Payment of Rebel.....	86
Commissioner of the.....	161	Doorkeeper of House of Representatives, Acts of.....	60
Is the South Still.....	176	Democracy, The Weakness of.....	90 an Radicals and Re-.....	176	Demagogism, Salaries and.....	100
nion and to the Ger-.....	352	Democratic Retrenchment — Republican Expenditures.....	222
Horrors of, and the.....	235, 299, 359	Does Protection Protect?—The Tariff.....	225
Robbery—Its Perpe-.....	250	Democratic Press, Malignancy of.....	273
minate.....	395	Democratic Policy.....	231
		Democratic Gas.....	268
		Domestic Commerce.....	379
B.		E.
vention, Our.....	80	Europe, Slavonian.....	30
nd the Whisky Ring.....	117	Education in Japan.....	41
National.....	118	Education in Virginia.....	42
ary.....	171	Europe and America, Labor in.....	47
.....	205	Executive and Department Doings.....	55, 137, 207, 270, 332
Past and Present, Our.....	316	English Land Tenure, some Phases of, and Plans of Land Tenure Reform.....	81
C.		Expenses, Those Enormous.....	177
e Forty-fourth.....	1, 67, 195, 260, 322, 337	European Travel, Notes on.....	184
resident Grant's and.....	88	Expenditures Republican — Democratic Retrenchment.....	222
sed Amendments.....	62	Eastern Nations, Presents to.....	243
nic.....	62	Education, Encouraging.....	293
th, List of Senators.....	63	Economy, Poor.....	295
e in the.....	80	Elections, The New Hampshire.....	305
Men for the.....	92	Elections, State, Preceding the Presiden- tial Election of 1876.....	339
, the Representation.....	92	England, Increase of Wealth in.....	351
ocratic Speaker and.....	96	English Parliament, Legislation of.....	378
dential.....	117	Elections, Municipal and Town.....	396
Compared with that.....	124	F.
, and the Slavehold-.....	126	Forty-fourth Congress, the Work of.....	1, 65, 195, 260, 322, 337
and Leaders in the.....	129, 262	Forty-Fourth Congress, List of Senators and Representatives in the.....	63
Done in the.....	145	Field Work of the Hayden Geological Sur- vey during 1875, Summary of the.....	149
General Land Office,.....	161	False Ideas of Government, The Result of.....	168
—Past and Prospect-.....	249	G. al Government.....	273	Gratitude of Republics.....	80
the Employ of the.....	281	Geological Survey, Summary of the Field Work of the Hayden, during 1875.....	149
it.....	282	General Land Office, Annual Report of the Commissioner.....	161
s and Banking, Past.....	303	Government, The Result of False Ideas of.....	168
ina, The Trade of,.....	316	Government of the United States, What is the.....	178
f San Francisco.....	347	Government, National, Crippling the.....	273
he Treasury Depart.....	374	Government, General, Civil Service Force in the Employ of.....	282
.....	379	Gas, Democratic.....	298
.....	398	General Jackson's Presidency, Reminis- cences of Persons and Events during the Two Terms of.....	299
.....	400	Georgia, The Loss of Laborers to.....	305

H.	Page.	P.	Page.
House, the Democratic.....	53	Product and Movement of the Precious Metals.....	7, 97
House Committees, The Democratic Speaker and the.....	98	Promises vs. Performances, Democratic..	86
Hayden Geological Survey, Summary of the Field-Work of, during 1875.....	149	Payment of Rebel Debts.....	88
Horrors of Andersonville, the Truth of History.....	235, 299, 359	Presidential Campaign, The.....	117
Hill, Surmounting that.....	239	Paris Commune, The Slaveholders' War and the.....	126
Hypocritical Clamor.....	393	Pictures for Loyal Eyes, Two.....	144
I.		Prison Pens, To the Survivors of Rebel....	148
Inter-Oceanic Canal, The.....	62	Public Schools, Relations of the State to Religion and the.....	231, 353
Investigations.....	127, 370	Presents to Eastern Nations.....	243
Is the South still for War? A startling Question.....	173	Past and Prospective Treasury Raids—Rebel Cotton Claims.....	249
Ingratitude, Base.....	265	Pawn, Consul in.....	241
Indiana's War Governor.....	343	Policy, Democratic.....	281
Increase of Wealth in England.....	351	Presidents of the United States, List of...	287
J.		Pensions for Rebels, Proposed.....	288
Japan, Education in.....	41	Persons and Events, Reminiscences of, During the Two Terms of General Jackson's Presidency.....	289
Jenks' Baby.....	209	Poor Economy.....	295
Jackson's Presidency, Reminiscences of Persons and Events during the Two Terms of General.....	289	Public Service, Our.....	296
Judicial Ku-Kluxism, Southern.....	362	Protection vs. Free Trade—Labor and Wages in the United States.....	307
Justice, The Dawn of.....	378	Port of San Francisco, The Trade of California and China Through the.....	347
K.		Patent Office, United States.....	348
Ku-Kluxism, Southern Judicial.....	362	Poverty of the South.....	377
L.		Q.
Laws, Navigation, chaps. v and vi, (to be continued).....	17	Question, The School.....	30, 251
Labor in Europe and America.....	47	R.
List of Senators and Representatives in the Forty-fourth Congress.....	63	Revised Statutes, The.....	32
Land Tenure, Some Phases of English, and Plans of Land Tenure Reform.....	81	Republics, Gratitude of.....	80
Limb, On the Other.....	85	Rebel Debts, Payment of.....	86
Leaders, Confederate Soldiers and, in the Forty-fourth Congress.....	129, 252	Representation of Confederate Treason, The.....	92
Loyal Eyes, Two Pictures for.....	144	Record of the Democratic Speaker.....	104
Land Office, General, Annual Report of the Commissioner of.....	161	Review of the Month.....	139, 204, 266, 327, 389
List of Presidents of the United States....	287	Rebel Prison Pens, To the Survivors of....	148
Loss of Laborers to Georgia.....	303	Report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, Annual.....	161
Labor and Wages in the United States—Protection vs. Free Trade.....	307	Result of False Ideas of Government.....	168
Lucky Letters.....	342	Republican Expenditures, Democratic Retrenchment.....	222
Legislation of English Parliament.....	378	Religion and the Public Schools, Relations of the State to.....	231, 353
Liberty, Civil.....	400	Rebel Cotton Claims, Past and Prospective Treasury Raids.....	249
M.		Robbery, A Model Democratic, Its Perpetrators Unpunished.....	259
Metals, Product and Movement of the Precious.....	7, 97	Rebels, Proposed Pensions for.....	288
Measure, An Important.....	46	Reminiscences of Persons and Events During the Two Terms of General Jackson's Presidency.....	289
Men, Our Best, for the Convention.....	80	Rebellion and its Secret History, The.....	294
Month, Review of the.....	139, 204, 256, 327, 389	Raw Silk, The Production of.....	351
Mineral Wealth of the United States.....	241	Right of Taxation and the Railroads.....	396
Malignancy of the Democratic Press.....	272	S.
Mud, Throwing.....	342	Soldiers, Disabled ex-Union Dismissed..	16, 89, 139
Municipal and Town Elections.....	358	Slavonian Europe.....	26
N.		School Question, The.....	30, 251
Navigation Laws, chaps. v and vi, (to be continued).....	17	Statutes, The Revised.....	32
National Banking System, The.....	118	State, Church and—President Grant's and Mr. Blaine's Proposed Amendments.....	33
Notes on European Travel.....	184	Senators and Representatives in the Forty-fourth Congress, List of the.....	63
Nations, Eastern, Presents to.....	243	Stand Shoulder to Shoulder.....	80
National Government, Crippling the.....	273	Some Phases of English Land Tenure and Plans of Land Tenure Reform.....	81
New Hampshire Elections, The.....	303	Subserviency, The Old.....	97
O.		Speaker, the Democratic and the House Committees.....	98
Our Best Men for the Convention.....	80	Speaker, Record of the Democratic.....	104
On the Other Limb.....	85	Secretary Bristow and the Whisky Ring..	117
Old Subserviency, The.....	97	Slaveholders' War, The, and the Paris Commune.....	126
Official Corruption Compared with that of Former Times.....	124	Survivors of Rebel Prison Pens, To the....	148
Old Account, Squaring the.....	290	Summary of the Field-Work of the Hayden Geological Survey During 187.....
Our Public Service.....	296	Salaries and Demagogism.....
Our Currency—Banks and Banking, Past and Present.....	316
Official Clerical Work in the Treasury Department.....	374

	Page.		Page.
Squaring the Old Account.....	230	Trade of California and China Through
Schools, Public, Relations of the State to		the Port of San Francisco.....	347
Religion and the.....	231, 353	Treasury Department, Official Clerical
Surmounting that Hill.....	239	Work in the.....	374
Scalawag, Toombs and the.....	240	The Poverty of the South.....	377
Secret History of the Rebellion.....	294	The Dawn of Justice.....	378
State Elections Preceding the Presiden-		Taxation, The Right of, and the Railroads	399
tial Election of 1876.....	339
Slander.....	342	U.
San Francisco, The Trade of California		United States, Henry Wilson, Eighteenth and China Through the Port of.....	347	Vice President of the.....	8
Silk, Raw, The Production of.....	351	United States, What is the Government of Southern Judicial Ku-Kluxism.....	362	the.....	178
South, The Poverty of the.....	377	United States, Mineral Wealth of.....	244
		United States, List of Presidents of.....	287
T.		United States, Labor and Wages in—Pro-
The School Question.....	30, 251	tection vs. Free Trade.....	307
The Revised Statutes.....	32	United States Patent Office.....	348
The Democratic House.....	53
The Inter-Oceanic Canal.....	62	V.
The Weakness of Democracy.....	90	Vice President of the United States, Henry
The Representation of Confederate Treas-		Wilson, the Eighteenth.....	8 on.....	92	Virginia, Education in.....	42
The Old Subserviency.....	97	Vetoes, Washington's.....	397
The Democratic Speaker and the House
Committees.....	98	W.
The Presidential Campaign.....	117	Work of the Forty-fourth Congress...1, 65, 195,
The National Banking System.....	118	260, 322, 337
The Slaveholders' War and the Paris Com-		Wilson, Henry, Eighteenth Vice President
mune.....	126	of the United States.....	8
Thoughtful Men, A Word to.....	132	Weakness of Democracy, The.....	90
Two Pictures for Loyal Eyes.....	144	Whisky Ring, Secretary Bristow and the.	117
To the Survivors of Rebel Prison Pens....	148	War, The Slaveholders', and the Paris
The Result of False Ideas of Government.	168	Commune.....	126
Treasury Book-keeping.....	173	What Must be Done in the Crisis?.....	145
Those Enormous Expenses.....	177	What is the Government of the United
Treason on Wheels.....	216	States?.....	178
The Tariff—Does Protection Protect.....	225	Wealth, Mineral, of the United States....	244
Truth of History and the Horrors of Ander-		Was Secession Treason?.....	304
sonville.....	235, 299, 359	Wages, Labor and, in the United States—
Toombs and the Scalawag.....	240	Protection vs. Free Trade.....	307
Treasury Raids, Past and Prospective—		War Governor, Indiana's.....	343
Rebel Cotton Claims.....	249	Wealth in England, Increase of.....	351
The Civil Service Force in the Employ of		Why Not Nominate Adams?.....	386
the General Government.....	282	Washington's Vetoes.....	397
The Rebellion and Its Secret History.....	294
The Gray Beneath the Blue.....	301	APPENDIX.
The Loss of Laborers to Georgia.....	303	Speeches of Hon. J. G. Blaine, of Maine; Hon.
The New Hampshire Elections.....	305	J. A. Garfield, of Ohio, and Hon. B. H. Hill,
Throwing Mud.....	342	of Georgia, on Amnesty.

1876.

Vol. 7.

PREMIUMS.

Vol. 7.

THE REPUBLIC MAGAZINE,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Terms - - - - - $2 Per Year, in Advance.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A

CLUB OF TEN SUBSCRIBERS FOR THE CURRENT YEAR AND $20,

The publishers will forward, free of cost and postage,

A Complete Set—Three Volumes—of the Republic,

HANDSOMELY BOUND, WITH INDEX.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A

CLUB OF FIFTEEN SUBSCRIBERS AND $30,

A Complete Set—First Four Volumes—of the Republic.

TO THE PERSON SENDING

THE LARGEST CLUB IN ANY MONTH,

BEING MORE THAN FIFTEEN,

A COMPLETE SET, INCLUDING THE FIFTH VOLUME,

Which closes with the December number of 1875, all neatly bound, with index, and free of cost or postage.

These propositions afford an opportunity to acquire, with little effort, the best text book extant on the science of government.

Specimen copies and prospectus will, on request, be sent free to those desiring to raise clubs.

ADDRESS

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

CENTENNIAL NEWSPAPER EXHIBITION.

[This Electrotpe sent free to Publishers on application.]

THE NEWSPAPER PAVILION.

At the Centennial grounds in Philadelphia a building has been constructed to be used solely for an exhibition of newspapers. It occupies a conspicuous position near the miniature lake, on a line between the United States Government Building and Machinery Hall.

The plan of exhibition is an alphabetical arrangement of partial files of each newspaper or periodical in such a manner as makes them instantly accessible; the space devoted to each bearing a label with the name of the publication printed thereon, and further designated by a number, by means of which a stranger upon reference to his catalogue is able at once to approach the section of the building where the particular journal which he desires to examine or refer to may be found.

The cases containing these files form alcoves similar to those in public libraries for the arrangement of books; these alcoves forming long tiers, one on each side of the building throughout its entire length, a portion of the space between being reserved for the accommodation of attendants, leaving a passage way for the public eighteen feet in width, extending from one end of the structure to the other.

The second story, approached by four flights of stairs, is devoted to reading-rooms for the accommodation more especially of newspaper men, and supplied with conveniences for correspondents.

A catalogue giving the name of each newspaper, its frequency of issue, and the number which designates the position allotted to it, together with such statistical information as will serve to convey a comprehensive knowledge of the nature and extent of the business of newspaper publishing in America, is issued in a compact form, not differing very much in size and appearance from the Official Catalogues of the four departments of the principal exhibition.

Mr. George P. Rowell, of New York, assumes the management and control of the enterprise.

5 112.5 1117.5 27 17 17 17

THE REPUBLIC

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE

DEVOTED TO

THE DISSEMINATION OF POLITICAL INFORMATION.

Vol. II. No. 2

MARCH, 1896

Price 10 Cts.

Contents:

What must be done in the future	145
To the Supervisors of Public Health	146
Summary of the Field Work of the Bureau of Geographical Names during the Season of 1895	148
Annual Report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office	151
The Result of Public Loans of Government	154
Treasury Book keeping	154
A startling Question in the South still to be solved	155
Three thousand Americans	156
What is the Government of the United States?	158
Notes on European Travel	164
Malaries and Demagogues	164
The Work of the Forty-fourth Congress	168
Review of the Month	174
Executive and Department Doings	177

PUBLISHED BY

THE REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY

WASHINGTON, D. C.

NO PERMIT REQUIRED, IN A. M. A. 1896

1876.

PROSPECTUS. Vol. 6.

THE REPUBLIC,

A Political Science Monthly Magazine.

THE REPUBLIC begins its sixth volume with the Centennial year, January, 1876.

It has grown in public favor, and has received substantial encouragement from every State and Territory in the Union.

Its early promises have been made good. Its pages have been filled with political information, with the suggestions of wisdom growing out of experience, with facts and figures carefully arranged, making a fund of knowledge, of itself, a valuable text-book to all interested in Governmental affairs.

In view of the Presidential election, which takes place in 1876, the REPUBLIC desires to increase its field of usefulness by adding to its list of subscribers. It already numbers among its readers, many of the most thoughtful and intelligent citizens of the country. The deep interest expressed by them in the work, is to the publishers, evidence of an appreciation that thousands of others would entertain of the REPUBLIC, could it be brought to their attention. Will not our friends take upon themselves the slight labor of inviting other good citizens to add their names and their influence to a magazine that is published in the interest of public morality and good government.

In the future, as in the past, the REPUBLIC will advocate an honest administration of Government, whether municipal, State or National.

It will favor loyalty, honesty, economy, and personal ability as pre-requisites for office.

It will give credit where credit is due; and impartial criticism whenever required.

It will seek to hold up intelligence as the safeguard to National safety, and will defend our free-school system as essential to its preservation.

It will advocate improvements, that experience may commend, in the education of the young; but will oppose all efforts to divide the public-school funds, or to introduce into the schools sectarian influences.

It will advocate the perpetuation of the Republican party as the best, if not the only means to secure the preservation of the Union, and the impartial execution of the laws.

It will labor earnestly to bring about such reforms as the spirit of progress may demand, and in all things seek to present those methods of administration, which the wisdom and experience of a century have confirmed.

It will give to its readers a clear insight into the various branches of Government, by a faithful record of their doings.

These are among the leading features of the work to which the REPUBLIC is devoted. It pledges anew its best energies to make the Centennial volumes worthy the Nation it serves, and the year it enters upon.

To the Republican press of the country, co-laborers in the grand mission of preserving good government, the REPUBLIC sends greeting and thanks. If increased activity can merit a continuation of the good will expressed, our brethren of the press will still extend their hands in generous welcome. The Presidential campaign will bring upon all, increased responsibilities and new demands. The REPUBLIC will bear its share and perform its duty without fear or favor, keeping ever in view, that the highest reward that patriotism can win, is the consciousness that its efforts have advanced civilization and contributed to the cause of good government.

TERMS:

THE REPUBLIC is a magazine of sixty-four pages, published monthly, at $2 a year, or six copies for $10. The postage, in all cases, will be paid by the publishers. A few copies of the back volumes may yet be obtained, either bound or in numbers. Remittances should be made by postal money-order or registered letter.

Address,

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY, Washington, D. C.

THE REPUBLIC.

Devoted to the Dissemination of Political Information.

VOL. VI.

WASHINGTON, D. C., MARCH, 1876.

No. 3.

WHAT MUST BE DONE IN THE CRISIS?

We have proceeded thus far in the discussion of the Southern question entirely upon the theory that reconciliation is an essential element in producing a true and lasting union of the States, and that reconciliation can be arrived at only by the hearty adoption on the part of the South of the conditions under which the readmission of the States was effected, viz: the amendments to the Constitution. These amendments involve the equality of the colored people before the law, and also before public opinion. Whately says: "If there be any one truth which the deductions of reason alone, independent of history, would lead us to anticipate, and which again history alone would establish independently of antecedent reasoning, it is this: that a whole class of men placed permanently under the ascendancy of another as subjects without the rights of citizens must be a source, at the best, of weakness, and generally of danger, to the State."

The disposition to be made of the colored people has been from the first the only question of grave moment, assuming that loyalty to the Union has been secured on the part of the late rebels. All thought of punishment of the mass of rebels was universally abandoned at the moment Lee surrendered, and not for years has there been any expectation that even Jeff Davis would be required to suffer any penalty for offenses committed against the United States. The desire for a restoration of good feeling led the Republican party to a policy of absolute forgiveness as fast as prudence would permit, if not much faster, and amnesty was tendered right and left with the largest liberality, and restrictions which were chiefly mere matters of form. Had these favors, which were pure offerings of grace, been accepted in the spirit which prompted them, this part of the difficulty would have been arranged and ended; but the language used in Congress shows that they failed of securing reconciliation, and the demand still is that something more shall be done to secure it. What that something is they call self government, or local government, but they really mean a government by the white race alone. This is the substance of all the complaints made against the measures of reconstruction which were adopted, all other objections being aimed at administration of affairs in which individuals and not the National Government were chiefly at fault.

The governments of the States by the colored people were not satisfactory, and it was not in the nature of things that they should be. A whole race born into slavery and brought up in ignorance could not be expected to become wise legislators in a moment. There was ignorance, and corruption, and mismanagement—still not worse than the municipal corruption and mismanagement in some of our large cities, and not so bad as that of Tweed in the city of New York. If, however, we turn the case around, and see how the white people have for generations stripped their colored brethren of houses, lands, and all the earnings of their hands, and of all chance to profit by their wits, we shall realize that the colored people are not the only sinners, and that on the score of hardship and suffering they are ye 1876.

PROSPECTUS. Vol. 6.

[THE REPUBLIC,
A Political Science Monthly Magazine.

THE REPUBLIC begins its sixth volume with the Centennial year, January, 1876.

It has grown in public favor, and has received substantial encouragement from every State and Territory in the Union.

Its early promises have been made good. Its pages have been filled with political information, with the suggestions of wisdom growing out of experience, with facts and figures carefully arranged, making a fund of knowledge, of itself, a valuable text-book to all interested in Governmental affairs.

In view of the Presidential election, which takes place in 1876, the REPUBLIC desires to increase its field of usefulness by adding to its list of subscribers. It already numbers among its readers, many of the most thoughtful and intelligent citizens of the country. The deep interest expressed by them in the work, is to the publishers, evidence of an appreciation that thousands of others would entertain of the REPUBLIC, could it be brought to their attention. Will not our friends take upon themselves the slight labor of inviting other good citizens to add their names and their influence to a magazine that is published in the interest of public morality and good government.

In the future, as in the past, the REPUBLIC will advocate an honest administration of Government, whether municipal, State or National.

It will favor loyalty, honesty, economy, and personal ability as pre-requisites for office.

It will give credit where credit is due; and impartial criticism whenever required.

It will seek to hold up intelligence as the safeguard to National safety, and will defend our free-school system as essential to its preservation.

It will advocate improvements, that experience may commend, in the education of the young; but will oppose all efforts to divide the public-school funds, or to introduce into the schools sectarian influences.

It will advocate the perpetuation of the Republican party as the best, if not the only means to secure the preservation of the Union, and the impartial execution of the laws.

It will labor earnestly to bring about such reforms as the spirit of progress may demand, and in all things seek to present those methods of administration, which the wisdom and experience of a century have confirmed.

It will give to its readers a clear insight into the various branches of Government, by a faithful record of their doings.

These are among the leading features of the work to which the REPUBLIC is devoted. It pledges anew its best energies to make the Centennial volumes worthy the Nation it serves, and the year it enters upon.

To the Republican press of the country, co-laborers in the grand mission of preserving good government, the REPUBLIC sends greeting and thanks. If increased activity can merit a continuation of the good will expressed, our brethren of the press will still extend their hands in generous welcome. The Presidential campaign will bring upon all, increased responsibilities and new demands. The REPUBLIC will bear its share and perform its duty without fear or favor, keeping ever in view, that the highest reward that patriotism can win, is the consciousness that its efforts have advanced civilization and contributed to the cause of good government.

TERMS:

THE REPUBLIC is a magazine of sixty-four pages, published monthly, at $2 a year, or six copies for $10. The postage, in all cases, will be paid by the publishers. A few copies of the back volumes may yet be obtained, either bound or in numbers. Remittances should be made by postal money-order or registered letter.

Address,

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY, Washington, D. C.

THE REPUBLIC.

Devoted to the Dissemination of Political Information.

VOL. VI.

WASHINGTON, D. C., MARCH, 1876.

No. 3.

WHAT MUST BE DONE IN THE CRISIS?

We have proceeded thus far in the discussion of the Southern question entirely upon the theory that reconciliation is an essential element in producing a true and lasting union of the States, and that reconciliation can be arrived at only by the hearty adoption on the part of the South of the conditions under which the readmission of the States was effected, viz: the amendments to the Constitution. These amendments involve the equality of the colored people before the law, and also before public opinion. Whately says: "If there be any one truth which the deductions of reason alone, independent of history, would lead us to anticipate, and which again history alone would establish independently of antecedent reasoning, it is this: that a whole class of men placed permanently under the ascendancy of another as subjects without the rights of citizens must be a source, at the best, of weakness, and generally of danger, to the State."

The disposition to be made of the colored people has been from the first the only question of grave moment, assuming that loyalty to the Union has been secured on the part of the late rebels. All thought of punishment of the mass of rebels was universally abandoned at the moment Lee surrendered, and not for years has there been any expectation that even Jeff Davis would be required to suffer any penalty for offenses committed against the United States. The desire for a restoration of good feeling led the Republican party to a policy of absolute forgiveness as fast as prudence would permit, if not much faster, and amnesty was tendered right and left with the largest liberality, and restrictions which were chiefly mere matters of form. Had these favors, which were pure offerings of grace, been accepted in the spirit which prompted them, this part of the difficulty would have been arranged and ended; but the language used in Congress shows that they failed of securing reconciliation, and the demand still is that something more shall be done to secure it. What that something is they call self government, or local government, but they really mean a government by the white race alone. This is the substance of all the complaints made against the measures of reconstruction which were adopted, all other objections being aimed at administration of affairs in which individuals and not the National Government were chiefly at fault.

The governments of the States by the colored people were not satisfactory, and it was not in the nature of things that they should be. A whole race born into slavery and brought up in ignorance could not be expected to become wise legislators in a moment. There was ignorance, and corruption, and mismanagement—still not worse than the municipal corruption and mismanagement in some of our large cities, and not so bad as that of Tweed in the city of New York. If, however, we turn the case around, and see how the white people have for generations stripped their colored brethren of houses, lands, and all the earnings of their hands, and of all chance to profit by their wits, we shall realize that the colored people are not the only sinners, and that on the score of hardship and suffering they are ye much the heaviest victims. We do not say this in justification, but it palliates largely the offense which the colored people have perpetrated, and must be taken into account in striking a balance between the races, if a balance is demanded by those who are now crying out and bewailing their fearful sufferings.

But our purpose is not to attack or defend either side. We are stating some unpleasant truths because they are truths, and not to villify, and because it is important to look at the actual condition of things in order to any improvement therein. The elements of the problem we are dealing with are perplexing to the last degree, and the evils of the situation are not of a nature to be cured by a few centennial speeches, dinners, hand shakings, and complimentary resolutions of conventions, boards of trade, and ecclesiastical councils. The question goes directly to the foundations of society in the Southern States. Two races with wide differences in their composition and temperament and considerable differences in capacity occupy the ground together, the inferior race striving to place itself on a level with the other, and at this distance of time from the adoption of the constitutional amendments which were intended to secure their rights they are met by prejudices which are so violent, and by measures so unjustifiable, as to amount to a practical defeat of those amendments.

This condition of hostility between the races is fatal to Southern progress, fatal to industrial success, fatal to social order, fatal to the redemption of the South from its extreme of weakness and poverty. The colored people know now that they are men, that they are free men, that they are entitled to a recognition of their rights, and they are so nearly like other men that any serious infringement of their rights, any serious oppression, any systematic and continued wrong will certainly arouse in them and keep up a burning flame of revenge and retaliation; and this is nothing more or less than war. And such a war must drive away capital, frighten and keep away the enterprising and energetic elements of population which have done so much for New England and New York, and built up the great West with such astonishing rapidity. Unless the South can organize industry and increase her productions she must continue to fall behind, and she must become to the rest of the country what Ireland has been to England. The load of debt and taxation which rests upon that section can only be lifted by industry intelligently directed, and by thrift. The curse of God rested on slavery as all now can see, but it rests also upon society in a state of anarchy, and upon unintelligent labor. Social anarchy can be averted only by justice and a recognition of the rights of the oppressed, and intelligent industry can be secured only by the common school and by social peace.

The condition of industry in the South is something appalling. Much of the population is unfit for mechanical employment, lacking skill, ingenuity, the inventive and executive faculty. A large moiety of the people not only work at a great disadvantage but they spoil the raw material, and destroy the machinery and works which others have made. Look at an ignorant, blundering servant girl. How she smashes the china and costly glassware, wastes the fuel, burns out prematurely the cooking stove, defaces furniture, walls, and the ornamentation of the house, and reigns in her realm with a carelessness that is destructive of both property and the peace of mind of the proprietor. And it is the same with the serving man-of-all-work. He leaves the hoe and shovel where they can be readily stolen, leaves the harness out in the rain to spoil, drives the wagon against somebody's carriage, causing damage to both vehicles, and in a thousand ways destroys property and renders himself a curse to his employer and the community. But all this appertains entirely to the simpler forms of labor, and is a mere trifle to what is lost to the producing force of society by rendering whole classes of men, white as well as black, unfit for any higher order of work. The difference between intelligent and unintelligent labor can be measured in various ways: by comparing one man with another, one village with another, one section of country with another. It can be measured by dollars and cents, and is so measured by boss and hand, by master and servant, by manufacturer and employee, and by every one who has labor to buy or labor to sell. A strong, healthy, industrious man will break his back at shoveling gravel and accept a dollar for a day's work with gladness, while the skilled mechanic will receive for the same outlay of strength, or less, three or four dollars during the same time. The hand on the farm will earn thirty dollars per month, and the serving man only ten.

The difference in these prices is due entirely to the difference in intelligence between the two classes. Payment is according to product, and product depends upon skill and knowledge. As the result of knowledge the poor soil and bleak hills of Massachusetts are made to yield more from year to year, while for the want of knowledge the fertile valleys of Virginia have gradually been running out and the population have been reduced to extremity. Ignorance, therefore, is plainly destructive. It impoverishes labor; it reduces the productive power of the community; it robs the stomachs of people by disabling them of the power to get proper and sufficient food; it robs the backs of men and women by destroying their power to obtain proper and sufficient clothing; it reduces the value of land by bad methods of cultivation; and, worse than all, it creates a dangerous, turbulent, vicious population which effectually excludes healthy immigration to keep up the recuperative energy of the community. The safety of the State, the recuperation of the State, the happiness of the people, and the proper organization of industry in the Southern States all depend primarily upon education, as may be readily seen by what we have said above, and, without an improvement of a marked character in the interest which the Southern leaders have in the cause of education, there is absolutely no hope for that section of the country.

We have arrived now on practical ground. There must be equality of rights, and the population must be educated. As it is unsafe to the whole Union to have one entire section remain ignorant and turbulent, and as it is unprofitable to have the people of an entire section ground down in the dust by poverty, and to have their labor misdirected and but half rewarded, this question becomes one of high national concern and transcendantly important. The whole future of the country hangs upon this issue. North, West, South are vitally interested in its determination; and we are driven to ask, "What are you going to do about it?" "Can we save the country?"

When the war broke out the people responded by saying "We can;" and the job was undertaken. They waded through oceans of blood; but the work is yet unfinished. The Democratic party throws itself in front of the friends of equality and education and demands a halt. It signalizes its return to partial power by bringing in a bill to abolish the Bureau of Education. It goes with unerring instinct against all the prominent instrumentalities of education and the dissemination of knowledge. It goes back on the ideas of all the Presidents from Washington to Polk, and frowns upon the efforts of the apostles of education, and proposes to cut the official throat of every disseminator of human knowledge within its reach. The beggared South, unable to provide the means for teaching its children the alphabet, and doubly unable to secure and maintain an organization which shall collate and publish the facts and statistics necessary to an organized system of education, is to be deprived of the only agency which can be made available to promote the great cause of the common people and the great cause of all the people.

The Democrats strike at education because they are not in sympathy with knowledge and equality. The Southern white man's party hopes to keep the negro under by keeping him ignorant, and it offers the votes of the Southern States solid as the consideration to the Democracy for making war upon the machinery of education and upon all measures for the protection of the colored man's rights. Slavery is dead, but ignorance and inequality, disunionism and Democracy, are still in alliance and go hand in hand as lovingly as in former days when slavery was with them as senior partner and chief capitalist. Education can be carried only by the triumph of the party of education, and without education the South must remain ignorant, poor, disturbed, discouraged, an element of weakness to the Union, a foe to good government, and her own worst enemy.

To avert this great calamity the triumph of the Republican party is necessary. Dispute as we may about the fact of present outrages, quarrel as we may about the regularity of elections, scoff as we will concerning "the bloody shirt," there is danger in the situation as important to have met, and met rightly, as any of the appalling dangers which have been met and conquered in the past. The mission of the Republican party is not ended. We are not out of the woods. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

TO THE SURVIVORS OF REBEL PRISON PENS.

Jefferson Davis, in a letter dated New Orleans, Louisiana, January 29, 1876, and addressed to the Honorable James Lyons, Petersburg, Virginia, makes a defiant denial of the arraignment made by the Honorable James G. Blaine, of Maine, and by General James A. Garfield, of Ohio, of his direct and personal responsibility for the cruel treatment of the Union soldiers who were prisoners of war to the Confederacy of which Mr. Davis was President. He goes further, and, like Mr. Benjamin H. Hill, Representative in the Forty fourth Congress, from Georgia, who was also a member of the Confederate States Senate, from the same State, the rebel ex-President denies altogether that unnecessary suffering ensued among, or unjustifiable harshness or cruelty was practiced against, those of our soldiers who were so unfortunate as to be prisoners within the pens at Andersonville, Florence, Salisbury, Belle Isle, and Tyler, or in the tobacco warehouses of Libby and Castle Thunder. The denial is a bold and sweeping one. Its audacity rises to sublimity. It not only denies but accuses. The Union is assailed as having, through its officials and policy, treated the Confederate prisoners in its hands as bad or worse than our men were used at Andersonville, Belle Isle, and elsewhere. It is also charged with causing the sufferings of the latter by the policy it pursued of refusing to exchange.

Now, as to one part of Mr. Jefferson Davis' denial and counter accusation, there is a direct and unassailable method of obtaining evidence. The survivors of the rebel prison pens still remain among us. Those of Andersonville formed an association which is still in existence. We call upon every man who was captured and confined by the Confederates during the civil war for slavery and disunion to at once give to the public a brief and direct account of his personal experiences. Let each man write to the nearest Republican paper a simple statement of his name, regiment, rank, date of capture, length of confinement, when exchanged, the treatment he himself received as to food, shelter, medical care, &c., as well as to the action of those in charge. Avoid all rhetoric, denounce no one, give as far as practicable the names of Confederate officers, &c., in command; also, any special instances as to others known to the survivors, the details of which are readily substantiable.

With regard to the treatment of rebel prisoners in the northern entrepôts, there is as direct a method of obtaining reliable testimony. Officers who were in command of such prisons are still living, as are also soldiers who were stationed thereat. Their evidence will be of value. In every place where such prisons were located local sanitary and Christian associations existed, the members of which busied themselves in caring for the sick and wounded, and in visiting the prisons and camps. Reputable citizens at Elmira, Rock Island, Chicago, Columbus, and elsewhere know the facts. Let them give their testimony. The honor of one's country should be sacred. We who fought for liberty and union surely have as vital an interest in that honor as the men who compeiled us to fight by their mad attempt to perpetuate slavery and destroy the Union. Let us have the facts.

Bear in mind that the object of such communications is not partisan but historical. Two civilizations or systems of government have been and still are on trial. This question of Andersonville and its attendant horrors belong to the trial. The case has been reopened, and the verdict once solemnly rendered is now challenged. A cloud of witnesses are still living. Let them give the facts. Communications can also be sent to the office of THE REPUBLIC, Washington, D. C., if writers do not desire to send to their county or other journals. Let every man respond, and at once. The good name of the Union is sought to be assailed, and a feculent treason seeks historical vindication by these audacious falsehoods.

SUMMARY OF THE FIELD WORK OF THE HAYDEN GEOLOGICAL SURVEY DURING THE SEASON OF 1875.

The United States Geological and Geographical Survey of the Territories, under the direction of Professor Hayden, during the season of 1875 continued its work of the two previous seasons in Colorado, completing the southern and southwestern portions, including a belt, fifteen miles in width, of northern New Mexico and eastern Utah.

The entire force of the survey was divided into seven parties for special duty, four of which were assigned to specific areas for the performance of topographical and geological work. One party attended to the primary triangulation; a second collected photographic views of the most interesting scenery and ancient ruins, while a third transported the supplies to the various districts.

The areas for exploration the present season were much further from the base of supplies than heretofore, rendering the labor greater and causing great loss of time in traveling to and from these bases. Yet the amount of topographical and geological work accomplished has not been exceeded by any previous year.

As heretofore, the starting point was at Denver. The first or southern division operated in southeastern Colorado. It was composed of A. D. Wilson, chief topographer, directing; Franklin Rhoda, assistant topographer; Dr. F. M. Eudlich, geologist; with two packers and a cook. The district surveyed by this party embraced an area of 12,400 square miles. Within these limits Mr. Wilson made 143 stations on the more commanding peaks.

A system of triangles was extended over the whole area, while at the same time the topographical sketches and angles were taken, barometrical readings were made at all occupied points, at all camps, passes, and other places of note visited during the season. Many of the stations have been carefully connected in height by fore and back angles of elevation and depression, to be used as a check on the barometric heights, while the heights of all located points have been determined by a system of angles of depression and elevation.

The district assigned to this division for the summer of 1875 joined on to the south borders of that surveyed in 1873 and 1874. The $104^{\circ} 30'$ longitude formed the eastern, 108° longitude the western, and $36^{\circ} 45' N.$ latitude the southern boundaries. About 12,400 square miles were contained in the district.

A plan for the most rapid and successful completion of the work undertaken was prepared by Mr. Wilson and subsequently carried out as proposed. This district contained the foot-hills sloping eastward from the Front range, the southern continuation of the Sangre de Cristo range, the southern end of San Luis valley, the extension of the La Plata mountains, and the lower country of the Rio San Juan and its tributaries. A small portion of the sedimentary eastern foot-hills was first surveyed, and the work then carried westward to the mountainous vicinity of the Upper Rio Grande. Instead of forming a well-defined, sharply-limited range, the mountains south of the Rio Grande are formed by a high plateau with numerous isolated peaks. Both plateau and the peaks mentioned are volcanic, showing the characteristic regularity of flows prevalent there. From the position of volcanic beds composing the higher peaks, it may be inferred that at one time the summit of the plateau extended to a considerably higher altitude than at present. Toward the southwest it drops off suddenly into the lower country containing Rios Piedra and Pinos. Presenting a line of steep, rough mountains—formed in part by the abrupt termination of the plateau, in part by the peaks above mentioned—the former contrasts strongly with the rich land in the valleys of the two rivers. Here, as at so many points in the districts surveyed by the southern division, the geological features determine the orographic character. With the plateau end the volcanic beds and the sedimentaries of cretaceous age set in. But few stratigraphic ical disturbances have changed the relative position of the beds, and the country therefore shows regular features. Long lines of high ridges, abrupt on the north side, sloping more gently toward the south, extend from east to west, and are cut by the drainage of the San Juan. Eastward the edge of the plateau recedes, losing at the same time some of its roughness, and a broad expanse of comparatively low, bluff country appears. Rich valleys, partly timbered or covered with grass, follow the course of the larger streams, owing their formations to the rapid erosions and ready disintegration of the shales belonging to Cretaceous No. 2. Springs containing an unusual amount of mineral ingredients, some of them hot, occur in these valleys. Owing to the slight southerly dip of the cretaceous beds, this formation claims a considerable area of the region extending from the Rio Animas eastward to the border of the district. Above the well-determined strata of Nos. 2 and 3 a series of shales and sandstones set in, in which no characteristic fossils whatever were found. They reach a thickness of about 3,000 feet, and contain coal at a number of points. It will not be possible to determine their geological age with any degree of certainty until careful comparisons of the parallel formations observed by Mr. Holmes and Dr. Peale can be made. The absence of fossils is greatly to be regretted, but none were found, although many square miles were traversed containing the series. Speaking with the reserve that imperfect comparison of the notes taken dictates, it would appear that the Trinidad coal-bearing series is parallel to this one.

After having completed the survey of this lower region along the Rio San Juan and its tributaries, the work was continued to the extension of the La Plata mountains. Here again volcanic rocks were met with, identical in every respect with those further north and west. Here, as well as previously on the headwaters of the Pinos and Piedra, evidence of former glaciers was found. Considerable areas showed the grooving and striation of rocks in situ, produced by the motion of ice and boulders. Deep canons were cut into, volcanic conglomerate occurring there, that had not preserved the grooving and striation, however, owing to the rapidity with which it yields to the effect of atmospheric influences. A gentle slope eastward of the volcanic rocks, that there reached to the youngest member of the group, basalt, gradually merged into the San Luis valley. Affected by local basaltic eruptions, as well as by the easterly dip of the volcanic beds, the drainage on the west side of this valley presents some interesting features, consisting in sudden curves northward. Northward the unbroken flows of basalt continue on the west side of the valley until Rio Alamosa is reached, where they end and drift begins. A number of volcanic bluffs, trending nearly north and south, separate this portion from the valley through which the Rio Grande runs after making its turn southward west of Fort Garland. This region, geologically, is more interesting than the western one, on account of the evidence furnished demonstrating the existence of two very large lakes at the close of the volcanic activity there. The two were connected by a narrow strip of water south of Fort Garland, and the lower one extended southward nearly to the Rio Colorado. At that time, too, the course of the Rio Grande was different from its present one. By the formation of a narrow canon in the basaltic beds the course of the river was deflected, the lakes drained, and the topography left very nearly in the shape we now observe it. The accurate determination of all the points connected with the existence of these lakes offers no material obstacle, but requires by far more time than could be bestowed upon it in the regular course of the survey.

Separating the eastern foot-hills and the great plains from San Luis valley is the southern continuation of the Sangre de Cristo range. Several peaks of this range rise to an elevation of nearly 14,000 feet, while many of them reach 13,000 feet above sea level. Here again metamorphic rocks set in, containing indications of metalliferous veins. Sedimentary beds, belonging to the carboniferous and cretaceous ages, the latter only on the eastern slope, however, rest against the metamorphic "core" of the range. Volcanic eruptions of the trachytic series have occurred, and show an arrangement parallel to the general course of the chain. A more or less isolated group of peaks is north of Fort Garland, termed the Sierra Blanca. Passes are both north and south of it—Mosco pass and the Sangre de Christo and Abeyta passes. While cretaceous beds, overlying the carboniferous and subjected to considerable disturbances, slope off from the range toward the eastward, their area is somewhat limited, as the lignitic group there again makes its appearance in the Raton hills and north of them. Lithologically this is identical with the one observed on the Rio San Juan. Comparisons of the succession of strata and relative thickness, &c., will be found in the report for 1875. The age of this group has for some time occupied the attention of geologists and given occasion for dissenting views. It is highly probable that the results obtained during the past season will not admit of a definite decision with regard thereto. They will at least be entitled to more consideration than those of explorers having merely traveled over a limited area, as so large a continuous district containing the formation has been examined. It is not possible at present to state positively what these results will be, but from the observations taken in the field it can be deduced that the age of the lignitic group near Trinidad is not cretaceous. A full discussion of this important subject will be found in the report for 1875.

Upon the completion of the examination of the just-mentioned group the work of the season was connected to the north and northeast with that of 1874 and therewith finished. On October 12 the party returned to Denver, having fully accomplished the purpose for which it was sent out. Important and useful information has been obtained regarding mineral and agricultural resources of the district, and data has been obtained for the preparation of a topographical and geological map of the area surveyed.

The southwestern division was conducted by W. H. Holmes as geologist, with G. B. Chittenden as chief topographer and T. S. Brandegee as assistant topographer. Mr. Brandegee acted as botanist also.

The area assigned to this division is bounded on the east by the work done by Mr. Wilson in 1874, or a line about on the meridian of 108° west longitude; on the south by the parallel of $36^{\circ} 45'$; on the west by meridian $109^{\circ} 30'$; and on the north by $37^{\circ} 30'$ north latitude. These boundaries included an area of about 6,500 square miles. An area of about 500 square miles was surveyed on the eastern base of the mountains on the outward march. Here Mr. Chittenden made about twelve stations, connecting with the former work and completing the sheets to the proposed eastern line of the survey.

The easternmost line of the district assigned to this division was over four hundred miles from Denver. The party arrived there on the 30th June, and commenced work immediately.

The work was generally done by means of the plane table, and re-enforced by both vertical and drainage sketches from all the stations, and also by time meanders of all the main streams, and generally by a running sketch of the routes traveled. The main stations averaged one to every seventy-five square miles of area.

By meandering Mr. Chittenden surveyed the San Juan river, the La Plata, the Mancos, and the Dolores, all of them considerable streams, and besides these the McElmo and Montezuma creeks, which, though well defined stream beds, contain no running water. These last named dry rivers are each upwards of seventy-five miles long, and for a considerable part of their course are in deep canons. In the meander he made a trigonometric location as often as once in ten miles.

The great trouble in working was lack of water. The party were often obliged to ride out ten, fifteen, and even twenty miles from the rivers to make a station and back again for camp, because outside of the rivers themselves there was no water at all.

In regard to the systems of working generally employed now in the different surveys west of the Missouri River, the plane-table system which was generally used this summer is admirably adapted to a low broken country, where good "points" are abundant, and works also extremely well in a simple canon country, where there are surrounding prominent points at not too great distance. But in a mountain country it could not be used to any advantage, and was eventually abandoned in all the mountain work. In low broken and canon country it is probably the best system that can be used; but in the ordinary rolling and mountainous country of the northwest it will not repay the extra weight and time which its use entails.

In any but a very mountainous country a system of meander seems to be almost necessary to make work on a scale of four inches to a mile complete. It is the abuse and not the use of the old odometer system that has brought it into so much discredit. If properly checked the meanders give the more important portions of the country, as the traveled routes and principal rivers, the greater degree of accuracy which is their due. The third and only remaining system in use in the West is that generally employed on this survey and formerly used both in the California survey and in that of the 40th parallel. It consists of a system of vertical and horizontal sketches based on a rather elaborate triangulation and checked by numerous angles, both vertical and horizontal. This system is peculiarly adapted to a rolling or mountainous country, and in such country can not be equaled by either of the other modes. It works well, too, in country of different character, and is, probably on the whole, the best system on which to base work in the average country of the West. It should, however, be supplemented by good meanders of all the main roads and rivers. In the work of the survey this summer the three systems were employed, and the above remarks are the immediate result of the summer's observations.

The party completed about six thousand square miles in the West, being obliged, after the trouble with the Indians, to leave unworked a small corner in the Northwest, which will require about five days to complete. This patch joins directly on to Mr. Gannett's uncompleted area, and lies entirely west of the Colorado line. In going to and from the work six full weeks were spent in marching. Mr. Chittenden worked about six thousand five hundred square miles, and made eighty-four main stations.

The geological examination by Mr. Holmes was fruitful of most important results. His investigations were extended from Colorado into portions of Utah, Arizona, and New Mexico.

No previous study of this region had been made, excepting that by Dr. Newberry, in 1859, of which nothing has been published up to this time.

In 1874, Dr. Eudlich examined the district lying to the east, so that Mr. Holmes took up the work where he left off at 108° west longitude, and carried it without difficulty to $109^{\circ} 30'$. In general the geology is not greatly complicated. The section of stratified rocks exposed extends from the lignitic series to the carboniferous, including about 2,000 feet of the former and slight exposures merely of the latter. About 8,000 feet of measures, therefore, passed under examination. Of other rocks, there are four small areas of trachyte, one limited area of metamorphic rock, and a few unimportant dikes.

Beginning at the east, Dr. Eudlich's section on meridian 108° includes the entire series, beginning with the lower carboniferous in the north and extending up into the tertiary at the south. The strike is east and west, the dip south from 5° to 45° . Working to the westward Mr. Holmes found the whole series flattening out, i. e., approaching a horizontal position. At the same time a gentle rise toward the northwest brings the cretaceous rocks to the surface, or at least up to the general level of the country. The lignitic group is, therefore, confined to the southeast. From Station I an outcrop of the light colored sandstone belonging to the base of this series could be traced along its entire course through his district.

The heaviest seam of coal examined in these beds is 26 feet in thickness. It is rather light and impure on the surface, but probably of moderately good quality. A number of less important seams could also be recognized.

West of the Rio La Plata the upper cretaceous beds are raised to a higher plane by a slight monoclinical fold, after which they spread out to the west, forming the Mesa Verde. This plateau extends nearly to the San Juan on the south, west beyond the Rio Mancos, and north to the middle of the district, an area of more than 700 square miles. On these three sides the mesa breaks abruptly off in lines of irregular escaped cliffs, generally from 1,000 to 2,000 feet in height.

The striking features of this series are the exposures of two horizons of massive sandstones. The upper forms the top of the mesa, the lower, 1,000 feet below, produces a subordinate shelf. Shales intervene between the sandstones of the lignitic and the upper sandstones of the mesa and between these and the lower sandstones. Around the base of the mesa the lower cretaceous shales outcrop. The belt covered by these is narrow and is followed by the hard sandstones of the Dakota group, which is very persistent here as elsewhere, and occupies the higher level of the entire mesa country to the west and north. The jurassic strata and the "red beds" are exposed in the sides and bottoms of the numerous canons and stream courses, the latter only in the greater valleys, and in patches about the bases of the trachytic areas. The jurassic section is, in the upper part, almost identical with the corresponding series in other parts of Colorado, but at the base has a larger development of soft sandstones and marls. The identification rests upon the analogy of position and lithology. The "red beds" are massive sandstones and conglomerates as usual.

The only important mountains are the Sierra La Plata. They lie toward the northwest, and are principally of carboniferous rocks, so highly metamorphosed as to have lost all apparent structure. A large number of rich lodes of gold and silver have been recently discovered in this group about the sources of the Rio La Plata, and an extensive placer bar is located near its exit from the mountains.

In the extreme northeast corner of this district there is a group of trachytic buttes, including Lone Cove, which belongs to the San Miguel mountains. West of the Mesa Verde, almost in the center of the district, stands the "Late" group, of which Ute Peak is the culminating summit. It covers an area of some 40 square miles, and is simply a mass of trachyte pushed up through and poured out over the floor of the Dakota group.

In the extreme southwest corner, principally in Arizona, are the Sierra Carisso, identical with the Late in nearly every respect, differing only in having carried up portions of the carboniferous rocks about their base, while a fragment of the same beds is caught up in the center of the group.

Of the 6,000 square miles, 5,700 are of sedimentary rocks. 230 of these in the southeast are of the so-called lignitic, 800, chiefly included in the Mesa Verde, belong to the upper cretaceous, and the remaining 4,900 to the lower cretaceous, and such of the earlier periods as are exposed in the crooked and narrow valleys and about the trachytic groups. In the cretaceous series Mr. Holmes examined a number of seams of workable coal, procured fossils in ten distinct horizons, and expects to be able to identify these horizons with such corresponding ones as exist on the Atlantic slope. The section obtained is the most complete and satisfactory made in Colorado up to this time. The trachyte areas include about 250 square miles, and seem to present no remarkable or unusual features.

The prehistoric remains in the canons and lowlands of the southwest are of great interest, and the study of them by Mr. Holmes was as complete as possible under the circumstances. Many cliff houses built in extraordinary situations, and still in a fine state of preservation, were examined. A good collection of pottery, stone implements, the latter including arrow-heads, axes, and ear ornaments, &c., &c., some pieces of rope, fragments of matting, water jars, corn and beans, and other articles were exhumed from the debris of a house. Many graves were found, and a number of skulls and skeletons that may fairly be attributed to the prehistoric inhabitants were added to the collection.

The western, or Grand River division consisted of Henry Gannett, topographer-in-charge, W. R. Atkinson, assistant topographer, A. C. Peale, geologist, two packers, and a cook.

The district assigned to this party lies between the parallels of latitude $37^{\circ} 52'$ and $39^{\circ} 15'$; is limited on the west by the meridian $109^{\circ} 30'$, and on the east by the western limit of the work of last year, approximately the Gunnison and Uncompahgre rivers. This embraces the country drained by the Uncompahgre and Dolores rivers and their branches.

The party left Denver on June 7th, and on July 3d commenced work. They worked uninterruptedly until August 15th, when the work was brought to a sudden close by the Indians.

The work was carried to the western line of Colorado, toward the northern end, extending 25 or 30 miles into Utah, and reaching the north and south lines throughout, except in the southwestern part. The total area surveyed is about 6,000 square miles. In doing this 74 stations were made.

The country is extremely diversified. The Uncompahgre flows through a broad valley, fifty miles in length by about twenty in width, almost perfectly flat, and very dry. The elevation is 4,500 to 6,000 feet. The soil is poor, and vegetation, except in the river bottom, very scanty.

Between the Uncompahgre and the Dolores is a high ridge, whose axis is parallel to the course of the rivers, i. e., about N. 30° W. It has a long, gradual slope to the Uncompahgre valley, while it breaks off sharply and steeply to the Dolores. The average elevation of the crest is 8,000 to 9,000 feet. Most of this country is well timbered with heavy pine, quaking aspen, and some spruce. There is also considerable open country, which is covered with luxuriant grass.

The Sierra la Sal is a short, isolated range of mountains, just west of the Dolores, separating it from the Grand river. The direction of the range is about north and south, its length about fifteen miles, and the elevation of the summits 12,000 to 12,500 feet.

The Grand river from the mouth of the Gunnison to that of the Dolores is alternately in open valley and low canons. On the south the river hugs the edge of the plateau closely, while on the north low, open, desert country extends about fifteen miles back from the river. This desert country extends down the Grand, and across to the Green, forming the great plateau in which these streams and the Colorado cut their canons.

South of the Sierra la Sal are fine valleys extending nearly to the head of the Dolores. Further west the country is a plateau, without water, covered with sage and pinion pine, and cut by numberless dry canons.

The geological features of the district surveyed by the Grand River division during the season of 1875 are comparatively simple, there being no great uplifts nor many local disturbances. The sedimentary formations represented are all included under carboniferous, red beds (triassic?), jurassic, and cretaceous. Exposures of metamorphic rocks are seen in several parts of the district, limited mainly to the bottoms of canons, the streams having cut through the overlying sedimentaries. The eruptive areas are also limited. In the southern part of the district we had the overlapping edges of various trachytic flows whose sources of origin were in the Uncompahgre mountains still further south. Besides these, there are three distinct centers of eruption, viz: The Lone Cove group of mountains on the south, the Abajo mountains in the southwest, and the Sierra la Sal mountains toward the northwest. These are of porphyritic trachyte, and have been pushed up through the cretaceous layers, which dip gently from them. The greater part of the district, however, is covered with sedimentary rocks, generally horizontal, or if dipping, but little inclined. In these beds the drainage is outlined by canons which are from a few hundred to over a thousand feet in depth. During the summer months the streams are dry.

Leaving the Los Pinos Indian agency, the first work was on the south side of the Gunnison river in a narrow strip of country lying between Mr. Gannett's district of 1874 and that of Mr. Wilson for the same year. The rocks here are trachytes interlaminated with tuffs in horizontal layers. They rest partly on metamorphic rocks, and partly on the remnants of cretaceous sandstones. Previous to the outpouring of these trachytes the country was evidently subjected to considerable erosion, the sandstones being in many places entirely removed, exposing the gneissic rocks upon which they were deposited. Going westward toward the Uncompahgre river, the volcanic rocks disappear, and rocks of upper cretaceous age show in bluffs on the east side. The weathering of these beds has produced a barren alkaline soil, in which there is no vegetation. In the immediate river bottom there is some good soil, but it is limited in extent. The course of the Uncompahgre is a few degrees west of north, and between it and the drainage of the San Miguel and Dolores rivers, which has approximately the same direction, is a plateau-like country with a gentle slope to the eastward toward the Uncompahgre, and breaking off in benches on the Dolores side. Seen from the mountains, this plateau appears very regular, nevertheless it is very much cut up by numerous canons, which carry water only in wet seasons. The floor of the plateau is composed chiefly of sandstones of the Dakota group, (cretaceous No. 1,) underlaid by jurassic shales and red beds, (triassic?) which rest upon metamorphic rocks, as seen in the canons. On the western side of the plateau is a monoclinal fold, which in some places becomes a fault of 300 to 500 feet. One of the most curious features of this region is a canon extending from the Dolores river to the Gunnison river. It is evidently the bed of an old stream which probably once flowed toward the Gunnison. At present, there are in it two creeks, one a tributary of the Gunnison and the other a branch of the Dolores, the latter the principal stream of the two. At the divide between them the canon is about 1,200 feet deep, 900 feet of gneissic rock and 300 of sedimentaries on the top. The dip is toward the east, and the creek flowing in that direction gradually gets higher and higher in the schists, and finally cuts through the overlying sandstones in which it joins the Gunnison. Toward the west the canon rapidly increases in depth until it is 3,000 feet below the general surface. The stream on this side cuts across the line of faulting of the west side of the plateau, and enters the red sandstones which incline westward. In these it joins the Dolores river. North of the canon, between it and Grand river, the Dakota group, which prevails to the southward, is almost entirely absent, the red beds forming the greater part of the surface, which is here a maze of dry canons. The country gradually falls off toward Grand river, the western line of faulting becomes a fold, and the eastern fold, which is also faulted in places, gradually becomes less. North of Grand river beds of upper cretaceous age appear, probably succeeded by tertiary as we go north. On the San Miguel river, and Dolores river, and extending westward, the rocks are sandstones. There are broad folds extending across the country whose axis are parallel, the general direction being north and south.

Between the San Miguel and Dolores the Dakota group forms the floor. Beyond the Dolores the red beds prevail, capped with isolated patches of jurassic shales, and underlaid with beds of carboniferous age. The latter show but in few places. The drainage here has two general courses at right angles to each other. The main streams flow in a general northerly direction.

In the Sierra la Sal the prevailing rock is a beautiful porphyritic trachyte, which in some places has included masses of cretaceous shales. One of the most prominent peaks has a capping of sandstone which was lifted up by the eruption of the mass, the base of the peak being entirely of trachyte. There are evidences of glacial action here. Northwest, and west of the group, the red beds have the Roches Montognes form, beautifully seen from the summits of the mountains.

The Abajo mountains are of porphyritic trachyte, similar to the Sierra la Sal, as are the mountains about Lone Cove, which properly belong to the district assigned to the San Juan division.

The work of the fourth division, directed by G. R. Bechler, extended over a large area, situated between meridians $104^{\circ} 30'$ and $106^{\circ} 30'$ and parallels $38^{\circ} 40'$ and $40^{\circ} 30'$, or from the foot-hills of the Rocky mountains to the Upper Arkansas and Eagle rivers, and from a point six miles south of Pike's Peak to within fifteen miles of Long's Peak.

In this district the entire Middle and South Parks are located and three of the large rivers of the west, the Arkansas, Grand, and Platte rivers, together with several of their large tributaries, have their origin. The principal branches are Blue, Snake, Williamson, and Frazer rivers on the west slope, and Tarryall, Fountain of the Bowille, Bear, Clear, St. Vrain, Boulder, Thompson, and Buckhorn rivers on the eastern slope.

The main Rocky range and its minor ranges are, in this district, peculiarly complicated, for the latter, at times, on account of their height and magnitude, seem to lose their subordinate character and become independent ranges, while the main range contains groups or clusters of peaks so complicated in their form and connections that it requires close observation on the part of the topographer to lay down the true drainage.

Among the minor ranges, the Park, Williams or Blue river, Gore, Tarryall, and Platte River ranges rank in height among the largest, while for extreme ruggedness, the Gore and Tarryall mountains cannot well be surpassed. In this district the great mining industries of Colorado are found.

The geographical features of this area are as follows: Between the Argentine and Georgia passes, a ridge of mountains leaves the main chain and follows a course about southeast and connects with the mountains near the Pike's Peak group on its west side. This is the Tarryall range, a rugged and abrupt granite wall, with several peaks over 12,500 feet in height and most of the others rising above timber line. The greatest depressions in this range are where the Tarryall and South Platte rivers break through in canons, and where the Ute Pass and Kanosha Pass afford an entrance to the South Park. To the east of the Kanosha pass a few miles, the Tarryall range separates into two ridges, which run nearly in an eastern direction. The northern ridge borders the south side of the North Platte river and is called the Kanosha or Platte River range. In this ridge volcanic peaks are found in great numbers. The mountain ranges in this portion of Colorado continually throw off spurs which are remarkable for the deep gorges which have been worn down their sides.

After completing the survey of Platte river, Tarryall, and the South Park districts, Mr. Bechler ascended the Arkansas valley, crossed the Tennessee Pass and examined the country that lies between the Eagle and Blue rivers, of which very little was known. This territory is bounded on the south, by the imposing mountain masses of the Mt. Lincoln group, and on the east by the cliff-walls of the Blue River range, and on the northeast by Gore's range, with its needle shaped peaks extending for twenty miles like sharp pinnacles.

In completing the survey of this district, Mr. Bechler joined, by his topographical work and triangulation, three separate surveys of previous years.

Crossing Gore's range and the Blue river, Mr. Bechler passed through the Middle Park and over the Boulder Pass to the sources of the Big Thompson creek, an important stream, rising on the east side of the Long's Peak group. Much excellent work was done in the ridges of hogbacks at the east base of the mountains, thus bringing the season's labors to a most successful termination. One hundred and six stations were made, barometrical elevations were 450, and the number of elevations taken with the gradiometer were about 6,000.

The party under Mr. Gardner had made but four stations when it was prevented from further prosecution of that duty by Indians. One of the stations occupied, was very important, viz., the Sierra la Sal mountain, which enabled Mr. Gardner to secure an excellent set of observations, thus extending the triangulation far into Utah, and connecting our eastern work with the great Colorado river of the west.

During the latter part of the season of 1874, Mr. W. H. Jackson, the photographer of Prof. Hayden's U. S. Geological Survey, in connection with Mr. Ernest Ingersoll, visited the southwestern portion of Colorado for the purpose of photographing the ruins, which rumor had placed in the canons of the Mesa Verde, and about El Late. The season was far advanced, and there was but little time for investigation, yet the eight days that were actually devoted to the subject brought to light a group of ancient habitations so novel in their construction and position that they have excited a very general interest. The results of the trip, as published in the correspondence of that time, and in Bulletin No. 1 of the survey, have already been widely distributed. The illustrations secured by photography, and then reproduced by photolithographic processes, have done much to popularize and render familiar the leading features of the subject, and showing, as they do, all the phases of the eccentric methods of these ancient builders, has made them an authority, and they have already been reproduced in a number of late publications.

The first trip proving so successful, Mr. Jackson was dispatched again this season to the same region with instructions to ascertain as far as possible the extent and distribution of these ruins, north of the present Moquis Pueblos. Associated with him in the enterprise was Mr. E. A. Barber, special correspondent of the New York Herald. A guide, two packers, and a cook constituted the whole party, and then, with six weeks' supplies laid in, the party started out from Parrott City, on the head of the Rio La Plata, August 27th, the general course being down the Rio San Juan to the DeChelly, up that to near Fort Defiance, and then over to the seven Moqui "Cities." Returning, they crossed the San Juan at the mouth of the DeChelly, and traveled northward to midway between the Sierra Abajo and La Sal, and then returned to starting point, across the heads of the canons which run southward to the San Juan.

The Upper San Juan, Mesa Verde, and El Late regions came within the area assigned Mr. W. H. Holmes, who, in addition to his geological investigations, made a special examination of the archæology of his region, bringing out with his ready and artistic pencil even more wonderful ruins (of the same general class however) than were found by Mr. Jackson the season previous.

Traveling westward to the head of the McElmo, a day was spent in the further investigation of that interesting locality. A number of new ruins were discovered, but in no way differing from those already figured. The extreme heat of the atmosphere and the aridity of the country prevented more than a superficial examination of the many side canons which debouch into the main one, only enough to determine satisfactorily that ruins were to be found only in those canons which had alluvial bottoms, or in the near vicinity of tillable land. This fact held good in the other regions, for in no case could a single vestige of any habitation be found in the sterile, rocky gorges anyways removed from cultivable ground. Their ideas of a good farming land would hardly come up to that of an eastern farmer, yet a strip of bottom-land only fifty yards in width at the bottom of their deep canons would yield maize enough to subsist quite a town. The supposition that they were an agricultural people is strengthened by the fact that in the vicinity of any group of ruins there are also a number of little "cubby-holes," too small for habitation, but very evidently intended for "caches" or granaries, and the large towns contain small apartments that must have been for the same use.

The only known water in the country, short of the San Juan, over forty miles distant, was on the Hovenweep, near the town which was discovered last year, thus necessitating the retraversing of so much of the country. A day spent in some of the tributary canons developed no remains of any importance, although every little side canon contains traces of former occupation by the town-builders. To the west of the Hovenweep is a high, level plateau separating it from the canons of the Montezuma, and running north and south from the waters of the San Juan to those of the Dolores. Upon this were found the remains of many circular towers, all of about the same size, twelve to fifteen feet in diameter. They are generally almost entirely obliterated, but in two or three cases portions of the wall, twelve to fifteen feet high, of well-built masonry, were found. This and sandstone mesa, a thousand feet above the surrounding valleys, does not contain a spring or any water whatever, except such as collects in the water pockets after a shower. The soil upon its surface is thin, and in places blown off clean to the bed rock. Grass, cedar, and artemisia flourish; in fact it is most excellent grazing land, and as cultivation was out of the question, these people must have had herds of sheep or goats which they brought up here to graze during the winter, mostly, just as the Ute and Navajo do at the present time, and these towers were built as places of refuge, or residence for their herders.

Eight and ten miles below the Hovenweep town are two groups of ruins worthy of note. The first is built upon an almost perfectly rectangular block of sandstone, which occupies a prominent position on a spur of the mesa. It is thirty-eight by thirty-two feet square, and twenty feet in height, as true and as level as though set by masons. The summit is entirely covered with the work that was built upon it, very evidently for merely defensive purposes, for directly at the foot of the rock, at its south side, was the habitation of the family. A line of wall forty feet square incloses a space, within which was another building resting against the rock itself, the roof of which served as a means of access to the rock above. Two miles below, where the McElmo comes in, and upon the point of the mesa, are other similar ruins, but built much less regularly. Upon one of the faces of the rock is an inscription chipped in with some sharp pointed instrument, and covering some sixty square feet of surface. Figures of goats, lizards, and human figures abound with many hieroglyphical signs. The top of the mesa afforded much food for speculation in the interesting remains there discovered. The extreme point was a perfectly flat, level table, fifty by one hundred yards in diameter, with perpendicular walls of from fifty to one hundred feet on all sides, excepting the narrow neck which connected it with the main plateau. Across this neck a wall had been built to keep off either human or beast, and rendered the place perfectly isolated. Inside, nearly the entire space was subdivided into small squares and double-walled circles formed by slabs of stone set on edge, each square about three by five feet. The supposition has always been that these were burial places. They were dug down upon to a considerable depth without discovering anything. Here the soil was thin and light, so that the labor of excavating was easy. A number of the squares were cleaned out to the bed rock beneath, which in some cases was not more than a foot in depth, but without discovering anything more than that in every case the earth had been burnt, and a thin layer of charcoal remained. The question arises as to whether these people might not have been cremationists?

The Rio San Juan, at the mouth of the McElmo, is a stream averaging one hundred feet in width, and three to five in depth, flowing in great curves that almost touch upon themselves again, and bordered with dense groves of cottonwood. The bottoms are from one to three miles in width, and run back over sage-covered benches to the sandstone bluffs, picturesque in outline and color, which rise from five hundred to one thousand feet above the river. They gradually close in upon the stream until it is finally lost in the great canon below the mouth of the DeChelly.

Twelve or fifteen miles down the river brought the party to the first important ruins, although the older, almost unrecognized "indications" were abundant everywhere. At that point the bench land juts up over the river, and almost upon the brink is a quadrangular structure one hundred and sixty by one hundred and twenty feet square, with a small open court facing the river. A singular feature in its construction was a semicircular apartment in the center of the building and the rear of the court, about the outer circle of which was ranged a series of seven other apartments averaging thirty-five by fifty feet. Under the bluffs, and almost overhanging the stream, were a row of little cave houses. Other cave houses were niched in the cave like recesses of the bluffs for some distance above and below.

Some ten miles further, and the bordering bluffs came down quite near the stream, in some places overhanging it. Cave and cliff ruins occurred frequently in them. Upon the south side of the river an important cave ruin was discovered, which was quite remarkable in its way. Imagine a perpendicular bluff nearly three hundred feet in height, the upper half of which is a firm white sandstone, and the lower half a dull red, soft, and friable variety. Time has excavated an almost perfectly hemispherical cave from this bluff, equally divided between the two kinds of rock. It is two hundred and fifty feet wide, two hundred feet deep, and the same from top to bottom at its outer face. Midway from top to bottom, and running completely around the half circle which formed the back of the cave, are two benches, upon the upper of which is built the town or series of rooms two hundred feet in length in the aggregate, the lower serving as a walk or promenade, from which access could only be had by ladders. A little to the left of the center is the principal building, consisting of three rooms, each two stories in height, and now standing twelve feet high. Adjoining it on the right is a long row of twelve apartments built as a solid block, and on the left an open space of sixteen feet, and then another small building. In the open space were four holes, four inches in diameter and twelve deep, drilled into the rock, serving evidently as post-holes for a loom.

All the rooms have been burnt out clean so that not a vestige of wood work remains. The walls are remarkably well preserved, the adobe mortar on the inside still retaining the impression of the delicate lines on the thumbs and fingers of the hands of the builders. Impressions of the whole of the hand were frequent, showing them to be small and finely formed. Corn cobs and pieces of pottery were found imbedded in the mortar. In the center of the larger rooms, beneath the debris, were found the fire places, circular excavations, which still retained the charred wood and ashes of aboriginal fires. Perched up in one of the houses, under a great dome of overhanging rock, that distinctly echoed every word uttered, with a steep descent of over 100 feet to the broad, fertile bottoms, handsome groves, and meandering course of the river, these old, old people, whom even the imagination can hardly clothe with reality, must have felt a sense of security that even the inroads of the barbarian northmen could hardly have ruffled.

Omitting mention of large numbers of ruins which are clustered along the San Juan, the next important group discovered, for this is the first time any of these have been brought before the world, were those of the Rio DeChelly. The party reached this point August 7th, the very hottest portion of the year, in a region noted for the intensity of the scorching rays which radiate from its bare plateau of white sandstone. The average temperature throughout the day, in the sun, was 140°. The temperature of the water in the river, in the midst of the rapid current, was 88°, and that was the coldest water to be had.

The Rio DeChelly, for a distance of about thirty-five miles above its mouth, is so canoned, and the wash, for the bed of the stream is perfectly dry the greater portion of the year, cuts from wall rock to wall rock so frequently that it is impossible to travel up it, except in the bed, and that is so tortuous and rocky in places that it would be difficult, if not impossible. Making a detour to the right, the first opening into the canon was reached ten miles above. In here an interesting and extensive ruin was found, which was so well preserved that it seemed to have been vacated less than a score of years, and so near like the workmanship and manner of building of the present Moquis that it would not be difficult to imagine them lurking among the deserted rooms. This ruin was situated in a long cave-like bench or mesa, running along the face of a perpendicular bluff some fifty feet above its base, and a total length of nearly 300 yards. The town was irregularly, but compactly built, conforming to the rock upon which it was placed, the rooms arranged in a single row most of the way, but at either end bunching up to two and three deep. A ground plan shows seventy-five rooms, with many little irregular "cubby holes," with a total length of 548 feet. A few yards further to the right a half dozen detached buildings, cisterns, and reservoirs yet remain perfect enough to show their purpose. In the center of the mass was a well preserved circular apartment, a little below the general level of the others, that was probably an estufa. The goat corrals were inside between the houses and the bluff. Digging beneath the debris several pieces of finely preserved pottery were found, the same finely ornamented and glazed ware of which the fragments are so universally scattered over the whole country. Beneath the center of the town there was found in one group some whole jars of about two gallons capacity each, of the grey indented ware, but they were too fragile to transport upon pack mules. Besides the pottery, many stone implements and arrow points were unearthed. Another detour to the right, this time over an elevated plateau of white sandstone, across which were drifted great dunes of white sand, brought the party to the famous, so called, diamond fields of Arizona, about which there was such an excitement in 1872. Lingered on its bare red plain, upon which the sun beat with redoubled intensity, only long enough to gather about a pint of garnets, which were of excellent quality, and very abundant, camp was made at the foot of a side canon which came in from the west, and was known as the Canon Bonito Chiquito. Another group of ruins occurred here, not in a large town, but in scattered houses, both up and down the DeChelly and the Bonito. A marked feature was great reservoirs, in which there was, even now, abundant and excellent water. Two or three miles below, in the canon of the main stream, was a well preserved two-story house standing upon a bench elevated fifty feet above the valley, and overhung by a great roof of rock that effectually shielded it from the storms. Near by was a great natural reservoir filled with good water. Another five or six miles and the canon of the DeChelly opened out into a great valley, from one to three miles in width, and extending up to the foot of the great canon near Fort Defiance. Twenty-five to thirty-five miles above the Bonito are some peculiar table rocks and monuments that form notable landmarks. The ruins are now scarce, only a few being met with in the caves at the side of the valley. The bottom lands bear the impress of very numerous ruins, adobe, very likely, that are now almost entirely obliterated, and would hardly be noticed were it not for the broken pottery.

At the head of the valley of the DeChelly the trail turned off to the southwest, just above the upper edge of the great white mesa. Taking only two others, Mr. Barber and Lee, the guide, and sending the remainder of the train back some fifty miles where there was suitable grazing, Mr. Jackson continued over to the Moquis Pueblo, seventy-five miles distant, with only the photographic apparatus and supplies for five days. Tequa was reached by noon of the following day. As these pueblos have been so frequently described and illustrated, the party spent only two days and a half among the six most easterly towns, viz: Tequa, Se-chum-e-way, Moqui, Moo-she-neh, Shong-a-pah-wee, and She-paul-a-wee. Photographs of each of these were made, and numerous sketches illustrating their habits, dress, and occupations, collections of recent and ancient pottery and tools, and other objects of interest were made. The comparison between the workmanship of the northern town builders and these Moquis was very much in favor of the former. The highest perfection was reached in the cliff houses of the Rio Mancos, where some of the houses were marvels of finish and durability, and then traveling toward the Moquis, there is a gradual merging of one style into the other, from the neatly cut rock and correct angles to the comparatively crude buildings now inhabited.

Retracing their steps to the San Juan, at the mouth of the DeChelly, the party now traveled northward toward the Sierra Abajo, up a stream known as Epsom creek, from the water which is found near its head tasting and operating like that salt. The usual indefinite ruins which occur on the low lands continued up this valley over thirty miles. To the west was a great labyrinth of canons running off into those of the Great Colorado, an examination of some of which discovered many cave and cliff houses and towns, all of the same general type as the others. The ruins gradually diminished as they approached the Sierra Abajo, and several days spent in the examination of the canons and plateaus about it and the Sierra La Sal failed to bring to light any more evidences of their occupation.

Nearly opposite the Sierra Abajo or Blue Mountains, as they are locally known, heads the great canons and valley of the Montezuma which empties into the San Juan. Here the bottoms of the canons have once supported a very thickly settled community. There is almost a continuous series of ruins for a distance of twenty-five miles. This in one canon only, and all the others contain numerous remains, chiefly in cliff houses and towns. In the main canon first spoken of are two ruins notable for the size of the stones employed in their construction. In one built upon a small isolated table land in the middle of the valley are stones set upon end, six feet in length by eighteen inches square, and ranged along the walls a distance of twenty-five or thirty yards. Another case is where stones seven feet in height (above ground) and twenty inches square are standing perpendicularly about five feet apart, and form one side of a wall inclosing the ruins of a large important building. Throughout the canons every available defensive point has been utilized and is now covered with the remains of heavy walls and large blocks of houses. Another singular feature was the number of holes cut into the perpendicular lower wall of the canon for the purpose of ascending the rocks, holes just large enough to give hand and foot hold, and leading either to some walled-up cave or to a building erected above. Some of these steps ascend the nearly perpendicular face of the rock for 150 or 200 feet. On exposed surfaces, disintegrations has almost entirely weathered away the holes, while on more protected surfaces they are deep enough to still answer their original purpose. The main western branch of the Montezuma contains the greater number and more important ruins of all northern tributaries of the San Juan west of the Rio Macos. Water was found in a few pools near its head, and lower down running along in a small stream a distance of two or three miles, when it sank again. The bottoms are rich, and the present Indians, Utes, who occupy the country, raise good crops of corn without irrigation.

The results of this trip was the collection of a large number of utensils, both modern and ancient, stone arrow and spear points, knives, and axes, photographs, especially illustrative of the most important ruins, and numerous sketches of everything of note, which will be brought out in detail in the regular publications of the survey.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

The annual report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the year ending June 30, 1875, contains a large amount of useful and interesting information even for the general reader, including a statement of the surveys of the public lands during the last year; the comparative progress of surveys and disposals of public lands during the last ten years; the surveys of Indian lands and of abandoned military reservations; astronomical surveys of boundaries between States and Territories; a description of the principal surveying bases and meridians governing the surveys of the public lands; operations under the laws relating to private land claims, donation claims, mission claims, Indian cases, and certain cases of scrip in Arizona, Colorado, and New Mexico; reports in relation to pre-emption and homesteads and operations under the town site laws; reports on timber culture and the rights of Indians on the public lands, also in regard to lands granted for educational purposes; useless military reservations and what to do with them; operations under the mining laws in Arizona, California, Colorado, Montana, Nevada, Utah, and Oregon; report of the location of lands with military bounty-land warrants, including Revolutionary bounty land scrip, also with agricultural college scrip, and showing the number of acres located in the several States and Territories with bounty land warrants during the last fiscal year; a statement of the progress made in the adjustment of land grants for railroad purposes, and of the disposal of swamp lands; a report of the decisions rendered affecting private land claims, concerning lands chiefly in California, New Mexico, Oregon, and Washington Territory; decisions of the Department during the last fiscal year under the pre-emption and homestead laws, and those affecting mining rights; decisions affecting lands lying within railroad grants, also those affecting the holders of military bounty land warrants; a complete list of the circulars issued by the General Land Office during the past year; a list of the United States surveyors general, with their respective places of residence, also of the district land offices, with the changes made during the last year, and the annual reports of the surveyors general for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.

The report also contains a large number of valuable tabular statements showing the extent of the surveys of the public lands, not only during the past year, but all lands surveyed since the beginning of the surveying system in this country, with the amount still remaining unsurveyed in each of the States and Territories; a statement of lands sold, and of those entered under the homestead law of 1862, and the land located with agricultural college scrip under the act of July 2, 1862, and supplemental acts, also the selections of swamp lands that have been approved and patented for the several States; statements of lands granted for the construction of canals, railroads, and military wagon roads, also estimates of the various appropriations needed for the next fiscal year for the use of General Land Office and its dependencies.

The report shows a falling off in the disposals of public lands under various heads during the last year, as compared with the preceding year, of 2,460,601 acres, and that the decrease in entries made for actual settlement is found to be 1,500.880 acres. This is attributable, in part, to the devastation of grasshoppers, to severe droughts in some localities, and to a decrease in emigration. It is thought that this decrease will be likely to continue, not only for the reasons assigned, but because the area of public lands desirable for homestead settlement is becoming very small, and the construction of railroads in the sparsely inhabited portions of the country has almost entirely ceased.

The Commissioner earnestly urges the necessity of future legislation to protect the interests of the Government in relation to the survey and sale of pine, fir, and other valuable timber lands. Experience shows that through the facilities furnished by that provision of the pre-emption laws which, for unoffered lands, extends to applicants a credit of thirty-three months, opportunity is found, under cover of the "declaratory statement" which gives to the pre-emptor protection in his possession of the tract, to strip the lands of their timber, and thereupon to abandon them without even the payment of the minimum price.

Another class of timbered lands not heretofore referred to in the reports from that office are the wooded portions of the mountain ranges of the West, including the Pacific slope. Only a small portion of these lands has been surveyed, and they are not in the market, and yet, in the vicinity of mining localities, large sections of country are stripped of timber by depredators, who take what they want, and the loss falls on the Government. The Commissioner recommends that this class of lands be surveyed and sold, wherever practicable, and says that the homestead and pre-emption laws have no proper application to such lands, and this fact should be declared by statute. In making sale of these timbered lands, he thinks the United States should reserve the unqualified right to all valuable deposits of minerals that may be found in them, with full power, except as to any trees remaining thereon, to sell the same, upon application, under the mining laws.

Referring to the lands west of the one hundredth meridian, the Commissioner says that—

The early practice of the Government indicates that the public lands were at first regarded and administered solely with a view to the revenue to be derived from their sale. Gradually, however, the view was asserted that the real profit to the Treasury and to the people at large was not to be found in largest measure in the consideration paid, but rather in the productive forces which settlement and cultivation would necessarily bring into play. This idea has been formulated into a policy, and since the act of May 20, 1862, commonly known as the homestead law, has been the leading purpose in all legislative and executive action.

Thus far in the administration of the laws the general wisdom of the existing policy is amply shown. A period has, however, now been reached when exception ought to be made.

Legislation and executive practice have heretofore been suggested and controlled by the physical and climatic conditions prevailing between the eastern boundary of the State of Ohio and the central portions of the States of Kansas and Nebraska, covering the valleys of the Ohio, the Mississippi, and the Missouri rivers, and extending from the eighty-first degree to the ninety-fifth degree of west longitude. This is well classified as the "fertile belt" of the continent. To this region, agricultural in its every feature, both the exactions of the homestead and pre-emption laws in the matter of residence and cultivation upon the tract entered, and the limitation of quantity allowed to be taken by any one person, are of undoubted applicability. Beyond and westward of this belt, or in all that section lying between the one hundredth meridian on the east, and the Cascade Range and Sierra Nevada Mountains on the west, and, within these limits, from the Mexican line on the south to the international boundary on the north, a totally different set of conditions, geographical, physical, and climatic, are found to exist. Within this vast area agriculture, as understood and pursued in the valley of the Mississippi and to the eastward, has no existence. Irrigation is indispensable to production. That there are limited areas within which by its aid crops are and may be secured is true, but the proportion of land within the area now treated of, which, under the present system of disposals, can by this means be made productive, is insignificant. Under a system which would justify large expenditures and insure the utilization for purposes of irrigation of the whole volume of water reaching the valleys from the mountain streams, but a mere fraction of the whole great area could be made fit for tillage.

Leaving out of view the great mineral wealth of the region under discussion, and treating only of that portion of it supposed to fall within the purview of the laws for the disposal of the public lands not mineral, it may be safely affirmed that, except in the immediate valleys of the mountain streams, where by dint of individual effort water may be diverted for irrigating purposes, title to the public lands cannot be honestly acquired under the homestead laws. That cultivation and improvement which are required, and which are made to stand in the place of price, are impossible; and, if attempted, are without result. But the vast areas here referred to are not without value, and for a large acreage purchasers would be found if a system of sale should be authorized in accordance with the necessities of the situation.

I have adverted to the fact that the immediate valleys of the streams may be made productive by resort to irrigation, and this, too, without a larger outlay than could be provided for by the occupants of tracts limited as to extent by the provisions of the homestead and pre-emption laws. But there is a still larger area, possessing in equal measure the natural elements of fertility, which, under a liberal system of purchase, would also be utilized for farming purposes. I refer to lands lying along the general course of such streams as bear a volume of water larger than is required for irrigating the narrow margins of "first bottom" along their courses, to the mesa, or table lands of the central plateau. For their reclamation a system necessarily expensive, because involving canals or main ditches of great length and size, is required; and, hence, associated capital must be called upon to furnish the means of success. But the security for its repayment, even the inducement to furnish it, must be found in the lands to be benefited. It is only necessary to make this suggestion for it to become manifest that so long as disposals are hampered by the requirements, and restricted to the quantities prescribed by the homestead and pre-emption laws, this class of lands must remain undisposed of, and their present waste condition be perpetuated.

Thus far I have treated of the limited portions of the central plateau, which, under favorable conditions can be made to contribute in some measure to the volume of the cereal and vegetable products of the country. A still larger proportion of the belt now under consideration finds profitable use in the pasturage of large herds of domestic animals, sheep, cattle, and horses. The pasturage of the plains and mountain valleys is of great excellence. But here, again, the conditions under which that industry is prosecuted bear no similitude to those under which the same business is conducted within the "fertile belt," and the same incongruity is found in the application of existing public land laws, when tried by the reasonable wants of those in the stock business, as has been seen to exist in the case of the only lands fit for general farming uses. The quantity of land necessary to the support of a given number of domestic animals on the table lands is very largely in excess of that required for the profitable pasturage of a like number in the fertile belt. The excellence of the pasturage of the plains and valleys consists in the fact that the grasses, though thin and of slow growth, retain their nutritious qualities throughout the entire year, and in the further fact that, for the present, the range is only limited by the possibility of reaching suitable watering places.

For grazing purposes the limitation of the right of purchase to one quarter-section, and that under the impossible condition of cultivation, is to forbid the acquisition of title to pasture lands by citizens "careful of their proofs," and is, in effect, to withhold absolutely from sale that which, in fact, is now the largest remaining class of the public lands.

From the foregoing recitations it will be perceived that I have reached the conclusion that both public and private interests demand that that body of surveyed land within the "central plateau," so called, not embraced in the first bottom of the streams, and commonly known in the region where situated, as the mesa lands, ought to be offered at the earliest possible day for cash purchase, and thereafter that portion remaining unsold be subject to private entry at $1.25 per acre. To the extent to which sales could be made the Treasury ought to be replenished from this source. Persons desiring to acquire title ought to be relieved from the necessity of making questionable affidavits requisite under the homestead and pre-emption laws. Every hinderance to the fullest possible production in this region ought to be removed. The mining industry of the mountains, though in its infancy, demands of food products a large share of all that are raised within the contiguous country. Referring again to the particular matter of the pasture lands, the policy of such sale may be urged as necessary to the good order of the communities where the business is generally prosecuted, as well as on the ground of justice to the class engaged in the pasturage calling. The present policy compels them to use the public lands as their feeding ground, having no better right to their selected range as against another whose purposes or seeming convenience may lead to an attempted occupation of the same ground than they may be able to assert by forcible means. Conflicts and uncertainties necessary follow upon this state of things, to the detriment alike of order and development. This result must be intensified as the herds increase and desirable localities become monopolized.

Seeing no remedy for these threatening evils so long as the exclusive policy of withholding the public lands from sale is continued, interested parties have suggested a system of leasing by which, for a reasonable rental, designated tracts might be held in individual control for pasturage purposes only; subject, however, to be defeated as to any part of the tract so held by a sale thereof under existing laws. I find, on examination of the "Crown lands occupation acts" of New South Wales of 1861, and of the "Crown lands alienation act" of 1868 of the Colony of Queensland, that a system of leasing having the features above indicated is applied to the pasturage districts of these colonies. That such a system might be advantageously adopted within our own grazing districts west of the one hundredth meridian is possible. It is not, however, in consonance with the established methods of our land system, and would require legislation to authorize it. I am of the opinion that the immediate necessities of the situation can be better met by an offering of this class of lands at public sale. This can be done to the extent that surveys have progressed, under the provisions of existing law.

I have endeavored generally to indicate that offerings of the public lands west of the one hundredth meridian would not be inimical to the objects of the prevailing policy, which has tended to restrict disposals to the homestead and pre-emption laws. The facts will justify the declaration that the policy of restriction has retarded actual settlement in this region. While the record shows that in many localities it has been the fruitful source of fraud—fraud so glaring as to call into exercise the powers of grand juries—not, however, into successful or preventive exercise. Prosecutions for irregularities in obtaining title to the public lands find little sympathy among communities hindered in general and individual progress by being made subject to conditions inappropriate to their surroundings.

I recommend, therefore, without hesitation, as a matter of justice, both to the individual settler and the communities interested, as well as in view of the amount to be secured to the Treasury in reimbursement of the large sums expended for surveys and the general administration of the land system, that the policy of public offerings authorized by law be resumed at an early day as to lands west of the one hundredth meridian embraced in the description of mesa or table lands.

The report contains valuable statistics relating to the mines of Nevada, Utah, and Montana.

The product of the mines of the State of Nevada for the year commencing July 1, 1874, and ending June 30, 1875, was as follows :

Name of county.	No. of tons extracted.	Gross yield, or value.
Elko.....	8,001	$242,264 09
Esmeralda.....	6,659	489,643 39
Eureka.....	66,479	3,180,644 40
Humboldt.....	7,801	288,592 60
Lander.....	7,367	891,607 97
Lincoln.....	23,411	656,773 22
Lyon.....	1,600	25,940 83
Nye.....	13,263	619,861 12
Storey.....	562,239	23,785,151 03
White Pine.....	15,902	806,582 78
Totals.....	712,731	30,987,061 43
Ores.....	712,731	30,987,061 43
Tailings.....	126,997	791,874 87
Borax.....	465	55,500 00

In Utah Territory there are eighty-six mining districts, the most important of which are Little Cottonwood, Big Cottonwood, Parley Park or Uintah, West Mountain or Bingham Canyon, Ophir, American Fork, Lake Side, Rush Valley, Camp Floyd, East and West Tintic and Beaver, in all of which silver, lead, and copper exist in inexhaustible quantities.

Large deposits of gold ore are found in American Fork, Bingham Canyon, and Uintah districts.

There are fifty-three reduction-works, viz :

Smelting-works.....	31
Arrastras.....	4
Separating and refining.....	1
Concentrating.....	4
Stamp-mills.....	13
Total.....	53

Ore, bullion, &c., produced from June 30, 1874, to June 30, 1875 :

Silver-lead-ore, 6,978 tons, at $100.....	$697,800
Copper-ore, 380 tons, at $51.50.....	19,570
Base bullion, 15,744 tons, at $250.....	3,936,000
Copper bullion, 65 tons, at $250..	16,250
Pure lead, 2,500 tons, at $100.....	250,000
Gold-dust, 2,450 ozs., at $18.....	43,700
Silver bars, 705,000 ozs., at $1.25.....	881,250
Total.....	5,844,570

In Montana Territory the yield of the placer claims during the last year is estimated at $2,500,000. Rich placers are being worked in the vicinity of Jefferson City that yielded $350 per week to the man.

The yield of the gold quartz lodes in Montana during the last year is estimated at $1,500,000. There is great interest manifested in its silver lodes. Many new and rich districts have been brought into favorable notice, and large returns and good profits have been realized. The lack of railroad transportation is, however, a great drawback to the mining operations in this Territory, and more good smelting works are much needed. Rich deposits of copper have been discovered, chiefly in the vicinity of Helena and Copperopolis. Extensive beds of bituminous and semi-bituminous coal have been found. Wheat, rye, oats, potatoes, and vegetables generally, are cultivated successfully, and yield handsome returns. Considerable attention is also given to stock-raising, with favorable results.

The report of the Surveyor General of Arizona shows an increasing interest and development of the mining operations in that Territory. Within forty miles of Tucson gold placers of an unexpectedly rich character have been discovered recently. In the Pinal mountains, north of the Gila valley, remarkably large deposits of silver have been discovered. Nuggets of native silver weighing from one ounce to thirty-four pounds have been taken from these mines.

In Mohave and Yuma counties rich discoveries of gold and silver have been made, and every steamer via the Colorado river and Gulf of California carries tons of ore and bullion to San Francisco. In the vicinity of Prescott a section containing gold placers and gold and silver lodes in great numbers, new and much richer in developments than heretofore discovered, have recently been found, and the facilities for the reduction of ore are being increased. It is expected that during the present year the Southern Pacific Railroad of California will reach the Colorado river on the western border of the Territory, which will afford quicker and cheaper transportation, and inevitably give renewed impetus to all branches of industry within its borders.

One of the singular climatic features of Arizona is the fact that there are copious rains there in the months of July and August, which revive vegetation at a time when other sections of the country are liable to drought. Copper is being profitably mined in eastern Arizona. It is one of the most favorable Territories for stock growing. Those who have introduced flocks and herds are increasing them rapidly. Stock of all kinds is kept fat the year round by grazing alone, without shelter at any time. Grain, vegetables, and fruits are successfully cultivated. Peace prevails in every part of the Territory, and people go when and where they please without molestation by the Indians.

United States land officers are located at the following named points in the different States and Territories :

Ohio, Chillicothe; Indiana, Indianapolis; Illinois, Springfield; Missouri, Boonville, Iron-ton, Springfield; Alabama, Mobile, Huntsville, Montgomery; Mississippi, Jackson; Louisiana, New Orleans, Monroe, Natchitoches; Michigan, Detroit, East Saginaw, Ionia, Marquette, Traverse City; Arkansas, Little Rock, Camden, Harrison, Dardanelle; Florida, Gainesville; Iowa, Fort Des Moines, Sioux City; Wisconsin, Menasha, Falls of St. Croix, Wausau, La Crosse, Bayfield, Eau Claire; California, San Francisco, Marysville, Humboldt, Stockton, Visalia, Sacramento, Los Angeles, Shasta, Susanville, Independence; Nevada, Carson City, Eureka, Pioche, Elko; Washington Territory, Olympia, Vancouver, Walla-Walla; Minnesota, Taylor's Falls, Saint Cloud, Du Luth, Alexandria, Worthington, New Ulm, Litchfield, Detroit, Redwood Falls; Oregon, Oregon City, Roseburg, Le Grand, Linkville, Dalles; Dakota Territory, Sioux Falls, Springfield, Fargo, Yankton, Bismarck; Nebraska, Norfolk, Beatrice, Lincoln, Niobrara, Grand Island, North Platte, Bloomington; New Mexico Territory, Santa Fe, La Mesilla; Kansas, Topeka, Salina, Independence, Wichita, Kirwin, Concordia, Larned, Hays City; Colorado Territory, Denver City, Fair Play, Central City, Pueblo, Del Norte; Idaho Territory, Boise City, Lewiston; Montana Territory, Helena, Bozeman; Arizona Territory, Prescott, Florence; Utah Territory, Salt Lake City; Wyoming Territory, Cheyenne.

The United States surveyors general and their offices are given as follows :

C. W. Babcock, Lawrence, Kansas; J. H. Baker, St. Paul, Minnesota; Wm. P. Dewey, Yankton, Dakota Territory; T. B. Searight, Denver City, Colorado Territory; L. F. Car-tee, Boise City, Idaho Territory; James T. Stratton, San Francisco, California; E. S. Davis, Virginia City, Nevada; James K. Proudft, Santa Fe, New Mexico Territory; Benjamin Simpson, Eugene City, Oregon; William McMicken, Olympia, Washington Territory; J. R. Clark, Plattsmouth, Nebraska; A. J. Smith, Helena, Montana Territory; Nathan Kimball, Salt Lake City, Utah Territory; John Wasson, Tucson, Arizona Territory; Leroy DeBall, Tallahassee, Florida; O. H. Brewster, New Orleans, Louisiana; E. C. David, Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory.

Tabular statement showing the number of acres of public lands surveyed in the following land States and Territories up to June 30, 1874, during the fiscal year, and the total of the public land surveyed up to June 30, 1875; also the total area of the public domain remaining unsurveyed within the same.

Land States and Territories.	Areas of public land in States and Territories.		Number of acres of public lands surveyed—				Total remaining, course, of, in- clusive of the area of private land claims surveyed up to June 30, 1875.
	In acres.	In square miles.	Up to June 30, 1874.	Prior to June 30, 1874, not heretofore reported.	Within the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.	Total up to June 30, 1875.
Wisconsin..	30	53,924	34	60	60
Iowa.....	30	55,045	35	00	00
Minnesota..	40	83,531	35	12	10,749.74	67	16,831,273
Kansas.....	76	80,891	45	85	2,622,257.74	76
Nebraska...	00	75,995	32	10	62	14,078,138
California..	40	81	38	78	1,001,118.55	72	79,931,868
Nevada.....	41	90	5	94	10	61,698,531
Oregon.....	80	74	15	17	178,134.81	35	44,155,625
Wash'gt'n..	60	94	14	46	177,118.80	15	33,506,045
Colorado...	00	00	15	66	42	49,087,558
Utah.....	75	78	5	92	662,113.51	05	47,418,170
Arizona.....	04	16	3	53	23,009.00	10	69,399,494
N. Mexico..	40	01	5	85	92	71,359,548
Dakota.....	40	32	13	43	62,874,937.67	51	79,856,989
Idaho.....	60	84	4	53	905,221.28	74	50,307,986
Montana...	40	78	6	81	1,208,683.81	65	84,023,475
Wyoming...	20	63	4	41	194,908.23	23	58,173,997
Missouri...	00	■	41	00	00
Alabama...	80	22	35	60	80
Mississippi.	40	56	34	40	40
Louisiana..	40	46	25	53	113,269.19	31	2,321,509
Arkansas...	20	98	35	20	20
Florida.....	20	88	25	70	461,944.29	14	8,123,706
Ohio.....	60	64	25	60	60
Indiana.....	60	69	21	80	60
Michigan...	40	51	34	40	40
Illinois.....	00	10	31	00	00
Indian.....	40	91	25	25	44,171,264.81	80	17,150,250
Alaska.....	00	190	309,529,600
Total	1,834,724,856	2,886,758	649,393,052	4,782,510.35	23,077,531.86	690,258,094	1,154,471,762

(a) Of the surveys in Minnesota, 43,972 acres of the reservation for the Chippewas of the Mississippi, per treaty of March 19, 1867, (Statutes, vol. 16, page 712,) were subdivided into sections; also 240,485 acres of the White Earth Indian reservation, per same treaty.

(b) Of the surveys in Washington Territory, 178,861 acres are of the Yakama Indian reservation, under treaty of June 9, 1855, (Statutes, vol. 12, page 961,) and 7,169 acres of the Swinomish Indian reservation, under treaty of January 22, 1855, (Statutes, vol. 12, page 937,) both subdivided into 40-acre tracts.

(c) Of the surveys in Dakota Territory, 187,359 acres are of the Yankton Sioux reservation, under treaty of April 19, 1859, (Statutes, vol. 11, page 743,) subdivided into 40-acre tracts, and 587,840 acres of the Old Winnebago and Sioux Indian reservation, subdivided partly into 40-acre tracts, and the remainder into sections. Treaty of April 29, 1868, (Statutes, vol. 15, page 635.)

(d) Of the surveys in Indian Territory, 479,667 acres are of the reservation for the Sac and Fox Indians of Mississippi, under treaty of February 18, 1867, (Statutes, vol. 15, page 495.) This is a subdivision into 40-acre tracts of a former survey of Creek ceded lands. 58,685 acres of the Quapaw, 50,301 acres of the Peoria, 17,088 acres of the Shawnee, 21,406 acres of the Wyandotte, and 51,958 acres of the Seneca Indian lands in Indian Territory were subdivided into 40-acre tracts. Treaty of February 23, 1867, (Statutes, vol. 15, page 513.) The surveys in Indian Territory also include 3,494,240 acres of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservation and Choctaw and Chickasaw ceded lands, surveyed into sections. Treaty of October 21, 1867, (Statutes, vol. 15, pages 581 and 582.)

Historical and statistical table of the United States and Territories, showing the area of each in square miles and in acres; the date of organization of Territories; date of admission of new States into the Union; and the population of each State and Territory at the taking of the last census in 1870.*

The thirteen original States.	Area of the United States and Territories.		Population in 1870.
	Sq. ms.	Acres.
New Hampshire.....	9,280	5,939,200	318,300
Massachusetts.....	7,800	4,992,000	1,457,351
Rhode Island.....	1,306	835,840	217,353
Connecticut.....	4,750	3,040,000	537,454
New York.....	47,000	30,080,000	4,382,759
New Jersey.....	8,320	5,324,800	906,096
Pennsylvania.....	46,000	29, 40,000	3,521,951
Delaware.....	2,120	1,356,800	125,015
Maryland.....	11,124	7,119,360	780,894
Virginia—East and West.....	61,352	39,265,280	1,667,177
North Carolina.....	50,704	32,450,560	1,071,361
South Carolina.....	34,000	21,760,000	705,606
Georgia.....	58,000	37,120,000	1,184,109

States admitted.	Act organizing Territory.	U. S. Stat's.		Act admitting State.	U. S. Stat's.		Area of the United States and Territories.		Population in 1870.
		Vol	Page		Vol	Page	Sq. ms.	Acres.
Kentucky.....				Fb. 4, 1791	1	189	37,680	24,115,200	1,321,011
Vermont.....				Fb. 18, 1791	1	191	10,212	6,535,680	330,551
Tennessee.....				Ju. 1, 1796	1	491	45,600	29,184,000	1,258,520
Ohio.....	O'd'nc 1787			Ap. 30, 1802	2	173	39,964	25,576,960	2,665,260
Louisiana.....	M'h 3, 1805	2	331	Ap. 8, 1812	2	701	41,346	26,461,440	726,915
Indiana.....	M'y 7, 1800	2	58	De. 11, 1816	3	399	33,809	21,637,760	1,680,637
Mississippi.....	Apr. 7, 1798	1	549	De. 10, 1817	3	472	47,156	30,179,840	827,922
Illinois.....	Fb. 3, 1809	2	514	De. 3, 1818	3	536	55,410	35,462,400	2,539,891
Alabama.....	M'h 3, 1817	3	371	De. 14, 1819	3	608	50,722	32,462,080	996,992
Maine.....				M'h 3, 1820	3	544	35,000	22,400,000	626,915
Missouri.....	Ju. 4, 1812	2	743	M'h 2, 1821	3	645	65,350	41,824,000	1,721,295
Arkansas.....	M'h 2, 1819	3	493	Ju. 15, 1836	5	50	52,198	33,406,720	484,471
Michigan.....	Ja. 11, 1805	2	309	Ja. 26, 1837	5	144	56,451	36,128,640	1,184,059
Florida.....	M'h 30, 1822	3	654	M'h 3, 1845	5	742	59,268	37,931,520	187,748
Iowa.....	Ju. 12, 1838	5	235	M'h 3, 1845	5	742	55,045	35,228,800	1,194,020
Texas.....				De. 29, 1845	9	108	274,356	175,587,840	818,579
Wisconsin.....	Ap. 20, 1836	5	10	M'h 3, 1847	9	178	53,924	34,511,360	1,054,670
California.....				Se. 9, 1850	9	452	188,981	120,947,840	560,247
Minnesota.....	M'h 3, 1849	9	403	Fb. 26, 1857	11	166	83,531	53,459,840	439,706
Oregon.....	Au. 14, 1848	9	323	Fb. 14, 1859	11	383	95,274	60,975,360	90,923
Kansas.....	M'y 30, 1854	10	277	Ja. 29, 1861	12	126	80,891	51,769,976	364,399
West Virginia.....				De. 31, 1862	12	633	23,000	14,720,000	442,014
Nevada.....	M'h 2, 1861	12	209	M'h 21, 1864	13	30	112,090	71,737,741	42,491
Colorado.....	Fb. 28, 1861	12	172				104,500	66,880,000	39,864
Nebraska.....	M'y 30, 1854	10	277	Fb. 9, 1867	14	391	75,995	48,636,800	122,993

Territories.	Act organizing Territory.	U. S. Stat's.		Area of the United States and Territories.		Population in 1870.
		Vol	Page	Sq. miles.	Acres.
Wyoming.....	Jy. 25, 1868	15	178	97,833	62,645,120	9,111
New Mexico.....	Se. 9, 1850	9	446	121,201	77,568,640	91,874
Utah.....	Se. 9, 1850	9	453	84,476	54,065,075	86,786
Washington.....	M'h 2, 1853	10	172	69,994	44,796,160	23,955
Dakota.....	M'h 2, 1861	12	239	150,932	96,595,840	14,181
Arizona.....	Fb. 24, 1863	12	664	113,916	72,906,304	9,658
Idaho.....	M'h 3, 1863	12	808	86,294	55,228,160	14,199
Montana.....	M'y 26, 1864	13	85	143,776	92,016,640	20,595
Indian.....				68,991	44,154,240
District of Columbia.....	Jy. 16, 1790	1	130	10 m'l's sq.	131,700
	M'h 3, 1791	1	214
Alaska†.....	Jy. 27, 1868	15	240	577,390	365,529,600

* The whole area of the States and Territories, including water surface of lakes and rivers, is nearly equal to four million square miles.

† Boundaries.—Commencing at 54 degrees 40 seconds north latitude, ascending Portland Channel to the mountains, following their summits to 141 degrees west longitude; thence north on this line to the Arctic Ocean, forming the eastern boundary. Starting from the Arctic Ocean west, the line descends Behring Strait, between the two islands of Krusenstern and Rotmanoff, to the parallel of 65 degrees 30 seconds, and proceeds due north, without limitation, into the same Arctic Ocean. Beginning again at the same initial point, on the parallel of 65 degrees 30 seconds, thence in a course southwest, through Behring Strait, between the island of St. Lawrence and Cape Choukotaki, to the 172d degree west longitude, and thence southwestly through Behring Sea, between the islands of Alton and Copper, to the meridian of 193 degrees west longitude, leaving the prolonged group of the Aleutian Islands in the possessions now transferred to the United States, and making the western boundary of our country the dividing line between Asia and America.

Synopsis of the annual report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.

	Acres.
Disposals of public lands by ordinary cash sales.....	745,061.30
Military bounty land warrant locations, under acts of 1847, 1850, 1852, and 1855.....	137,000.00
Homestead entries	2,356,057.69
Timber-culture entries.....	464,870.16
Agricultural college scrip locations.....	9,432.02
Certified to railroads.....	3,107,643.14
Land approved to States as swamp.....	47,721.25
Certified for agricultural colleges.....	22,321.24
Certified for common schools	142,388.11
Certified for universities.....	16,454.04
Internal-improvement selections approved to States.....	8,614.25
Sioux half-breed scrip locations.....	1,526.45
Chippewa half-breed scrip locations.	11,181.64
Total	7,070,271.29
Disposals of previous year	9,530,872.93
Decrease in disposals.....	2,460,601.64

CASH RECEIPTS UNDER VARIOUS HEADS.

Purchase money of land sold.....	$1,382,281 52
Homestead fees.....	185,970 00
Commissions.....	159,125 80
Timber-culture fees.....	36,430 00
Commissions	14,572 00
Agricultural college scrip fees	236 00
Fees for exemplifications furnished by General Land Office	5,385 95
Total.....	1,784,001 27

	Acres.
Total area of the land States and Territories	1,834,724,856.00
Surveys during past fiscal year.....	26,077,531.86
Previously surveyed.....	654,175,562.35
Total surveyed to June 30, 1875.....	680,253,094.21
Leaving yet to be surveyed.....	1,154,471,762.79

THE RESULT OF FALSE IDEAS OF GOVERNMENT.

It has been said that words are things, and if so, ideas are greater things. To all moderately educated minds this is a truism, old and stale, but to the mass of ignorant and unreflecting people there is no meaning in it whatever. The masses do not look much at thoughts, tendencies, and principles, but to taxation, and the passing of acts which shall secure next summer and next winter "two dollars a day and roast beef." They can comprehend certain individual measures as affecting present prosperity, but have only a faint conception of the ideas which lie back of such measures. They comprehended the war, but until it actually came they did not see that certain dogmas held by one of the great parties in the country were making war inevitable. They realized the fact that rebel guns were demolishing Fort Sumter, but not that those guns were charged with the speeches of John C. Calhoun. They went to Bull Run and died by rebel bullets, but never thought that the ammunition which projected each bullet was a Virginia resolution of '98.

The great conflict which resulted in the tread of mighty armies, and the pouring out like water the blood of our best and noblest sons, taking from mothers and wives what they most loved and most needed, and making orphans of millions of children, grew out of certain ideas that were false, ideas that are fatal to Republican government, and ideas which, persisted in, will bring another conflict of the same terrible nature, whenever the circumstances shall favor. The belief that the United States were not a nation but simply a corporation, and the Constitution was simply a compact between sovereign States, of course made the States higher than the nation, and rendered the Constitution a document of secondary importance. The people of one State came to regard the people of the other States as foreigners, as alien in interest and affection, and it became the study of the leading statesmen of one section how to get the control of the National Government and use it to check the growth and advancement of the other section, instead of securing the prosperity of the whole. The slavery question, by raising an industrial interest opposed to free labor, and by creating a consolidated capital of property in slaves amounting to thousands of millions in value, greatly aggravated the situation, and so formidable and influential was this question on the politics of the country that many, yes, nearly all the great anti-slavery leaders were brought to believe that slavery alone was responsible for our troubles, which would mainly pass away with the downfall of that institution. This was the idea of Mr. Lincoln in the celebrated remark at the opening of the debate with Douglas: "A house divided against itself cannot stand. This country must either become all free or all slave." There was pretty general assent to this view of the case, and so enormous and overshadowing was slavery that the men who were confronting it naturally believed that it was the sole cause of the difficulty, when historically the fact is that the sentiments which caused the rebellion existed at the time the country was all slave; and they had an existence independent of slavery all the time. The ideas were in the Virginia resolutions of '98, they were in the great Pennsylvania whisky rebellion, which was in reality a conspiracy having for its ultimate object a Southern Confederacy, and they were at the bottom of the laws of the State of New York which granted to Fulton and Livingston the right to the exclusive use of the waters of the State for steamboat navigation, and other similar laws passed by other States: laws which were exploded, it is true, by the Supreme Court in the case of Gibbon vs. Ogden; but the ideas which made such laws possible have never been abandoned. These were ideas known as States' rights; but allied to them, and belonging to the same family, were prejudices against the commerce of New England that had much to do with the embargo of 1812, and other measures tending to destroy their trade and check their growth, opposition to internal improvement, education, and generally all measures of national importance except such as were necessary for our protection against the aggressions of other nations.

Mr. Webster, in his great reply to Hayne, brought out the view we are endeavoring to present. He said: "What interest, asks he, (Mr. Hayne) has South Carolina in a canal in Ohio? Sir, this very question is full of significance. It develops the gentleman's whole political system; and its answer expounds mine. * * * He may well ask, upon his system, what interest has South Carolina in a canal in Ohio! On that system, it is true, she has no interest. On that system Ohio and Carolina are two governments, and different countries, connected here, it is true, by some slight and ill-defined bond of union, but in all main respects separate and diverse. On that system Carolina has no more interest in a canal in Ohio than she has in a canal in Mexico. The gentleman, therefore, only follows out his own principles; he does no more than arrive at the natural conclusion of his own doctrines. * * * Sir, we narrow-minded people of New England do not reason thus. We look upon the States, not as separated, but united. We love to dwell on that union, and on the mutual happiness which it has so much promoted, and the common renown which it has so greatly contributed to acquire. * * * We do not impose geographical limits to our patriotic feeling or regard; we do not follow rivers and mountains and lines of latitude to find boundaries beyond which public improvements do not benefit us. * * * It was the very object of the Cōnstitution to create unity of interests." And so on.

It will be seen from these remarks of Mr. Webster that in 1830 there existed the pernicious doctrines which led to the rebellion; and that they existed, not as the offspring of slavery merely, but as dangerous heresies at the foundation of the Virginia school of political science. They were heresies which led Calhoun, Hayne, McDuffie, and South Carolina to oppose improvements, education, and freedom, and which later led James Buchanan to deny the right of the general Government to coerce a State, and induced Jeff Davis, and Wigfall, and Stephens, and Breckinridge to take up arms for the avowed purpose of destroying the Union and the nation. Real patriotism is impossible with men who hold to the ideas which we have been describing. A man cannot love a country whose existence he denies. This is a contradiction in terms. If the Constitution is only a compact, as has always been affirmed by the rebel Democratic school of politicians, we have no country; we are in truth "men without a country;" there is nothing national to love, and patriotism necessarily confines itself to State limits, and to be logical, to county limits, and for aught we can see, it may as well shrivel itself into town limits or ward limits, after repudiating the claims of nationality. The terrible fact of the rebellion will not be denied, and no thoughtful man will presume to deny that it was the logical consequence of the prevalence of the ideas which Hayne advanced and Webster combatted in 1830. The question which comes next is: Has that school of thinking been abolished? and then, has love of country taken the place of State pride, State affection, and the determination to maintain local interests as paramount to interests of a general, common, and national character? As these questions are candidly and fairly and truthfully answered shall we be able as reasonable men to decide our political duty in the next Presidential election; for it will not be pretended in any loyal quarter that it is the proper way to save the country, or advance the highest interests of the country to put the government thereof in the hands of men who fail in their allegiance to it, or fail in their belief in its supreme character and grand ultimate unity and perpetuity. A mistake on the tariff, a false step as to currency, or a false estimate as to the proper sum to be paid for public buildings or public works, may be rectified by future legislation, and no great harm will ensue, but an administration without the sentiment of nationality must be fatal should the enemies of the nation choose to improve their opportunity to destroy it.

To arrive at an intelligent and safe conclusion as to the dangers of the situation we should consider what was the teaching of philosophy concerning the case of the nation, while the war was pending, in connection with the events that have actually transpired. Mr. Carl Schurz, the eminent German orator, made a speech in Cooper Institute, New York, October 6, 1862, in which he undertook to forecast coming events in case the Union arms should prove victorious. Mr. Schurz was the right man to discuss a matter of this nature, for, added to learning, great powers of mind, and a speculative disposition, he was an experimental revolutionist, having been an actor in scenes which must have forced upon him the study of consequences with singular impressiveness. Having given the subject due thought, he worked out the problem in his own mind, and in this speech gave the country the benefit of it by an illustration. He said: "Take the State of South Carolina; you beat the rebels defending its soil, and occupy the whole State with your troops. Armed resistance to the authority of the United States becomes impossible, but you want to restore the active co-operation of the people of South Carolina in the government of the United States, without which the old order of things is impossible. Now, you call upon the people of South Carolina to elect new State authorities of their own, or you impose upon them a provisional government, appointed by the President at Washington. In the first case, the people of South Carolina—a large majority of whom are disloyal, and those who are not disloyal are not loyal either, (applause,) and to a certain extent seem to be incorrigible—are most likely to elect a new set of secessionists to office. It will be a reorganization of TREASON and CONSPIRACY; for you must know that conspiracies do not only precede rebellions, but also follow unsuccessful ones." Evidently the orator knows what he is talking about. "The new State government is at once in conflict with the Federal authorities. The latter find themselves counteracted and clogged in every imaginable way." Is not this man a prophet? He made a mistake in selecting South Carolina as an illustration, but substitute for South Carolina the State of Louisiana, and he appears to be talking veritable history. After asserting that this state of things must cause sterner measures on the part of the Government of the United States to compel order, and admitting that force as a permanent means of restoration must prove a failure, he goes on to point out the remedy in these words: "In order to restore these principles to life, the Government is obliged to trust its authority to the loyal action of the people."

This is a correct statement of what is necessary, and an accurate description of what has transpired and is transpiring in the late Confederate States. The Government did the very things Mr. Schurz predicted. It appointed the Provisional Governors, and after a brief period trusted to the loyalty of the people of the States to maintain order and build up the places made desolate by the war of the rebellion. And the Government was met precisely as was predicted by Mr. Schurz, just as soon as the rebel elements could fully organize and get their forces in hand. They did even worse than the prophet had foreseen, for he had only anticipated that a "new set of secessionists" would be elected to office, not dreaming that audacity ever was born so brazen as to put the old set back into power, as was speedily done, with the officers of the Confederate army conspicuously to the front. Mr. Schurz declared this would be a reorganization of treason and conspiracy, and that such is the result is capable of the clearest demonstration. The purpose of the General Government has been clogged and thwarted at every step. The effort to maintain order has been met by armed mobs, the citizens of the States have been dragged from their beds at midnight, and shot, hung, and tortured, to the number of many thousands, and not a court in the whole South has yet been able to punish the offenders; indeed, has not cared to do so. The negroes have been driven from their homes and murdered in cold blood simply for voting, their school-houses have been burned, and their teachers tarred and feathered for no crime but a desire to give and get an education to qualify themselves and their children for the duties of the free citizen. These men have corrupted such of the blacks as they could not intimidate, have bought Legislatures and offices, carried through bills by shameless bribes, have robbed right and left, have polluted the fountains of justice, debauched the public sentiment, established a reign of terror in some places and a reign of rottenness in others, and wherever the Government has discountenanced it or any part of it they have scoffed, and when it has interfered to put a stop to the iniquities they have denounced and derided. That the crimes of corruption and bribery have been charged exclusively upon the carpet-baggers we well know, and that they have been guilty in many cases we are not permitted to deny, but it is not alone or chiefly the carpet-baggers who are in these things. In his public address to the citizens of New Orleans on the 28th January, 1870, Gov. Warmoth, of Louisiana, the great Conservative leader, said: "You charge the Legislature with passing corruptly many bills looking to the personal aggrandizement of individuals and corporations. Let me suggest to you that those individuals and corporations are your very best people. For instance, this bank bill that is being lobbied through the Legislature now. By the hardest kind of work we have been able to defeat that bill twice in the House, and now it is up again to be passed. Who are doing it? Your bank presidents. The best people of the city of New Orleans are crowding the lobbies of the Legislature, continually whispering into these men's ears bribes to pass this measure. Now are we to defend the State against the interposition of these people, who are potent in their influence in this community?" Mr. Warmoth is not our witness, and perhaps he lies; but if there was bribery of the negro members of the Legislature the bribes came from a source where there was money, and neither carpet-baggers nor negroes have been found guilty of riches whatever other sins may have been laid to their charge. If there was the bribery, as doubtless there was, the money was furnished by those having it, and they were the bank presidents and first citizens of cities like New Orleans.

When bribery is committed there are two parties to the crime, and the wealthy bankers of Louisiana, who all belong to the white man's party, are not in a condition to throw stones at the negro members of the Legislature whose votes they bought.

That the negroes sold their votes is an argument against electing such men to the Legislature, but it is no argument against electing a Republican Legislature. Having debauched the poor and ignorant negroes, these men must not be permitted to come in and allege that the negro is most to blame.

Of course it is a bad state of things, and we are not defending the negroes or carpet-baggers for their share in the business; but we do claim that the remedy is not to be found in putting the control into the hands of the debauchers. Returning now from the temporary digression in our main line of argument, we reassert that the prophecies of Mr. Schurz have been fulfilled; the course pointed out was taken by the Government; the rebels resumed their old power in the Confederate States, and used it against the ideas and measures of the National Union party, and in favor of the principles of the resolutions of '98, which gave birth to the rebellion. The condition of things in much of the territory of the South was well described by the late General George H. Thomas, whose testimony is unimpeachable. He said in an official report that "crime is committed because public opinion favors it or acquiesces in it. The local laws are enforced or not, according to the controlling opinion of the community. A criminal who is popular with the mob can set law at defiance; but if a man is only charged with a crime, if he is inimical to the community, he is likely to be hung to the nearest tree or shot at his own door." Thomas had a remarkably clear head and was cool in judgment. He speaks as the commander of the Department of the South, and describes the facts as he witnessed them. The facts reveal the tone and temper of society at the South. It is a temper which is a natural fruit of the rebellion. As Schurz said, "conspiracies follow as well as precede rebellions." The defeated sulk, are immeasurably chagrined at their overthrow, and hate their conquerors. Messrs. Lamar and Gordon claim otherwise and talk of the "era of good feeling," and all that, but it is contrary to history and to human nature. All the acts of the body of the late conspirators belie the assertion that they are at heart reconciled and reconstructed. Even Lamar himself, with all his pretended acceptance of the situation, when he gave a true heart utterance, admitted that he failed to love the chosen Government of the Union. Then he spoke truthfully. Then he revealed the condition of the Southern mind, which is chronic opposition and hatred of the principles which we of the North fought for in the late war, which we gained on the battle-field, but which we are to be cheated out of by the alliance of the forces of ignorance, rebellion, and Democracy, if the alliance succeeds.

It is plain enough now that the old anti-slavery men and Mr. Schurz in 1862 were entirely mistaken in their theory of the effect of emancipation upon public opinion at the South. Slavery and freedom were hostile forces, which made a "house divided against itself" that could not stand. Free labor and slave labor were vitally opposing interests, which were the basis of permanent and bitter conflict, and it was argued that the abolition of slavery would at once harmonize these interests, and compose the elements of strife. This has not happened, and it is plain why it has not. The old slave-holding element, the dominant white race, has not accepted the situation, but only pretends to have done so. The old slave-holding class has lost two thousand millions of property in slaves, in addition to what it wasted in four years of expensive war, which amounted to two thousand millions more. This property was their capital, and the income of it furnished their means of support. Their slave labor was opposed to free labor, because the latter put the power perpetually in jeopardy. Emancipation has ended this by the total destruction of the property, but it has introduced a new conflict. The old masters cannot recognize the equality of their late slaves. They still feel themselves to be the dominating class, and so assume the prerogatives of the dominating class. They scout the idea of negro equality, and deny in toto his fitness to share in the Government. The instinct to keep him under remains powerful, and is strengthened by the necessity of their still living on the proceeds of his labor. There are no more offices, corporate and State, than are needed by the dominant class. This they believe, and on it they practice. To maintain the superiority which they assume to have by nature, they must shut the negro out of the offices, and debar him from entering the lists as a competitor for office, for business, or social position. Hence they are in deadly hostility to suffrage now, and to education which will lead to suffrage hereafter. Whatever a few cunning men like Lamar and Gordon may say, the whole spirit of Southern first-class white society has this character. It is seen in the Ku-Klux movements. It speaks in the Congressional orations of Northern Democrats, which invariably taunt the Republicans with inaugurating negro rule and negro equality at the South. It is the standing accusation against the Republican party that it favors negro equality. It is the real cause of the difference between parties to-day. It is the cement which keeps Democracy together. The Democratic party is divided on the great financial and industrial questions, the currency, tariff, internal improvements, &c., but on education and negro equality it is one, and were these two questions put to rest, as a party it would be in the throes of dissolution within twenty-four hours. Whatever collateral, or temporary, or incidental issues, like currency, extravagant expenditures, and reform, may be in the next presidential canvass, the great overshadowing and transcendantly important one of nationality, of our right to be a nation, the possibility of our continuing the experiment of self government, will be the question which we are to meet, and in its solution all other questions will be involved. This one grand issue is not made for us by party conventions or ranting demagogues; it is inherent in the condition of things. It comes of itself, from the ideas which have been engendered in the Southern mind by education and circumstances. It is the last legacy of slavery, bequeathed, not by will and testament, but by the natural order of things. It must be met—we cannot avoid meeting it if we would. All that we fought for in the war is involved in it, and will be lost if the secessionists shall beat us—schools, education, free suffrage, the prosperity and progress of the South, nationality—all are involved, and with them the character of the American people; for what must be said of a people who would fight and win what they had not the wit to maintain?

TREASURY BOOK-KEEPING.

The debate in the Senate opened by Senator Davis, of West Virginia, on discrepancies in the reports of the Treasury Department has attracted wide attention, and most of the wise men who edit Democratic newspapers, and their allies of the independent press, are quite satisfied that there is an alarming amount of rascality or incompetency in that department.

Their opinions are based, not on what they know individually on the subject, but on what is said by Senators, who know nothing whatever, if we take their own admissions, or consider the facts developed in their speeches. Mr. Davis wanted a committee of investigation. Why? Simply to find out whether anything was wrong or not. If he knew, of course there was no need of a committee to find out. Mr. Eaton, of Connecticut, confessed that he knew nothing, and further, owned up that he, aided by the most expert book-keeper in the Nutmeg State, despaired of ever being able to tell within $50,000,000 of the amount of the public debt. Few sadder sights than this venerable Senator making such a confession have been witnessed since the war. He knows nothing, and can never know by the best light of an enlightened State within fifty millions of dollars. This is very poor buncombe. If nothing is known, and Connecticut accountants cannot find out anything, it was very unwise in him to put the figures so low, because he might with the same accuracy and safety have put them at $200,000,000.

The statement shows on its face that the Senator is ignorant of the whole matter, as from the nature of the case he must be. He could guess with the same degree of confidence that no State in the Union knows the amount of its debt, or he might give it as his opinion that A. T. Stewart is bankrupt. What of it?

The discrepancies alluded to by Mr. Davis were not very important in amount, but very important as mistakes, if they were undiscovered by the officers of the department, except the thirty-seven million item. The debt in one year was reported that much more than it actually was, but it hurt nobody, and the debt was not increased thereby, and no one was able to get money out of the Treasury unlawfully in consequence. It was such a mistake as insured its own detection. It could not possibly remain undiscovered, and is not and never was of the slightest consequence, only as giving occasion for a charge of carelessness.

The charges made are rather aimed at the system of book-keeping in the department, and the administration is held responsible for a very bad system according to Davis and Eaton. Let us see how this is. The system is the same which was inaugurated by Alexander Hamilton, and approved by such eminent Democrats and financiers as Albert Gallatin, Samuel Dexter, A. J. Dallas, Richard Rush, Louis McLane, Roger B. Taney, Levi Woodbury, Robert J. Walker, and Jas. Guthrie, the latter of whom pronounced it perfect. It is a little rough in Mr. Eaton to abuse the financial reputation of such eminent Democrats who in their day were thought to know a thing or two about their business, and whose administrations were supposed to reflect considerable credit upon the Democratic party. A few old fashioned persons have sometimes advanced the idea that a return of some of these perfect gentlemen would be the best thing to pray for; but that is a mistake, if the system they approved is so uncertain and defective.

As Mr. Boutwell explained the items named by Mr. Davis, there is no need to go over the same ground, and the idea can be illustrated by another example. In 1870 the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in his report gave the receipts of the Treasury for the fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1870, at $185,235,867.97; the Register for same year, $184,899,756.49; the Fifth Auditor for same year, $168,476,458.59.

These figures are taken from the books. The books remain unchanged, and the discrepancies at once attract attention. People who jump at conclusions immediately decry the result as nonsense, and say that if either is right the other two must be wrong. Now it will be seen at once that there was no forcing of books to come to an agreement. Each office put forth its own figures fearlessly, and braved the consequences. Let them have credit for that. And well they might, for the explanation is very simple.

The money which gets into the United States Treasury, or out of it, does so by a warrant signed by the Secretary and other specified officers, which paper sets forth, from or to whom, and for what the money is received or paid. These particulars are entered on the books of the Comptroller, Register, and Treasurer, and in all stated accounts of the Auditor, and each warrant is compared with the several books as a check against any possible mistake or collusion; and this, so far as safety is concerned, is far superior to mercantile double entry, as collusion is rendered all but impossible. When a collector remits money, instead of sending to the Treasury actual cash, he deposits the cash in a Government depository, takes triplicate certificates, and sends one to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, one to the Secretary of the Treasury, and keeps one as a voucher to protect himself, and show that he has paid over the amount. When the Commissioner receives his certificate he enters the amount at once upon his books, and from the books he can tell the amount actually deposited by the collectors. But when the Secretary receives the duplicate certificate, to get the money into the Treasury the warrant has to be drawn and signed by the proper officers, and the comparisons must be made, which in the case of a million in small sums of $10,000 or less is a work of days; so that at the close of the fiscal year the certificates of the last few days will be entered on the books of the Commissioner, while the warrants will not get to the Register's books in time, and they necessarily go upon the books of the succeeding year. Hence the difference between Commissioner and Register. After all this the Auditor adjusts the accounts of the several collectors, when they reach him and are in condition for settlement, which more or less of them never are in time for making up the annual report, and as he only reports from his adjustments, all the deposits in the unadjusted accounts fail to be included, and his statement of collections is less than the Register's. All these officers are right, so far as they each go, and neither may be actually right, because some collector may have failed to send his certificates, or they may have been lost in the mail, so that the actual collections may exceed the amounts in the reports.

The question then arises: Why publish the reports if they do not convey true information? We answer, that the law requires the several officers to report to the Secretary, and the reports are valuable for use and information. Each member of Congress can see by the Fifth Auditor's table how much money was collected in his district, how much salary was paid, what contingent expenses were allowed, &c., unless the collector has been delinquent in forwarding his accounts, and then that fact will appear. The Secretary can see the same things, and any other officer the same. As to the general public, it is not of the least consequence whether the amount reported is two or five millions less than the receipts: the fact that the money collected has got into the Treasury and is safe is alone of consequence to them, with the assurance that all that is possible has been done to guard the treasure when there.

It is admitted that one cannot understand the reports unless he understands Treasury business, and it is no discredit to Davis, Eaton, and Thurman that they do not understand that business, because they have not been in it. What is to their discredit is that, not knowing what they are talking about they get up in the Senate and undertake to enlighten the people. It is a necessity of the position that the clerks in the department, those who do the business, should understand it. The checks on incompetency are as ample as they are on fraud. A fraudulent claim may get through by false swearing in sufficient amount, same as a guilty man may escape in a court of justice by bringing false witnesses to an alibi, but the fault is not in the system—it is a failing in any system. Nothing has been invented which is a complete bar to forgery and false swearing. The Treasury system is the best thing yet discovered, and in proportion to the amount of business the losses are far less than in the banking and business corporations of the country. The system is decried as complicated and mysterious, while in fact it is simple and devoid of mystery. The Democratic members from the rural districts who are giving out word that they are about to simplify and amend the masterpiece of Alexander Hamilton, and improve upon Robert J. Walker, James Guthrie, and Salmon P. Chase, will go into the Treasury, pull off their coats, take a survey of the million tons of vouchers—and retire, as the Irishman did, after surveying the majestic proportions of Mr. William Patterson, whose acquaintance he was so anxious to make till he saw him—and that will be the end of it.

INFLUENCE OF THE PRESS.—On the intelligent and loyal press of the country the hopes of the nation depend. The people look to the press for correct information, and on this they base their judgment of governmental affairs. A bad paper conveys a moral poison wherever it circulates. If it is edited with commanding ability, its power for evil is greatly increased, and this is still further enlarged in proportion to its circulation. How vital, then, in view of this, becomes the necessity of supporting good papers. Every citizen who believes in public and private morality should extend liberal support to his home paper. His first duty should be to strengthen that. If he has patronage, it should go to the local organ before a dollar is sent to a paper at a distance. The principle of home protection should be applied to the local papers of the country.

THE three political virtues taught in the school of Democracy are forgiveness, forgetfulness, and justification. In 1865 our lesson was the duty of forgiveness, in 1868 and 1872 it was forgetfulness, and now we are asked to follow the leader of the Confederate choir in the centennial song of justification. Loyal people generally decline to join in the chorus, or to throw up their hats over any agreement that compromises the results of the war.

A STARTLING QUESTION :—IS THE SOUTH STILL FOR WAR?

Mr. B. H. Hill, a member of Congress from Georgia, delivered a speech, said to have been "the grandest" the gentleman ever uttered, and which was reported in the Atlanta Constitution of January 24, 1875. Mr. Hill said :

"Fellow citizens, I look to the contest of 1876 not only as the most important that ever occurred in American history, but as the most important in the history of the world ; for if the people of the country cannot be aroused to give an overwhelming vote against this Republican party it will perpetuate itself in power in the United States by precisely the same means that the President has taken in Louisiana, and the people will be powerless to prevent it except they go to war. [Applause.] If we fail with the ballot-box in 1876 by reason of force, a startling question will present itself to the American people. I trust we will not fail. I hope the Northern people have had a sufficient subsidence of passion to see this question fairly. If we must have war ; if we cannot preserve this Constitution and constitutional government by the ballot ; if force is to defeat the ballot ; if the war must come—God forbid that it should come—but if it must come ; if folly, if wickedness, if inordinate love of power shall decree that America must save her Constitution by blood, let it come ; I am ready."

It is useless to endeavor to conceal the fact that the delivery of such a speech must have been prompted by motives commensurate with the language employed and the influence of the speaker. It is useless to try to explain away the import of the words. The speech was delivered by Mr. Hill, who had been a Senator in the Confederate Congress and the mouthpiece of Jefferson Davis, whose infamous orders entailing suffering and death on Union soldiers he either justifies or makes light of. Mr. Hill spoke in a State which had joined in the rebellion in the hope of destroying the Union ; a State which had annihilated as far as it could the colored vote and the vote of white Republicans ; a State that had failed in its duty to provide fully for the education of its colored citizens and their children, and to afford them the protection of the law ; and that had been violently wrenched from Republican control by Democrats who had obtained their present status through the leniency of amnesty laws passed by a Republican Congress. To such Democrats Mr. Hill made his address. They were men opposed to the reconstruction of the South as provided for in the reconstruction measures. They had no sympathy with the cause that triumphed in the war ; no sense of the obligations that rested upon them to accept the situation in good faith ; and no intention of obeying those Federal laws which made no discrimination in citizenship between whites and blacks.

The immediate audience surrounding Mr. Hill when speaking were spell-bound by the manner in which he dealt with the subject. But he knew, and they knew, that he addressed through them the whole South ; that his words were recorded with the intention of being circulated among the leading White Liners, that pestiferous class of fire-eaters, most of whom have received amnesty, but who keep the South in perpetual agitation by maintaining the old claims of the late slave States to subordinate the Federal Government and practically disfranchise the blacks. The whole speech is pervaded by a spirit of truculent disloyalty. Mr. Hill stands upon a very fierce platform—the blood and thunder platform so grateful to rebel ears—which calls upon the people to prepare for war if the Republican party is successful in 1876. Such an appeal was expected to meet with a ready response ; and it did so. Mississippi responded in its late election, where the platform was War, and where treason was rampant and the murders of colored men followed as a natural consequence.

The loyal people of the Union have now an opportunity of knowing who and what it is that causes disquiet in the South. It is not Mr. Hill alone, though he is largely responsible ; but it is the kind of speech which he and other speakers go about delivering that stirs up the worst passions of the people and leads to murder. This is no "bloody shirt" fiction; no recommendation to shoot down the six blood-thirsty negroes that had armed themselves to overpower and exterminate the six hundred White Liners who were fleeing before them; no suggestion to keep the peace in localities where were negro majorities, by calling upon white men in the surrounding counties to assemble together and do indiscriminate slaughter. This is insignificance itself compared with what Mr. Hill had in view. He says:

"If the people of the country cannot be aroused to give an overwhelming vote against the Republican party it will perpetuate itself...and the people will be powerless to prevent it EXCEPT THEY GO TO WAR. IF WE FAIL WITH THE BALLOT BOX IN 1876...IF WE MUST HAVE WAR...IF THE WAR MUST COME...LET IT COME; I AM READY."

- Let the people look at it. Divested of all extraneous matter, you have there the current sentiments of the Southern leaders. Soldiers! you who fought in the field to preserve the Union and its cause—is this what you expected as the result of all your sufferings and exposure when you faced death on the battle-field and put down the rebellion? The contest at the ballot box in 1876 will undoubtedly be the most important that ever occurred in American history or the world. With the Confederate armies amnestied and breathing vengeance against the Republican party, what security is there, if disloyalty shall triumph, for the integrity of the Union; for the fulfillment of the pledges given by the nation: for the preservation of the national credit? The spirit of the Southern leaders to-day is a menace to liberty; a national danger; and can be met only by that spirit of patriotic resistance which will call every man to the polls to do his duty as a citizen, and cast a vote for the Republican party so overwhelming in its magnitude as will render the disloyal Democratic element in the country, North and South, utterly hopeless, and turn its insolent vauntings for blood against itself. The Republican party is national. It is the party out of which the Nation sprung. It is the party whose preservation has become a necessity for the preservation of the integrity of the Union.

THOSE ENORMOUS EXPENSES.

Notwithstanding all the howling about the corruption of the Republican party, it is a demonstrable fact that the expenses, deducting those which appertain exclusively to the war, are less per head than they were under the Democratic administration of James Buchanan.

The following figures, in round numbers, for the year ended June 30, 1875, tell their own story:

Annual expenses for 1853.....	$82,000,000
Annual expenses for 1859.....	84,000,000
Annual expenses for 1860.....	77,000,000
	$243,000,000

Per year 81,000,000

Expenses for 1875	$274,000,000
From which deduct interest on debt of Democratic war.....	$103,000,000
Sinking fund appropriation.....	25,000,000
Pensions on account of war.....	29,000,000
Internal revenue expenses on account of war...	7,000,000
Refunding war taxes.....	1,500,000
War damages paid.....	4,000,000

12R

Printing bonds and notes and negotiating.....	$2,000,000
Extra clerk hire caused by war	500,000
Interest on Pacific Railway bonds.....	4,000,000
	176,000,000
Currency.....	$98,000,000
Difference between currency and gold on $98,000,000, average.....	12,000,000
	$86,000,000
Per year	$86,000,000

Democratic Expenses.—Population in 1860, 31,000,000; expenses, $81,000,000; equal to $2.61 per head.

Republican Expenses.—Population in 1875, 42,000,000; expenses, $86,000,000; equal to $2.05 per head.

This is allowing nothing on account of army expenses caused by mobs in the South, which grew out of the Democratic rebellion, nor anything for increase of army, caused solely by the rebellion, which amount to $15,000,000. Let every Republican newspaper publish this exhibit, and keep it standing until the next election.

"ONE man in the right is a majority."

WHAT IS THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES?

In this centennial year of our national existence the extraordinary spectacle is presented to the American people, in the Senate of the United States, by the submission to that august body of the following resolutions declaratory of the character of the Government under which they live. The views entertained and the positions taken by the distinguished Senators submitting these resolutions will, at a glance, be seen to be in extreme antagonism, calculated to astonish the enlightened world in this advanced period of our national history, as to the apparent uncertainty that seems to exist as to the character of our Government. In the Senate of the United States, December 15, 1875, Mr. Morton, of Indiana, submitted the following resolutions:

"Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the people of the United States constitute a nation, and are one people in the sense of national unity.

"Resolved, That the Government of the United States is not a compact between the States, in their municipal and corporate character, but was formed by the people of the United States in their primary capacity; that the rights of the States are defined and guaranteed by the Constitution, and not by outside theory of State sovereignty; and that the rights of the States cannot be enlarged or diminished except by an amendment to the Constitution.

"Resolved, That the rights of the States have the same sanction and security in the Constitution as the rights and powers of the National Government, and that local domestic government by the States, within the limits of the Constitution, is an essential part of our free republican system.

"Resolved, That the doctrine that a State has the right to secede from the Union is inconsistent with the idea of nationality, is in conflict with the spirit and structure of the Constitution, and should be regarded as having been forever extinguished by the suppression of the rebellion."

In the Senate of the United States, January 8, 1876, Mr. Whyte, of Maryland, submitted the following resolution:

"Resolved by the Senate (the House concurring,) That the people of the several States acting in their highest sovereign capacity as free and independent States, adopted the Federal Constitution, and established a form of government in the nature of a confederated republic; and for the purpose of carrying into effect the object for which it was formed, delegated to that government certain rights, enumerated in said Constitution, but reserved to the States respectively, or to the people thereof, all the residuary powers not delegated to the United States, nor prohibited by it to the States."

It is proposed now to review at some length the proceedings in the convention at Philadelphia, in 1787, which framed the Constitution of the United States, the proceedings in the State conventions, especially of Virginia and South Carolina, previous to its adoption, and of the speeches made and views entertained by the patriot fathers in those famous conventions; in order to see what light can be thrown over the very opposite positions taken in the above-cited resolutions, and to ascertain which doctrine is the true one according to the record made by the framers and adopters of the Constitution as it now stands—the organic law of the land.

Were it not that the resolutions of the prominent statesmen quoted above justify fully the attempt to make such a review for the purpose indicated, or in any way to moot the question of the character of the Government, the reviewer would scarcely have ventured on such ground without some apology for such temerity. Such an apology is however now unnecessary. But in 1872, and during the pendency of the political campaign in which the Republican and Democratic parties were contending for ascendancy, the writer of the present review wrote an address to the people of the South, advocating the re-election of General Grant, in which a brief essay on the character of the Government was published, and then the following apologetic remarks were made by way of preface for what he deemed at that time so bold a venture:

"In consideration of the fact that nearly a hundred years have elapsed since the establishment of our present General Government the above interrogatory (the same as at the head of this review) may seem to be, at first thought, a tacit confession of ignorance, and an inquiry of meaningless import. The character of this Government, it is true, should have been long since as familiar to every American citizen as the particular vocation with which he has wedded his existence. It has received interpretation and exposition from the most thorough scholars of governmental science, and delineation from statesmen and jurists more profound than those which have graced the annals of any other country or people. And yet in the midst of this refulgent light, lamentable as the fact may seem, ignorance of, or an unwillingness to abide by the form of government of the United States has cost the country, North and South, within the last eleven years, more than a half million of lives, and at a moderate estimate nearly ten thousand millions of property and treasure."

The following passages in that essay it is thought proper to quote in order to show the positions then taken upon the character of the Government under which we live, and also to show how fully those positions are in accord with the doctrine that will be advocated by the Senator from Indiana, and with the positions now taken in this review:

"The majority of the men who composed that convention (at Philadelphia) were fully alive to the importance of the occasion—had a full appreciation of the evils of the existing Government, and the necessary elements of one which ought to supplant it. We will not trace the action of the convention, space forbids, and its result stands to-day an exponent of the grandest organism of constitutional government that ever emanated from the mind of man. The prime evil of the Confederation, as will be remembered, was found in the fact that it dealt with the States and not with individuals; that it could recommend, but not enforce obedience from the people in their individual capacities, unless the States first assented. Seemingly to give a death-blow to this delusion in the outset the framers of the Constitution commenced it with the memorable words, "We, the people," in order to form a more perfect union, &c., not we, the States. The same idea pervades the entire instrument, namely, that our present Federal charter is not a compact of the States, but a creation absolute, distinct, separate, and unqualified ab initio of the people. It lives independent of all other authority, an absolute, indissoluble entity in itself, and not a compact of corporations, whereby, by the withdrawal of any one or more of them the edifice may be either demolished in proportion, or entirely dissolved.

"These mighty advocates of liberty and supporters of constitutional law from which we have drawn so freely to support this discussion walked in no uncertain path. They affirmed that the General Government was meant to be, and was to all intents and purposes an entity of itself, dependent upon no power save the will of the people, and not to State corporations, for its acts, clothed with authority to enact and power to enforce law, which authority, moreover, could neither be abridged nor withdrawn. In assuming this position they merely followed the plainest, simplest, most fundamental rule of legal interpretation and construction. They sought the intent of the framers of this instrument, the causes which led to the formation of the convention for its production, and on the result of this research they took their position. The intent of the framers was found in the words, "We, the people." The causes which led to the formation of the convention were seen in the evils of the confederation hereinbefore explained, evils which sprung from a scheme of government entirely the opposite of our present Constitution, and which the National Convention at Philadelphia was called to dispel and destroy."

Throughout that essay upon Government the positions taken were in full accordance with those now taken by the honorable Senator from Indiana, and to support them reference was mainly had to great Southern authorities, avoiding Northern authorities nearly altogether, in view of the fact that the writer was addressing only the people of the South, and he deemed it proper to limit reference to that direction; because to their minds such reference to their direct patriotic fathers would have the most weight, and be the most conclusive upon the questions at issue.

In this review of the proceedings and acts of the Philadelphia convention, and of the State conventions during the time of framing and adopting the present Constitution of the United States, special attention will be given to the views and sentiments entertained by the great Southern statesmen on this momentous question—What is the Government of the United States?—in order to present in the most forcible manner for the serious consideration of the political leaders in the South who still advocate and strangely embrace "the political heresy" set forth in the resolution of the Senator from Maryland. Surely the views and opinions of these great patriots and statesmen, who rescued the people of this country from the feeble and inefficient government of the old Confederation, and who in their name, and acting as their delegates, framed and adopted a constitution in the full capacity and power to protect their interests and welfare at home and abroad, should command and receive their full assent, and entire obedience to the Constitution as it was framed and designed by its great authors.

The convention at Philadelphia in 1787 adopted as a basis for, and preliminary to all after action the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the articles of confederation ought to be so corrected and enlarged as to accomplish the objects proposed by their institution, namely, common defense, security of liberty, and general welfare."

All assented to the plain and self-evident proposition that the old Confederation was an utter failure for all purposes of good and stable government, and the work begun for the formation of a government of greater strength and stability under which the people might live in assured condition of peace, happiness, and prosperity.

Three prominent plans were brought forward, but of these but two were mainly taken into lengthened consideration and discussion, that of Mr. Hamilton, which provided for a Presidency during good behavior, being viewed as equivalent to a life tenure, was considered too extreme, and was soon laid aside. The two other plans, known as the Virginia and New Jersey plans, upon which it was proposed to frame a Constitution in the place of the old confederate league of States, which was sadly crumbling to pieces, were, after Mr. Hamilton's plan was thrown aside, alone under consideration and discussion.

The Virginia plan as brought forward by Mr. Edmund Randolph, one of the most distinguished and able of Southern statesmen, was, after long continued discussion by the very eminent statesmen then assembled in convention, adopted, and upon it was framed the present Constitution of the United States. That plan, showing its authors to have been profoundly impressed in the sad lesson of the past, and the necessity of securing to the people a government strong and stable enough to guarantee their happiness and welfare, is as follows, as contained in three propositions:

1. "That a Union of the States merely Federal will not accomplish the objects proposed by the articles of confederation, namely, common defense, security of liberty, and general welfare.

2. "That no treaty or treaties among the whole or part of the States, as individual sovereignties, would be sufficient.

3. "That a national government ought to be established, consisting of a supreme legislative, executive, and judiciary." (See Madison Papers, Vol. 5, of Elliott's Debates.)

It is not deemed necessary to cite at length the New Jersey plan submitted to the convention by Mr. Patterson, as it will suffice to note the difference between it and the Virginia plan as described by Mr. Wilson in convention, June 16, 1787, on the points suggestive by the subject-matter of this review, which are as follows:

"Virginia plan proposes two branches of the legislative body.

"New Jersey plan proposes a single legislative body.

"Virginia plan—the legislative powers to be derived from the people.

"New Jersey plan—the same powers to be derived from the States.

"Virginia plan—the legislature can legislate on all national concerns.

"New Jersey plan—can only legislate on limited objects.

"Virginia plan—the national legislature to remove the executive by impeachment.

"New Jersey plan—removal of executive on application of a majority of the States." (See Yates' Minutes of Secret Debates and Proceedings.)

Hence it will be seen that the Virginia plan was decidedly national, and for a strong, energetic government, and that the New Jersey plan was based on the State rights theory of government.

In convention, 29th of June, 1787, Mr. Madison remarked as follows:

"Some gentlemen are afraid that the plan (Virginia plan) is not sufficiently national; while others that it is too much so. If this point of representation was once well fixed we would come nearer to one another in sentiment. The necessity would then be discovered of circumscribing more effectually the State governments, and enlarging the bounds of the general government. Some contend that States are sovereign, when in fact they are only political societies. There is a gradation of power in all societies, from the lowest corporations to the highest sovereign. The States never possessed the essential rights of sovereignty. These were always vested in Congress. Their voting as States in Congress is no evidence of sovereignty. The State of Maryland voted by counties; did this make the counties sovereign? The States at present are only great corporations, having the power of making by-laws, and these are effectual only if they are not contradictory to the general confederation. The States ought to be placed under the control of the general government—at least as much so as they were formerly under the King and British Parliament." (See Madison Papers.)

Among others of those great men in the convention at Philadelphia who participated in the discussion upon the merits of the Virginia and New Jersey plans for a constitution was Mr. Gouverneur Morris, the peer of any or all of the eminent personages who sat there, who explained the distinction between a federal and a national supreme government, the former being, as he said, a mere compact resting on the good faith of the parties, the latter having a compulsive operation. He contended that in all communities there must be one supreme power, and one only.

Mr. Mason, (of Virginia,) observed, not only that the present confederation was deficient in not providing for coercion and punishment against delinquent States, but argued very cogently that punishment could not, in the nature of things, be executed on the States collectively, and, therefore, that such a government was necessary as could directly operate on individuals, and would punish those only whose guilt required it. (See Madison Papers.)

It was moved in committee of the whole by Mr. Read, and seconded by Mr. Pinckney, to postpone the third resolution (in Virginia plan) as offered by Mr. Randolph, viz: "That a national government ought to be established, consisting of a supreme legislative, executive, and judiciary, in order to take up the following, viz: Resolved, That in order to carry into execution the design of the States in forming this convention, and to accomplish the objects proposed by the Confederation, a more effectual government, consisting of a legislative, executive, and judiciary, ought to be established."

The motion to postpone Mr. Randolph's third resolution for this purpose was lost.

On the question then as moved by Mr. Butler, of South Carolina, on said third resolution it was resolved in committee of the whole, "that a national government ought to be established, consisting of a supreme legislative, executive, and judiciary," the vote being as follows:

Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina—ayes 6. Connecticut—no 1. (New York divided, Colonel Hamilton voting aye, and Mr. Yates no)

(See Madison Papers.)

Mr. Dickerson, in convention, happily compared the proposed national system to the great planetary system, in which the States were the planets, and the general government the sun around which they revolved in the spheres, and in the manner presented by the great Creator—their creator being the sovereign people of the United States.

Mr. Madison said: "In a word, to recur to the illustrations borrowed from the planetary system, the prerogative of the general government (its control over the States) is the great pervading principle that must control the centrifugal tendency of the States, which without it will continually fly out of their proper orbits, and destroy the order and harmony of the political system."

How fearfully this apprehension or prophecy has been realized and fulfilled, it will be but necessary to refer to the mad action of the Southern States in 1861 in flying out of their proper orbits, and seceding from the common Union.

Mr. Madison (at page 264 Madison Papers) said: "Whenever there is danger of attack there ought to be given a constitutional power of defense. But he contended that the States were divided into different interests, not by the difference in size, but by other circumstances; the most material of which resulted partly from climate, but principally from the effects of their having or not having slaves. It lay between the Northern and Southern, and if any defensive powers were necessary, it ought to be given to these two interests."

Mr. Madison, in reply to certain State rights members remarked: "That he was of opinion, in the first place, that there was less danger of encroachment from the General Government than from the State governments; and in the second place, that the mischief from encroachments would be less fatal if made by the former than if made by the latter." "All the examples, (he continued) of other confederacies prove the greater tendency, in such systems, to anarchy than to tyranny; to a disobedience of the members, than usurpations of the federal head. Our own experience had fully illustrated this tendency." Alas! if Mr. Madison had lived to witness the suicidal acts of the Southern States in their late rebellion he would have dwelt with far greater force on what our experience had illustrated as to the tendency of the members to disobedience, ending with the inauguration of a long and bloody war upon the federal head.

The constitution for the United States of America having been framed on the plan submitted by Mr. Edmund Randolph, or, as it was more commonly called and known, the Virginia plan, in which it will be borne in mind that the third resolution thereof declared "that a national government ought to be established, consisting of a supreme legislative, executive, and judiciary," it was referred, in due and solemn form, to the conventions of the several States for ratification by the people, through their delegates chosen to represent them in convention.

Its character was well and fully understood by every State convention, as the subsequent discussion in every convention fully shows. There was no mistake whatever upon this head. It was as fully and openly demonstrated to their view as the sun at noonday that the government to be established under the Constitution was to be a national government, consisting of "a supreme legislative, executive, and judiciary."

Upon the subject of ratification of the Constitution by the Legislatures of the States or by conventions of the people Mr. Madison remarked:

"He considered it best to require conventions; among other reasons for this, that the powers given to the General Government, being taken from the State governments, the legislatures would be more disinclined than conventions composed, in part at least, of other men; and if disinclined they could devise modes apparently promoting, but really thwarting the ratification. The difficulty in Maryland was no greater than in other States where no mode of change was pointed out, and all officers were under oath to support it. The people were, in fact, the fountain of all power, and by resorting to them all difficulties were got over. They could alter constitutions as they pleased."

It is a matter of curious interest at this day to look back to the proceedings in the great Philadelphia convention, and observe the extraordinary fact (among other remarkable incidents showing sectional views) that the objections and opposition to a national government, such as was proposed to be formed on the Virginia plan, arose, mainly, from the delegates to the convention representing Northern and Eastern States; and that Southern members, particularly from Virginia and South Carolina, warmly and steadfastly espoused and advocated the national feature, and were thorough for a national government. In the South Carolina convention General Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, than whom there was not a statesman in all the South, even among the greatest of those eminently distinguished characters, who figured in the exciting movements of that day, a superior, and who was a delegate from that State, in the Philadelphia convention made, on the 18th day of January, 1788, the following remarkable speech:

"This admirable manifesto, (referring to the Declaration of Independence,) which for importance of matter and elegance of composition stands unrivaled, sufficiently confutes the honorable gentleman's (Pierce Butler) doctrine of the individual sovereignty and independence of the several States."

"In that Declaration (he further remarked) the several States are not even enumerated, but after reciting in nervous language, and with convincing arguments, our right to independence, and the tyranny which compelled us to assert it, the declaration is made in the following words: 'We, therefore, the Representatives of the United States of America in General Congress assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the World for the rectitude of our intentions, do in the name and by the authority of the good people of these colonies solemnly publish and declare that these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States.' " And further he says: "The separate independence and individual sovereignty of the several States were never thought of by the enlightened band of patriots who framed the Declaration; the several States are not even mentioned by name in any part of it, as if it was intended to impress the maxim on America that our freedom and independence arose from our union, and that without it we could neither be free nor independent. Let us, then, consider all attempts to weaken this union by maintaining that each State is separately and individually independent, as a species of political heresy which may bring on us the most serious distresses."

Had General Pinckney lived to the day of secession of the Southern States he would have had his worst fears and apprehensions more than realized.

In close and immediate accord with the views entertained by the patriotic Pinckney upon the subject of State sovereignty, it will be interesting to read the following passage, quoted from that eminently learned jurist, Judge Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution. Commenting on the authority by which the Constitution was made, he states:

"It was not an act done by the State governments then organized, nor by persons chosen by them. It was emphatically the act of the whole people of the United Colonies, by the instrumentality of their representatives, chosen for that, among other purposes. It was not an act competent to the State governments, or any of them as organized under their charter, to adopt. Those charters neither contemplated the case, nor provided for it. It was an act of original inherent sovereignty by the people themselves, resulting from their right to change the form of government, and to institute a new government whenever necessary for their safety and happiness. So the Declaration of Independence treats it. No State had presumed of itself, to form a new government, or to provide for the exigencies of the times, without consulting Congress on the subject; and when they acted it was in pursuance of the recommendation of Congress. It was, therefore, the achievement of the whole for the benefit of the whole. The people of the United Colonies made the United Colonies free and independent States, and absolved them from the allegiance to the British Crown. The Declaration of Independence has accordingly always been treated as an act of paramount and sovereign authority, complete and perfect per se, and ipso facto working an entire dissolution of all political connection with, and allegiance to Great Britain; and this not merely as a practical fact, but in a legal and constitutional view of the matter by courts of justice."

Thus looking back upon the evidence and authorities of the highest and most undoubted character, piled up so extensively in the foregoing review of the past political history of our country from the very foundation of governmental institutions, the writer may without the least apprehension of reasonable objection, or refutation of arguments and testimonies brought forward in support of the positions taken therein, conclude that the resolutions submitted in the Senate by the able and distinguished Senator from Indiana, the Honorable O. P. Morton, are based on, and are fully supported by the political and historical record of this country; and that we live under a stable, energetic National Government, as contra-distinguished from a loose structure of confederated States, built on "the political heresy" of State rights, and that if the latter system should unfortunately ever be carried into practical operation in the future it will surely bring on us, to use the prophetic language of General Pinckney, "the most serious distresses," and greater even than those the country has but lately suffered from the madness of the rebellious States of the South.

Upon these remarkable resolutions, as submitted to the Senate by the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Maryland, so entirely opposite as they are in the views presented therein with regard to the character of our Government, doubtless extensive discussions will arise in both houses of Congress; and these discussions will be of the greatest interest and consequence to the people of the United States, as they will necessarily present for their consideration and decision the views and opinions of the two great parties, the National Republican party and the States' Rights Democratic party, soon to be engaged in the great contest for the control of public affairs for the ensuing four years, and which will offer to the sovereign people of this country the grand opportunity of making known unmistakably their views and determinations as to the character of the Government under which they desire to live, and to hand down to their posterity.

NOTES ON EUROPEAN TRAVEL.

[One of our contributors who has recently visited some portions of the Old World made brief notes of his observations, which he has written out for THE REPUBLIC.]

Crossing the Atlantic with the safety and comfort now afforded by several lines of steamships may well be regarded as among the greatest achievements of human skill and enterprise. Among the reflections that come first to an American traveller is the humiliating fact that the flag of the United States is scarcely seen on the ocean. It is under a foreign flag that he embarks, and risks the hazards of the voyage. It is no relief to remember, or to be told, that twenty-five years ago the finest steamers that crossed the Atlantic were American, and that the parsimony or lack of statesmanship in our Congress caused their withdrawal from that service. Liverpool is the port that greets the weary passenger after some ten days of ship life. This grand city has expended in improvements £300,000,000, or a sum which reduced (or rather inflated) to United States currency, nearly equals our national debt.

London, the capital city of Great Britain, can boast of even greater expenditures, not from its own coffers, but, by the British Parliament, from the revenues of the Kingdom. Quite recently in this way a splendid embankment to the Thames has been built at a cost of thirty millions of dollars. Will not Congress build the much needed embankment to the Potomac, which may be done at an expense of less than six millions of dollars? Parliament appropriates annually some $300,000 for the care of the parks of London. No nation can afford to neglect its capital. The glory of London is in its parks and gardens. The latter are cultivated to the highest degree of art. Something is due to the climate of England, but in America we seem to make no approach to the magnificent and exquisite display of flowers to be seen in London. The parks, on the other hand, are left more in their natural state than the great parks of New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago are. The question suggests itself whether too much present expense is not incurred in the embellishment of our parks—whether more of it might not be left to posterity, and whether the money expended for ornamentation now might not be used for enlargement or additional parks. Let the present generation secure the amplest grounds in all our cities for parks, and dedicate them to the free use of the people. This seems to have been the policy in European cities.

The Houses of Parliament in London scarcely equal the Capitol in Washington, either in grandeur and beauty or in adaptation to the uses of legislative bodies. Visiting the Queen's stables (or Mews, as stables are called in London,) one is surprised at the great number of fine horses of every variety of use. Inquiring if the horses of the Prince of Wales are included in the number, we are answered in the negative, and told that the Queen's horses alone count two hundred and thirty, while the Prince has only ninety. Carriages in proportion are shown—some of marvelous cost and glitter. The Queen has declined to use the most gorgeous ones since the death of her husband, and rides in those of more modest pretensions—remarkable, however, for their plain solid expensive qualities.

The London post office is known everywhere for its illimitable capacity and for its exactitude of details, as well. The post office in Great Britain combines the telegraph service with its ordinary mail business. In England, and in Europe generally, you send your telegrams with a feeling of security and at half the cost charged by the great monopoly in the United States. Post offices in Great Britain are also savings banks, where the humble depositor can leave his money sure of its safety, and receive a moderate rate of interest. The people seem to second all the efforts of the Government to make the post office the greatest of public blessings. For instance, a door to a house, store, or office would as soon be found without a knob or a lock as without an aperture into which the almost hourly postman may drop a letter.

The Bank of England, or "The Bank," as it is called by London people, is an immense institution, interesting and familiar to the civilized world. In going through it you are reminded more of the United States Treasury than of a large New York bank. The bills of the Bank are printed, numbered, and trimmed in the building, but the machinery for doing all this work seems quite inferior to that used in Washington. The Bank is not a Government institution, but a private corporation. It does the financial business of the Government, however, and thus has a quasi Government character. It originated in the necessities of the Government, and was first opened for business on New Year's day in 1695. In its vicinity are many other banks of great variety and of immense capital.

The policemen of London seem to be omnipresent, active, and vigilant. A stranger in the city has occasion to ask of them innumerable questions, some no doubt apparently quite silly, but he will uniformly get a polite and intelligent answer.

Newgate prison was shown to us, throughout, on a permit from the Lord Mayor. This prison is probably as well known as any feature of London. Newgate and Old Bailey are familiar to all story readers. When seen they present a very quiet appearance as if they were never known in history and drama. The prison is a model of order and cleanliness. It was the remark of American visitors that they had never been in a prison before in which not the slightest taint or smell in the air could be discovered.

"Bunhill fields" is the name of an old burying ground in London, which is interesting as containing the graves of John Bunyan, Isaac Watts, and Daniel Defoe. Appropriate monuments mark their resting places. Opposite to this grave-yard stands the church in which John Wesley preached, and in its yard lie buried John Wesley and Adam Clarke, the founders of Methodism. Marble monuments perpetuate their memories, and the old church bears the name of Wesley. Some distance from the graves of Wesley and Bunyan, in another inclosure, is a simple headstone, scarce two feet high, almost overgrown with grass, on which you may decipher the name of George Fox, the founder of Quakerism. It is not in accordance with the Quaker faith to erect memorials of the dead.

Nevertheless we could wish that one whose influence on the world was only second to Wesley's might have an equally honored grave.

There are three, at least, notable clergymen in London—Dean Stanley, James Martineau, and Spurgeon. The first we heard in Westminster Abbey, of which he is in charge. Receiving his appointment directly from the Queen he is independent of the Bishop or Archbishop. His well known liberality of sentiment does not, it seems, detract from the high esteem, or separate him from the intimate society, of her Majesty. James Martineau is remarkable alike for his piety and learning. In personal appearance and as an eloquent speaker he is the superior of Dean Stanley. In theology they do not greatly differ. Both are eminent pillars of the "Broad Church." Spurgeon, except for his notoriety and for the immense audience he attracts, does not deserve to be associated with Dean Stanley and Doctor Martineau. But he is one of the objects of interest to travelers, as Beecher is in this country. Intellectually Spurgeon is greatly the inferior of Beecher, and by no means his equal as an orator.

The Zoological Garden in London is not more attractive in its rare and large collection of animals than by its extent and beauty as a garden of plants and flowers. Hours may be spent here in pleasant recreation without looking at the animals. Long walks amid groves of trees, or by the side of small lakes, with the choicest refreshments at hand, accompanied often by excellent music, make the place delightful, aside from the enjoyment and instruction afforded by the great variety and wonderful specimens of zoology. In one of the lakes mentioned we saw two monster elephants bathing playfully like two Newfoundland dogs, often hid from sight under water, excepting perhaps their mysterious projecting trunks. Many of the animals on exhibition were derived from America by purchase, gift, or exchange.

A great many jokes are perpetrated at the expense of London weather. During our stay there the atmosphere was as clear and bright as it is usually in America. But most the year the sun, it is alleged, is hid by clouds and fog. When Horace Greeley first visited London he wrote home to his friends who might purpose following him: "Take a good long look at the sun before you leave home." The Shah of Persia probably had a similar experience when he was in London. An Englishman said to him at dinner, "I am told some of your people in Persia worship the sun; is it true?" "Yes," he replied, "and you would too, in England, if you could see it."

Paris is a show city, and as such, it makes it pay. Millions of dollars are every year left in that beautiful city only because it is "a show city." Our own Washington has the possibilities of becoming such a city. But we must enlarge our conceptions of our destiny as a nation before we shall have a capital worthy of it. The tomb of Napoleon, in Paris, cost more than all the monuments and statues America has raised to Washington, Franklin, Adams, Jefferson, and Hamilton during the last century. Are Republics ungrateful?

The streets of Paris, so wide, so well graded and paved, (largely with asphalt,) and so clean, are monuments to the great engineer, Haussman, who under Louis Napoleon was the original "Boss Shepherd." Paris and Washington are renovated cities, examples of good taste and fearless enterprise.

A review by President McMahon of 30,000 French troops on Sunday in the Bois de Boulogne seemed a painful exhibition of their inferiority to either the British, German, or Italian soldiers. The diminutive size of the French is at once apparent, whether seen on parade or off duty in the street. Yet the chief glory of France has been military. Will not the brilliant intellects of the great empire hereafter be more devoted to science, literature, and art than to war, and its muscle find employment in agriculture, manufactures, and commerce rather than in human butchery?

Traveling by private carriage or by diligence in other parts of France, away from its large towns and cities, the perfection of the common roads and the splendid bridges across the most ordinary streams will arrest the attention of every American observer.

Neither American art or American literature has yet found much favor in Europe. In one of the galleries of modern works of art in Paris, with over 6,000 pieces on the catalogue, there were but two American pictures, one "The Surrender of Cornwallis," in which La Fayette is a prominent figure, the other a portrait of Caleb Cushing! In Kensington Museum, London, there are quite a number of Benjamin West's works, including his own portrait.

But, as a rule, among the myriads of pictures seen all over Europe, there are none by American artists, and but few of American subjects. The latter are generally landscapes—no battle pieces or portraits. On the bookshelves of Great Britain almost the only American author who finds a place is Longfellow. Mark Twain's humorous works have some circulation; but in the best English book stores only "Longfellow's Poems" represent the United States.

You enter Italy by the Mont Cenis tunnel, a work that proves the Italians first among civilized nations in works of internal improvement. When the tunnel was proposed the French government was invited to participate in its cost as it would in its benefits when completed. The imperial power hesitated, and betrayed a lack of faith in the feasibility of the project, venturing only to offer a contribution of 30 millions of francs to be paid on the completion of the work. It is needless to say that France had to pay the money. But the credit of the enterprise belongs to Italy. Now another and greater tunnel is being built at the St. Gothard Pass. This will bring to Italy the travel and trade of Germany, &c., as Mont Cenis does France, &c. The latter is nearly 8 miles long; the St. Gothard will be three miles longer.*

The Italian army appears to be not inferior to any in Europe. The officers are gentlemen—men of education, and from the best families in Italy. The rank and file are well formed, taller than the French, but not so large as the English. The Italian soldier is remarkable for his alertness—he generally marches on the "double quick." The officers and men are well uniformed, their clothes are of good quality, and well fitting; another contrast to the French. It is also noticeable that the officers and employees of the railroads in Italy are a fine class of men, polite and intelligent. Of course the railroads are well conducted, regard being had to safety, comfort, and speed. Americans look with envy upon the spacious and well provided stations (or depots) on the roads, especially upon the excellent restaurants found in all the stations.

* The Hoosac tunnel is $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles long.

The railroad from Bologna to Florence is something marvelous in the way of engineering—18 tunnels occur in twice as many miles. In other places the steepest grades are surmounted by powerful locomotives. The character of the road requires a large number of employees of more than ordinary skill and prudence. Italy believes in the railroad as an educator. Superstition withers before it. We met here an agent of Pullman's palace and sleeping cars, who had just concluded a contract with the authorities to place on the roads those famous American cars. We may expect soon to see them all over Italy. We predict that the first ones will be named Garibaldi, Mazzini, Cavour, Victor Emmanuel, &c. The "first class" cars now in use in Italy are quite splendid and comfortable. The Pullman, however, are expected to eclipse them.

Free schools abound in Italy, while monasteries are being suppressed. It is a notable fact that the Church of Rome has fewer privileges under the law in Italy than in the United States!

The interesting city of Florence is becoming a modern town under the rule of a progressive and enterprising Mayor. The new and magnificent boulevards, avenues, and streets springing into existence in various portions of the city, we are told, are his offspring. He seems to be of himself a "Board of Public Works." You cannot help feeling that it was a mistake to remove the seat of government from Florence to Rome. It is pleasant to find the United States well represented in this important city by a consul so well fitted to his office as Mr. J. Lorimer Graham.

Venice, the city of the sea, next to Rome, is the most remarkable of all the cities of Italy. But we are not writing a "guide book," and so will not dwell on descriptions. During our brief stay in Venice we witnessed a grand ovation and serenade to the officers of the British fleet then in the port. It was indeed magnificent. The evidence it presented of a friendly feeling existing between the two diverse peoples, and the not less evident desire to cultivate pleasant relations in the future on both sides, are hopeful signs of a cordial union between two progressive free nations. The day when such union may be important is perhaps not distant. The secondary political position now occupied by the Pope must be as irksome to him as it is humiliating. Those nations which still maintain allegiance to the Pope are no less uneasy and dissatisfied than the Pope himself.

Milan, so widely celebrated for its grand Cathedral, is a lively city, wearing somewhat of an American aspect. Improvement was everywhere going forward in the town and a more business air pervaded its numerous stores than we had seen in Italy. Monks and priests seemed out of place here. Coming from Venice to Milan we passed through Verona, stopping there a few hours. The balcony from which Juliet saluted Romeo, and also her tomb, are pointed out to visitors. Ruins of the early centuries are to be seen in Verona, and its whole appearance is ancient. Milan seemed quite modern in contrast.

Lakes Como and Maggiore, too beautiful for description, are about thirty miles from Milan. The traveler who misses them is to be pitied. The lovely aristocratic villas dotting the shores of the lakes greatly enhance their natural charms.

Embarking at midnight in a diligence from Biasca, we proceed to cross the Alps by what is called "St. Gothard Pass." This is an adventure second only to crossing the Atlantic ocean. By terraces built at immense cost you rise up the mountain, nearly perpendicular, to a giddy height of 5,000 feet, descending, on the Swiss side a much more gradual declivity. The road on both sides of the mountain is all the way macadamized and in perfect order. The embankments and the coping on the borders of the road are of solid mason work and granite, not without architectural grace and style. The diligences are the most substantial of vehicles, drawn up the steepest ascents by seven horses, whose intelligence and sagacity are the traveler's surest hopes of safety. The drivers are Jehus.

Entering Switzerland by Lake Lucerne, passing on the way through the scenes of William Tell's exploits, the American for the first time since he left home finds himself in a republic. He is unfavorably impressed, politically, by the number of soldiers he everywhere meets—a number quite disproportionate to the size of the country. The large hotels in Switzerland are kept by Germans. To what extent other kinds of business are absorbed by Germans we cannot say. The scenery of Switzerland, its lakes and mountains, can only fitly be described in poetry.* In our own country we have all the glorious scenery, perhaps, of Switzerland, but it is separated by vast distances—from the White Mountains to the Yosemite Valley, from Niagara Falls and Lake George to the Mammoth Cave, while in Switzerland it is all in small compass. The myriads of people who resort here every year have given it the name of the "Play-ground of Christendom." Berne, its capital, is a quaint old city, but not devoid of beauty. Its public buildings are scarcely noticeable. To illustrate its name (Berne) it gives great attention to bears. A den of these animals has been for many years supported by the city as one of its institutions, and when the town clock strikes a procession of automaton bears passes out of the church tower. These exhibitions amuse the young people and even "children of a larger growth." Among the novel habits of the people of Switzerland we observed that their bank hours were 8 to 12 A. M. and 2 to 5 P. M. Similar hours are fixed for all government offices. Sand is universally used in writing instead of blotting paper. The railway cars of Switzerland resemble ours in that the entrance and exit are at the end and not at the side, as elsewhere in Europe. Only in the Swiss cars can the European railway conductor pass through his train inside the cars.

Geneva is the most important as it is the handsomest town in Switzerland. It boasts of few "sights," but its natural beauties are scarcely equaled the world over.

Here Pere Hyacinthe attempted to raise a church, but it is equally impossible to sustain a "third party" in religion as it is in politics. Bonaparte said government must be Cossack or Republican—so in religion as the good Pere has found. Here Calvin three hundred years ago burnt Servetus because he was a Unitarian. The English mobbed Dr. Priestley two hundred years later, and he fled to America, on account of his religious sentiments, similar to those taught by Servetus. Adams, Jefferson, Franklin, and others became disciples of like faith. If General Washington had been a John Calvin he would have hanged Dr. Priestley before he disseminated his heresy.

The trade of Geneva, as all know, is chiefly in watches and jewelry. The American traveler salutes his country's flag flying above one of the largest buildings in Geneva. He learns that this immense building is the watch factory of Tiffany & Co., of New York. This firm is not only patriotic and enterprising, but humane and kind. The failure of Duncan, Sherman & Co. threw many tourists into financial distress. Their supply of money for daily expenses was suddenly shut off. In their dilemma they found in Tiffany & Co. friends indeed. Fortunately, a resumption took place in a few days on the part of Duncan, Sherman & Co., so far as "letters of credit" were concerned, relieving many an anxious traveler. Our consul at Geneva is Mr. C. H. Upton, formerly of Upton's Hill, Virginia. Being a loyal citizen, President Lincoln gave him the consulate at Geneva in 1863. Although an old man, he still fills the post as creditably as the meager salary will allow.

Geneva from being the fountain of Calvinism seems now to be the most irreligious city in Europe—we do not mean immoral—but a general neglect of the Sabbath and the forms of religion is noticeable, illustrating the swinging of the pendulum from one extreme to the other. The clergy in Geneva of the present day are largely Rationalistic, we were told by a Calvinist. The influence of Calvin on Geneva is more apparent in the city's lack of ornament. His stern teachings discouraged art, so we find in Geneva no monuments or displays of architecture, no picture galleries, and but few statues.

*See Byron's Childe Harold, etc.

Mont Blanc, although fifty miles distant, belongs to the scenery of Geneva. A day's ride by diligence takes you to the foot of the King of Mountains, whose wondrous beauty and sublimity baffle all attempts at description. No European traveler can afford to miss Mont Blanc.

Basle is one of the most important towns in Switzerland. Its business is extensive. Its churches form a part of the history of the Reformation. Nevertheless it is a place of few attractions. Its "Munster" repays the traveler's attention, and the Hotel Trois Roi is a good resting place.

The falls of the Rhine, near by, seem tame to those who have seen Niagara or Trenton. From Basle, Basel, or Bale, to Baden-Baden, takes you into Germany. Baden-Baden is the Saratoga of Europe. The gambling which once made this delightful place so notorious has been wholly suppressed, and now it is simply a "watering place." As a summer resort it seems unrivaled. The hotels are solid structures of brick and stone, and are not expected to burn down every five years like our Saratoga hotels.

Probably a conflagration never occurred in Baden-Baden such as are so common at all American watering places. There are two interesting castles here, the "old" and the "new;" the latter was built in the fifteenth century, and is occupied at present by one of the royal family. Already you have seen enough German soldiers to be impressed by their manifest superiority to all other soldiers. This impression, it is true, is produced mainly by the officers whom you meet on the cars and at the hotels. Their athletic forms and gallant bearing are enhanced in appearance by the fine clothes with which they are uniformed.

Gambling having been abolished at Baden-Baden, music has become the predominant element in the life of the place. Out-door concerts of the highest order supplement the pleasant walks and drives which this charming place so abundantly affords.

Frankfort is the first city in Germany on the way from Switzerland to the Rhine. This ancient and wealthy town is the birthplace of the Rothschilds, and the old house in which they first lived, and where they laid the foundations of their colossal wealth, still stands in the Hebrew part of the city.

Modern Frankfort has two delightful resorts for recreation and amusement—the Palm Garden and the Zoological Garden. Both places are enlivened by fine music, such as only Germans can produce. Here people of all ages and condition gather every evening or afternoon to listen to the exquisite music while partaking of refreshments.

Frankfort furnished the money to pay for the recent improvements of Washington. Some of her wealthiest bankers are Americans.

The Rhine, like the Alps, belongs to the realm of poetry. In its description both the poet and the artist have illustrated their genius. A pleasant steamboat (European steamboats are not always pleasant) at Biebrich takes the passengers who come from Frankfort at nine o'clock in the morning, arriving at Cologne before sunset. A day's acquaintance with this river of marvelous beauty and interest is all too brief. In America we have the Hudson and the northern Mississippi, scarcely less beautiful in their natural scenery, but they lack the ruins of ancient castles which attract the eye at every point on the Rhine—interesting of themselves and, still more, in their history. Legends and fairy tales, delightful to young and old, attach to almost every mile of this famous river. Nevertheless, we should be slow to admit that the Hudson is inferior to the Rhine.

Some hours of daylight remain after our arrival in Cologne. Its churches claim the earliest attention. The Cathedral, in size, ranks next to St. Peter's. It is somewhat larger than the Milan, being 511 feet long, 231 feet wide, and will be 520 feet high when the towers are completed. "The Church of Ursula" has a marvelous interest—here are exposed to the visitor the bones of the 11,000 virgins slain on the spot now occupied by the church, in the ninth century. These relics have been religiously preserved, and form a part of the decorations of the church—many of the skulls have been embroidered with needle work by nuns. We not only saw these bones but handled them. The church also contains an immense and well executed picture of the massacre of the virgins. Rubens once lived in Cologne, and another church has one of his paintings on its walls. His house is still standing; in it died Maria de Medicis, whose heart is preserved in the Cathedral, which is remarkably rich in shrines and relics.

Cologne, the least interesting city we have seen, (aside of course from its grand Cathedral) has evidently no "Board of Public Works." Its streets and its sewers bear witness to this. The Cathedral, however, is sufficient to make the visitor forget the disagreeable features of the city.

Here is "a bridge of boats" across the Rhine nearly half a mile long. The boats are moored side by side, and a floor-way laid across them. Over this bridge there is an immense traffic both of carriages and pedestrians. It is also "a draw bridge," often called into play as such by the various craft plying the river. The "draw" is opened by five or six of the boats moving out of their places to the right and left, and closed as easily by the boats returning again to their moorings. From Cologne to Paris we pass through the thriving, busy little kingdom of Belgium. Immense chimneys pierce the sky all over its territory. Manufacturing of every species seems to be the occupation of the people.

Brussels, the capital of Belgium, is perhaps the belle city of the world. The residence of the Court, its buildings are all of an aristocratic order. Its streets are spacious and entirely clean, and its parks, beautiful and grand, challenge those of any other city. Indeed, among cities Brussels has no peer unless it be Paris, of which Brussels is sometimes said to be the miniature. Its beauty is not confined to the portions occupied by royalty and its court, but even in its suburbs it sustains all that has been claimed for it. The Bois, with its walks and drives of many miles, astonish and bewilder with their loveliness and extent. We were not surprised to find that our late Minister to Belgium, Mr. H. J. Sanford, still resides in Brussels a private citizen. Only a man of ample fortune, it is said, can afford to be Minister to Belgium. General Badeau, recently appointed to that position, has felt obliged to decline it.

Antwerp is remarkable for its fine churches, or rather for the rare pictures in the churches. Probably no other city, except Rome, contains such art treasures. Judging from the splendor of the churches—their bright, fresh appearance—we should say that Catholicism is flourishing in Antwerp, and not the decaying institution it seems in Italy and France. As a commercial city Antwerp is evidently prosperous and growing in importance. It was pleasant to see the American flag flying from so many masts in the harbor.

We entered Holland, or the Netherlands, at Rotterdam. Here quite a different order of civilization seems to prevail. The streets, the houses, the people all present a singular and unique appearance. But you soon come to like them all. Rotterdam, however, is much less interesting and agreeable than either The Hague or Amsterdam.

The Hague for quiet beauty rivals any city on the continent. Like Brussels it is a Court city still more exclusively. There are no manufactories, no trade and commerce to disturb the quiet of the place—its streets and squares are paragons of cleanliness—the dwellings out-do the rich quaker houses of Philadelphia, and the servants at the doors are pictures of neatness. Most of the small carts for distributing provisions of all kinds, at the houses, are drawn by dogs, women, or men, and partake of the same general character of neatness, order, and quiet that pervades the city. We wish we could speak with more emphasis of the magnificent park or bois which forms such a delightful part of The Hague. The music that is afforded almost every afternoon or evening in it is if possible more exquisite than that which makes the parks of Frankfort so famous.

An international Congress for the furtherance of the principle of arbitration in place of war was in session at The Hague during our visit, (August, 1875.) At a reception, given by the Queen in honor of the delegates, occasion was afforded to admire that accomplished and graceful sovereign. Able to speak nearly every language with entire fancy she charmed her guests with her affability and grace. The first question she asked Judge Peabody, of the American delegation, was "Have they found Charley Ross?" The ancient buildings used by the two houses of Parliament are full of interesting associations, but architecturally do not add much to the beauty of the city. A museum of rare old paintings and a magnificent club house and some private galleries of art, easily accessible, are among the pleasant resorts of the traveler.

Amsterdam, the chief city of Holland, at once captivates the hearts of Americans especially. Its principal streets are two or three miles long and from two hundred to three hundred feet wide. In the center of the street generally runs a canal somewhat after the manner of Venice. This canal is not allowed to detract from the universal neatness and tidiness of the city. In Amsterdam, evidently, "cleanliness is next to godliness." The wealth, enterprise, and taste of its old merchants find a monument in the "town hall" built by them, in 1650. It cost what would now be equal to ten millions of dollars. Here again we find a large zoological garden, probably the finest in Europe. The beautiful park that adorns the city is private property. From Amsterdam we return to the less interesting city of Rotterdam, thence to Harwich by steamboat and to London by rail.

The people of Europe, men and women, old and young, we may here remark, drink wine or other stimulants habitually. An Englishman who lives one half the time in the United States told us that when he was in Boston or New York he had no relish for stimulants—rather repelled them. But when he was in Washington or Richmond his English appetite returned. So that "drinking" is in some degree a matter of climate. The people of Maine and Massachusetts may well be teetotalers and prohibitionists.

Tramways (as street railways are called) have been adopted in most of the cities of Europe to a moderate extent. London, at least, could lay down many more miles to great advantage, but there is yet some bigotry on the subject, or the omnibus proprietors are more powerful than the public interest. This seems no less true in Paris. Generally tramways are used only in the suburbs of European cities. One in Geneva is peculiar in having three rails—the center to keep the car in place, the outside wheels having no flanges.

We left America on the 5th of May. It is now the middle of September and our passage home is engaged for the second of October. Scotland claims these few remaining days. Stopping a few hours only in the busy city of Manchester, a night at Carlisle, another at Melrose and its wonderful Abbey, we reached at mid-day the city of Edinburgh. As we become acquainted with its features it begins to assert itself as the handsomest city in Europe. We think of The Hague, of Brussels, and of Paris, and incline to dispute her claim. Before we leave we yield our partiality for two at least of Edinburgh's rivals and no longer marvel at the admiration travelers bestow on Scotland's truly beautiful city. The "old town" combined with the "new" heightens the interest of both—the one of the other.

The monument to Walter Scott in Edinburgh is not inferior to the more expensive "Albert Memorial" in London. It is a delight to the eye—so majestic and graceful. Another to Robert Burns, near Holyrood, is only less conspicuous and less costly. Monuments to Playfair and to Hume are noticeable. Much more interesting was one to the "Republican Martyrs of 1794" than the more pretentious column and statue erected in memory of a visit to the city by the King, which, with a statue of Pitt and another elegant fluted column surmounted by a statue of Lord Melville, grace the public squares.

The bank buildings in Edinburgh are magnificent edifices. Few public buildings in any city equal them. The same may be said of the banks in Glasgow. Good hotels, so necessary in every place, add to the pleasures of a stay in Edinburgh.

An unfinished monument to the soldiers of the Napoleonic wars on Calton hill* is really more beautiful incomplete than if the original design were fully carried out.

* Unfortunately the same cannot be said of the half built monument to Washington that offends the eye at the American capital.

The Castle, Holyrood Palace, monuments to Scott, Burns, Nelson, Dugald Stewart, and others already named, John Knox's house, the Church of St. Giles, the art gallery and museum, and many other interesting objects, give a pleasing variety to the "sights" of this picturesque city. We think there is no city in Europe that has so fine a cemetery as that we visited in the suburbs of Edinburgh. More poverty and intemperance are apparent in the "old town" than is seen in the cities on the continent. While jewelry and fancy stores line the streets of Paris, in Edinburgh book stores prevail. The old names of "The Edinburgh Review" and "Blackwood's Magazine" arrest the attention as we pass the publishing offices.

From Edinburgh to Stirling we pass through a fertile and beautiful country, not unlike New England. Sheep and fine cattle abound. Stirling is a point of great interest. Its castle, alone, repays a long journey. From its walls you may see the finest landscape in the realm. Added to its natural beauties are its historical associations. Here Wallace and Bruce achieved victories and suffered defeats. Bannockburn is in sight, and the river Forth, with its ancient bridges, is at your feet, and a rude monument to Wallace stands on the brow of a hill. The guide at the castle will tell you wonderful tales of the eleventh and thirteenth centuries.

From Stirling our route lies through the famous Trosachs, Loch Katrine and Loch Lomond, to Glasgow. Few more delightful excursions can be found in the world. Walter Scott's pen has made all the scenery of mountain and lake enchanting—of itself more lovely than words can fully describe. Only a day is occupied in the journey—too brief a time to satisfy even an indifferent spectator—sufficiently long, however, to travel by several modes of conveyance. From Callender by stage to and through the Trosachs, thence by steamboat across Loch Katrine to Stronachlachar, again by stage to Inversnaid, and again by steamboat through Loch Lomond to Balloch, and thence by rail to Glasgow. The current of travel along this route is great during the proper season—

Americans as usual contributing largely to it. The little steamers are adapted to their use, and much neater than boats generally are in Europe. The stages are comfortable—the fares high.

Travelers are constantly being surprised by unexpected objects of interest and beauty, however faithfully they may read their guide books. Glasgow surprised us by its elegance. What can be finer than George's square with its numerous statues and fountains! The Cathedral here is one of the most remarkable in Great Britain, in its size and in its good preservation. Protestant cathedrals, however, are much less attractive than the Catholic. The iconoclastic Puritans in the heat of the reformation stripped them of all ornament if they did not nearly demolish their very walls. In Glasgow we noticed advertisements in the newspapers reading—"Real Estate to be sold or leased." "Furniture to be sold at public roup." The Scotch dialect, when used in conversation, is often quite unintelligible to the born Yankee. Travelers, Americans at least, will, in looking for a good hotel, be attracted by the name "The Washington House," and they will not be disappointed in a trial.

Like the Wandering Jew we are impelled by time to "move on." Ayr, the birthplace of Robert Burns, is about 40 miles from Glasgow. The house in which Burns was born, the graves of his father, mother, and favorite sister, the old haunted kirk of Alloway, and the "brig of Doon" were all visited. Other scenes of Burns' poems lie all around. Near the "haunted kirk" is a fine and costly monument to the great poet. In it are preserved several interesting relics of his life and writings—among others the Bible he gave to his Mary when they "pledged their troth." The monument stands in a lovely garden of flowers about four miles from the town. Ayr and Ayrshire are inhabited by a thrifty people. Ayrshire cattle have a world-wide fame. A sheep fair was held in town during our stay. The great number of fine sheep we saw were not more interesting than the many well trained Shepherd's dogs accompanying their masters, and making a part of the fair.

Dumfries is about fifty miles from Ayr.

Here Burns died and was buried. The monument over his grave, like those at Ayr and Edinburgh, is worthy of Burns' memory, and honorable to his friends and admirers who erected it. Its interior, like the others also, is adorned with sculpture, tablets, and mementoes. Beneath it lie his own remains, those of several of his children, and of his wife, who lived thirty years after her husband's early death. At her request a poor letter-carrier was buried with the family, whose only claim was in having been one of Burns' chief boon companions in the poet's hilarious days. In the town you may visit the old haunts of Burns, and listen to many a tradition of his jolly but improvident life. Nothing of an intellectual phase is noticeable in Ayr or Dumfries. His inspiration came from nature alone. His democratic and liberal sentiments must have separated him from the aristocracy, who, to this day, regard him somewhat coldly.

Our visit to Scotland was during the "equinoctial storm;" nevertheless, it was one of great enjoyment. The storm, however, at its height, prevented our crossing the channel to Belfast to see the Giant's Causeway, and to Dublin as we had intended. Instead, we devoted more time to Ayr and Dumfries—the scenes of Robert Burns' life and death. Thence we hurried to Liverpool to be ready for the "Bothnia." With one day to spare, we visited the old town of Chester, so famous for its ancient Roman wall, rebuilt in the thirteenth century, and still in good preservation. Roman baths used in A. D. 90, a Cathedral of the eleventh century, and other remains of the early centuries excite the wonder of the traveler. Crossing the river Dee we were in Wales. On this side of the river, opposite Chester, is the magnificent estate of the Duke of Westminster. The whole country is charming. Chester is 17 miles from Liverpool, connected by two railways, a part of which belongs to the first railroad built in England.

SALARIES AND DEMAGOGISM.

It is of no use for public men to attempt to be other than they really are. Demagogism is a quality that will expose itself, and the tricks of the demagogue can be seen with half an eye in spite of the performer's attempt to pass them off as true statesmanship. At the Capitol, in this year of 1876, the most arrant set of tricksters that ever called themselves men are at work tinkering and bidding for votes. They imagine that they have discovered the high road to popularity. It is to cut down salaries. They are not going to look into the matter at all, and will ask no questions as to the effect it may have on the service, the right or the wrong in any given case, or whether they will allow fair pay for fair work, according to the times. The great Democratic party is to prove itself economical, and scorns to consider what is just, or what is best for the public service. The members think they can buy votes in this cheap way, as though the people had lost their senses, and become unable to distinguish between true statesmanship and shams.

The present rate of the salaries of the several classes of clerks was fixed by the Democratic party in 1854. There was a Democratic Senate, House, and President, and a Democratic standing committee on "Retrenchment and Reform," and Mr. Adams, of Mississippi, a pronounced Democrat, was chairman. On the 16th of January, 1854, by direction of his committee, Mr. Adams introduced a bill to fix salaries of clerks at $1,200 first-class, $1,400 second-class, $1,600 third-class, $1,800 fourth-class. This Democratic bill for retrenchment and reform was read, and no Democrat objecting, it was ordered to a second reading.

On the 31st of January the bill came up again, and Mr. Adams for his Democratic committee made some interesting remarks, and asserted that clerks of a lower grade, if married, and having but a single child, could not, should the child die, pay the ordinary funeral expenses, but were dependent on the charity of their fellow-clerks for the means to give the dead a decent burial; and this was true.

The bill was passed in the Senate without any opposition, save a few remarks by John M. Clayton and John Bell, who contended that there should be some provision to prevent the injustice of demanding the same amount and kind of service of a clerk of low salary that is required of one having a higher salary. Think of it! statesmen proposing to prevent injustice! The bill was approved by a Democratic President by the name of Frank Pierce, whose party fealty has never been called in question, and on the 22d of April it became a law to take effect on the first day of the previous July. Now, on this 22d day of April how did prices compare with to-day? Let us look at a few leading items retail:

	1854.	1876.
Beef, best cuts, per lb....	$ 14	$ 25
Flour, best family, bbl..	8.00	10.40
Coal, best, per ton.....	5.00	9.00
Pork, per lb.....	7½	15
Sugar, per lb.....	8	12
Milk, per qt.....	5	10
Coffee, per lb.....	19	45
Chickens, per pair.....	25 to 50c.	75c. to $1.25
Rent, per month.....	$20.00
Same houses.....		45.00

It will be perceived that in the item of rent alone, which is nearly one-half the cost of living, there is an advance of more than 100 per cent., making a difference of just $300 per annum, so that in point of fact a clerk of class one, salary $1,200, only gets $900, as compared with 1854, if we consider the advance in rent alone.

But let us compare the cost of living by items between the two periods. A man with a wife and two children, with economical habits and good health, can get on as follows, taking a moderate average, viz :

Rent per month, if lucky	$45 00
General groceries.....	20 00
Meats at 92 lbs per month.....	23 00
Flour	3 00
Coal, and wood for kindling	10 00
Gas	3 00
Fruits and vegetables.....	4 00
Milk.....	4 00
	<hr/> 112 00

Per annum.....$1,344 00

Now add other necessary expenses :

Clothing for 4 persons $100 each.....	$400 00
Servant	120 00
Newspapers, magazines, and books..	20 00
Pew rent	30 00
Contributions, political and charitable	25 00
Repairs and depreciation of furniture	20 00
Doctors bills and medicine.....	20 00

Total annual.....1,979 00

In 1854 the figures were :

Rent per month, easy.....	$20 00
Groceries	15 00
Meats	13 00
Flour	2 00
Coal	6 50
Gas	1 50
Fruits, and vegetables.....	2 00
Milk	2 00
	<hr/> 62 00

Per annum.....$744 00

Then add :

Servant.....	$60 00
Clothing	300 00
Newspapers and books.....	20 00
Pew rent.....	20 00
Contributions	15 00
Repairs and depreciation furniture	20 00
Doctors bills and medicine	20 00
	<hr/> $1,199 00

It will appear from these figures that in 1854 a clerk of class one, with a small family, could just make both ends meet, allowing nothing for amusements, or travel, or carriage hire, and other contingencies, and he could save nothing. It was this state of facts which led Mr. Adams to bring in his bill for an increase of salaries, and there was not demagogism enough in the whole of that Congress to oppose an objection to the measure, and it passed without opposition.

It will be perceived, also, that measured by what the pay will buy in necessary articles of living, the salary of $2,000 in 1876 is only $2 per annum more than the salary of a first-class clerk in 1854. Twelve hundred dollars in 1854 would purchase in necessary articles the same amount as $1,979 will now.

It is a plain matter of arithmetic, and the conclusion is reached without allowing a penny for increased cost on account of a change in style of living. We take the identical quality of beef, pork, flour, &c., and the identical houses that were lived in then. The house which the writer hired for $20 per month prior to the war is rented now at $45, and called cheap at that, in spite of its increased years, and no improvements have been made on it either.

The members of Congress have discovered the changed figures as regards their own expenses, and raised their pay from $3,000 to $5,000. This is right. The difference in the purchasing power of a dollar according to the prices given above is within a trifling fraction as three to five. The pay of the Democratic clerks of 1854 was equal, therefore, in the dollars now received by Republican clerks as follows:

1st class salary, 1854,	$1,200;	in 1876 to	$2,000
2nd " " "	1,400	" " "	2,332 23 1/2
3rd " " "	1,600	" " "	2,666 66 2/3
4th " " "	1,800	" " "	3,000

These latter are the salaries which clerks should receive now to make their pay what it was intended to be, and what in the judgment of the Democratic Congress of 1854 was right.

But instead of this the several classes of clerks actually receive but three-fifths the amount intended, and it is proposed to rob them still further to make capital for the Democratic party.

As compared with 1854, the salaries now are :

Chief clerk's,	$2,000;	purchasing power only	$1,200
4th class,	1,800	" "	1,080
3rd " "	1,600	" "	960
2nd " "	1,400	" "	840
1st " "	1,200	" "	720

From these it is now proposed to take 10 per cent., and they will range:

Chief Clerks and Heads of Divisions....	$1,000
Clerks of class four.....	900
Clerks of class three.....	800
Clerks of class two.....	700

Being exactly one half the value of the salaries as fixed by the Democrats for their appointees in 1854, and which will be absolutely less than the salaries paid at the commencement of this century.

The salaries of members of Congress in 1854 were $3,000 per annum, and by the new bill they will be $4,500, which is an increase of just one-half. If they desire economy, and it is right to deduct one-half from the salaries of poor clerks, why should not the deduction be made on the salaries of members as well? Does not economy demand it? Ah! Democratic Congressional patriotism stops just short of the Capitol, and number one must be cared for if times are hard, and people do demand economy. But the proposition shows the measure of statesmanship of the House majority, and how broad are the views of those men who have taken command of affairs for the time being.

THE WORK OF THE FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The essential business of Congress is at this date, (February 14th, 1876,) far behind. Since the close of the debate on amnesty the action in both houses has been desultory to a large degree. Proposals of all sorts are daily introduced, and either with or without discussion referred to the various standing committees. It is impracticable here to give more than a meager outline of the subjects which are brought to the attention of Congress—such as that of registered vessels; changes and corrections in the Revised Statutes; the disposition of public lands in the South and West; recovery of interest from the Pacific Railroad Company; the common unit of money with Great Britain; joint rules of the two Houses; the conduct of the Alaska Commercial Company; inquiry concerning officers of the army detailed for civil duty; concerning straw bids and the disposition of abandoned property; the purchase of silver coin; reform in the civil service; losses by the failure of Jay Cooke & Co.; Freedmen's Saving and Trust Company; allegations in regard to the election of Senator George E. Spencer from the State of Alabama; proposal for improving the levees and the Mississippi basin; for agricultural schools; inquiry concerning the public printing for the War Department; concerning army officers employed in Washington, D. C.; concerning the appropriation for the Ute Indians, and their present hostile feeling; the memorial of women claiming the right of suffrage as citizens of the United States; a discussion on land entries, and the opportunities of fraud under the existing system; propositions and debates in regard to the finances; the currency and the banking system; proposed change of the law concerning third class mail matter; various memorials and propositions for internal improvements; a modification of the law prohibiting the sending of obscene matter through the mails; discussion on the decay of American commerce; a bill to prevent frauds in the prosecution of claims before the departments, and to prohibit officers and employees of the Government acting as claim agents; memorial to regulate elections in Utah, and remedy their existing evils; proposition for the retirement of legal tenders; inquiry concerning the cash balances in the Treasury; concerning the award to the Buffalo Bayou, Brazos, and Colorado Railroad Company; proposal of more stringent legislation to suppress polygamy in Utah; protection to home industry; inquiry concerning the state of the Kansas Indian lands; proposed reorganization of the judiciary; removal of a Federal judge in Colorado; the payment of district judges for extra services; extension of time for the payment of Alabama claims; action of the Legislature of California proposing a change of our treaty with China so as to discourage the immigration of that people to our shores; inquiry concerning the management of the National Insane Asylum; concerning the work and disbursements of the New York post office building; proposal to prepare a form of government for the District of Columbia; proposed legislation for actions for damages to persons for injuries and death caused by the neglect or default of others; proposed repeal of the bankrupt law; proposed appropriation for the completion of the Washington monument; inquiry in regard to the affairs of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and many others of greater or less interest to the different sections of the country, to special classes, and to private individuals—when it is considered that each one, and all these subjects together, with many hundreds, and perhaps thousands more, consume the time of Congress, and then when the debates on topics of still wider national interest are added to the list some proximate conception may be formed of the labors imposed, and of the manner in which the two houses for the last month have been occupied.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT.

Mr. O'Brien, of the House, proposed the following amendment, which was referred to the Judiciary Committee:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That the following be proposed to the several States as an amendment to the Constitution:

ARTICLE XVI.

SECTION 1. No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no minister or preacher of the gospel or of any religious creed or denomination shall hold any office of trust or emolument under the United States or under any State; nor shall any religious test be required as a qualification for any office or public trust in any State, or under the United States.

SEC. 2. No money received by taxation in any State for the support of public schools, or derived from any public fund therefor, nor any public lands devoted thereto, shall ever be under the control of any religious sect, nor shall any money so raised nor lands so devoted be divided between religious sects or denominations; nor shall any minister or preacher of the gospel or of any religious creed or denomination hold any office in connection with the public schools in any State, nor be eligible to any position of trust or emolument in connection with any institution, public or private, in any State or under the United States which shall be supported in whole or in part from any public fund.

CHANGE OF A RULE.

Mr. Cox reported the following change of a rule, which was adopted:

"That Rule No. 120 be so amended that all after the word "progress" be stricken out and there be added the following:

"Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto, changing existing law, be in order except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures."

In the discussion on this amendment the Democrats stated it to be their object to gain the power of decreasing the salaries of Government officials and employees. This on Monday, June 17th.

FURTHER PROPOSED AMENDMENTS.

Mr. Springer of the House introduced the following, which was referred to the Judiciary Committee:

Resolved, &c., That the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said Legislatures, shall be valid as a part of the Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE —.

The Congress shall not pass any local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases; that is to say, for—

Granting pensions, bounties, lands, or prize-money to any person or persons, or for correcting the records of any department of the Government in reference thereto;

Granting relief to any person or persons or authorizing the payment of any claim against the United States or any officer thereof, except appropriations in general laws to pay the judgments of courts or commissions authorized by law;

Remitting fines, penalties, or forfeitures, creating, increasing, or decreasing fees, percentage, or allowances of public officers during the term for which said officers are elected;

Granting to any corporation, association, or individual the right to lay down railroad tracks, or amending existing charters for such purpose by confirming any special or exclusive privilege upon such corporation or association which it does not already have;

Granting to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive privilege, subsidy, immunity, or franchise whatever;

Regulating the practice of courts or conferring special jurisdiction in a particular case on any of the courts of the United States, or commissions for the auditing of claims against the same.

In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable no special law shall be enacted, and in all cases the courts may determine whether any special law could have been embraced in a general enactment.

Attempts were likewise made in the House to adopt some form of amendment to be proposed to the Legislatures of the States in regard to the term of the Presidential office, and the eligibility of ex-Presidents.

The Judiciary Committee reported Tuesday, February 1, 1876, a proposed article, making ex-Presidents ineligible. Mr. Frye of the minority of the Committee reported an amendment making the term six years, and any person who has held the office two years ineligible ever after. Mr. New called up his proposition on the same subject; after long debate, the whole subject was voted down. This on Wednesday, February 2, 1876.

EFFICIENCY OF THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

Mr. Whitehouse moved the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into any abuses or frauds that may exist in the administration and execution of existing laws affecting any branches of the public service, with a view to ascertain what changes and reformation can be made so as to promote integrity, economy, and efficiency therein. And for the purpose of enabling said committee to fully comprehend the workings of said branches of the public service the investigations of said committee may cover such period in the past as said committee may deem necessary for its own guidance or information, or for the protection of the public interest, in the exposing of frauds or abuses of any kind that may exist in any Department: and said committee are authorized to send for persons and papers, and report by bill or otherwise."

ARMY OFFICERS IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. Banning moved the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish this House a statement of all pay and allowances of every kind and nature whatever made to officers of the Army stationed or on duty in this city of Washington since the 4th of March, 1869, giving in detail the name and rank of such officers, the duties performed, the length of time each has been stationed or on duty in this city, the annual pay and allowances of rent, fuel, quarters, forage, in value received by each, and the authority of law under which such allowances and pay have been made."

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. Holman, by unanimous consent, then submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were read, considered, and agreed to:

"Whereas it is alleged that improper and fraudulent means were resorted to to influence legislation in the passage of the act of Congress entitled 'An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1871, by persons interested in the passage of said act, and that contracts and combinations were subsequently entered into by said company, in violation of the terms of said act: Therefore Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into said allegations and report to the House whether improper or fraudulent means were resorted to in securing the passage of said act, and whether the said company has by its contracts and combinations with other companies done any other act which would justify the forfeiture of the franchises granted by said act, and to this end said committee may send for persons and papers."

Indeed, the Democratic majority of the House exhibit the most untiring zeal in making inquiry and examination into all subjects, great and small, upon the slightest suggestion, and from any quarter. There has been no lack of attention to anything of this sort which any party, however irresponsible, may suggest; and the amount of work which these resolutions heap up on all hands is simply incalculable; of the time and expense thus consumed there is at present no visible end. But the Republicans do not object.

PACIFIC MAIL SUBSIDY.

Mr. Morrison submitted the following, which was adopted:

"Resolved, That the papers laid before this House by the Clerk thereof in relation to the testimony taken before the Committee of Ways and Means (of the Forty-third Congress) 'upon the question of the corrupt use of money to procure the passage of an act providing for an additional subsidy in the China mail service' be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to inquire what action should be taken by the House in reference to the persons now members of this House charged with complicity in the said alleged corrupt use of money for the purpose aforesaid, or with giving false testimony in relation thereto, and report to the House."

This is simply carrying out the intention of the Forty-third Congress, whose Committee of Ways and Means went thoroughly into the exposure of this shameful fraud.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Senator Sherman moved to proceed to the consideration of a bill from the Finance Committee with an amendment, which was agreed to. This provides for the appointment by the President, with the consent of the Senate, of a commission of five persons, no one of whom shall hold other office under the General or any State Government, nor shall they be advocates of prohibitory legislation or total abstinence. The term of office shall not exceed one year. They shall investigate the liquor traffic and manufacture, having special reference to revenue and taxation, distinguishing as far as possible, in the conclusions they arrive at, between the effects produced by the use of distilled or spirituous liquors and the use of fermented or malt liquors, in their economic, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects, in connection with pauperism, crime, social vice, the public health, and general welfare of the people; and also as to the practical results of license and restrictive legislation, and the effect thereby produced upon the consumption of such liquors; also to ascertain whether the evils of drunkenness have been increased or decreased, and whether public morals have been improved thereby. They shall also gather information and take testimony as to whether the evil of drunkenness exists to the same extent, or more so, in other civilized countries, and whether those foreign nations that are considered the most temperate in the use of stimulants are so through prohibitory laws; and also to what degree prohibitory legislation has affected the consumption and manufacture of malt and spirituous liquors in this country.

Section second provides for the employment of a secretary at a salary of $2,500, while the entire expenses are not to exceed $10,000. A report is to be made to Congress through the President.

Senator Bogy, of Missouri, opposed the passage of the bill. "Not," said he, "that I am an advocate of intemperance, for I am a temperance man myself to a certain extent." In this he spoke for the Democrats of the whole country. Let the hosts of temperance men take notice.

The next day (Tuesday, January 25, 1876,) the following action was had in the Senate:

Senator Christiancy offered the following amendment to the amendment:

"For the purpose of obtaining information which may serve as a guide to the system of legislation best fitted for the District of Columbia, the several Territories of the United States, and other places subject to the legislation of Congress in reference to the question of revenue from the manufacture and sale of alcoholic and fermented liquors, and the effect of the use of such liquors upon the morals and welfare of the people of such District, Territories, and places."

Which, after some discussion, was adopted by a vote of 28 to 18. The question was then on the passage of the bill as amended, and the result was announced—yeas 37, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron, of Pennsylvania, Cameron, of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, of Nevada, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, of Maine, Morrill, of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, West, Windom, Withers, and Wright—37.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Caperton, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, English, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Johnston, Jones, of Florida, Key, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Norwood, Ransom, Stevenson, and Wallace—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Burnside, Cockrell, Edmunds, Hitchcock, Kelly, Kernan, Merrimon, Randolph, Robertson, Saulsbury, Thurman, Wadleigh, and Whyte—15.

The friends of temperance throughout the country may as well know at this point who are their friends and who are their opponents in the Senate of the United States, and it would be well to keep an eye on the disposition of this bill in the House.*

PUBLIC LANDS IN SOUTHERN STATES.

Senator Clayton proposed a repeal of that section of the revised statutes which lays restrictions on the disposition of the public lands in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida. It appears that by former legislation the citizens of these States, as well as others, are denied the provisions made in regard to the entry and purchase of other public lands, and the proposal now is to repeal these restrictions. It has occasioned considerable discussion in the Senate, which has brought out the fact that nine-tenths of these lands are unfit for agricultural purposes, but are chiefly valuable as timber lands; that they have been in the market for fifty years, and cannot find a purchaser at the low sum of 12½ cents per acre; that the repeal proposed would add wealth to the citizens of those States, furnish productive labor, increase immigration, and open up the means of supplying the vast prairie land to the west with lumber, while allowing those States the privilege of taxation on the lands which are now no benefit, but rather a hinderance to their development. It was objected, however, that this would suspend the benefits of the homestead law, and would rather increase than avoid the existing evils. Several amendments were proposed, and the question still remains undetermined in the Senate. This on Monday, February 14, 1876.

TREASURY ACCOUNTS.

On Wednesday, January 12, 1876, Senator

*In this connection it may be a matter of interest likewise to know that the Honorable Mr. Ferry, the presiding officer of the Senate, has recently been chosen to the Presidency of the Congressional Temperance Society, and while his duties in the Senate will not permit him to give much time to the actual work, he has, with the fidelity of a true man, lent his moral support to the great cause, as he has also in his personal life and example.

Davis, of West Virginia, introduced a preamble and resolution, which declares there are discrepancies in the "statement of accounts, and provides that a committee of five be appointed to investigate the books and accounts of the Treasury Department with reference to the alleged discrepancies and alterations, and if any such be found to exist, to report the same and the extent and nature thereof, the years wherein they occur, by what authority made if any, the reasons that induced them, and generally such other and further information bearing upon the subject as to them may seem best, the committee to have power to send for persons and papers."

He endeavored to support his motion by a formidable array of figures and statements, to which Senator Boutwell, of Massachusetts, formerly Secretary of the Treasury, replied by a general explanation of the principles on which the business of that department is conducted, and by showing how it is that the apparent discrepancies are made to disappear. The subject was resumed January 18th, and Senator Boutwell proceeded to take up in order the items of difference alleged by Senator Davis. The first item of difference is $3,271,970.43, which results from a difference in the manner of preparing the statements, and is clearly shown by a comparison of the accounts. The second item of difference alleged is $1,437,925.02, which is explained by the different data included under the head of "net ordinary expenditures." The next item relates to pension expenditures, several amounts of which are given as discrepancies, but which are all explained by a reference to the different heads under which they were arranged for different years. The next item relates to errors in the statements of revenue collected, which were gross errors made by one of the accounting clerks; and were corrected in a subsequent report. Senator Boutwell made similar explanations in regard to the statements of the public debt from time to time. This was followed by a long and desultory debate by several Senators on the manner of keeping the books of the Treasury Department, and of making reports from them year by year to Congress and the country. The question was at length raised as to the proper committee to which the subject should be referred. It was sent to the Finance Committee, whose chairman, Senator Sherman, on Wednesday, February 9, 1876, reported back the resolution of Senator Davis with an amendment, which requires the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the Senate, as soon as practicable, a statement of all balances due to the United States from public officers, and all such balances due from other parties no longer in the public service, distinguishing those whose accounts with the United States have been finally passed upon and adjudicated and those whose accounts are yet unsettled and subject to additional credits, stating the nature of such accounts and the credits in question; the statement to embrace the accounts of all such officers or parties in which such balances have respectively accrued since the 1st day of January, 1830, and to set forth respectively and as near as practicable the period over which the accounts extended and the amounts involved therein. Also to furnish a detailed statement of the stocks held by the United States in trust or to secure moneys paid, the character of such stocks, under what law or by what authority, and at what time the same were acquired, and on what amount thereof, if any, has there been a default in the payment of interest due thereon.

The matter is of no political significance whatever, and will prove one of the greatest labor and complication.

DISTRICT BONDS.

By former legislation it was provided that to meet the debts and liabilities of the District of Columbia 3.65 bonds should be issued. At the present time the bonds actually issued amount to between fourteen and fifteen millions of dollars. The interest was due on the bonds on the 1st of February, 1876. A joint resolution was introduced in the House upon this subject, and on Monday, January 24th, Mr. Buckner, from the District Committee, called up the question. The resolution directs the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to transfer to the pay-try,

ued

under the provisions of the act of Congress, approved June 20, 1874, entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia and for other purposes," the sum of $222,797.50 from any unexpended appropriations heretofore made by Congress, or from any revenues derived by taxation on the property of said District of Columbia subject to the requisition of said Commissioners; provided that all certificates heretofore issued by the board of audit, including those converted into 3.65 bonds and those which have not been so converted, and all certificates hereafter to be issued by the board of audit, or their successors in office, shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of $15,000,000.

The proposition has provoked a long and detailed discussion, protracted through many days, and embracing a great variety of subjects more or less complicated with this indebtedness. The occasion has been improved by many members of both Houses to rake out from the rubbish of the past few years all the complaints and allegations against the action of the late District government, and of various prominent officials thereof. But still the fact remains that the debt stands, and the interest should be paid. The situation of the question before Congress at this date, (February 14th,) is that the resolution having passed the House, and then the Senate with some amendment, is now in the hands of a special joint committee with a view of harmonizing the conflicting elements, and meeting with honor the obligations of the Government.

THE MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION.

This bill was taken up in the House for consideration, Wednesday, January 26, 1876. The bill proposes $437,470; this being $193,829 less than the estimates of the War Department. The debate upon this bill has called forth a large mass of figures and comparisons of accounts, and statements of expenditures for a series of years. The Democrats have lost no opportunity to slur the institution which before the rebellion was their own special pet, and from which so many rebel officers obtained the knowledge which they afterwards so shamefully misused. The Republicans, on the other hand, have stood up manfully for the academy all through this running fire of debate. The bill with certain amendments passed the House January 31, 1876, being the first regular appropriation bill that has been sent to the Senate during the present session.

DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Tuesday, February 3, 1876, this bill was called up in the House. The innovations upon the past practice of the Government which the bill proposes may be summarized in two classes: first, a reduction in the number of diplomatic and consular representatives of our Government abroad; and second, a general reduction of salaries. It reduces the appropriation to $922,847, being from that of last year a reduction of $429,639. In the discussion which has followed some of the Democratic members (as Messrs. Springer and Cox) have taken occasion to be very witty at the expense of some of our foreign representatives; in fact, without apparently any regard to the time wasted and the delay of business, these gentlemen seem to imagine that a session of a Democratic House of Congress is mainly for the purpose of allowing them to prepare and deliver long fanfaronades and travesties of the Government and its officials for the amusement of their fellow members and the country. It is sometimes well to relax a little from the earnest work of life, and viewed in this light such buffoonery may be admissible. But it should not be vitiated by the bad taste of holding up to ridicule such a man as Minister Maynard as one who has been lifted up from "the material of effete Congressmen!" Mr. Cox should have remembered his own political history. The diplomatic bill is yet hanging in the House unfinished. This on February 14, 1876.

THE LOUISIANA SENATORS.

On Tuesday, January 18, 1876, Senator Thurman presented the credentials of Thomas B. Eustis, claiming to be Senator elect from the State of Louisiana, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and on Friday, January 28, Senator Morton from that Committee reported:

"That in their opinion there is no vacancy in the office of Senator from the State of Louisiana, P. B. S. Pinchback having been elected in January, 1873, to the term beginning on the 4th of March, 1873. They therefore recommend that the papers belonging to Mr. Eustis be laid upon the table."

This was contested by Senator Saulsbury, a member of the same committee, who claimed there was a vacancy in the Senatorship of that State. Prior to this, on March 5, 1875, Senator Morton had submitted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That P. B. S. Pinchback be admitted as a Senator from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years, beginning the 4th day of March, 1873."

It was now taken up as unfinished business, and the pending motion was on the amendment of Senator Edmunds that the word "not" be inserted before the word "admitted." On this motion Senator Morton made a long argument, referring to the documents of the case, and contending that the question should have been decided long ago, and that the Senate should now admit Mr. Pinchback to his seat. He quoted from a recent speech of Mr. Robert Toombs, of Georgia, made before the members of the Legislature of that State and a large assembly of the people.

The question was again brought up Monday, February 7, 1876, when Senator Thurman made a strong opposition to the admission of the claimant.

He, too, went largely into the old history of the case, citing from documents and reports, and contending that the claimant had no title to a seat in the Senate. Senator Howe replied with great force and effectiveness to the main positions taken on the other side. Here the question rests in the Senate. It ought to be decided at once. The credit of the Senate as well as justice to the claimant and the State is deeply involved in this matter.

EULOGIES ON THE DEAD.

The death of Hon. Mr. Starkweather, a member of the House from Connecticut, which occurred during the last month and after an illness of but a few days, has only been announced. No time is yet fixed for the addresses usual in Congress on these occasions.

The eulogies upon Vice President Wilson, both in the Senate and the House, were pronounced on Friday, January 21, 1876; in the Senate by Messrs. Boutwell, Hamlin, Cragin, Cameron, Stevenson, Ingalls, Bogy, Anthony, and Dawes; in the House by Messrs. Warren, Harris, Kelley, Knott, Clymer, Kasson, Banks, Lynch, Hurlbut, Reagan, Joyce, Lawrence, Lapham, and Blair.

The eulogies on Senator Ferry, of Connecticut, were pronounced on Tuesday, February 8th, 1876; in the Senate, by Messrs. Eaton, Sargent, Bayard, Howe, Frelinghuysen, Thurman, Wadleigh, and English; and in the House by Messrs. Phelps, Seelye, and Garfield, who read the address of the late Hon. Mr. Starkweather, prepared for the occasion just before his own brief sickness and sudden death, which occurred on Sunday, February 6th, at Willard's Hotel. The Christian sentiment breathing through these orations are a proof of a deep-seated faith in the hearts of many of our public men respecting the sublime doctrine of our religion. If no other flower grows upon the grave of the distinguished dead, this would be enough almost to reconcile us to the great mystery.

THE CENTENNIAL APPROPRIATION.

This subject has given rise to the most able, eloquent, and lengthened debate which has marked the course of affairs in Congress since that on amnesty was closed. On Monday, January 17th, 1876, Mr. Hopkins, of the House, from the Committee on Appropriations, called up the following bill, and gave way to Mr. Hardenbergh, of New Jersey, who supported it by a sensible, straightforward speech, giving an account of the inception of the idea of the celebration, of its progress to the present time, and of the part which the Federal Government should take in it.

The preamble sets forth the preceding acts of Congress and of the Executive in relation to the Centennial, and the bill reads as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of $1,500,000, to complete the Centennial buildings and other preparations, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which shall be paid on the drafts of the president and treasurer of the Centennial board of finance, one-third immediately after the passage of this act, and the remainder in four equal monthly payments: Provided, That in the distribution of any moneys that may remain in the treasury of the Centennial board of finance after the payment of its debts, as provided for by the tenth section of the act of Congress, approved June 1, 1872, incorporating said Centennial board of finance, the appropriation hereinbefore made shall share equally with the holders of the said Centennial stock, and a like percentage thereon be paid into the United States Treasury as may be paid to the holders of the said stock: Provided also, That the Government of the United States shall not, under any circumstances, be liable for any debt or obligation of the United States Centennial commission or the Centennial board of finance, or any payment in addition to the foregoing sum."

Upon this proposition very many of the leading speakers and orators in both Houses have delivered addresses more or less elaborate. The humorists and wits of Congress have illustrated their peculiar talents, and the stoics and cynics have not lost their opportunity. The constitutional constructionists had full swing. Two amendments were adopted. Fifty speeches were made, some of them very eloquent, for and against. But the patriotism of the House prevailed, and the bill as amended was then adopted by the following vote, Tuesday, January 25, 1876:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Banning, Barnum, Bass, Blaine, Blair, Bliss, Bradley, William R. Brown, Burleigh, Cason, Caswell, Chapin, Chittenden, Clymer, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Egbert, Ellis, Farwell, Forney, Foster, Freeman, Frost, Frye, Garfield, Gause, Gibson, Hale, Hancock, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Abram S. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Hopkins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlburt, Hyman, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Kasson, Kelley, Ketchum, King, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lane, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Levy, Luttrell, Edmund W. M. Mackey, Levi A. Mackey, Magoon, Maish, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Meade, Miller, Money, Monroe, Morey, Morgan, Mutchler, Nash, Norton, O'Brien, Oliver, O'Neill, Page, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Piper, Plaisted, Platt, Powell, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Randall, Reagan, John Reilly, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Sobieski Ross, Sampson, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Sinnickson, Slemons, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Stowell, Swann, Tarbox, Teese, Thompson, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Van Vorhes, Waddell, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walls, Ward, Warren, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Wigginton, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, Wilshire, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, and Young—146.

NAYS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D.

Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cannon, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clark, of Kentucky, John B. Clark, Jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Collins, Conger, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durham, Eden, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Fort, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Haymond, Henderson, Goldsmith, Hoskins, House, Joy, Joyce, Kehr, Landers, Lewis, Mahon, Metcalf, New, Phelps, Potter, Rea, Rice, Saylor, Seales, E. Smith, Southanger, Stevenson, Tuck, Walker, Walling, Willard, James A. William H. Wilson, James Wilson, and, Ely, Robert, Packer, Parly, Starkweather, and Jeremiah N.

WILKINS—18.

The bill then went to the Senate, and was taken up Wednesday, February 9, 1876. Senator Morrill, of Maine, supported it by a strong speech. He showed a list of the nations that had been invited to the Exposition, numbering thirty-six—all having accepted the invitation, and had read the acceptance of Russia, Germany, and Turkey as specimens of the rest. A general debate then followed, during which Senator McCreery offered the following substitute:

"That it be recommended to the people of the United States to assemble, on the 4th of July next, in such numbers and manner as may be convenient, in their respective cities, towns, villages, neighborhoods, or wherever they may be, publicly to testify their joy at the one hundredth return of that auspicious day, by suitable eulogies, orations, and discourses, or by public prayer and such religious exercises and ceremonies as may be appropriate to the occasion and sanctioned by their own consciences."

He followed it with a speech, to which Senator Cameron replied in the following happy strain:

"Mr. President, I am inclined to think that the proposition of the Senator from Kentucky is a good one. I like very well the idea of the Senator from Kentucky, and I will join with him if he will make his proposition a separate bill. I shall be very sorry to see any amendment to this bill, but I like the proposition of the Senator from Kentucky and I will vote for it as a separate bill; for I cannot imagine anything better than to have a jollification in every village and in every town and in every city in this broad country on the coming Fourth of July. I will go down to Owensborough and see my friend in the blue-grass country, because I know he will treat me kindly and with great hospitality; he will treat me and everybody else who comes there with the hospitality which I well know will be extended by Philadelphia and Pennsylvania to every one who goes there. The celebration at Philadelphia is to last for months; but why can we not have a village celebration everywhere, and have the fiddle and have the old contradance—none of your new-fashioned affairs, but the old dance which was danced in the time of the Revolution? I would have all that revived. I would during the coming year revive everything that was jolly; and I would make everybody happy that I could make happy; and I am sure that the Senator from Kentucky would be the most delighted of all delighted people to see everybody around him happy. He is not opposed to this exhibition, I am sure, but he believes that the people ought to have another opportunity—all the people. He says that will cost nothing. Does it not cost a day's work lost by everybody who goes to have a country frolic? Let him look at home; every laborer who quits his workshop, every mechanic who leaves his place of business, every merchant who leaves his store to go and have a jollification loses a day's work surely, and the money he spends besides. Why should they not have an opportunity to do so if they desire it? I am for giving everybody that opportunity. But that does not argue that we shall not have a great international exhibition where everybody is coming, and where it is our duty to treat everybody well when he does come. It is no longer a question whether people will come; the invitations have gone out, and the host must be prepared to receive his guests, and receive them in such a way as will not only be creditable to him, but to those he invites to come and see him.

"I will only repeat, that after this bill is passed, as I trust it will be, if the Senator from Kentucky will bring up his proposition as a separate bill I will vote for it, and I will contribute out of my own purse to pay for part of it."

The substitute was rejected by a vote of 45 to 12—15 not voting.

Senator Edmunds made an ineffectual attempt to strike out the preamble of the bill.

Senator Eaton was violent against the appropriation, and in the course of his remarks said the whole debt of the American people was at this time $8,000,000,000, on which they had to pay an annual tax of $730,000,000 for interest and other expenses. He disclaimed the meanness and dishonor imputed to the opposers of the bill. He was for paying not one single dollar!

On Friday, February 11th, 1876, the subject was again called up, and the discussion proceeded. More than thirty Senators spoke upon the question—some of the speeches being very elaborate and eloquent. Senator Edmunds proposed a division, and that the vote be taken on the body of the bill. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the result stood 41 to 15, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Boutwell, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Spencer, Wallace, and Windom—41.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Cooper, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Howe, Kernan, Key, McCreery, Merrimon, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Whyte, and Withers—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bogy, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cockrell, Davis, English, Gordon, Johnston, Norwood, Saulsbury, Sherman, West, and Wright—16.

The preamble was then adopted by a vote of 37 to 16. So the bill was passed. This makes the contribution of the Government to the great celebration. The fine and glowing sentiments of the orators cannot be here reproduced. But the million and a half thus appropriated is after all the most eloquent speech of all. May the hopes of the nation not be disappointed!

REVIEW OF THE MONTH.

NATIONAL POLITICS.

...The situation remains unchanged, except in so far as the folly of the Confederate Democracy in and out of Congress continues to open the eyes of peaceful liberty-loving people. It is astonishing to observe how one crisis reproduces the features of another. In many respects the situation is the same as in 1856. Twenty years—1876—and we are again confronted by a pestilent political abstraction—State sovereignty, not State rights—being used as a potent instrumentality to mould and knit into re-cohering force a sectional South, led and directed by one party and one set of leaders. The real issue is still one of sovereignty; the real purpose is that of control. In some respects the present struggle for the success of the political abstraction which dominates the Democracy presents features more dangerous than did the contest of twenty years since and later. It is even more disintegrating in its essential characteristics. The doctrine of State sovereignty was then put forward as an excuse and argument for the defense of slavery, and as the ready cloak under which the subsequent slaveholders' rebellion was sustained and made respectable. The economic value as well as the political and administrative interests involved in the system of slavery were sufficient to lend great coherence to politico-social theories which are essentially destructive and disintegrative in character. Slavery has passed away. It will never return—in the form of personal chattelism at least. But the doctrine of State sovereignty and primary State allegiance has been glorified by the civil war. It has become the symbol and shibboleth of a "Lost Cause," to be historically sustained by its renewal as a political agency, and to be vindicated only through its successful conquest of a controlling vantage ground within the Union. The civil war made the Union a visible national entity; the would-be rehabilitated sectional South seeks to return it to the position of a confederation; of a compact between "independent" States, having, according to the Lamar theory, sovereign power only in its relations to foreign nations, delegated and limited powers derived, not from the whole PEOPLE, but from the corporate polity or ideal body or bodies known as the STATE or States within the Federation. The Confederate Democracy have uncovered their hands too soon. They are caught in their own snare.

...The bold course pursued by the Republican minority in the House has compelled them to put their real purpose foremost, and to-day we see that the old tactics, the ancient purposes, are being pursued and intended.

Mr. Tucker, of Virginia, pronounces for Calhounism; Mr. Hill declares the South, as a section, is here and to stay; and that its staying means a defiant determination to rule on that basis of sectionalism; Mr. Morrison, of Illinois, and Mr. Cox, of New York, show how subservient the Northern Democracy can again be to the behests of a sectional Democratic South; while Mr. Singleton, of Mississippi, and R. M. T. Hunter, of Virginia, frankly avow in and out of Congress their own and associates desire to obtain control of the national or "Federal" purse, (as they would prefer to call it,) to rebuild the fortunes of the South, by means of subsidized railroads, Mississippi levees, and the many thousand war claims whose payment would require hundreds and perhaps thousands of millions of dollars, in order that thereby the South may become again the dominating power in or out of the Union. This bold and daring policy has been pursued by successive steps up to the present standpoint, when its comprehensive character and defiant attitude can be seen very clearly by whose chooses to look through the mists of debate. There are several marked eras or steps in the progress of renewed Southern sectionalism. Foremost among these are the following:

The plans of murder, violence, and organized intimidation whereby the several Southern States have been dragged into a renewed alliance with the Democracy. This system was first successfully organized and carried out in the States wherein the whites were a majority; and wherein, if let alone, there was every probability of a considerable body making cause with the colored voters. These States are Tennessee, Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Texas, and, finally, Arkansas. The second step is seen in the outrages which were perpetrated in South Carolina, Alabama, Louisiana, and Mississippi—Florida may be left out for the present. In Alabama ballot-box stuffing supplemented intimidation. The periods in which this course was most thoroughly pursued were from 1868 to 1871, and again from the fall of 1873 to the close of 1875. The first was that of the Ku-Klux conspiracy; the second is that of the White League movement. There is an essential difference between the two—at least in the pretenses put forth for their existence. The first was an avowed terrorism designed to destroy the fruits of the war and put the South into the hands of its old leaders. The second is cloaked by pretenses of reform and good government. Essentially the spirit and purposes are identical. The difference in effect consists in the fact that there has been an intervening period of defamation and slander.

Public opinion sustained and demanded repressive legislation in 1871 against the Ku-Klux conspirators. The astute Confederate leaders saw that they could not achieve their purpose of making a sectional unit of the South unless they turned the tide of feeling on the Southern situation in their favor, instead of allowing it to continue against them. They succeeded in part in doing this: First, by the nomination of Horace Greeley in 1862, and a formal abandonment of civil inequality as based upon the existence of color, race, or former condition. This "tub to the whale" accomplished the second fact—which was the securing of Northern friends in the press and on the forum. A brevet Democracy was created. The so-called "Liberal" press worked up the crusade against Southern Republicans by wholesale defamation and the perversion of effect for cause, where the writers and defamers were in part honest. Under the reaction thus produced, which was powerfully aided (through the same unjudicial journalism) by the honest efforts of Republicans to get rid of and correct abuses which had grown up as a natural result of the war expansion and of the system of speculative operations that unsettles all values and removes from the minds of ambitious men the idea of productive toil and honest rendering of efforts before achieving substantial results.

...Under these two processes—organized intimidation and outrage at the South, combined with social ostracism—the Confederate Democracy have been enabled to break down Republicanism there, while the brevet Democracy of the North succeeded on their behalf in changing public opinion for a brief period; long enough, however, to enable the Democracy to carry several States, and a majority of the House of Representatives. The same processes have enabled the White Leaguers to pretend to be the representatives of the tax-payers vs. the tax-eaters; of the plundered vs. the plunderers: of intelligence and public virtue vs. public vice and ignorance.

It is an impossibility, however, for such masquerading to be maintained, and intoxicated with what they really deem their approaching triumph, the Confederate Democracy have shown their plans too fully. The election of Mr. Kerr as speaker was the significant opening of the campaign. Mr. Randall had been a soldier early in the civil war on the Union side. He had voted for all war supplies. He represented as vigorously as is possible for a Democrat the idea of national unity. Mr. Kerr had been, on the other hand, an avowed sympathizer with the South. He was among the ablest and most untiring of the Bourbon leaders North while in Congress, from 1865-'6 to 1872-'3. He believes in and defends a sectional South, and as a corollary is in full sympathy with the policy by which two or three Northern States are to be carried, and control of the National Government thereby obtained at the coming Presidential election. Wisdom would have dictated an avoidance of the second step or steps in the movement. These were the attempt to reopen the Louisiana question; the debate on amnesty; and lastly, that revival of Calhounism which attended on the Centennial discussion. But it was not to be. The North has been or is being aroused to the trouble before it, and will, if it does not already, clearly see the danger of trusting the Union into the hands of those who have no faith in its vital characteristics, and no desire to see it live unless they can control its forces and policy.

...The situation resolves itself into an imposing struggle for control. There is no attempt made to conceal the Democratic belief that their party will carry every one of the former slave States, (including West Virginia,) except South Carolina. To do so is to organize violence sufficiently extensive and vigorous enough as to insure that the 20,000 Republican majority in Louisiana, the 35,000 in Mississippi, the 10,000 in Alabama, the 9,000 in North Carolina, and the 3,000 or more in Florida shall be overcome. One method of doing this is to cripple the Administration in all the avenues looking to the enforcement of order, the working of the courts, and the execution of the laws—revenue, justice, or otherwise. Hence the cry for "reform and retrenchment." It can be readily seen that if the former slave States can be White Leagued into a united Democratic vote, that it will not take many Northern States to insure a Democratic and sectional triumph, and make the Confederate Democracy masters of the next Presidency, and the administration under it. The problem is a simple one. The sixteen States that were formerly slave territory give 138 votes in the electoral college. The twenty-two (including Colorado) which embrace the free Territory cast in all 231 electoral votes. Therefore, 185 votes are necessary for a choice. The Southern vote, if cast solid, would need 47 Northern votes to elect their Presidential ticket. These votes they expect to obtain from Indiana, (15,) New York, (35,) Connecticut, (6;) in all 56 votes. By leaving out South Carolina, (seven votes,) they would still have two majority. They also believe in their ability to lose Florida and Louisiana, (12 votes,) and to carry New Jersey and Oregon at least, in addition to those named. But the fact that needs remembrance is not only the possibility, but the probability, from this stand-point, of their ability to carry 131 electoral votes solid from the States formerly slave-holding and rebel, and in which the doctrines of sectionalism and State sovereignty have their chief abiding place. Should this be so, the campaign will turn on the three States of Indiana, New York, and Connecticut, whose fifty-six votes will decide whether or not there shall be a continuance of national progress and security, or a bitter and revolutionary reaction likely to end only in another outbreak. Perhaps this is the real design.

...The country, the intelligence of the masses, as well as the great interests that are to be affected by such a result are not likely to remain idle in the presence of an emergency which threatens to open such a era box of evils as this. The way is to arouse a combative and public opinion. For the first time in the South is sensitive to this the good-will of the loyal people tively brought to bear upon those struggling to create and build up der which free labor and equity in ghts demand. The stern indig- has before been evoked must be to repress the disorder and vio- lence that has so long existed, and threatens to break out again with renewed power.

STATE REPUBLICAN CONVENTIONS.

...On the 22d of February State conventions will be held at Indianapolis, (Ind.,) Chicago, (Ill.,) and Madison, (Wis.,) Delegates will be nominated for the National Convention, as well as declarations of principles, &c., made for party purpose. The probability now is that the Indiana delegation will be instructed to present Senator Morton's honored name as their choice for President. Illinois will offer the name of the gallant John A. Logan, while Wisconsin now seems likely to instruct for the Hon. James G. Blaine, the sagacious and able Republican leader in the House of Representatives. Indiana and Illinois Republicans are preparing for a very vigorous campaign.

EXECUTIVE AND DEPARTMENT DOINGS.

THE EXECUTIVE.

GENERAL GRANT'S RECEPTION.

The President's third evening reception will be held on Tuesday evening, February 22d, from 8 to 10 o'clock.

VICE CONSULS.

The President has recognized Augustus Norton as vice consul of Uruguay for New York, and William Lamb as vice consul of Sweden and Norway at Norfolk.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

STATEMENT OF THE PUBLIC DEBT.

The recapitulation of the statement of the public debt of the United States for the month of January, 1876, is as follows:

Debt bearing interest in coin:
Bonds at 6 per cent.....	$1,012,721,850 00
Bonds at 5 per cent.....	887,884,750 00
	$1,700,606,600 00

Debt bearing interest in lawful money:
Navy pension fund at 3 per cent,	$14,000,000 00
Debt on which interest has ceased since maturity.....	2,269,760 26

Debt bearing no interest:
Old demand and legal-tender
notes.....	$371,341,607 50
Certificates of deposit.....	40,600,000 00
Fractional currency.....	45,864,382 16
Coin certificates.....	34,601,400 00
	$492,410,389 66

Total debt.....	$2,216,266,749 92
-----------------	--------------------

Interest.....	$23,140,231 33
---------------	-----------------

Total debt, principal and interest.....	$2,244,426,981 25

Cash in Treasury:
Coin.....	$73,601,361 41
Currency.....	11,992,580 04
Special deposit held for redemption of certificates of deposit
as provided by law.....	40,600,000 00
	$126,193,941 45

Debt, less cash in the Treasury
February 1, 1876.....	$2,118,233,039 80

Debt, less cash in the Treasury
January 1, 1876.....	2,119,832,195 27

Decrease of debt during the past
month	$1,509,165 47

Decrease of debt since June 30, '75,	$10,455,686 59
--------------------------------------	-----------------

Bonds issued to the Pacific Railway Com- panies, interest payable in lawful money—Prin- cipal outstanding, $64,023,512.00; interest ac- crued and not yet paid, $323,117.36; interest paid by the United States, $30,141,513.06; in- terest repaid by transportation of mails, etc., $3,000,033.76; balance of interest paid by the United States, $23,472,479.30.

THE REDEMPTION AGENCY.

The average amount of national bank notes received for redemption and legal tenders returned is now about $1,000,000 a day. The bulk of the receipts are of notes fit for circu- lation. These are sent back to the banks of issue as soon as assorted. The clerks in the redemption bureau are now quite expert. The banks in large cities find it inconve- nient to handle the large accumulations of bank notes, which do not count in the de- posit reserves, and they like to exchange them at every opportunity for legal tenders, which are more desirable.

TREASURY DECISIONS.

The Treasury Department has decided that sirup valued at from thirty-five to sixty cents per gallon and of a quality fit for table use, whether manufactured from sugar or molasses, is embraced in the codified tariff schedule "G" as assimilating in general ap- pearance, quality, value, and the uses to which it is put, to sirup of sugar cane. Sirup of a lower grade, made from a resi- dum known to refiners as sugar-house mo- lasses, should be classified as assimilating molasses.

RATE OF DUTY ON GOODS WITHDRAWN.

Hereafter duties on goods withdrawn from warehouse, or for consumption under the privilege of the penal bond, previous to the date of a decision of the Treasury Depart- ment raising the rate of duty on similar goods, will be liquidated at the rate prescrib- ed by the Department in any decision exist- ing at the time of such withdrawal.

TRANSPORTATION OF MERCHANDISE THROUGH CANADA.

Article 19 of the Regulations of March 30, 1875, Treasury Department, which requires that goods shipped from one point to another within the United States, partly by land and partly by water, shall be accompanied by a special manifest which shall be retained by the master of the vessel or conductor of the car, and shall accompany the merchandise throughout its entire trip until its return to the United States, is modified as follows, as regards shipments which may be divided during transit for convenience of transportation:

When merchandise transported by water is to be transferred to cars or other vehicles for transportation by land, if the transfer to the car or vehicle be not immediately made, the customs official supervising such transfer will retain the manifest accompanying the goods, and check the cargo into a storehouse, to be under customs lock or seal.

At the time of the loading of the merchandise on the cars or other vehicle a special manifest will be prepared for each car or vehicle, and certified, and forwarded therewith; and the quantity of goods loaded upon each car or vehicle will be indorsed on the original manifest arriving with the vessel, so that such manifest will show that the whole shipment has been forwarded. The original manifest will accompany the last shipment of the goods to their destination.

At the port of final destination in the United States, the inspecting officer will check off the portions of the invoice as they arrive upon the copy of the manifest forwarded by mail from the port of original departure, and, on arrival of the last portion, such copy will be compared with the original manifest arriving with the merchandise.

These regulations have been concurred in by the Government of the Dominion of Canada.

ECONOMY IN TELEGRAM TOLLS.

Commissioner Pratt has issued a circular to collectors and other internal revenue officials prohibiting the use of the telegraph in communicating with the office when the mails will answer if letters are sent without any delay.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

CONFEDERATE WAR RECORDS.

The Secretary of War has written a letter to the Secretary of the Southern Historical Society at Richmond, regarding the existence of records of the late war, and to the incompleteness of the Confederate records in the War Department, as compared with those of the Federal Government, which is owing to the fact that the Department has only those of the former that were captured, and the Secretary is gratified to learn of the disposition of certain parties holding Confederate records to place them at the disposal of the Department for use in a publication of the records of the war. The Department is anxious to receive every official report, letter, telegram, or order emanating from either side during the late war, and has no thought of discriminating in favor of one section or against another in their publication.

ARTILLERY MANUAL.

General Order No. 3 from the Adjutant General's Office directs that the manual for serving and working heavy artillery, published in appendix No. 2 of the tenth edition of Lieutenant Colonel Roberts' "Hand-book of Artillery," be adopted for the United States army until a regular and more comprehensive system of instruction for siege and the sea-coast artillery has been authorized.

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

NAVAL NEWS.

The United States supply ship Supply is ordered from New York to proceed to Civita Vecchia, where she will receive on board the monument to be erected here to the memory of those in the naval service who fell in defense of the Union. Also such contributions as American artists wish to send to the Centennial exhibition. She will then proceed to Leghorn, to take on board contributions from artists in that section. On her way home she will touch at Tangier, in Morocco. No vessel will be sent to the north of Europe to receive articles for the exhibition. The Supply will probably reach Civita Vecchia in about thirty days, and will return to Philadelphia early in April.

COST OF STEAM WAR VESSELS.

In answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of January 5, the Secretary of the Navy has sent in a report of the chief of the bureau of construction, giving information with regard to the cost of building eight steam vessels of war authorized by the act of February 10, 1873. The statement is as follows: The Adams, 615 tons, $331,509.72; built by contract; nearly ready for sea. Enterprise, 615 tons, $306,205.01; built by contract; requiring outfits to be ready. Essex, 615 tons, $324,906.52; built by the Government; nearly completed. Alliance, 615 tons, $389,687.94; built by the Government; ready for the officers. Ranger, 541 tons, $294,126.69; built by contract; requiring outfits. Huron, 541 tons, $307,024.54; same as Ranger; in commission. Alert, 541 tons, $307,139.13; same as Ranger; in commission. Trenton, 2,343 tons, $801,499.84; hull built by the Government; receiving machinery. Total tons, 6,426. Total cost, $3,062,101.39.

HERE IT IS! JUST WHAT YOU WANT!

IT HAS BEEN ADOPTED BY THE PENSION BUREAU, SECOND AUDITOR, THIRD AUDITOR, AND SECOND COMPTROLLER, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

AN ALPHABETICAL LIST

OF THE

Battles of the War of the Rebellion, WITH DATES,

COMPILED FROM THE

OFFICIAL RECORDS

OF THE OFFICES OF THE

Adjutant-General and the Surgeon-General, U. S. A.

Giving the number killed, wounded, and missing in each of the important battles; Union troops engaged; names of the Generals killed and wounded in both armies. Also the total number of enlistments, number discharged, number wounded, number missing, number of deaths, number killed in battle, number of graves. Number of troops in the Mexican War, 1846-1848, number killed and wounded, number died of wounds. An Alphabetical list of the Revolutionary battles, with dates; also the number killed and wounded in each battle. With a complete Synopsis of

THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS.

Price 50 Cents. Liberal reduction will be made to Dealers.

Address

N. A. STRAIT,

Box 460, WASHINGTON, D. C.

REFERENCES.—Hon. H. M. Atkinson, Commissioner of Pensions; Hon. H. B. Strait, M. C. 2d Miss. Dist.; Samuel Ramsey, Esq., Chief Clerk Surgeon-General's Office, U. S. A.; Darling & Soule, Publishers and Proprietors of the U. S. Record and Gazette, Washington, D. C.

SAVE MONEY

By sending $4.75 for any $4.00 Magazine and THE WEEKLY TRIBUNE, (regular price $6.00,) or $5.75 for the Magazine and THE SEMI-WEEKLY TRIBUNE, (regular price $3.00.) Address

THE TRIBUNE, New York.

$77

A WEEK guaranteed to Male and Female Agents in their locality. Costs NOTHING to try it. Particulars free. P. O. VICKERY & CO., Augusta Maine.

$5 TO $20 P

AGENTS WA

All classes of working people, and old, make more money at own localities, during their spare time, than at anything else, a merit that will pay handsomely for work. Full particulars, terms, use your address at once. Don't lose time. Don't look for work or until you have learned what we

G. STINSON & C

UNITED STATES OFFICIAL POSTAL GUIDE.

Revised and Published Quarterly by Authority of the Post-Office
Department.

NO. 4 FOR OCTOBER NOW READY,

CONTAINING

TWO ALPHABETICAL LISTS of all the Post Offices in the United States.
LISTS OF MONEY ORDER and Letter Carrier Offices.
FULL DIRECTIONS about Money Orders and Registered Letters.
RATES of Foreign and Domestic Postage.
HOURS OF ARRIVAL AND CLOSING of Mails in all the Principal Cities.
DISTANCES by shortest Mail Routes between the Post-Office Department during mailing without postage on Third Class required by those who use the Mails.

For sale, 50 cents; for sale at the Post-Office, or on application

WILLIAMSON AND COMPANY,
Boston.

ALBANY, New York.

1876.

Vol. 6.

PREMIUMS.

Vol. 6.

THE REPUBLIC MAGAZINE,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Terms - - - - - $2 Per Year, in Advance.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A

CLUB OF TEN SUBSCRIBERS FOR THE CURRENT YEAR AND $20,

The publishers will forward, free of cost and postage,

A Complete Set—Three Volumes—of the Republic,

HANDSOMELY BOUND, WITH INDEX.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A

CLUB OF FIFTEEN SUBSCRIBERS AND $30,

A Complete Set—First Four Volumes—of the Republic.

TO THE PERSON SENDING

THE LARGEST CLUB IN ANY MONTH,

BEING MORE THAN FIFTEEN,

A COMPLETE SET, INCLUDING THE FIFTH VOLUME,

Which closes with the December number of 1875, all neatly bound, with index, and free of cost or postage.

These propositions afford an opportunity to acquire, with little effort, the best text book extant on the science of government.

Specimen copies and prospectus will, on request, be sent free to those desiring to raise clubs.

ADDRESS

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

TA
3
K 9

SINGLE COPIES, 25 CENTS.

THE REPUBLIC:

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

DEVOTED TO

THE DISSEMINATION OF POLITICAL INFORMATION.

Vol. V.—No. 1.

JULY, 1875.

Whole No. 29.

Contents:

	PAGE
The Centennial Celebration.....	1
Historical Incidents in the Organization of the U. S. Government.....	8
Republican Record	13
The Mutual Relation of Gold, Greenbacks and Silver.....	15
Vaticanism in Germany.....	17
Free Labor in the South.....	29
Duties vs. Rights	32
Forward! By Companies	33
The Duties of Young Men.....	35
Ohio Republican Nominations.....	37
The Union Forever.....	38
Preserve the Purity of the Ballot-Box.....	39
Fidelity to Duty as Republicans.....	40
How Did the South Accept the Situation?.....	41
The Whisky Frauds.....	43
National Unity—Political and Religious.....	45
The Elections—Primary Measures.....	46
Secession vs. Reconstruction	47
The Catholic Church and the Public Schools.....	48
Mr. Bristow's Views on the War and its Results.....	49
California Republican Platform.....	51
Condition of the United States Treasury.....	52
Mr. Lincoln: Honesty the Best Policy.....	53
Great but not Ambitious—President Grant.....	54
The South, and How Its Wants may be Supplied.....	55
Review of the Month.....	56
Executive and Department Doings.....	61

PUBLISHED BY

THE REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

$2 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

PROSPECTUS.

Vol. 5.

THE REPUBLIC,

A Political Science Monthly Magazine.

The fifth volume of THE REPUBLIC will be commenced in July, 1875.

As in the past the highest ambition of its publishers will be to render THE REPUBLIC a reliable medium of information on all subjects connected with Republican government—local, State, and municipal. Washington, in his Farewell Address, justly claimed that "proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened." The object of THE REPUBLIC writers is solely to educate the people—and especially our young men who are now stepping upon the stage of public life—in the principles of political science, but to impress upon every individual conscience the sacred obligation of fidelity to the public interests. It was Benjamin Franklin who uttered the great truth that "nothing can be politically right that is morally wrong," and he, too, pronounced the equally logical axiom that "virtue is the soul of the politic." It will be the duty and aim of THE REPUBLIC to inculcate these and similar lessons, to commend integrity and fidelity, to sustain patriotic statesmen in all laudable efforts, to establish and perpetuate the principles of good government; and in this way to contribute to the advancement of the physical, intellectual, and moral condition of the people, as well as to the national prosperity, virtue and power.

THE REPUBLIC will continue to chronicle faithfully the current action of the Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Departments of the Government, to comment impartially upon the acts of public men, and to do what may be done within its sphere to inform the people and improve the Government.

The fifth volume of THE REPUBLIC will be printed from a new and handsome type. Important improvements will be introduced in the variety, arrangement, and make-up of the magazine. Under an enlarged corps of the ablest writers a broader field of political review and discussion of national questions will be adopted; and it is believed that the new volume will be a decided improvement in every way upon its predecessors.

TERMS:

THE REPUBLIC is a magazine of sixty-four pages, published monthly, at $2 a year, or 24 copies for $10. The postage, in all cases, after January 1, 1875, will be paid by the publishers. A few copies of the back volumes may yet be obtained, either bound or in numbers. Remittances should be made by postal money-order or registered letter.

Address,

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY, Washington, D. C.

Ugnaud
11-3-27

THE REPUBLIC.

Devoted to the Dissemination of Political Information.

VOL. V.

WASHINGTON, D. C., JULY, 1875.

No. 1.

THE CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

The year 1775 was a thrilling period in America. The causes which had long been in operation were hastening the crisis of separation from the mother country. The cup of the colonies was a cup of bitterness, and was well nigh full. The air itself was becoming rife with the spirit of resistance, omens of the coming struggle were thick on every hand.

In January of that year the British Parliament proposed new measures of oppression. This was the eve of the first tumults of the Revolution, proclaiming it nigh even at the doors.

On April 19th, the first patriot blood was shed at Lexington and Concord. The war was opened, and then followed in rapid succession the events at Ticonderoga, Crown Point, Whitehall, Philadelphia, Charlottetown, Boston and Quebec.

On May 10th Ethan Allen took the fort at Ticonderoga "in the name of the great Jehovah and the Continental Congress." Seth Warner captured Crown Point, Arnold seized a sloop of war lying at St. Johns, and a body of Connecticut volunteers took possession of the pass at Whitehall. Thus the lakes were cleared and the first trophies of the conflict secured.

On the same day Congress met at Philadelphia, and soon after received the good tidings. Bills of credit to the amount of three millions of dollars were issued to defray the expenses of the war, and the faith of the united colonies was pledged for their redemption.

May 30th to 31st, the people of Mecklenburg met at Charlottetown and sent forth to Congress and the world their ever memorable and heroic resolutions.

June 15th, George Washington was appointed commander-in-chief of the colonial armies.

June 17th was fought the battle of Breed's Hill, when the Americans, for want of ammunition, were compelled to retire after having inflicted severe loss on some of the best troops of the British army. When Washington arrived to take command in person he found a state of confusion and want of discipline which it was his first labor to correct.

Congress now issued a solemn manifesto which was published from the pulpits and in orders to the colonial forces. "We are now reduced," they say, "to the choice of unconditional submission to the tyranny of irritated ministers or resistance by force. The latter is our choice. We have counted the cost of this contest, and find nothing so dreadful as voluntary slavery. Honor, justice, and humanity forbid us tamely to surrender that freedom which we received from our gallant ancestors, and which our innocent posterity have a right to receive from us. Our cause is just, our union is perfect, our internal resources are great, and if necessary, foreign assistance is undoubtedly attainable. With hearts fortified by these animating reflections, we must, solemnly, before God and the world, declare that, exerting the utmost energy of those powers which our beneficent Creator hath graciously bestowed on us, the arms we have been compelled by our enemies to assume, we will in defiance of every hazard, with unabating firmness and perseverance, employ for the preservation of our liberties, being with one mind resolved to die freemen rather than to live slaves."

The cry was now heard along the whole coast. Blood had flowed. No words can measure the feelings of the time. Messengers rode swiftly through the land proclaiming at every cross-road, in every church, in every hamlet and town,—“The war has begun!” and the universal answer was, “To arms—liberty or death!”

During this session of Congress, the first line of posts for the communication of intelligence throughout the country was established, and Benjamin Franklin was appointed Post Master General, with power to choose deputies for the conveyance of the mail from Falmouth, Maine, to Savannah, Georgia.

The remnant of the year was occupied with the movements of an expedition into Canada, which, unfortunately, resulted with disaster to the American arms.

The last hope of reconciliation rested in the “Olive Branch,” a petition of Congress to the King, transmitted by Governor Penn, a descendant of the great William. But his first dispatches home after the assembling of Parliament, extinguished every light. The King, in his opening speech, charged the Americans with hostility and rebellion, and the ambition of empire, and recommended the most vigorous measures to subdue them. The eloquence of the illustrious Burke could not stay the tide of madness, though a reluctant vote of the Peers to examine the American agent was obtained. He frankly told them that the colonies would submit to the royal authority of the realm, but not its right of taxation; that the prevailing wish in America still was restoration of friendship; but rejection of the present offer would be an insuperable bar to reconciliation. About the last of December, Parliament answered these representations by an act prohibiting all trade and commerce with the colonies, and authorizing the capture of all American vessels and their cargoes, the spoils thus taken to be vested in the captors, and the crews to be treated, not as prisoners, but as slaves. They then formed treaties with German princes, hiring 17,000 men to be employed against the colonists, and in addition to these, sent 25,000 English troops. These operations filled up the measure of England's wrongs toward America, and sealed the final alienation of her colonies.

A hundred years have rolled away, and the great Republic has given to the world a century of unparalleled history. It would be long to trace the mighty story of the Nation's fortunes. Standing, as we do to-day, with a public domain washed by the great oceans and stretching from the polar regions downward to the southern gulfs, with more than forty millions of people, engaged in the marvellous industries and pursuits of a civilization the most unique, enlightened, and aggressive the world has ever seen—with monuments of magnificence covering the land—with a system of government, of education, and of institutions which transcends the wildest dreams of prophet or of sage, in the olden times—and with a heritage of wealth, of science, of art, and of invention, alike impossible to despotism or to superstition—the product only of intelligent and virtuous liberty regulated by law and guarded by the popular vigilance and honor—we may well look back over the work of our fathers and over the legitimate results that have followed from it, with a just pride and a devout gratitude to that Almighty providence which has preserved and guided the nation up to her present pre-eminence.

It is literally in this spirit that the Centennial Anniversary of the stirring events which ushered in the life of the Republic a hundred years ago, have been observed by the children of the men who then wrought out for us and for the world the noble fabric of a free constitutional representative polity—a government so grandly defined by the martyred President as “of the people, by the people, and for the people.”

Said John Adams, in a letter to his wife, after the Declaration:

“I am apt to believe it will be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great Anniversary Festival. It ought to be commemmorated as the day of deliverance by solemn acts of devotion to Almighty God. It ought to be solemnized with pomp, shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires, and illuminations from one end of the Continent to the other, from this time forward forever. You will think me transported with enthusiasm; but I am not. I am well aware of the toil and blood and treasure it will cost us to maintain this Declaration and support and defend the States; yet, through all the gloom, I can see the rays of light and glory. I can see that the end is worth more than all the means, and that posterity will triumph, although you and I may rue it!"

Glorious old man! Could he stand to-day on the battle-fields of the Republic—the hallowed spots of American valor and endurance—could he greet the glad throngs of that favored posterity in whose favor his prophetic eye saw through the dark night of the Revolution, such a morning dawn of prosperity, happiness and honor, he would behold in the spectacle around him all that his highest aspirations ever pictured and now already more than realized.

The celebrations at Lexington and Concord—Ticonderoga and Charlotte, have already passed. The next one—Bunker Hill, will be worthy of the place where Washington began his course of national glory, and where the eloquence of Webster inaugurated the monument which crowns the summit of Bunker Hill. The journals of the day have recited, in all their glowing details, the grateful ardor of the people, as gathering by the shrines of the fathers, and treading over the hallowed places made sacred by their deeds of daring; they have, with a sublime joy, recalled the matchless legends of the Past. With civic and martial pageantry, the ringing of bells and the booming of cannon; with music and song, and all manner of blazonry, and the eloquence of orators, heroes and statesmen; and in acts of devotion and of worship to the Almighty, they have striven to express their sense of those events which broke in the storm of the Revolution, and brought to the birth the greatest Republic in the annals of the world.

But in the celebration of Mecklenburg there was an allusion by the principal speaker, the Hon. John Kerr, of North Carolina, which falls like a dark shadow over this day of rejoicing and of triumph. In the course of his address he was pleased to say as follows:

"Influences as we believe unpropitious to the prevalence of the political doctrines of our great fathers, have recently prevailed in our country. Malignant power has for a season been permitted to destroy our prosperity, mortify our pride, and deprive us of our heritage of civil liberty. Great efforts have been made to break and crush the spirit of our people because it would not with sufficient pliancy bend to the degrading behest of tyranny, and we are taunted as 'rebels' for our devotion to the holiest cause that

Tongue or sword of metal Ever lost or gained.

* * "There are recollections connected with the evil fortunes of our glorious sunny South which assuredly in due time will illustrate the truth of what I now say. Defeated in our efforts to maintain inviolate the principles of government inherited from our fathers, these principles, precious in themselves, do now, and will forever hereafter, stand indissolubly associated in our hearts with the sacred memory of our sons who fought and bled and died in their defence. Though our armies were vastly outnumbered by those of our foe, and by this disparity we were finally forced to yield, our gallant soldiery won so many fields of glory as to give them a just claim to the honors of a triumph. And now, while they sleep in graves bedewed with the tears of their mothers, their wives, their sisters, and daughters, and which are annually re-visited and re-adorned by fresh tokens of unfailing love, they are exercising a constant ennobling influence on their surviving countrymen. The glory of our ancestors is thus combined with that of their sons, and the light they jointly give to guide us in the future is as animating in its effect as it is brilliant in its rays."

Language like this sounds to us like a strange and ominous discord in the national anthem which celebrates the Past; nor is it more consistent with the subsequent sentiments of mutual fraternity and good will which the oration breathes. Nor should we be disposed, at the present time, to refer to the recent war of the Rebellion, or to the great parties which took sides in our national struggle—the one to preserve Liberty and Union, the other to destroy both forever, on this Continent—were we not constrained to it, not only by the prevalence of opinions like those above expressed, but also now, more than ever, by the imperative demands of justice.

It can never be forgotten, even amid the general gladness and enthusiasm over a century of the national life, that without any just or adequate cause of provocation, a number of the States of this Union, after a fair and constitutional election, in which they took part, and solely to preserve the institution of human bondage, then peculiar to themselves, did, by proclamation and force of arms, attempt to destroy the government founded by our fathers, and to sweep away from the earth the Union of these States! It was a terrible mistake and a terrible crime! It brought upon its authors a fearful retribution, not in the form of merited penalties of violated law, but rather in those consequences established in the constitution of nature by a higher than human authority, and which has found expression in the words of one who declared, "He that taketh the sword shall perish by the sword." That is the retribution which has fallen on the South, covering with confusion and shame the would-be murderers of the Nation, reducing their land to the lowest degree of impoverishment, and filling it with mourning and desolation.

To talk of such an enterprise as "the holiest cause" that was "ever lost or gained" evinces a moral obliquity which precludes the possibility of any just judgment upon the causes, events and results of our late civil war. To say that "malignant power" has for a season been permitted to astray their prosperity, mortify their pride and deprive them of their heritage of civil liberty," is not only a stupendous falsehood of history but an insane and violent mockery of the beneficence and magnanimity which has been extended towards them by the great political party which has ruled the fortunes of the republic for the last fifteen years, and which has preserved from utter destruction and annihilation all that is dear to the American citizen, in the memories, the institutions and the prospects of our common country. Had not the Republican party been organized and brought into its dominant position, just at the very juncture, when the cause of universal human liberty, was in the extremity of peril, had not this powerful organization then obtained control of the affairs of the general government and stood like a mighty rock in the raging sea of secession and rebellion, had not its ramparts been thrown up solid and immovable as the granite of the everlasting hills, resisting at every point the floodtide of bitterness and violence that had broken out on every hand and rolling back the surges of discontent, of perfidy, of treason and bloody strife, who can predict the course of things that must have inevitably ensued?

Some things we do know. The Republican party saved the Union and the Government, founded by the fathers, and with them saved the cause of human freedom, and delivered out of the dreadful prison-house of bondage four millions of people who for two hundred and fifty years had been crying to the God of heaven for redemption! The Republican party carried the country safely through this terrific tempest of civil strife, which every day for long weary years threatened to engulf the nation in one general and overwhelming destruction. The Republican party acted upon convictions as eternal as the principles of truth, of humanity and of heaven, and with a sublime faith in the destiny of the Republic, and in the overruling Providence of God bent its whole energy to the working out of the difficult problem before it, amid the taunts of all the enemies of free government and the machinations of all those who looked for the downfall of free institutions among mankind. The sympathies of all the monarchists of the world were against them. The sordid passions of all those who sought their own fortunes on the ruin of the industries, the trade, the commerce, the life, the example and the very existence of the great American Republic were arrayed in the most formidable combinations for their overthrow. Yet knowing the right and desiring to maintain it they went forward, in the face of all opposition, calumny and misrepresentation, sparing no cost of effort, treasure or blood in the decisive encounter. Disaster could not dismay them, delay could not discourage them. But steady as the needle to the pole, and true to the cause of country and of mankind they fought the good fight. They furnished to the world a roll of rulers, statesmen, soldiers and heroes, as illustrious as any in the records of the nations, and they produced the grandest chapter yet written in the history of the Republic. But there is something even more surprising and admirable than all this, something unexampled in the clemency with which they have treated their prostrate foe. While disorder and anarchy, bitterness, outrage, secret assassination and midnight murder, with all the appliances of obstruction to the laws and the forms and processes of civilized society have reigned throughout the South, inflaming the spirit of the bad, thwarting the purposes of the good, and covering with shame and reproach the very name of liberty, the Republican party has pursued its patient course and held up its lofty aim amid almost unsurmountable difficulties, and when abandoned and betrayed by men whom it had placed in power, and who used that power to baffle their most sacred and beneficent designs. Deprived of their chosen leader, the great and honest Lincoln, by the hand of a foul assassin, they had then for four years to endure the treacherous obstinacy and blindness of his successor, whom all true patriots came to distrust, to despise and loathe. Then at last, after the unspeakable mischief he had wrought, they replaced him with the great soldier, who had led the union armies to final victory, and who, in the hour of his magnificent triumph, was melted with thoughts only of love and fraternity and peace; and of the great statesman, who, proving himself equal to every emergency, in the cabinet as well as in the field, is still administering the affairs of the government with transcendent ability, firmness and moderation. Our President is no Cæsar, but he has proved himself worthy to be ranked, as he will be in all coming time, with Washington and Lincoln—a mighty trio—the father, the preserver, the custodian of the Republic.

Meantime the Republican party has been carrying forward all the vast interests of a people thus preserved and protected by its officers. It has been laboring in the reconstruction of the insurgent States, in developing an adequate system of internal improvement, fostering education and all industrial pursuits, opening routes of travel, trade and commerce, establishing a more perfect system for the diffusion of intelligence, struggling with the enormous burden of debt thrown upon the country by the war of the rebellion, seeking wiser and safer methods for the great finances of the nation, studying to remove the incubus of taxation, hunting out and punishing the powerful perpetrators of fraud and corruption, holding out to the public gaze and the popular condemnation every ascertained violator of the common integrity and propriety of American citizenship, and endeavoring by all means to promote the honor, integrity, and welfare of all the people and of every section. No political party has been more profuse in generosity toward the great philanthropies and charities which have sought its aid or more, mindful of the sufferings of those communities that have been, during the last few years, so unusually overtaken by the calamities of fire and famine and flood. If mistakes have sometimes been made, as it is but fair to acknowledge, they have been, it has only needed the voice of popular warning to call back this party of moral ideas, principles and convictions to its true line and measure of duty, and to render it more careful of its high trust and solemn responsibility. It has had, of course, to encounter, as every such great and successful party must, the obliquity of an irresponsible, venal and unprincipled public press, and to face all those reverses, which in the mysteries of the unfolding of a nation's life, will sometimes strike at its benefactors and for a season, cover with clouds the very defenders of its existence.

Such a reverse as this, during the last autumn, overshadowed, temporarily, as we trust, the hopes and prospects of this great party of humanity and free government and civil rights. By a series of financial disasters the country had been thrown into one wide ferment of discontent. In a popular government like ours, a general want of public confidence, momentary obstruction and stagnation of business are sure to drive large portions of the people into a blind and foolish desire of change, with no due consideration of the consequences. It is perhaps well for the country, and for the Republican party that if the change must come it should fall upon the nation precisely as it did. Before the time arrives when the voice of the people must decide upon the commission of the federal power to the next administration, there will be disclosed a state of facts that will surely bring back the estranged popular heart to the support of the only political organization capable of guiding and controlling the affairs of a nation of forty millions through the vicissitudes of the future as it has done through the troubled and giant history of the past.

There are at least two questions now before the nation which must determine this issue, that of civil rights and that of religious freedom. Before these questions, the financial problem and all other material interests will be forced to give way. These two questions lie at the foundation of our political existence and prosperity as a people and these are the two questions on which the conflict has even now begun. The Republican party is pledged to the doctrine of equal civil rights for all the people in all their relations to municipal, State, or general government. It is also pledged against any invasion from any quarter of the rights of conscience in the matter of religion, and more than all against the interference of any religious sect or denomination, with the glorious system of education handed down to us from the fathers. Whoever attempts to overthrow the public schools of America, where its youth are to be instructed, trained and fitted for the privileges, duties and responsibilities of citizenship, in after life will be met everywhere by the stern, uncompromizing resistance in solid phalanx of the Republican party. And on these points we are confident that the people will sustain them. They will once again rally around the old banners that led them through so many struggles, and preserved for the jubilation of our centennial anniversaries the whole undivided heritage of the American Republic, its territory, its government, its history, its people, its fame, its prowess and its honor among the nations of the earth!

Alas, how melancholy to-day would have been the spectacle, had secession and revolt been successful against the bulwarks and defences of the great Republican party in the time of trial. All and more than all that was so powerfully described in the American Senate more than forty years ago by the great Expounder of the constitution would now be realized. The mighty heart could not bear the vision of a land torn and rent with dissention and civil strife, States broken, the organic charter rent in twain like the veil of the temple, the laws trampled under foot, discord, confusion and dishonor reigning through that political firmament where once this constellation of sister States shone with so fair a radiance, the cynosure of all eyes, and the brightest hope of the human race! Yet the hideous spectacle would have been at this very hour hanging before the sight of mankind, had not the Republican party, raised up in the mysteries of Providence, been present and active to defeat all this fearful and appalling consummation!

The people of America cannot and will not forget those services, sacrifices and labors, while the months are rolling forward through many stirring scenes of popular excitement and glad enthusiasm, and bringing us to the dawn of the anniversary of the nation's birth one hundred years ago. And while we contemplate with proud and patriotic hearts the magnificence of the commemoration, let the thoughtful, candid and intelligent citizen of the Republic weigh well the issues of the immediate future and reflect upon the means and agencies by which the public welfare is to be promoted. This country, great as it is, has yet scarcely set out upon its career. A hundred years in the life of a great people is only a period of childhood. Who then shall conserve after the days of festivity and congratulation are over the vast interests of our ever increasing millions, who shall transmit from generation to generation, unimpaired, the birthright we have received from our fathers? Who shall be entrusted with this vast commission, the men who, with bloody hands have just been clutching at the nation's throat, and the men who now sympathize with and applaud them, or those rather who stood in the councils of the country and under the deadly hail of battle, resolved to make good the declaration of their fathers by all that is precious in life and fortune and sacred honor?

Looking beyond the joyful eminence on which we stand to-day, we may perceive the gathering signals of the coming storm. There is a political party in this land to-day, desperate in fortunes, damaged in reputation, swollen by recent partial success, without principle, without a policy even, and only reactionary and obstructive in all its instincts, tendencies and operations, which means, if possible, to seize upon the powers of the Government and turn the fruits of patriotic triumphs to ashes for its own emolument. There is an ecclesiastical organization in this land to-day, which designs to subjugate the people of this country to its yoke of superstition and is both secretly and openly preparing for the last great crisis of its long and baleful existence. And these two elements are already allied by affinities not to be mistaken. This is the adversary which the Republican party must prepare to meet. There is and can be no other organization able to cope with him. And when that contest comes, true to all traditions and all aspirations of freedom, the Republican party will rise up and stand firmly for the cause of God and human nature. Then prouder and grander than all the achievements of the past, will be the triumphs and the trophies of this great party.

“God send us one such sight as this,
And send me there to see—”

JANNEY'S EXPEDITION.—The following dispatch was received at the Indian Bureau, June 15. It is dated at a point about twenty miles from the place where gold was reported as being abundant. The dispatch indicates that no gold has been found thus far by the expedition. It is dated “Permanent Camp, June 9, 1875, on branch of Beaver creek, western base of Black Hills, latitude 43° 50', longitude 14° 10', via Fort Laramie, Washington Territory, June 9:

“The greater area of the Black Hills is in Dakota. The formations in the vicinity are of a recent geological age, and are not auriferous. Will cross through the Hills and examine the gold fields reported to exist near Harney's Peak.

“WALTER P. JANNEY,
Black Hills Geological Exploration.”

SECRETARY BRISTOW.—Some of the growlers, astounded at the activity of the Treasury Department, and chagrined at the success of the movements made against the internal revenue and customs frauds by Secretary Bristow, are now disposed to assert that law has been violated, or that the proceedings taken are so “high-handed” as to threaten greater evils than those they attempt to remedy. The wealth and influence of the whisky and smuggler rings, East and West, will reiterate this cry. It is a good one for their purposes. But it may be as well to consider some facts personal to Secretary Bristow himself, before thoughtlessly running to a conclusion that he may have done evil that good might come.

No lawyer in the United States has probably a more extended and thorough knowledge of our revenue system, internal and external, than Mr. Bristow. We refer distinctly to its working legal aspects, and as to the extent, &c., of the powers of the Government under the Constitution and laws. The reason for this is very simple. Mr. Bristow was for several years District Attorney in that portion of Kentucky which produces annually the largest amount of whisky. He was credited with being the most successful law officer in connection with revenue cases. When the Department of Justice was to be organized, Mr. Bristow was made the first Solicitor General. That functionary has charge of all revenue laws and cases arising under them, whether internal or customs. The Attorney General is the law adviser; the Solicitor General is the prosecutor in all such cases. He prepares and manages them. Mr. Bristow organized this office. It was probably this fact, combined with his high character for integrity and firmness, which induced the President to call him to the Treasury. It is not probable that a man so trained has in any essential particular overstepped the plain letter of the law in the important action recently taken.

REPUBLICANISM means safety to the nation, and true prosperity to its citizens. Democracy means the reverse. Who can hesitate in what direction their personal influence should be cast?

HISTORICAL INCIDENTS IN THE ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT.

Surely no subject can be more interesting to students of history, politics and literature, than that of the Parliaments of the world. The classic literature of the nations abounds in quotations from speeches delivered in the Senates of the ancient Republics, especially those of Sparta and Rome, whose Senates were composed of the brightest intellects and rarest talent the world has ever known, rendering it difficult for critics to produce equals to Lycurgus and Romulus as lawgivers; or to Solon and Cicero as orators. The House of Representatives associated with the Sparta Senate, was known as the Ephori, that of Rome as the Tribune, the Senators being chosen for life, and composed mainly, if not wholly of lawyers, and the latter by the people, for a term of years, from their own body.

The English Parliament is copied in a great degree, from the ancient systems referred to, the higher branch, the House of Lords, being composed of the opulent nobility, with life leases to their offices and hereditary train, while the lower House, the House of Commons, is elected from the people.

But it is not our purpose to write a philippic on ancient or modern Senates, but rather to cast some light upon our own, showing the origin of the system upon which it is elected, and the reasons governing the Constitution framers for providing that U. S. Senators should be elected by representatives of the people rather than by the people—by the States, instead of by the electors of the States.

The Government of the United States is composed of three branches, viz., the Executive, Legislative and Judicial.

The President is elected for four years, is Commander of the Army and Navy, has the exclusive power of nominating public officers, but the concurrence of the Senate is necessary to their appointment; he has the power of negotiating treaties, but the consent of two-thirds of the Senators to their ratification is essential, and he has a qualified negative in legislation.

The House of Representatives is elected for two years; has the exclusive right of originating impeachments; has the sole power of originating revenue laws, subject to the authority of the Senate to amend them as in other cases, and a co-equal power with the Senate in ordinary legislation, and has the power of electing the President in case no choice is made by the electors, when the members vote by States, each State having one vote.

The Senate is elected for six years; has the exclusive power of trying impeachments, except in case of the impeachment of the President, when the Chief Justice is associated with them; has co-equal power with the House of Representatives in legislation, except in the origination of revenue bills; has a concurrent power with the President in the appointment of public officers, and the consent of two-thirds of the members present is necessary to the validity of a treaty.

The third branch of our Government is the Judiciary, or Supreme Court, which is composed of nine members, appointed by the President and Senate, and holding their office during good behavior.

So much by way of premise, and to present the relation which the U. S. Senate bears to the General Government.

The permanency of the Senate, and the various powers, Executive, Legislative and Judicial, vested in that body, renders it the pre-eminent power of the Constitution. The union of the Senate with the Executive in the treaty-making power, is calculated to give that body an important influence, if not the principal control, over our foreign relations. It is the property of every permanent body to carry its powers to their utmost extent. Why was the Senate made the depository of so large a portion of the powers delegated to the General Government? Why was it put in the power of that body to control the operations of both the Executive and Legislative Departments? Statesmen of the day, when the Constitution was framed, tell us that it was because the members of the Senate represented the States, were chosen by them, and were responsible to them, and would be bound by this tie to defend the sovereignty and independence of the States against any plan of policy that would impair them, or, in case they should fail in their efforts to do this, would be bound to apprise the States they represented of the danger with which they are threatened. This may seem like an acknowledgment of the doctrine of "State Rights." So it is; but let us see what estimate the framers of the Constitution had of State Rights. In Madison Papers, vol. 1, p. 89, we find the following:

"The Confederation was an abridgment of sovereignty. It has ever been my opinion that Congress ought to have complete sovereignty in all but the mere municipal law of such State. * * * An excess of the spirit of liberty which made the particular States show a jealousy of all power not in their own hands; and this jealousy has led them to exercise a right of judging in the last resort of the measures recommended by Congress, and of acting according to their own opinions of their propriety or necessity; a diffidence in Congress of their own powers, by which they have been timid and indecisive in their resolutions, constantly making concessions to the States until they have scarcely left themselves a shadow of power."

Thus wrote Madison, and he made a report to Congress for its consideration in the following words:

"It is understood and truly declared, in case any of the Confederate States shall refuse or neglect to abide by the determination of Congress, and to observe all the articles of Confederation as required by the 13th Article, the said United States, in Congress assembled, are fully authorized to employ the force of the United States, as well by sea as by land, to compel such State or States to fulfil their federal engagements."—See Madison Papers, vol. 1, p. 89.

Again he speaks of "States inspired with ambition and nourishing ideas of separation and independence," language as pertinent in this age as in that in which he gave it utterance.

Hamilton in an essay in the "Constitutionalist," on the Fourth of July, 1782, closed as follows:

"There is something noble and magnificent in the prospective of a great Federal Republic, closely linked in the pursuit of a common interest, tranquil and prosperous at home, respected abroad; but there is something proportionately diminutive and contemptible in the prospect of a number of petty States, with the appearance only of union, jarring, jealous and perverse, without any determined action, fluctuating and unhappy at home, weak and insignificant by their dissensions in the eyes of other nations. Happy America, if those to whom thou hast entrusted the guardianship of thy infancy, know how to provide for thy future repose, but miserable and undone if their negligence or ignorance permits the spirit of discord to erect her banner on the ruins of thy tranquility."

There were many who held views antagonistic to those of Madison and Hamilton, but happily they were not in the Constitutional Convention. Many were devoted to their States and did not desire a parent government. R. B. Lee, grandfather of Robert E. Lee, was one of these. April 5th, 1790, he wrote a letter in which he said: "The Southern States are too weak at present to stand by themselves, and a General Government will certainly be advantageous to us, as it produces no other effect than protection from hostilities and uniform commercial regulations. And when we shall retain our natural degree of population, I flatter myself that we shall have the power to do ourselves justice, with dissolving the bond which binds us together; it is better to put up with those little inconveniences than to run the hazard of greater calamities."—See Federalist.

Madison and Hamilton talk like modern Republicans, Lee like unto a modern Democrat. Truly his political ideas were inherited by his grandson.

Thus much to show what the fathers of the Constitution designed should be the relation of the States to the General Government. It may appear as a digression, but is not, as the writer's design is, to exhibit the precise relation of the Senate to the Government and the Government to the Senate, as intended by those statesmen who evolved the idea and relationship.

In the Convention, four plans or methods of electing U. S. Senators were proposed, viz.: 1st, by the first branch of the National Legislature, which meant the House of Rep-representatives; 2nd, by the National Executive; 3d, by the people of the several or respective States; 4th, by the people at large. Geary, of Massachusetts, stood nearly alone in advocacy of the latter plan.

Mr. Dickinson, of Delaware, argued that the sense of the States would be better collected through their Governments than immediately from the people at large. Secondly, because he wished the Senate to consist of the most distinguished characters, distinguished for their rank in life and their weight of property and business, as strong a likeness to the British House of Lords as possible.—Madison Papers, p. 166.

The proposition of Read, of Pennsylvania, that the Senators should be appointed by the Executive Magistrate, from a number of persons nominated by the individual Legislatures, was not seconded nor supported.

While the subject of electing U. S. Senators was under discussion, Mr. Cabot, of Massachusetts, said:

"I consider the Democratic branch of the National Government, the branch chosen immediately by the people, as intended to be a check on the Federal branch, which latter is not an immediate representation of the people of America, and is not chosen by them, but is a representation of the sovereignty of the individual States, and its members delegated by the several State Legislatures, and if the State Legislatures are suffered to regulate conclusively the elections of the Democratic branch, they may, by such an interference, first weaken, and at last destroy—not check—they may at first diminish and finally annihilate that control of the General Government which the people ought always to have through their immediate representatives.

In the Congress, not only the States are represented in the Senate, but to balance the power, and to give the people a suitable and efficient check upon them, the federal representatives are introduced into Congress. The Legislatures of the several State are the constituents of the Senate, and the people are the constituents of the representatives. Those two branches, therefore, have different constituents, and are designed as mutual checks upon each other."—Elliot's Debates, vol. 1, p. 47.

Mr. Ames, of Massachusetts, observed that "An objection was made against the Constitution, because the Senators are to be chosen for six years. It has been said that they will be too far removed from the control of the people, and that to keep them in proper dependence they should be chosen annually. It is necessary to premise that no argument against the new plan has made a deeper impression than this, that it will produce a consolidation of the States. This is an effort which all good men will deprecate. For, it is obvious, that, if the State powers are to be destroyed, the representation is too small. The trust, in that case would be too great to be confided in so few persons. The objects of legislation would be so multiplied and complicated that the Government would be unwieldy and impracticable. The State governments are essential parts of the system, and the defence of the Article is drawn from its tendency to their preservation. The Senators represent the Sovereignty of the States, in the other house individuals are represented. The Senate may not originate bills. It need not be said that they are principally to direct the affairs of war and treaties. They are in the quality of ambassadors of the States and it will not be denied that some permanency in their office is necessary to a discharge of their duty. Now, if they are chosen yearly how could they perform their trust? If they would be brought by that means, more immediately under the influence of the people, then they will represent the legislatures less and become the representatives of individuals. This belongs to the other house. The absurdity of this, and its repugnancy to the federal principles of the Constitution, will appear more fully, by supposing that they are chosen by the people at large. If there is any force in the objection to this Article, this would be proper. But whom, in that case would they represent? Not legislatures of the States, but the people. This would totally obliterate the federal features of the Constitution. What would become of the State Governments, and on whom would devolve the duty of defending them against the encroachments of the federal Government? A consolidation of the States would ensue, which it is conceded, would subvert the new Constitution, and against which this new Article so much condemned, is our best security. Too much provision cannot be made against a consolidation. The State Governments represent the wishes and feelings and local interests of the people. They are the safeguard and ornament of the Constitution—they will protract the period of our liberties—afford a shelter against the abuse of power, and will be the natural avenger of our violated rights. A very effectual check upon the power of the Senate is provided. A third part is to retire from office every two years. By this means while the Senators are seated for six years, they are admonished of their responsibility to their State legislatures. If one-third new members are introduced, who feel the sentiment of their States, they will awe that third whose term will be near expiring. This Article seems to be an excellence of the Constitution and affords just grounds to believe that it will be in practice, as in theory, a federal Republic."—Elliot's Debates, January 21, 1787, vol. 1, p. 64.

We again turn to Alexander Hamilton, who, as a writer upon Constitutional questions, as indeed upon all others in which he indulged, was the most lucid of his day.

"It is unnecessary to dilate on the appointment of Senators by the State Legislatures. Among the various modes which might have been devised for constituting this branch of the government, that which has been proposed by the convention is probably the most congenial with the public opinion. It is recommended by the double advantage of favoring a select appointment, and of giving to the State governments such an agency in the formation of the Federal Government, as must secure the authority of the former, and may form a convenient link between the two systems." Federalist. p. 467.

To the argument that a Senate appointed not immediately by the people, and for the term of six years, would gradually acquire a dangerous pre-eminence in the government, and finally transform it into a tyrannical aristocracy, Hamilton said:

"Before such a revolution can be effected, the Senate, it is to be observed, must in the first place, corrupt itself; must next corrupt the State legislatures; must then corrupt the House of Representatives; and must finally corrupt the people at large. It is evident that the Senate must first be corrupted before it can attempt the establishment of tyranny. Without corrupting the legislatures, it cannot prosecute the attempt, because the periodical change of members would otherwise regenerate the whole body. Without exerting the means of corruption with equal success on the House of Representatives, the opposition of that co-equal branch of the government, would inevitably defeat the attempt; and without corrupting the people themselves, a succession of new representatives would speedily restore all things to their pristine order. Is there any man who can seriously persuade himself that the proposed Senate can, by any possible means within the compass of human address, arrive at the object of a lawless ambition, through all these obstructions?" Federalist. p. 481.

The careful reader of this article cannot now fail in noticing that some of the speakers quoted dwelt with considerable force and feeling upon the fear and apprehension lest the establishment of a Federal government should swallow up the States. But every student of the early history of our Government—those who have carefully perused the debates in the Constitutional Convention, or Congress, which adopted, or rather framed, the Constitution, will also remember that in those days the representatives of New York, Virginia, North Carolina, Massachusetts, and one or two other States, were infatuated with a love of, and devotion to the area comprising the limits of their States. They had but just emerged from a severe struggle for independence, and the heroism and unselfishness of their neighbors and friends was still vivid in and to their minds, each being impressed with the belief that his people had done more than any other to secure the blessings fought for. It will be remembered that the people of those days were wont to call their States "Commonwealths," after the manner of Cromwell. This spirit was commendable. The federal system had not been tried, only suggested, and representatives of States disliked the idea of consolidating in one government, of blending in one azure field the glories of the whole people, and it was only because the first law of nature, self-protection, made a union of all the States necessary and imperative, that they considered the proposition at all. The States were then, as now, unequal in size, some larger than others, and while the smaller did not strive to encroach upon their neighbors and extend their area, the larger ones were averse to surrendering any of their territory even for the making of new States.

Thus it will be seen the policy of electing United States Senators by the representatives of States rather than by the people of the several States, was founded upon the idea that the lustre of each State would thereby be permitted to shimmer in the galaxy proportionate to its revolutionary record.

Since then, however, the framers of the Constitution have passed away, have gone to that house whose doors never outward swing;

our nation has grown from thirteen to thirty-seven States (we might almost say thirty-eight, inasmuch as authority has been given Colorado to prepare for entrance); the lines of some of the original States have been changed; other wars have ensued in which a people and territory, unknown to the Fathers of the Republic, have shed imperishable honor on a common country, and while State pride still holds its seat in the heart of every citizen, whether he sprang from the sterile soil of the most sterile State, or first saw the light in the most favored State in the Union, still the heart of every patriot throbs with livelier emotion as he places his hand upon it and says "I am an American citizen," than in contemplating his fortune in being born in any particular State or portion of our country.

The original law defining the manner of electing U. S. Senators, i. e., by the Representatives of the States in and by their several Legislatures, did not fix the time, nor was the law sufficiently mandatory in its provisions, as was evidenced in Indiana and New Jersey, where Senators were doubtfully elected. The consequence was, Congress, July 25th, 1866, passed the following law which now governs all the States.

"The Legislature of each State, which shall be chosen next preceding the expiration of the term of which any Senator was elected to represent said State in Congress, shall, on the second Tuesday after the meeting, and on organization thereof, proceed to elect a Senator in Congress, in the place of such Senator going out of office, in the following manner: Each house shall openly, by a viva voce of each member present, name one person for Senator in Congress from said State, and the name of the person so voted for, who shall have a majority of the whole number of votes cast in each house, shall be entered on the journal of each house, by the clerk or Secretary thereof; but if either house shall fail to give such majority to any person on said day, that fact shall be entered on the journal. At 12 o'clock, M., of the day following that on which proceedings are required to take place, as aforesaid, the members of the two houses shall convene in joint assembly, and the journal of each house shall then be read, and if the same person shall have received a majority of all the votes in each house, such person shall be declared elected Senator, to represent said State in the Congress of the United States; but if the same person shall not have received a majority of the votes in each house, or if either house shall have failed to take proceedings as required by this act, the joint assembly shall then proceed to choose, by a viva voce vote of each member present, a person for the purposes aforesaid, and the person having a majority of all the votes of the said joint assembly, a majority of all the members elected to both houses being present and voting, shall be declared duly elected; and in case no person shall receive such majority on the first day, the joint assembly shall meet at 12 o'clock M., of each succeeding day, during the session of the legislature, and take at least one vote until a Senator shall be elected."

Some of the States are agitating the propriety and feasibility of electing their U. S. Senators by a vote of the people. This can only be done by or through an amendment to the National Constitution, which question will probably soon be agitated in and by Congress, though that body is commendably cautious when changes in the organic provisions of the Constitution are proposed.

THE past is the only index that we have of the possibilities of the future. If we have known a man through a long series of years, and can bear testimony to his honesty, his fidelity, his ability, we are not afraid to trust him in the future. Our confidence has a firm basis, and though it may be shaken, the chances are that it will not; that the character which has proven true in the part, will continue true to the end. This is the teaching of human experience, and holds good with parties as it does with men. The Republican party has stood the test of fourteen years of severe trial. Its fidelity has been tried. Its honesty proven. Its patriotism has been established beyond question. It has brought the nation through danger greater than any that ever confronted a people. Its whole record from 1861 to 1875, is is open, like a book, to be read and judged by all men. It has had its faults, but they have been the unintentional faults of a friend, and not the designs of an enemy. Judged by the standard of practical experience, it has proven a worthy public servant, devoted to those vital principles which are necessary to a healthy public growth and the preservation of free institutions.

REPUBLICAN RECORD.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Paper, one of the most ultra of the Democratic journals in the country speaks of the Republican record in this wise:—

“The Republican record during these fourteen years it is useless for us to discuss. It has certainly been a brilliant one. The party has carried on its shoulders a weight of responsibility never before assumed by a political party in a free republic. It has been followed by a majority of the people of the North with almost religious ardor, and the negroes of the South bless it as their almost divine emancipator.

It is impossible for an American, be he Northern or Southern, to contemplate the history of this great political organization without a feeling of admiration, however much he may oppose the principles, and however bitterly he may suffer in consequence of its success.”

This is noble testimony; and given unsolicited by a political opponent, is all the more trustworthy and emphatic. The record is of the Republican party, the party whose ascendancy has been jeopardized by the apathy and neglect of Republicans. Such a record illustrates the admirable fitness of the party to deal with the questions which bear so deeply on the country's welfare. When the Democratic party was put aside as untrustworthy and disloyal, the country was about to enter a conflict designed to rend asunder the Union of the fathers, and introduce the legality of slavery under a new Constitution. The world had grown indignant at the bare idea of human bondage; and all Christendom joined in the cry for its suppression. In the Great Republic of the West, the people of the free States had caught the spirit of freedom, and were prepared to check the progress of slavery by limiting its area. It was actually moribund,—on the eve of expiring by reason of its wasteful expensiveness, confined as it was. For slave labor could never be skilled; and the loss of fertility in the soil, the direct result of slave culture, could not be renewed for lack of means. The discovery of the costliness of unpaid labor because unskilled, urged the slave owners to seek new territory to exhaust, and to build up the social system of slavery in localities devoted to liberty. The Republican party opposed the scheme of the slave owners; and the slave owners having appealed to arms, lost their cause, while the slave obtained his freedom under Republican principles.

How slavery, while it existed, affected the social and intellectual condition of the South, is to be seen in its history. It demanded the prevalence of a common sentiment in its favor, at any hazard. Fears of servile insurrection were never absent. The pulpit was forced to uphold the doctrine of human bondage, and say that the right to enslave the black man was of Divine sanction. A clergyman might have the zeal of an apostle, the faith of a Wesley, and the eloquence of a Whitfield; but unless he made slavery as prominent as the salvation of the soul, he lost caste. The bench and the bar were subjected to the same ordeal, and the fame of the judge and the advocate depended upon the devotion he showed to the beauties of human bondage. Collegiate institutions were founded in the interest of slavery. The most learned professors were those who could most deeply impress the students with the absolute commission of the white to enslave the black by the Power which rules on high. In consequence, young men left those abodes of learning, if ignorant of all else, thoroughly enamored of slavery. Literary men had to demonstrate their subservience to the institution. If an author possessed the talents of a Dickens, or Longfellow, or Sidney Herbert, he had to make pleasant allusions to the fettered negro, or invent some new argument in the same direction, when his reputation was established. Editors of newspapers had to bow to the reigning sentiment; and the most audacious attacks on freedom were received with the greatest favor. Art did not flourish in such a community, unless it represented the happy darkey dancing a breakdown by the light of the moon. Science of course sought another clime. In planters' mansions, and the homes of the well to do, in hotels and stores, the blessings of slavery was the sole topic on which all agreed. A stranger entering a city or town attracted attention until his opinions were known; and if they were opposed to the general views he was soon made to understand the situation, and depart with a whole skin. In a word, slavery hung like a pall over the South, shutting out the light of day; dwarfing the popular mind; and barring out the spirit of progress and enterprise: and it did so as long as it lasted. And what is the consequence? The South has no great authors, or artists, or statesmen, except those who became resplendent by claiming that human bondage is of divine permission.

The wisest men in the South now see the mistake. But they come too slowly into line to partake of the advantages of freedom. The Republican party after preserving the Union set itself diligently to work to rehabilitate and restore. The Democratic party cannot do this. It is too deeply implicated in the worst phases of the past. Moreover, it is obsolete, when tested with the needs of the hour. Wherever it has secured a majority, there the community has retrograded, and it may be said that its principles not being applicable to current affairs, are the embodiment of retrogression. The principles of the Republican party are suited to the condition of the country. They are to be regarded as the national expression in all that relates to popular aspiration and achievement in statesmanship. The Republican party, which has created a NATION by the union of the States, desires to complete a unity of its work. The Democratic party has intervened and complicated, what might otherwise have been easier of accomplishment. The Democratic party is in the way and must be put aside till the work of the Republican party is done. That work, guided by the wisdom of experience, consists in restoring the South to its true position in the Union; in keeping open the way for the education of all its citizens; in upholding the rights of all and their free exercise; in assisting in the creation of a sound public opinion, which shall be tolerant of difference and protect the weak from the tyranny of the strong; and in laboring for the return of a free, happy and contented people to share in the common prosperity and glory of the republic.

NOT A FAILURE.—Democracy claims that the reconstruction policy of the Republican party has proven a failure. Where is the evidence of the failure? Not in the States themselves, for they have been restored to all their original rights and privileges in the Union. If the administrations of State governments has fallen short of what it should have been, the fault lies with the people of the States, not with the policy of reconstruction. The plan of reconstruction was a wise one, and if the people had shown equal wisdom in conducting their affairs, prosperity, such as the Southern States never before enjoyed, would have been its share to-day.

If unworthy men have in some instances crept into power, the responsibility for this is with those who permitted them to be elected. If the intelligent citizen had laid aside his prejudices and united with those who desired good government, the plan of reconstruction would to-day be regarded as among the foremost triumphs of Republican legislation.

That it has fully succeeded in spite of the the opposition which it has encountered, speaks volumes in its favor. A few years hence, when common sense takes the place of passion and prejudice, the people of the South, irrespective of party, will unite in praising the reconstruction policy, which Democracy now condemns.

SECRETARY BRISTOW is still after those who have been practicing fraud upon the revenues of the country. He is determined to break up the rascally practice which puts large fortunes in the pockets of the dishonest few at the expense of the honest dealers. This is right, for no honest merchant can compete with those rascals who sell goods on which no tax has been paid. Mr. Bristow has infused a share of his own fearless spirit into the outside branches of his Department. Treasury agents everywhere are becoming more active in, and watchful of, the public interest. Under this effective policy we may reasonably expect a large increase of revenue during the coming year.

THE MUTUAL RELATION,

AS TO PRICE OF GOLD, GREENBACKS, SILVER BULLION AND SILVER COIN.

Gold Price of Silver Bullion.—Owing to the large demand for gold, and the corresponding diminution in the demand for silver, consequent upon the change by certain continental governments—Germany and the Scandinavian Governments of Sweden, Norway and Denmark—from a silver standard for their money of account, to a gold standard; and to the hoarding of gold by the Bank of France preparatory to its resumption of specie payments; and also to the large production of silver from the Comstock and other mines of our silver-bearing territories, the price of silver, relatively to gold, has been for several years gradually sinking, until it has reached in the London market, according to a late cable dispatch, the low point of 55½ pence sterling per standard British ounce, (the equivalent quotation in New York market, for fine bars, being from 1.21 to 1.22 per ounce,) the lowest point of value, relatively to gold, on record in the history of man.

The price indicates that the ratio of the value of gold to silver, is as 17 to 1; that is, that the value of gold in the markets of the world is now seventeen times that of silver of equal weight and like fineness. It follows, as may readily be shown, that the price in United States gold, of the quantity of bullion contained in a dollar of our new fraction silver is 88.0 cents; or, conversely, that what may be termed the silver-bullion price of gold—the silver unit being 25 grammes 9-10 fine—is 113.6

Go'd Price of Silver Coin.—The gold price of the United States silver coin, (fractional) which is used as currency—containing to the dollar, when of legal weight and fineness, 25 grammes 9-10 fine—was quoted on the same day, (June 5, 1875) in the New York market, at from 92 to 95 cents, showing the silver coin price of gold to have been from 108.7 to 105.3; the difference depending on the quantity of pure metal contained, as indicated by the date of the mintage and by the degree of the abrasion of the coin.

Gold Price of Greenbacks.—The greenback price of gold is now quoted, in the language of the market, at 117, showing the gold price of greenbacks to be 85½.

Greenback Price of Silver Bullion and of Silver Coin.—It follows that, at the present time, the greenback price of silver bullion—25 grammes 9-10 fine to the dollar—is 103 (more exactly, 102.9); the greenback price of silver coin, of the same weight and fineness, ranging from 107.6 for older and abraded coins, to 111.1 for coins of the full legal weight.

Exportation of Silver Coin for Melting or Recoinage.—Should the price of greenbacks, relatively to that of silver bullion, advance three per cent., silver coin, even at its minimum or bullion value, would prove more profitable for circulation as money than for use in the arts, or for exportation for coinage abroad.

Exportation of Silver Coin for Use as Money Elsewhere.—The fractional silver coin of the United States is demanded, in limited quantities, by certain South American and other countries, chiefly on this side of the Atlantic, for circulation; which fact accounts in part for the higher price which our fractional silver coin commands in the market compared with bullion. To what extent this fact will operate—when a liberal supply of coin shall be issued and thrown upon the market—to retain as now, the price of coin beyond that of bullion, is, as yet, uncertain.

Effect on the Price of Silver Coin, of the Demand for its use at Home as Subsidiary Coinage.—Gold and greenbacks are each legal tender of payment in all amounts, but United States fractional silver coin is legal tender of payment only in limited amounts, not exceeding five dollars in any one payment. The effect of this provision of law is to give to silver coin a value superior to its intrinsic value as bullion, and to protect it against remelting at home, and against exportation for melting or recoinage abroad.

When greenbacks rule in the market at a lower point than that of silver coin, such coin will not be in demand at home for use as money for general circulation, except at the extreme Southwest and on the Pacific Slope. When, however, greenbacks command in the market a higher price than silver coin, the subsidiary silver coin will be in demand as money, but will command a price above that of its value as bullion.

When greenbacks advance from $85\frac{1}{2}$, their existing rate, to 83, the existing bullion rate (corresponding to a premium on gold of 13.6)—assuming that the relative values of gold and silver remain unchanged—silver coin will necessarily cease to be profitably exported as bullion for melting or recoinage, even though—by virtue of the provision of the law which gives it the character of a legal tender in limited amounts—it should have no value above that of the bullion contained.

When greenbacks advance to 92 (corresponding to a premium on gold of 8 7-10)—the existing prices of silver coin remaining unchanged—the less perfect and less desirable silver coins will circulate, as currency, side by side with the fractional paper currency.

When greenbacks advance to 95 cents (corresponding to a premium on gold of 5 3-10)—the existing prices of silver coin remaining unchanged—the new and more perfect silver coins will circulate, as currency, side by side with our fractional paper currency.

When greenbacks advance beyond this rate, nearer to a par with gold, silver coin will supercede greenbacks, and their associated fractional paper currency. The intrinsic bullion value of new silver coins, of legal weight and fineness, is now 88 cents to the dollar, but their value as coin in the market is 95 cents. The issuing and placing on the market of the new silver coinage in considerable quantities, will tend to lower somewhat the price in the market of these new coins, but will not reduce the price to the bullion standard. The gold price of greenbacks in the market, therefore, must advance considerably beyond 88 cents, the present value of the bullion contained in silver coins of legal weight and fineness—that is, the greenback price of gold must fall considerably below 113 6-10, in order to secure the free and general circulation of such coins.

The higher price of our fractional silver coin, as compared with silver bullion, of the same weight and fineness, is due, in part, to the fact that, in limited amounts (not exceeding $5 in any one payment), it is like gold a legal tender of payment in the United States, and, in part, to a limited demand for its use as money in the payment of balances for customs purposes, and for the settlement of fractional amounts in the payment of interest on our bonded debt; also, for use in general circulation on the Pacific slope of the United States and in Texas and certain other portions of the southwest, where gold is the sole standard, paper currency not being recognized in trade; and, also, in certain South American and other countries.

TABULAR STATEMENT.

In the following tabular statement, the dollar of silver bullion, and the dollar of silver coin, are each assumed to be 25 grammes of silver of the fineness of 9-10—the same with regard to quantity and fineness, as that of the legal silver currency (fractional) of the United States :

PRICES — June 5, 1875.

The gold price of $100 in greenbacks, is	$85.50
The gold price of $100 in silver bullion, is ...	$38.01
The gold price of $100 in silver coin, is from $32 to 95
Consequently —
The greenback price of $100 in gold, is	$117.0
The silver bullion price of $100 in gold, is	$113.6
The silver coin price of $100 in gold, is { from	$108.7
to	$105.3
Also —
The greenback price of $100 in silver bullion, is	$102.9
Greenback price of $100 in silver coin, { from	$107 6
to	$111.1
Also —
The silver bullion price of $100 in sil- { from	$104.5
ver coin, is.....	to $108.0
The silver bul'n price of $100. in greenbacks, is	$ 97.2

EVERY Centennial celebration should deepen the public gratitude for the great party which saved the nation from destruction. If our forefathers are held in grateful remembrance for their wisdom, and for their fidelity to the spirit of liberty, the patriot who in these latter days should equal wisdom and fidelity should not be forgotten in the general rejoicing. The Republican party may justly claim for itself a share of the gratitude bestowed upon those who fought the first battles for popular freedom.

VATICANISM IN GERMANY.

The present attitude of Germany toward Rome, is not one of hostility to the Roman Catholic Church as a spiritual power, but as a temporal one, assuming authority above the state. Except, so far as it comes in conflict with the church doctrine of infallibility, it is, in no sense of the term, a religious movement; it is simply the German Empire asserting its supremacy in matters of state over what has been called by the defenders of the Romish Church, the Apostolic Empire.

The question to be settled by the German Empire, is one of allegiance to its laws. The Romish Church, both in theory and practice, holds its first allegiance to the Apostolic Empire, with the Pope as its supreme head; its second allegiance, to the German Empire with King William as its ruler. The adherents of this church number many millions; its teachings have become part of their faith, and thus Germany has within its borders citizens who claim its protection and the full benefit of its laws, and yet hold an allegiance to a foreign potentate whose orders they are bound to obey, even though obedience brings them into direct antagonism with the State whose citizens they claim to be.

This anomaly was one which early attracted, not only the attention of Bismarck, but other distinguished statesmen, some of whom were earnest Catholics devoted to the church and yet sensible of their duty to the Empire. They saw that two powers claiming equal or superior jurisdiction, could not exist without the final submission of one to the other. It would eventually come about either through bloody conflict or peaceful measures. The questions with these statesmen were simply, shall Germany be ruled by Rome or by herself? Shall the laws of the Empire be weaker than the words of the Pope? On these points there could be no compromise; it must be one or the other—the supremacy of the German Empire, or the supremacy of the Apostolic Empire.

The breaking out of the war with France postponed the settlement of a question which had long been pending. The close of the war found the German Empire more thoroughly nationalized than at the opening. Its several parts were more united; its borders were enlarged; its people were more devoted to the interest and advancement of the Empire; in a word it had grown in the midst of a destructive war.

France no longer dreaded as an ally of Rome; Italy far from friendly to the Papal doctrine of infallibility; Austria too intent on keeping peace with a nation flushed with victory, and guarded by the best equipped standing army in all Europe, gave to Germany the opportunity which she had sought for years, to say to the Roman Catholic Church, "as a spiritual power you can continue in Germany, but as a temporal power, claiming equal authority with the laws of the Empire, you hereby receive notice to vacate the State or obey its laws. Henceforth the German Empire assumes full control of its citizens, and the Apostolic Empire must conform to the new order of things."

By its recent acts toward the Romish Church, Germany simply proclaims its independence and asserts its sovereignty. Henceforth the German citizen, whether he be a bishop, a priest, or a layman, can appeal for protection to the State against the rigors or injustice of ecclesiastical law. If the Pope of Rome, seeks through the bishops to fine or imprison a Catholic citizen, or to deprive him of his honors or his property, or to molest him in any way, the punishment can only be inflicted by first obtaining the consent of the punished, and even then it must not violate the laws of the realm. This, it will be noted, destroys the temporal power of the church, and only the temporal power, for it leaves untouched the faith which recognizes the Pope as the spiritual head of the church. Therefore, the movement is political and not character, more defensive and though the Romish Church the world may endeavor to construe it into a movement of religious persecution, the unprejudiced observer will see in it nothing but the exercise of an inherent right on the part of a nation to compel all church or other organizations to submit to its laws, and to enjoy their forms of worship on the basis of equality, each entitled to respect and protection, and all required to conform to the laws of the only temporal sovereign, the State.

VATICANISM.

To better understand the causes which have led to the suppression of the temporal power of the Roman Church, or to the subordination of the Apostolic Empire or Roman Hierarchy to the civil laws of the German Empire, we should first understand the character of Vaticanism, the power from which the Hierarchy derives its authority, and on which it bases its claims to make its own laws and to annul those of the State which in any way interfere with its prerogatives.

What is Vaticanism? To give a detailed answer that would cover all its claims and set forth all its pretensions to the exercise of temporal authority, would fill a volume. The briefest reply is the one most comprehensive. Vaticanism is Papal authority in its organized form, or, the will of the Vatican as expressed through canonical and ecclesiastical laws; a system arrogating to itself the divine right of governing, both in politics and religion, the whole domain of Roman Catholic Christendom. The Vatican decrees are held to be the supreme command of God, through the Pope, to his faithful subjects, to be obeyed by them on all questions of faith and morals, of civil and religious duty. Therefore, whatever the Vatican decrees becomes a law, imperative, absolute, to be obeyed and not gainsaid by all within the province of the Romish Church.

What is the nature of its power? How far can Vaticanism go in the government of a people? These are questions on which Catholics are divided, and the solution of which is continually affecting the unity of the Church. The majority of the adherents of the Romish Church believe in the universal or supreme authority of Vaticanism, are loyal to its decrees, and subordinate their allegiance to their country, to their higher allegiance to the Pope, recognizing in him the only sovereign who derives his authority from God, who through such devotion has the right to command their allegiance.

Other Catholics, no less sincere in their devotion to the church than the ones mentioned, hold to the doctrine that Vaticanism has no relation to the State, except through the force of example; that its province is spiritual, and not in any sense political, and that the Vatican decrees are simply directory in their character, confined to church discipline, and have no binding force over a citizen in his relations to the State in which he claims citizenship.

Here we have a division of opinion in a church that recognizes a common head. Both sides of the question admit the spiritual authority of the Pope as the head of the church, both agree in all matters of discipline, but a line divides them on a question of temporal power, the one claiming him to be above the princes of the earth, the other asserting that he has no political power. In Germany this division is marked, and has led to a serious split in the church. The result has been, the dissenters from the accepted meaning and scope of Vaticanism, have banded together, and under the name of Old Catholics are daily gaining converts to what they deem the only true doctrine on which Catholicism can stand. But as these dissenters, or Old Catholics, are largely in the minority, we must accept the assumption of Vaticanism, of its right to supremacy over civil law as the vital point at issue between the German Government and the Church of Rome.

Gladstone, in speaking of these Vatican decrees, says: "In the presence of these decrees it is no longer possible for English Catholics to pay to their sovereign a full and undivided allegiance." And again. "The Vatican decrees do, in the strictest sense, establish for the Pope a supreme command over loyalty and civil duty. And again he says with great clearness:

“It is, in my opinion, an entire mistake to suppose that theories like those of which Rome is the centre, are not operative on the thoughts and actions of men. An army of teachers, the largest and most compact in the world, is ever sedulously at work to bring them into practice. Within our time they have most powerfully, as well as most injuriously, altered the spirit and feeling of the Roman Church at large; and it will be strange indeed if, having done so much in the last half century, they shall effect nothing in the next.”

THE TEMPORAL POWER OF ROME.

It is with this power of Vaticanism—teaching to German subjects the fatal doctrine of Papal infallibility; dividing them in their loyalty to the Empire; disturbing them in their civil relations to the realm; and sowing seeds of political and religious dissensions—that Bismarck has to deal. It has been said that Bismarck is the power behind the throne, but this is true only in the sense of his representative character. In this Bismarck represents the spirit of progressive Germany; the soul of the new Empire that is shaking off the chains of the past, and rising up like a youthful giant to enjoy its liberties, enforce its rights, and become the leader among the nations of Europe. It is the irrepressible spirit of the German people who long to see the Empire supreme within its own borders, that impels Bismarck, as its best and most courageous representative to lead the movement, not against the Catholic faith, but against the temporal power which Vaticanism or Papal authority has exercised over the civil law for more than half a century.

The movement is not a sudden one. It is the result of deliberate judgment formed from the experience of years. Leading German statesmen for the past twenty years have seen in the assumption of the Romish Hierarchy, a danger which would eventually, unless checked, destroy the integrity of the State. They saw, with alarm, a church which had been invited to enjoy the freedom accorded by Prussian laws to other churches, abusing the spirit of toleration, and transforming what was granted as a privilege into a divine right above the laws of the realm and responsible only to Rome. They beheld a church which had come to them humbled, shattered, destitute, glad to accept their hospitality and the protection of their liberal laws, grow, not in sympathy with the nation which sheltered it, but in sympathy with a foreign potentate, whose commands taught its followers not gratitude and loyalty to Prussia, but supreme loyalty to Rome.

From 1821 to 1837, the Roman Church quietly acquiesced in those civil laws which Prussia had established for her own safety. In fact, one of the conditions on which the Romish Church was re-established in Prussia, shortly after 1815, was a willing submission to Prussian laws. This was cheerfully given, and the Church and State lived in harmony until about 1844, when the secret intrigues of the Order of Jesuits began to bear fruits in the shape of new demands and aggressions on the part of the church. The Constitution of 1850 gave the Papal Hierarchy its first strong hold upon the State. Under the plausible plea of “the freedom of the Church,” it secured certain rights which became the levers to overturn restrictions placed upon it. The power of supervision, still retained by Prussia in her Constitution of 1850, soon became a dead letter, so far as it applied to the Romish Hierarchy, and the church as it grew in strength increased in arrogance, until its pretensions of authority and open defiance of law, made it absolutely necessary for the State to surrender its authority to Rome, or at once take such steps as would subordinate the Romish Church to the same laws which governed other religious organizations in the realm.

The measures necessary to restrict Papal authority were delayed from year to year. Italy under the finger of the Pope; Austria obedient to his commands; France the natural enemy of Prussia, and governed by Napoleon, who drew his inspiration from Rome, made the work of self-protection, not only hazardous to the peace of the realm, but perilous to national existence.

In the meantime the Papal Hierarchy grew in boldness, and became more exacting in its demands. Romish Bishops entered Government schools and instructed teachers, appointed and paid for by the State, what they should, and what they should not teach. When called to an account for this abuse of a supervising privilege granted them, they arrogantly replied, that every Catholic teacher was subject to their control, and this, not through the laws of Prussia, but under the laws of the Church.

THE CONFLICT A POLITICAL ONE.

The Romish organs of Papacy have endeavored to transform the purely defensive and political policy of Germany into a bitter persecution of the Catholic Church. Nothing could be wider from the truth, for the Catholic Church, to-day, enjoys equal privileges in Germany with the Evangelical Church. Its liberty of conscience has not been interfered with; its forms of worship remain the same as ever; the persons of its priests and bishops are protected, and its 14,000,000 of followers have all the rights accorded to the 25,000,000 who worship under the forms of the Evangelical Church. In fact, religious and civil liberty were never greater in Germany than in the presence of this movement, which seeks to increase personal liberty by removing from the State a tyranny, which, in the name of God and the Church, proclaims itself not only the owner of the citizen's conscience, but the God-appointed judge, over and above the nation itself. Therefore, it should be borne in mind, in order to form a correct idea of the German movement, that the legislation of Prussia and the Empire is directed, not against the Catholic faith, but against a Hierarchy, which proclaims ecclesiastical law to be above the civil, and the Pope above the King.

The whole question was plainly stated by Bismarck in his speech of March 10, 1873. He said:

"In my opinion, the question with which we are occupied is falsified, and the light in which we view it is likewise false, when it is represented as a question of Church or of confession. It is really a political question; it has nothing to do with the struggle of an Evangelical dynasty against the Catholic Church—though some would persuade our Catholic fellow-citizens that this is the issue; it does not enter into the strife between faith and unbelief; it is concerned only with the immemorial conflict of authority—old as the human race—the conflict between kingship and priestism. * * * * The Papacy has ever been a political power which, with the greatest audacity, and with momentous consequences, has interfered in the affairs of this world; which has striven after such encroachment, and held this in view as its programme. That programme is well understood. The goal which, like the Frenchman's dream of an unbroken Rhine boundary, floats before the Papal power—the programme which, in the time of the mediæval emperors, was near its realization, is the subjection of the civil power to the ecclesiastical. A high political aim; an endeavor which, however, is as old as humanity, since there have always been either shrewd men or actual priests who have put forth the pretension that the will of God was more intimately known to them than to their fellows; and that upon the ground of this pretension they had the right to rule their fellows; and that this position is the basis of the Papal pretension to sovereignty is well known."

This lucid statement of Bismarck gives the key to the conflict now going on in Germany between Church and State, or, as the illustrious statesman gives it, between kingship and priestism.

In a speech delivered in Glasgow, Scotland, October 7, 1874, Dr. Joseph P. Thompson, of Berlin, thus referred to the movement:

"The conflict is not with the Church of Rome, as an ecclesiastical communion, but with the political doings of the Ultramontane party of the Roman Catholic Church; their defiance of the laws; their open contempt of the civil authority; their open and secret plottings against the Empire. * * * A labored attempt has been made through the press of this country to convey the impression that the Roman Catholic Church is persecuted in Germany; and Dr. Manning has gone so far as to say that in Germany there is witnessed to-day the most despotic persecution of the Church that has been known since the days of Diocletian. As an impartial observer during the whole stage of this conflict, I do most solemnly and emphatically deny that there is any persecution of the Roman Catholic Church in Germany. I deny that any man in Germany is persecuted, either as an officer or member of that Church, or is dealt with by law for anything that belongs to him or concerns him in his simple and proper capacity as a believer in that faith, or a worshipper in that Church; and I venture to say that Dr. Manning knows that as well as I do. * * * The quarrel with the bishops in Germany is not that they believe in the infallibility of the Pope, nor that they openly teach this doctrine, but that they use the opprobrium of ecclesiastical censure to compel other men to believe and to teach this dogma, or to excite the ignorant and superstitious against the school system provided by the Government, because this cannot be used for propagating the decrees of the Vatican Council. * * * With the spiritual discipline of the Romish Church, as a society within itself, the Government does not interfere. In that matter each church is left in the independent use of its powers. But the Government does forbid the use of physical pains and material penalties—such as fines, imprisonment, etc.—to enforce ecclesiastical censures. Above all, the Prussian Government will not suffer the officers of a foreign politico-ecclesiastical power—Roman Jesuits and the like—to use ecclesiastical threats and penalties for the purpose of inciting and arraying its own subjects against itself. It will not suffer an ecclesiastical camp, armed with pains and penalties, to be organized against liberty of the person or peace of the realm. * * * The State is sovereignty, and cannot admit any other sovereignty, temporal or spiritual, between its subjects and itself. You cannot forget the time in the history of Scotland and England, when the Pope held the scales between the two nations, and when the Papal Legate made peace or war for this island. That dictation of Rome is attempted to be forced upon Germany, in our time, and I feel that in this warfare Germany is fighting your battle over again. She has now been put in front of the field. Had she failed in her last war, Victor Emanuel would not now be in Rome; France would be propping up the Papal power with her bayonets, and threatening the peace of Europe with the decrees of the Vatican Council in arms; the Jesuits would have a million soldiers at their backs, and the Pope would feel himself not only infallible but invincible. It is because Germany has defeated all this that Germany is hated at Rome. It is because the Empire has been erected, binding all the German States under the lead of the most powerful Protestant power of Europe, that the Ultramontanes are struggling to undo the work of the last four years."

In the extracts quoted we have a plain statement of the question at issue, and the high authority of the one who gives it entitles it to confidence and belief.

Therefore, nothing can be clearer to the impartial mind than the assertion already made, that the conflict in Germany is purely a political one, having no bearing whatever on religion, except so far as it denies to one of its leading branches the assumption of a power which belongs not to religion, but exclusively to the political or civil power of the State.

PAPAL SUPREMACY TO BE FEARED BY GERMANY.

There are many people who regard the religious legislation, so-called, in Germany, as uncalled for. They claim that Papacy means peace, and that the growth of the Romish Church, with all its assumption of power over its members and society, is compatible with the highest degree of civil liberty.

As a theory of faith, this may be correct, but the experience of centuries proves it wrong in practice. The history of the world, if it teaches anything, teaches this one fact, that Papal supremacy over the civil law is inconsistent with the enjoyment and existence of civil and religious liberty.

Historical facts crowd upon us when we seek the proof of this statement. From the dethronement of Henry the IV, of Germany, by authority of Pope Gregory VII, in the 11th century, down to the compromise treaty at Westphalia, in 1648, not only the soil of Germany, but the soil of all nations under Romish domination, was drenched in the blood shed in those civil wars, waged by Romanism, in the name of the Pope, as the Vicar of Christ, against all who refused to accept the dogmas of the Papal Hierarchy.

Whatever may be the intentions of Roman Catholicism, in the 19th century, the persecutions carried on in its name and by its sanction, for more than ten centuries, are historical facts, and as such, cannot be ignored. The past is too often a faithful index of the future, and what the Romish Church has been in Spain, France, England, and Germany, when it had control of the temporal power of those kingdoms, it may be again, if vested with like authority. The horrors of the Spanish inquisition, the massacre of St. Bartholomew, in which 70,000 unbelievers in the Romish faith were slain in cold blood; the persecutions in England, under the reign of bloody Mary, and the horrible cruelties which characterized the Papal force during the thirty years' war, which devastated and impoverished Germany, are but single counts in the long list of indictments which stand against the past record of the Romish Church.

We do not say that these persecutions find defense or justification among the intelligent Roman Catholics of the present age, or were endorsed at the time by all within the Church, but we do say that they illustrate the tyrannical power of the Roman Hierarchy when possessed with supreme authority, and foreshadow the policy which would again be adopted, if the Jesuitical or Ultramontane branch of the Church should be restored to power. •

Of all nations in Europe, Germany has good reasons to dread the ascendancy of Papal authority. Her central position has made her the battle-field of nearly every great war that has desolated the Continent. Her soil has been reddened with the blood of her noblest sons, whose only crime was their refusal to obey the decrees of the Pope.

Germany can never forget the humiliating spectacle of a German Emperor—Henry IV, (1077)—crossing the Alps, in the dead of winter, to obey the summons of Pope Gregory VII; his waiting for three days, barefooted and poorly clad, in an outer court of the Castle of Canossa, before the haughty Prelate would grant him an audience. Nor has she forgotten the thirty years' bloody war which followed the Papal dethronement of her Sovereign. Nor has she erased from her memory the struggle of nearly a century, when the Hohenstaufen Emperors, (1138–1254) stood like a wall of fire between her conscience and the legions of Papacy.

The land which gave birth to Luther—which poured out its blood like water to sustain the Reformation (1517), which suffered—under Charles V (1547), and Ferdinand II (1619–37),—horrors unparalleled in the history of the Church, and which, through the 17th and 18th centuries, has been torn and rent asunder by fierce wars instigated by Papal intrigue, has a natural right to be jealous of her liberties and to be on her guard against the ascendancy of a power which has caused her so much suffering in the past. To the people of this free land, the present attitude of Germany toward the Romish Church, may appear to be one of selfishness, but to the Empire, which builds upon the experience of ten centuries, it has become one of political necessity. Free from Papal domination, Germany has a brilliant career before her—one that will arouse the pride of her children and their descendants throughout the world. To-day she stands proudly erect in her new manhood, not to persecute, or shackle a doctrine of faith, but to declare civil and religious liberty throughout her borders; to declare the supremacy of her civil laws over those which, in the name of the Church, would undermine her authority, weaken her unity, and eventually destroy her liberty.

OLD DOCTRINES REVIVED.

The reign of Charles the Great, or, as he is more familiarly known, Charlemagne, forms the connecting link between ancient and modern history. He was the most famous of French Kings, and from his reign may be dated the first assumption of power by the Pope of Rome over the sovereignty of Germany.

If history is to be believed, this King received from the hands of the Pope the crown and title "Emperor of the West." The story as told by Goodrich, the historian, runs in this wise: In the year 800, Charlemagne visited Rome, and the Pope, as a testimony of his gratitude for the benefits he had received, resolved to confer upon him the title of "Emperor of the West." But this he intended as a surprise for the King. Accordingly, on Christmas day, when the great church at Rome was crowded with people of various nations, the Pope came softly behind the King, as he knelt before the altar, and placed a crown upon his head. The lofty dome resounded with the cry, "Long life to Charles the August, crowned by the hand of God! Long life to the Great Emperor of the Romans!" The extent of this ruler's empire may be judged, when we say, that it covered all the territory now occupied by Italy, Germany, Hungary, Bohemia, Poland, half of Spain, and all France.

From the reign of Charlemagne to the present, the Papal power has never relinquished, except by force of arms, this claim of supreme sovereignty over the German empire. If Napoleon III had been successful in his attempted conquest of Germany, Pope Pious IX would have conferred upon him a crown and title equal to that which more than a thousand years before had been given to Charlamagne.

This claim to temporal sovereignty is as strong now as it was then. The following extract from the bull of ex-communication against Henry IV by Gregory VII (1076) is what is now claimed at Rome, with the additional force imparted to it by the doctrine of infallibility, which has been accepted by the Romish church as a dogma of faith :

"Now I beseech you, oh most holy fathers and princes, cause that all the world may understand and know that if ye are able to bind and loose in heaven, ye are able upon earth to give and to take away empires, kingdoms, principalities, marquisates, duchies, countships, and the possessions of all men, according to the deserts of each. Often, indeed, have ye taken away patriarchates, primacies, archbishopries, and bishopries, from the evil and unworthy, and have bestowed these upon men of true piety. If, then, ye judge spiritual things, what must not be believed of your power over worldly things ? And if ye judge the angels who rule over all proud princes, what can you not do to their slaves ?"

As a logical sequence to this assumption of Gregory VII, we have the subsequent deposition of Frederick II by Pope Innocent IV, (1243) delivered in the presence of 140 prelates assembled at the Council of Lyons. After reciting the offence of Frederick against the Church, Innocent declares :

"That because of his iniquities the Emperor has been set aside by God, from the sovereignty of which he has proved himself so unworthy, and is stripped of all his honors and dignities, which judgment the apostolic See doth now pronounce and enforce, absolving all from their oath of allegiance to him, threatening with excommunication all who shall in any way acknowledge or uphold him as emperor or as king ; and summoning the electors of the empire to choose at once a successor to its now deposed and anathematized head."

But papal assumption was never put in a stronger light than by Boniface VIII, (1294) in his famous bull "Unam Sanctam :

"The Pope has two swords the spiritual and the temporal ; the one to be wielded by the Church, the other for the Church ; the one by the priesthood, the other by kings and soldiers, but this only on the hint or the sufferance of the priest. One sword, however must be under the other, and the temporal authority must be subject to the spiritual power. As saith the apostle, "there is no power but of God : the powers that be are ordered of God ;" but they would not be in order unless one sword were under the other. If the temporal power goes astray then must it be rectified by the spiritual ; if such a power illtreats those that are under it, it has a judge in the higher spiritual power ; but this which is highest of all can be judged by God only, not by any man, as saith the apostle ; "he that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man." Wherefore we do declare, proclaim, decree, and determine hereby that every human creature is subject to the Roman Pope, and that none can be saved who doth not so believe."

That this doctrine of temporal supremacy is still adhered to by the Ultramontane school of Romanism, and is advocated by some of the most illustrious bishops of the Church is a fact of which we have abundant evidence. In a sermon preached in the Pro-Cathedral at Kensington, October 9, 1864, Dr. Manning, speaking as for the Pope put into his mouth the following :—"I acknowledge no civil power ; I am the subject of no prince ; and I claim more than this—I claim to be the supreme judge and director of the consciences of men—of the peasant that tills the field and of the prince that sits upon the throne ; of the household that lives in the shade of privacy and the legislator that makes laws for kingdoms ; I am the sole, last supreme judge of what is right and wrong."

This is the power—illustrated in the sentiments that are quoted—against which the German Empire, with Prussia as its leading spirit, is acting to-day. Germany is in earnest ! In the language of the Emperor William, to Earl Russell : "The duty devolves upon me of leading the nation once more in the war maintained in former times, for centuries long, by the German Emperor, against a power whose domination has never in any country been found compatible with the freedom and the welfare of nations."

THE EMPIRE—ITS RELIGION, &c.

The geographical position of Germany makes it naturally the keystone of the political system of Europe. Its central location has made it the theatre of the great wars that for centuries past have desolated the continent. With its boundaries exposed on nearly every side it has offered a tempting field for conquest. Until Bismarck welded the several States into a single empire, German unity seemed more a chimera than a possible fact. For a long series of years the dream of a grand German Empire floated before the vision of illustrious statesmen, but the reality seemed impossible until the result of the late war aroused the pride for a united nationality and in the hands of Bismarck made the Empire an accomplished fact. The military prestige of Prussia made it the leading spirit in the new Union, and to her king as the Emperor of united Germany the smaller States and principalities rendered willing allegiance. The present Emperor was elected by a vote of the Reichstag of the North German Confederation on the initiative of all the reigning Princes of Germany.

The constitution of the German Empire under William I, bears date April 16, 1871. The States of the Empire number 27. The Bundesrath, or Federal Council, numbers 59 members, and represents the individual States of Germany. The Reichstag or Diet of the Realm, represents the German nation and numbers 397 deputies.

The census of December 1, 1871, shows the population of the Empire to be 41,041,485, divided as follows: Protestants, 25,579,709; Roman Catholics, 14,867,463; Christian sects of various denominations, 82,155, and Jews, 512,158. In Prussia, in 1871, 65 per cent. of the inhabitants were Protestants, and 33½ per cent. Roman Catholics; while in Bavaria 71 per cent. were Roman Catholics, and 27½ per cent. Protestants. In the Reichsland of Alsace-Lorraine, 80 per cent. were Roman Catholics and 17½ per cent. Protestants.

The royal family incline to the Evangelic faith. In Prussia, this faith is shared by about 64.87 per cent. of the people. The Roman Catholic church in this State claims about 32.56 per cent., and other creeds 2.57 per cent. In the provinces of Prussia, Pomerania, Brandenburg, and Saxony, the Protestant faith largely predominates, while in Posen, Silesia, Westphalia, and Rhenish Prussia, the Roman Catholics are in the majority. The new provinces annexed, in 1866, are mostly Protestant in their religious belief. Protestantism is gradually increasing. Its proportionate growth is greater than that of Catholicism.

The Protestant church* is governed by "consistories," or boards appointed by the Government, one for each province. There are also synods in most circles and provinces. In the Rhenish provinces it is fixed by the concordat entered into between the Government and Pope Pius VII. But in every other part of the monarchy, the Crown has reserved to itself a control over the election of bishops and priests. There were at the census of 1864 more Roman Catholic priests than Protestant ministers, the number of the former amounting to 6,706, and of the latter to 6,531. The Protestants at the same date had 8,401 churches, and 1,113 other religious meeting places, while the Roman Catholics had 5,548 churches, and 2,567 chapels, besides 243 convents and monasteries.

The higher Catholic clergy are paid by the State, the Archbishop of Breslau receiving £1,700 a year, and the other bishops about £1,135. The incomes of the parochial clergy, of both sects, mostly arise from endowments. In general, Government does not guarantee the stipend, either of Protestant or Catholic clergymen; but in some parishes in the Rhenish provinces the clergy enjoy a public provision.

Napoleon overthrew, in 1806, all that was left of the Old German Empire. Its previous existence was more in name than in fact. At one time it was split up into about three hundred principalities, each claiming for itself absolute authority. Religious wars between these small states kept the so-called empire in a continual ferment. The new empire dates from the close of the Franco-Prussian war. The military prestige of the German armies, and the statesmanship of

* Statesman's Year Book, 1875

Bismarck, welded into a unit the fractions which had so long remained apart.

The French war against Prussia was most disastrous to France. Aside from the fearful cost in life and treasure, she was compelled to pay as war indemnity to Germany, 200,000,000 pounds sterling. The wonderful recuperative power of France is shown from the fact that this immense sum was fully paid at the end of September, 1873. Besides this treaty indemnity, Germany received a tribute from Paris, amounting to 6,000,000 pounds sterling, and during the occupation of French soil, levied contribution, amounting in the aggregate to nearly 200,000,000 pounds sterling. Thus the war, instigated by the Pope, in order to recover Italy by the aid of French bayonets, had two results. It struck into existence a powerful Protestant Empire, the germs of which it sought to crush; and it crippled, almost to its death, the nation which was relied upon by the Romish Hierarchy to subjugate Europe to the doctrine of infallibility as believed by the Jesuits of France.

RELIGIOUS LEGISLATION IN GERMANY.

It will be remembered by the reader, that the doctrine of Papal infallibility was announced at Rome, July 10th, 1870, the same month and the same year, and within 48 hours from the time, July 16th, 1870, when France under Papal influence, declared war against Prussia. It seems hardly probable that this remarkable coincidence was accidental. The motive for publishing the decree of infallibility, was to weaken Prussia by withdrawing from her the sympathy and aid of Catholic States of the German Confederation, and to divide her own subjects on the question of allegiance to King and Pope. But the German Catholics had not been partial to Ultramontanism, and were not to be converted in a moment to a decree repugnant to their spirit of independence. The old war spirit was aroused by the declaration from France, and most of the smaller German States agreed to make common cause with Prussia, for they saw in her downfall the departure of their own freedom. Bavaria the strongest Roman Catholic State, was loth to join the movement, but finally, by a majority of one, joined hands with the rest of Germany.

Since the close of the war, the Ultramontane doctrine has gained ground among the German Catholics. Bishops and others of influence in the Church have surrendered their original convictions, and given in a loyal adherence to the decree of infallibility, thus placing their allegiance to the Pope above their allegiance to the Empire. Many Catholics—probably about 100,000, have remained true to their old faith, and these, in opposition to the Ultramontanes, are firmly united under the name of "Old Catholics."

Here was an element of disintegration which, if not checked, would disturb the peace of the Empire. If the States became divided in their allegiance, the Catholic States holding allegiance to the Pope in both temporal and spiritual matters, and the Protestant States remaining true to the nation, it required no prophetic vision to see in the not far future, a disruption of the Empire, and the repetition, on a larger scale, of the bloody struggles of the past.

To prevent this, the nation has exercised the right which belongs to it. It has placed the Romish Church on the same level with other churches. It has passed laws to prevent the growth of a disloyal sentiment in the church. These laws differ very little from those in force in Austria. One of them asserts the right of the State to exercise a supreme control over the education of the clergy.

This is justified by the State on the grounds that it was originally agreed to by the church, and is simply the revival of laws already on the statute book. Also on the grounds that the State pays the expenses of the Bishops, and has the right to supervise their education, and the education of those whom they appoint.

Another law establishes the right of the State to superintend the discipline exercised over clergymen by the church.

The State justifies this law by claiming, that no discipline should be exercised over the clergy to enforce upon them a doctrine which would array them against the State. The third law defines the limits of the ecclesiastical power to exercise church discipline over laymen. The State justifies this on the grounds that it has the right to protect its citizens against any invasion of their personal rights, either by the church or other power. The fourth law lays down certain regulations for the protection of those who desire to leave the church. This law effectually protects freedom of conscience throughout the realm.

Another, and more recent law, cuts off the endowment of those Bishops who violate the laws of the realm, or publish decrees, received from Rome, which have for their object the annulling of the laws, and the absolving of German Catholics from all allegiance to the State.

These are the principle laws relating to the jurisdiction of the Church, now in force in Germany. They trench upon no private rights, they interfere with no personal exercise of religious faith, they trammel no man's conscience, they simply deny to an organized institution, having its fountain head at Rome, the right to exercise the independent powers of a kingdom within the jurisdiction of the German Empire. In his dispatch to the United States Government, dated July 16, 1870, George Bancroft, our minister at Berlin, said: "The sentiment prevails that Germany is fighting the battle of public liberty and of independent nationalities." So to-day, it may truly be said, that in her legislation to check the growth of Ultramontanism "she is fighting the battle of public liberty and of independent nationalities."

As the continental leader in European civilization she deserves, and will receive, the sympathy of the liberal minded and enlightened throughout the world. Armed in the cause of justice and humanity; freeing civil and religious liberty from the shackles of intolerance; her attitude is one of defence in behalf of personal freedom and the Empire which makes it possible.

AMERICA'S INTEREST IN GERMANY.

The people of the United States are united to Germany by bonds which were formed a century ago. The land which gave us the gallant De Kalb and Steuben, and which has sent to our shores ripened scholars, earnest, industrious, skilled men and women, who to-day form the most reliable and intelligent foreign element in our midst, has a right to claim our respect and sympathy.

Therefore, the warm sympathy of America went out for Germany in her war against France. Her triumphs, rejoiced over by her children on our soil, found responsive echoes in the hearts of our people. To the Republican party, which represents the most intelligent element among all classes of freemen, the success of Germany meant the growth of those principles which had triumphed in our own war, while her defeat meant their suppression and ultimate extinction. Germany, heart and soul, and hand, was with us during our struggle for national existence, and we were as truly with her in her splendid defence of nationality. When the bankers of Europe turned a cold shoulder to our bonds, those of Frankfort-on-the-Main were an exception, and their wealth was tendered with a willingness that spoke of an earnest sympathy for our cause. German money, German citizens, German prayers and assistance, did much to make our armies successful in the field and our statesmen successful in council. The intuitive love of liberty and hatred of wrong, which characterize the German the world over, prompted our German population to espouse the cause of the Republican party, and to give their time, their talents, and their money for the advancement of its principles. To this close affiliation of our German population to the great party of freedom the Republic owes, in a large degree, those liberal measures which have been the result of Republican ascendancy.

This natural sympathy which exists between the intelligent German and the intelligent American makes our interest in the present movement in Germany national in its character. In the maintenance of the German Empire, on the broad basis of civil and religious liberty, we see our own perpetuity as a Republic. In the triumph or ascendancy of Ultramontanism in the German Empire, we see the approach and triumph of the same power in our own free land. Our national interests in the checking of Romish assumption are mutual, therefore, protection to Germany, as the result of her present legislation, means safety to America.

It may be argued that the Jesuitical or Ultramontane school of the Romish church has no respectable following among the intelligent Catholics of the United States. While we are willing to admit that the great mass of our Roman Catholic citizens are loyal to our government and not yet ready to admit the doctrine of Papal infallibility in the sense of temporal or political supremacy, yet the experience of the past few years proves that the Romish church in this country is becoming more and more—under the influence of Ultramontane teachers—hostile to that broad Catholic spirit which accords to all men the right to assert individuality in both religious and political affairs.

Thanks to the wisdom of our early fathers, our free land is not vexed with that troublesome alliance of Church and State which still hinders the reform movement in Europe. Under our constitution, religious liberty is the birth-right of the humblest citizen, while the civil law is supreme over all.

Hitherto, the success of parties was simply the triumph of a civil policy, without any religious significance whatever. Political parties were combinations of citizens, of all churches and every faith, banded together to control the Government, not in the interest of church or creed, but for the good of the whole people. Nominations were not based upon the religious opinions of the candidate, but upon the general fitness of the man to fill the office. The test of fitness was not his devotion to the Catholic, or the Presbyterian, or the Methodist church, but his fidelity as a man, and his loyalty as a citizen. To this liberal spirit, growing out of the complete separation of Church and State, we are indebted for that peace and prosperity which have been enjoyed by each religious denomination, and every citizen in the land.

CHURCH AND PARTY.

There is a movement on foot—not yet crystalized into a policy, to be condemned or advocated by its opponents or friends—but sufficiently defined in its object to excite in the minds of our citizens apprehension if not alarm. We refer to that alliance of Church and party, which in certain localities is so marked as to leave no doubt of its purpose. This alliance is the surest evidence that Ultramontaniam which has cursed Europe for centuries, is seeking a foothold upon our soil. Our Catholic clergy have a perfect right to labor and vote for the Democratic party, but they have no right to use the discipline of their Church to force those who believe in their faith, but not in their politics, to unite with them at the ballot box.

Yet the coercive policy is the one now adopted. The discipline of the Church is to be brought to bear upon its followers, and the Romish Church, inspired by Jesuitical teachings, is to make common cause with Democracy, in its endeavor to overthrow the Republican party and with it, the free school system which it sustains.

In a recent address at Cincinnati, Bishop McQuaid is reported to have said :

“I stand here and say that unless we bring this thing of the school taxes to the ballot-box, we do not deserve the name of Catholics. It may not be necessary to bring it to the ballot-box ; we may obtain a platform on which we can stand. Politicians will come to us. Irish, German and American Catholics will not be so patient as their fathers have been. The platform of the schools is not now for us ; it is for Jews, for Infidels, for Protestants, but we are under it. Suppose we get strong enough to rise up, remember the platform is on us ; where will the platform be then ? Men will learn that we have something more to do than praying ; we must vote and the laymen must work.”

* * * * *

“Every honest-minded Christian must labor to gather children into Christian schools. This means unquestionably the breaking down of the present system. But the blame must not rest on us, but on the bigots and the infidels, whose minds would not see the rights of others and whose hearts were steeled against justice. Intolerant and persecuting is the present common school system.”

As the Catholic Telegraph gave a verbatim report of the address, these extracts may be regarded as reliable. This paper in speaking of the prospects of the Democratic party, pointedly says :

“The unbroken solid vote of the Catholic citizens of this State will be given to the Democracy at the fall election.”

When the Geghan Bill, an obnoxious measure which virtually gives the Romish Church the religious control of the Prisons and State charitable institutions of Ohio, was up for discussion, the Telegraph used the following language:

"The political party with which nine-tenths of the Catholic voters affiliate, on account of past services that they will never forget, now control the State. Withdraw the support which Catholics have given to it, and it will fall in this city, county and State as speedily as it has risen to its long lost position and power. That party is now upon trial; Mr. Geghan's bill will test the sincerity of its professions."

The legislation of Ohio and New York, especially its city legislation, affords strong proof of the design of the Papal Hierarchy to use the Democratic party as the political lever to overthrow the free school system of the land. This accomplished, the door is open for the control of other institutions in the future, and through a national triumph of the party to which the Church is allied, to a radical change of our form of government.

These possibilities should arouse intelligent citizens of all creeds, whether of native or foreign birth, to the danger that threatens our country if the Ultramontane element of the Church, through the success of Democracy, should obtain control of our national affairs. If a knowledge of what has been done in Germany, through priestism, will awaken our people to the designs of the same power in the United States, the firm stand of Bismarck was not taken an hour too soon. That it may attract the attention of every American citizen, and cause him to labor with greater fidelity for the party that is pledged to the maintenance of civil and religious liberty, the support of the free schools, and the perfect equality of all men before the law, is not only the hope of the writer, but the prayer of millions in Europe, who look upon our free government as the young giant that is yet to break the fetters of the world's oppressed.

GEN. BUFORD, in the Kentucky Democratic Convention, made the honest confession "That the old-fashioned, simon-pure Democrat was the next thing in this age to a fool."

FUSION OF INDEPENDENTS WITH REPUBLICANS.—

There seems to be a very general desire among the Republican press, says the Sacramento Bee, for a fusion between the Republicans and their old associates, the Independents; and the Independents are kindly towards it also! Why, then, should it not be? Who will be to blame if it shall not be?

We do not see why this fusion should not take place. If there is any consistency with the Independents they can never be in the Democratic party. Whatever disappointment they may have felt when they left the ranks of the Republicans, they have long since discovered that they are powerless for good of themselves. They are charged with being a faction of disappointed grumblers. Since they assumed to be independent of the two great parties, they have swung like Mahomet's coffin between heaven and earth. We are willing to give them such credit as they are entitled to for not being able to continue in the Republican party because they differed from it. But as the differences are now so small, as they are not Democrats, and as they must wish to be useful in aiding to secure the best men to serve the country, it, perhaps, may not be out of place to suggest that as long as they are Independents they are merely a detached excrescence belonging nowhere and to nobody. Why continue in that state, which permits what is not politically desirable to exist from their sheer inability to prevent it! Why not rather accept the definition of Macauley—the essence of politics is compromise, and compromising the differences which led to this separation, rejoin the Republican party for a grand and decisive effort in the forthcoming campaign?

FAITHFUL TO ITS TRUST.—Never, in the history of the world, has a party been more faithful in carrying out the will of the people, than the Republican party. It has been true to every promise; it has kept sacred every pledge; it has carried the nation through a period of great peril; it has been the recognized bulwark of civil and religious liberty. Its past record is a true index of its future possibilities. To this record, the only one that can determine the merit of individuals or parties, the nation may well point with pride. What the party has been, it now is and will be in the future.

FREE LABOR IN THE SOUTH.

For nearly four years a score of our metropolitan newspapers have been engaged in a deliberate attempt to "run the country." This has been especially manifested in their dealings with the South, and the questions which have arisen out of the conflict between the old and the new—the prejudices and passions belonging to the period of slavery and civil war, contending with the necessities, struggles and mistakes, but gradually eventuating in solid advancement of freed labor and equal citizenship.

The newspapers we have in our mind, have largely directed their powerful machinery of investigation and statement toward the South. Their most trusted attaches have been sent there, nominally to investigate, but in reality to "make points" for this or that preconceived notion as to the condition of affairs which the omnipotent editors, by whose fiat the said correspondents "live, move and hath their being," have evolved from that sublime "interior consciousness" which to the most of them answers for knowledge and judgment. Quite as frequently these "independent" editors are consciously or otherwise, mere puppets in the hands of wily speculators, who find it useful to control a newspaper and to make money out of political conditions, created especially to advance some speculative interest or another. The so-called "Liberal" press is not alone in this sort of work; some prominent journals that are without doubt heartily in accord with the Republican party, have done mischievous work by their superficial endorsement of superficial investigations, coming from correspondents not especially prepared for such a work, and who, at the best, only ride hastily through the South, talk with chance acquaintances, and in the main take more heed of those whose interests or prejudices must necessarily lead them to misrepresent the actual state of affairs.

But the vicious tendency of all journalism towards the sensational "making of points," must vitiate fair and full enquiry. We ask any ordinarily careful reader of the current press for the the past three years, if they have seen in the large amount of special correspondence from the South, which has been published in the New York, Chicago and Cincinnati newspapers, any attempts to soberly and fully state the facts relative to the changes which have been produced in trade and industry by free labor?

Any reference to the gradually increasing ownership of land by the people who twelve years ago were slaves, seems to be carefully ignored, except by an occasional contribution to religious newspapers, like the Methodist of New York. We are not told by the "special correspondents" that the former slaves have so far advanced that they are assessed on property rated at many millions. Yet the auditors' and treasurers' reports of all the Southern States have been and are accessible. We are not told that manufacturing interests have largely increased in the South, showing the natural result that follows free labor, of the introduction of complex in place of simple industries and civilization. We are told of the decadence of New Orleans and other cities, but none of these "trained observers" tell us of the growth of numerous inland towns and villages, and the rapid increase of local trade which has everywhere followed the habilitation of free labor. We are nowhere pointed to the fact that New Orleans, for instance, received a mortal wound by the civil war, in that St. Louis its rival before that event and its master now, was the recipient of vast material benefits created by the war, owing to its position and the fact that it was geographically and politically "sealed" to the Union cause. Under the enormous activity then created and since continued, St. Louis has obtained control of the Mississippi River trade, and has drawn off from New Orleans and other Southern marts by means of its railroad system the business of the vast Southwest, which those marts have naturally supposed to be the prize of their positions and endeavors. What is true of New Orleans, Vicksburg, Natchez and Memphis, is also true of many other Southern cities and ports. It will take years for them to rebuild and regain their positions. And in the meanwhile their business men growl at reconstruction, and plot with the anxious politician to overthrow what they cannot seriously affect. They blow against the wind and kick against the pricks, and when their spittle comes back to their faces, and their limbs are made sore by the resistance encountered, they cry aloud to the "special correspondents," who haste to record all the ill-temper as proofs of the failure of reconstruction and the disastrous defeat of free citizenship.

Taxes are paraded as proof of corruption by these "priests of the pen." We are nowhere favored with a comparison which will show what has legitimately resulted from the increase of persons to be governed, or what comes also from the increased cost of all administrative functions—a cost which is felt in the Northern as well as in the Southern States. Take Mississippi or South Carolina for example. The usual process is to state, in the bulk, that State expenses are, say for 1873, so many millions, and that they were for, say 1858, so many hundred thousands. There the matter is left. The paragraph is well turned, the point is apparently made, and is easily quoted, which is all our "Special" has any interest in. To have got at the facts would have required labor and thought, two things he avoids whenever it is possible.

Let us look for a moment at the examples we have taken. Taxes have largely increased in the States named. Without doubt there has been wasteful and corrupt expenditures but the aggregate has been very much below what is believed. In proof of this, as well as shallowness of the sapient critics referred to, it should be borne in mind that the body of citizenship has increased over 150 per cent. in both States. Before emancipation and reconstruction, individual masters, and not the community, were charged with the care of paupers, and largely with the punishment of offenses, growing out of the relations to them of those who now make up the large majority of citizens. Courts have had to be organized, jails arranged, police provided, and paupers cared for—and all at the public charge.

Besides, and more important still, no public school system existed, or only so partial a one as not to deserve the name. This has all had to be created, de novo. It could not be done without cost, nor can it be maintained without taxes. Possibly, in some instances, there have been wasteful expenditures, but a careful examination and comparison will reduce them to a small minimum. It is the fact that they are taxed to support the hated free schools which make so many of the whites complain. Some of them do this as thoughtlessly as the correspondents published, without stopping to think of the valid reasons for increase, and only seeing that it exists.

So we might go on, ad libitum. It would be easy to show how they parade the one hundred or one thousand corrupt instances of which they are told; and fail to state what they might easily learn of the many thousands of sober, industrious, self-supporting and forehanded citizens, who but a few years ago were slaves, and are now useful and independent men and women.

But there is one thing that the "Special" can no longer avoid seeing, and that is, the industry of the enfranchised laborer and how well his work is being performed. Testimony from the pens of such writers as Charles Nordhoff, of the Herald, is valuable, not because he has gone there to be thorough and fair, but the reverse, as it seems to us, after carefully reading his Louisiana letters.

Mr. Nordhoff devotes a letter, published June 2, to the colored laborers of Louisiana. The animus of patronizing superiority which runs through all, appears in this, but the effect is to make his testimony all the more valuable. He says:

"The planters, without exception, so far as I have heard them speak, are thoroughly satisfied with the colored man as a laborer. They say that the negroes are orderly, docile, faithful to their engagements, steady laborers in the field, readily submitting to directions and instructions, and easily managed and made contented. This applies to cotton as well as sugar planters, and all is summed up in the phrase I most frequently heard used: 'We have the best laboring class in the world.' Their faults are mainly of carelessness with such property as mules and farming implements and killing cattle and hogs.

* * * * *

But it appears to make no difference whether the mules belong to the planter or to the laborer. The latter is as conscientiously careless of his own as of another's property. It is part of the heedlessness bred of slavery, and it will take time to be bred out, as it was bred in.

Again he says :

"One thing greatly pleases me—the black man pays his debts. All the petty shopkeepers, of whom the country is full, are ready to give credit to the negroes. It was a question I asked often, and always received the same reply:—'They always pay up.' Among the rice planters where the blacks work by the day they frequently hire cottages, and the owner of some of these told me he would rather have negroes than whites for tenants, because they paid more promptly. A country storekeeper said to me:—'Ninety per cent. of my sales are to colored people, and ninety per cent. of my bad debts are owed by whites.'"

Mr. Nordhoff refers to the ownership of land and the unwillingness of the planters to sell. He does not blame them for this, and says further that the negro is slovenly, and only wants, as a rule, an acre or two as a patch for his garden and cottage.

Among other testimony, he refers to their employment on railroad construction, and gives this statement of a contractor :

"They are the very best of laborers, always willing, zealous and faithful, and will work very hard and in the most disagreeable labor for anyone who treats them well."

Elsewhere Mr. Nordhoff declares that colored mechanics form an important part of the civic populations, that they are industrious, capable, and generally forehanded. He regards the industrial prospects as satisfactory, and thinks that in a few years the colored laborers will very largely become independent farmers.

Yet we are also told that they are incapable, politically, and do not do well as suffragans. The trouble about all that class of criticism is, that the colored voters will not play at "follow my leader;" the proper leader being, in the estimation of the self-sufficient, only those who are better off and better educated. The colored man's instincts and necessities have so far, in spite of all mistakes, been better guides. He has not forgotten that it was educated men who enslaved him—that trained intelligence keeps him in that position, and that in the society wherein he moves, both have been and are, in large degree, his implacable foes. As his own intelligence increases, he learns to discriminate as to cause and effect, and will himself correct evils that have grown out of his own ignorance.

But what we aim at, is to show that reconstruction is not a failure; that it has paid all its cost; that a free industry brings its own reward, moulding fairly a social life and material conditions commensurate with its own extent; that it creates forces which make the fabric more stable and secure with every passing year, and that there now exists, as the prize of Republican exertions, and in despite of the hideous obstacles that have and still remain, elements of Republican civilization—which already endows the South with new life, and will ere long be fully recognized as bringing to it the greatest of blessings.

DEMOCRACY.—Democracy has been tried and found wanting. It once stood before the people as a party of honor and justice. But it turned its back on freedom, persecuted its champions and became the mere tool of the slave power. Infidelity to principle, brought corruption into its administration. When the Nation rose in 1861, to cast it out from its high office of governmental control, it was not the political freak of an hour, but the resolve of a people that had no further use for a party that had betrayed its trust. Its fall was the death blow of the power which sustained it. The grave of Slavery should have been the grave of Democracy.

As a political power, it should have been banished from the field of American politics. But the power of evil oftentimes outlives the institutions which generated it. Slavery is dead, but its ripened fruit, corrupt Democracy, still lives to exert its baneful influence on the destiny of a nation. To resist the spread of its political poison, requires fidelity, watchfulness, energy and thorough organization on the part of those who love their country, and desire its government to remain in the loyal hands of those who saved it from the deadly attack of Democracy and Slavery.

DUTIES VS. RIGHTS.

Rights and duties are reciprocal. This is a truism often eloquently turned, but seldom obeyed. We hear continually about the rights of men, of women, of the individual or society; of private property, personal or corporate enterprise, and all the innumerable claims in which "rights" are proclaimed and asserted. Something too much of this is the rule. Let us note for a brief space how seldom the word "duty" is linked with the demand for "rights." Still less do men attempt the performance of duties with the same zeal that they assert their rights. Yet the latter cannot be maintained without the former.

Possession and obligation are mutual—inter-dependent and inter-related. No one can for long maintain unsullied and unrestricted the rights of citizenship, unless at the same time, they see to it that every duty appertaining thereto, at whatever cost of comfort, taste or inclination, is rigidly performed.

It is just here too, that in our country we appear likely to lose ground. It is on the vital fact of citizenship that men too generally fail in the performance of civic duties and obligations. Take for instance the apprehension relating to politics, which so commonly prevails among the busy and well-to-do, the business and professional classes. As a rule they are on the side of good government. Even when they support a political philosophy which we may condemn, it cannot be doubted but that they are personally anxious to see secured both order and liberty.

Yet the apathy of these classes is to-day the greatest danger of the republic. In the South, it allows the violence of the dangerous elements, and the bitter, social and unreasoning hatred of the women, to control the white people and bring the whole section into disrepute, maintaining the policy which they are apt at denouncing, and keeping alive elsewhere the suspicion with which it is not unnatural the animus of a community recently so moved with deadly hostility to the nation, should be viewed by those who were and are faithful thereto. In the North this same supine indifference to duty and the vigilance it demands, surrenders important communities to the dangerous classes, abandons large public interests to the control of the speculators, and leaves politics, as a business, to the more or less unsafe manipulation, of the professional manager.

Yet everywhere the mass of men are always ready to form under the leadership of the best citizens. If the reverse is too often true, it will surely be found that those who claim to be the best have neglected their duty; or attempting to do it have gone to the task in the spirit of assuming mastership, instead of that of equal and tendered intelligent service. Whoso would lead must first serve and be recognized. But this is straying from our point of insistence, which is that in the domain of government and politics there can be no rights without duties; no privilege without equal vigilance; no freedom without constant resistance to all the encroachments of the influences which come from the opposite spirit. Life is everywhere dual and society is born, trained and maintained, as the offspring thereof. Whichever element of human endeavor—equity or autocracy—obtains the upper hand, will mark all the days with its character. The past brings lessons we should heed. The present hath its duties requiring faithful performance which done now and done continuously, can alone secure all rights to all, now and in the future. This is a philosophy that the republican can least of all afford to ignore. It is one also, that the most intelligent citizen can neglect, only at obvious peril.

THE CENTENNIAL YEAR.—The Centennial jubilee may give birth to many foolish things, but none so foolish as the restoration of Democracy. To celebrate the birth of a nation by restoring to power its would-be assassins, would be a bitter satire on justice and consistency. We must round out our hundredth anniversary by giving an old fashioned welcome to the party that made the Centennial possible. Anything short of a rousing majority for the men and principles that best reflect the sterling patriotism of our early fathers, would be base ingratitude. These men and principles make up the Republican party; to them belongs the honor of a grand Centennial victory.

FORWARD! BY COMPANIES.

As discipline is to an army so is organization to a political party. What is party in the political sense of the term? The banding together of men holding views in common, and desirous of stamping the impress of such views upon the administration of their State or nation. As numerical majorities do not always reap victory in battle, even when all else is even, so political parties do not always issue from campaigns with results proportionate to their numbers. In the former case discipline is essential. Soldiers before engaging on the sanguinary field must have frequent drill meetings, thus not only learning the manual of arms but familiarizing themselves one with another, which association begets confidence and induces a spirit of harmony and mutual determination to achieve victory. Thus we see, or rather have seen, that when discipline and drill are most rigidly observed, a spirit of commendable pride ramifies the organization, from company up to regiment, or as far as associate discipline runs. It is noticeable in this connection that no General, however able, ever rested secure in drilling his men by corps, or divisions, or even by regiments, and no Colonel competent to command, satisfied himself with dress parade or review, but insisted that not only company but squad drill be freely indulged in.

As stated in the outset, what is true as relates to discipline and drill in military organizations applies with equal force to political parties.

The Republicans have a National Executive Committee. Every State in the Union provides a State Executive Committee. Each county has, or should have, a County Central Committee, and every city and town should be similarly provided for, these committees having sub-committees according to necessity or population. The National Committee can do nothing without the aid and co-operation of the State Committees, and the latter but only little without support from sister Committees in their respective commonwealths. But it is too often the case that Republicans content themselves with

State and County Committees, and fail to avail themselves of sympathetic and substantial support naturally growing out of rural Committees, thus, as it were, exposing themselves to the raking fire of their enemies in skirmish line, and drilling by regiment rather than in squads.

As "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," so proper organization is the price of political success. Last fall our party might have been faithfully represented by the image of the ancient god which had neither hands nor feet with which to reach out or advance. Its every member seemed to settle back in his political harness as though he had no load to carry, no responsibility to impel him onward, and the result was defeat, retributive for the apathy which produced it. But the defeat was not a rout, only a stimulus. What we looked upon as Yankee guns proved to be Democratic artillery—when we supposed we were on dress parade we were surprised by the enemy. We did not meet a Bull Run, only a Shiloh surprise. Since then reinforcements have come to us, and now most that is required is drill and organization.

We are now upon the threshold of an important campaign. Let us not put off the work of organization until 1876, but organize at once, and occupy all time intervening between now and November of next year, in filling up our ranks and disciplining our comrades with the truth, faith, and patriotic zeal which is the base and foundation of our political league.

We earnestly entreat every Republican whose eye falls upon this article, to constitute himself a special committee to aid in the work suggested. We have no apprehensions that State Central Committees will not be formed, but are apprehensive lest the forming of sub-committees, in proper numbers, be so long delayed as to render almost nugatory their efficiency. Let county, town and township committees be created to act in conjunction with the State committees, and let the work devolving upon such be actively engaged in, and vigorously accomplished, and the result will be such a Waterloo for the enemy, that the misnomer "Democracy," will not again float upon the political atmosphere of our country an offense to the nostrils of those who love their country and its hallowed institutions.

Before closing, the suggestion might not be amiss that political clubs be freely organized in every possible locality. These serve to stimulate the masses, and infuse a spirit of zeal and earnestness otherwise unavailable. Who can fail to remember the value attaching to the "Wide Awakes" of 1860, and the important part they played in the holy scheme of defeating the cohorts of slavery and national disruption. So, too, the "boys in blue," and other organizations of like character since. None need, or should wait for others to present name, style or work for such clubs. The end and aim is to stimulate electors to a sense of duty, not only to cast their votes on the right side but to serve as recruiting offices and camping grounds for the soldiers of our party. The rallying cry is, or should be, the same now as in the past. The contest upon which we are entering is one between loyal citizens and late rebel leaders. The latter are preparing for a desperate struggle to secure political supremacy. "Change," is the only issue presented by the opposition, and "Change" means the dethronement of loyal men, and enthronement of those who plunged our nation into the vortex of financial distress, and crowded the blue ether above us with the spirits of those who preferred death to national dishonor. "Up boys, and at them."

ONE OF ITS TRIUMPHS.—The Republican party, through its administration of a wise financial system, has paid over $900,000,000 of the public debt in less than ten years, and this in the face of a steady reduction of taxation. This splendid showing may entitle the party to no credit in the eyes of Democracy, but the thoughtful men of the nation will see in this financial exhibit, the proof, strong as holy writ, of the sterling integrity and capacity of the party to govern the Republic wisely and well.

ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.—In the Constitutional Convention, now in session at Lincoln, Nebraska, a proposition is being discussed, with a probability of its incorporation into the new Constitution, submitting to a direct vote of the people the election of United States Senators. This idea seems practicable. Whether true or false, the charge usually follows a successful aspirant for Senatorial honors that his success was dependent and consequent upon corrupt electioneering. While it might be possible for a wealthy man to buy up a sufficient number of State legislators to secure his election to the United States Senate, there are none wealthy enough to purchase the votes of the masses, and while, under the present system, candidates personally or through interested friends, might have the hardihood to approach members of their State Legislatures corruptly, none could be found with effrontery sufficient to make corrupt overtures to the people. Again, one can scarcely conceive why the power to elect United States Senators should be transferred from the people to their representatives, or why electors are not as well qualified to vote for United States Senators as for representatives to their State Legislatures, or in the lower House of Congress. Another thing to be considered in this connection is, it not unfrequently happens that the will of the people is outraged through the operations of the present system. A State may give a majority for one party and, through the apportionment system, elect a representative of the opposition to the United States Senate. There are many notable instances of such, the most modern of which are those in Illinois and Ohio, wherein Douglas defeated Lincoln in '58, with a majority in the State against him, but a majority of State representatives for him; and Thurman was elected to the United States Senate in 1868, though the State of Ohio, in the election of 1867, which brought about such result, elected the Republican State ticket. Adopt the principle proposed by Nebraska, and the will of the people would be reflected as to who should represent them in the United States Senate, as well as in the local councils. Three years ago, this proposition was submitted to the Committee on Platform in the Philadelphia Convention, and favorably considered, but was finally tabled in committee, in the belief that the question had not been sufficiently canvassed by the people, though all acknowledged that it was eminently correct in principle, and would eventually work into popular favor. It is to be hoped that Nebraska will incorporate the idea into its organic law, and thus exhibit its practical workings.

THE DUTIES OF YOUNG MEN.

There are, throughout the country, thousands of young men who are just beginning business life. They have got through their school days, and have arrived at that period when the dependence of the youth merges into the independence of the man. The next five years will determine what they are likely to be in the mature and ripened days in store for them. Fortunate circumstances may lift some above the plane of their individual exertions, but the ninety and nine out of a hundred will be what they make themselves. If they start out determined to win distinction in any branch of business, the chances are in their favor that they will, sooner or later, win it. If they start life with the spirit of indifference, they will drift along with the tide, may secure enough to eat and drink and to clothe themselves, but old age will overtake them not far in advance of the spot where they started.

Therefore, it is all important that the young man should start right, and when certain on this point, should throw his whole soul into the business he has chosen. Success is the result of energy, an intelligent appreciation of life's opportunities, and business courage. The young man who has these elements to rely upon, will seldom fail to achieve what he set out to obtain. If he seeks wealth, it will come to him; if fame, he will secure it; if power, it will be given to him. The degree of his reward will be in proportion to his deserts as a man. There may be exceptions to this, but wherever found they will be attributable to no fault of the man, but rather to those misfortunes which come like sudden storms, giving no warning of their approach, and destroying in an hour the patient work of a life-time. Respectability and honor come from the man, and not the trade he follows. One business is as honorable as another, if it is legitimate. This should be borne in mind by all young men who are about to start out into active business life.

Personal integrity should be the cornerstone of character. Without it, the most brilliant attainments will fail to reach success. The world stands in need of upright men, men who can be relied upon, whose word is as good as a bond, who are proof against the corrupting influences which beset the business man everywhere. No matter how strong the temptation, young men often make a mistake in the choice of an occupation. Through false notions of respectability, they enter upon professions or trades for which they have no adaptability. They seek to become lawyers, doctors, preachers, and are voted failures by all who come in contact with them. They might have made good merchants, or excellent mechanics, but they started wrong, and keep wrong all their lives.

Start right! This is all important. A good blacksmith is a hundred-fold more valuable to a community than a poor doctor, lawyer or preacher. He will make a fortune at his anvil, while these professional moths are starving to death.

The young beginner should cling to honest principles as to the rock of safety. To let go this rock is to drift to certain destruction. The ship which breaks from its moorings on a lee shore is no more certain of destruction than the young man who breaks away from honest principles. Honesty first, industry and intelligence second, are the elements which we commend as the only reliable groundwork for human success.

Last, but not least, vote right! A man owes much to his family, to his business, but he owes more to his country, for without this, what would be home or business to him? In starting life, young men should educate themselves to serve the nation, with the same fidelity with which they apply themselves to business. It is not enough to cast a vote once a year. This is but a fractional part of the duty which a citizen owes to society. He should take part in the primary meetings, have his influence felt in the conventions, and be heard at all times and in all places where his personal influence would tend to elevate politics and secure men of high character for office. When the business men of the country become interested in political affairs, we shall have fewer complaints made of bad or incompetent men being elected to office. It may be difficult to change the habits of old business men in this particular, and bring them to a realization of their duty to the nation, but not so with the young men. They are free to lay down certain duties which must be performed. We urge upon them this sacred duty of citizenship. Let it head the list of obligations, and let its faithful performance be regarded as little short of a religious duty.

To reduce these duties of citizenship to a system that will be a vital force, through combination with others, we urge the young men of the nation to organize Republican clubs in their respective communities, so that, by organized efforts, true reform can be brought about wherever needed. The Republican party has a strong claim upon the young men of the country. It has made possible the government which protects them and the Republic which they love. It is a party of progress, of youthful aspirations, and has within it, subject to greater development, the principles of individual and national success. To the standard of this party, a standard of patriotism, of loyalty, of political integrity, the nation calls its young men. Let them respond to the call, and by their earnest efforts preserve for posterity the rich blessings of self-government, which they now enjoy.

THE New York Tribune, speaking of Connecticut, says that neither party has any very strong men in the Legislature, but of the two the Democrats are the weaker.

POLITICAL REGENERATION.—The accusation has often been made against the policy of the Republican party, and the administrative action and legislation, by which it has been formulated and enforced, that southern reconstruction has never aimed at regeneration. The criticism is expressed, that we have superimposed instead of in-forming, and so re-forming the southern body politic. This criticism rests upon a self-evident proposition; that is, that there must be an interior sense and acceptance of ideas and forces; and that without this, exterior applications are only impositions more or less useless in their effects. The cure must be from the interior, outward. We must have "true inwardness" in the best sense.

All this is true, but when you have broken a limb it is necessary to put it into bandages, so that the natural forces may have the opportunity of knitting together the broken parts and thus reconstruct the avenues by which the functions of the injured limb may be restored.

The analogy holds good for the work that has been done in the South. Bandages have to be applied. Limbs that were broken and disjointed had to be kept where the work of re-knitting could be performed. Outside forces had to be brought in, and the veins running in the patient's system had to be drawn off or conquered by the transfusion into its veins of new forces. But it must always be borne in mind, that the truest and surest growth is from within to without. Our southern friends must not forget that regeneration is the most important result that is to be achieved. One county redeemed from the influences of slavery—where the need of education is fully and freely recognized by all, and wherein civil rights are no longer disputed, is practically a greater honor to the cause of true Republicanism, than the enforcing from the outside on a whole state of laws against which, however, right and necessary it may be, there is still a vigorous public antagonism.

It is essential doubtless that there shall continue to be such an outside influence. But Republicans in the South should remember that they must take heed against depending upon it alone, and see to it steadily, that every interior element of progress is carefully nurtured and encouraged. The primary unit of Republican life is the township or parish. The crowning glory is the nation—resplendent in its strength—slow to interfere with local details and affairs, but swift to maintain the rights of all, when the home forces are no longer in accord with this essential idea, or are too weak to defend it. But we must begin with the unit. If the township be truly Republican—we mean in the larger and not the party sense—the state, will surely be so, and the Union be kept keen and active by constant and intelligent vigilance.

THE OHIO REPUBLICAN NOMINATIONS.

The Republican Convention which met at Columbus, Ohio, on the 2d inst., have done well, both as to nominations and platform declarations.

The State ticket is an excellent one. The honored Republican whose name heads the ticket has already proved his metal. He has served the nation gallantly in the field; ably in Congress, and as Governor, the State which is asked to re-elect him already knows by good service, how efficient an Executive he can be. The ticket throughout is a strong one—representative of the best elements of the great party by which it is nominated, and commending itself to the numerous body of citizens who claim non-partizan positions, by the ability, experience, and uprightness of the several nominees. Acting on the principle of putting forward the best men, the Ohio Republicans, in the following list, present names on which fall no shadow of reproach or stain:

For Governor—Rutherford B. Hayes, Sandusky.

For Lieutenant Governor—Thomas L. Young, Hamilton.

“ Supreme Judge—George W. McIlvaine.

“ Auditor—James Williams, Franklin.

“ Treasurer—J. Minor Milliken, Butler.

“ Public Works—Peter Thacher, Cuyahoga.

The various interests of the State, geographically considered, are fairly represented in these selections, while no larger principles are subordinated by such considerations.

The platform must strike every citizen favorably. It is brief and direct. It does not overload the issues paramount in the State itself by any unnecessary parading of National questions, yet, at the same time, it meets those that are prominent without evasion or disguise. The “Third Term” folly is squarely met, but not unnecessarily dignified by too elaborate reference. On the other hand, there are declarations, such as that of the sixth, which clearly show that the Republican party in Ohio, as elsewhere, have a clear perception of rising and important issues. The most important planks are found in the “Fourth” and “Fifth” paragraphs. These are temperate but explicit, and clearly set forth the duty of those who are not directly opposed to our free schools, and who do not aim to bind Republican America to the policy of that Apostolic Empire, whose seal is in the Vatican, and whose policy it is to make allegiance thereto superior to all secular and temporal government. The Ohio platform deserves careful perusal. Here it is:

“The Republicans of Ohio, in Convention assembled, reaffirming the cardinal principles of their organization, which have become received maxims of policy, State and National, declare, on specific points, the series of sentiments following:

“First. The States are one as a Nation, and all citizens are equal under the laws, and entitled to their fullest protection.

“Second. That policy of finance should be steadily pursued which, without unnecessary shock to business or trade, will ultimately equalize the purchasing capacity of the coin and paper dollar.

“Thurd. We are in favor of a tariff for revenue, with incidental protection to American industry.

“Fourth. We stand by free education, our public school system, the taxation of all for its support, and no division of the school fund.

“Fifth. Under our Republican system of government there should be no connection, direct or indirect, between Church and State, and we oppose all legislation in the interest of any particular sect. Upon this subject we should not fail to profit by the experience of foreign governments, where efforts of the Church to control the State constitute an evil of great magnitude and endangers the power and prosperity of the people.

"Sixth. We demand such revision of the patent laws as will relieve industry from the oppression of monopolies.

"Seventh. A grateful people can never cease to remember the services of our soldiers and sailors, and it is due to them that liberality and generosity should obtain in the adjustment of pay and bounties.

"Eighth. We demand that the public domain shall be scrupulously reserved for occupancy by actual settlers.

"Ninth. The determination of the Government to collect the revenue, and prevent and punish frauds, has our unqualified approval.

"Tenth. That the power of municipal corporations to create debts should be restricted, and local and other expenditures should be so reduced as to diminish taxation.

"Eleventh. The observance of Washington's example in retiring at the close of a second Presidential term, will be in the future, as it has been in the past, regarded as a fundamental rule in the unwritten law of the Republic.

"Twelfth. The distinguished success of his administration, which, to the fame of the patriot soldier, has added that of the capable and judicious statesman, entitles President Grant to the gratitude of his countrymen."

Our Ohio friends have done the preliminary work well. But what remains—that of organization—is of the utmost importance. Time is short and much work is needed. There has been considerable demoralization; some dissatisfaction still exists; but neither are so strong or deep-rooted that energetic work cannot overcome them. We expect to redeem Ohio. The Republicans there are determined, and the votes are on their side, if the proper efforts are properly directed and made. We have no fears but what they will be.

THE UNION FOREVER.

It is certainly gratifying to find the Cincinnati Commercial outspoken in a direction and upon a subject which appeals at once to the patriotism of the people. General Sherman has recorded in his Memoirs that in 1861, on his way to Lancaster, Ohio, he stopped at New Orleans and visited the quartermaster, Col. A. C. Myers, who had resigned from the army and accepted service under the new regime of secession. Myers was in the same room that Sherman himself had occupied when he was there as Commissary, in 1853; the same pictures were on the wall; and the letters "U. S." were on everything. Gen. Sherman asked Myers if he did not feel funny? "No, not at all," said Myers. "The thing was inevitable; secession was a complete success; there would be no war, but the two Governments would settle all matters of business in a friendly spirit! Everybody regarded the change of government as final; that Louisiana, by a mere declaration, was a free and independent State, and could enter into any new alliance or combination she chose."

The Cincinnati Commercial takes the opportunity to remark upon the text: "We find the same doctrine by which the people of Louisiana were beguiled to their ruin, in 1861, in political platforms of this day. The same sort of people who were urging it in 1861, are urging it to-day; and they are as narrow-minded, dull, malicious, and intolerant as they were fourteen years ago. The people at large have learned one exceedingly valuable lesson, however, and that is, that secession means war—instant, utter, overwhelming war. Whatever follies people may hereafter commit, they will not stumble with or wander after their 'States' into a 'Confederacy,' with the impression that they are peaceably asserting a legal right. We, the people of all the townships, municipalities, counties, Territories and States, constitute a nation, and if any county, city or State, attempts to assert its independence, it will find its policy rectified at the point of the bayonet."

It is well that this truth should be borne in mind. No spoken or written folly indicating sympathy with secession, and no action springing from opinions which led to the rebellion, will be tolerated. It is simple treason. The South will find its interest in burying all that provokes antagonism and hinders the final settlement of the questions involved. A turbulent South has been a godsend to the Democratic party; and that party has been busy in keeping alive the strife. But the peace and prosperity of the nation is too deeply connected with the affairs of the South, to allow those affairs to continue the sport of reckless politicians. Long since, would the South have blossomed as the rose, and its citizens been happy and contented, if the earnest efforts of the Republican party had been allowed to bear their legitimate fruit. The measures of reconstruction are designed to unite the South. They are built upon the only foundation which can or should be laid—namely—the equality of all men before the law. When this great truth is recognized in practice, whatever difference of political faith may exist, a healthy public opinion will be formed, and the troubles in the South will be healed by inaugurating an era of wisdom and justice.

PRESERVE THE PURITY OF THE BALLOT-BOX.

No party however strong it may be numerically, can long sustain its popularity if its political campaigns and elections are not conducted with a strict regard to integrity. The war was followed by a large increase of political corruption, and the ballot-box could no longer be relied upon, in all cases, as indicating with certainty who were really the successful candidates. It is generally claimed that the election of John T. Hoffman, for example, as Governor of New York, was illegal, and no official contradiction of the charge has ever been made. New York City became noted, during the reign of Tweed & Co., for ballot stuffing; and there is little doubt that bribery and corruption at elections have been largely practiced in the South, and no doubt, to some extent, in other sections of the Union since the close of the war. But that circumstance must not be accepted as an indication that these practices have become popular with the people. No man not entirely bereft of the spirit of patriotism, to say nothing of character and honesty, will sell his vote or accept a bribe to do that which he honestly believes to be wrong. The temptation of pinching poverty will have no influence upon his decision. He will spurn the degrading tender, and treat the candidate who offers it directly, or through his friends, with contempt; and this with exceptional cases and in limited localities, is the public sentiment and practice.

Yet ambitious aspirants for office will not scruple to approach honest voters, or employ their friends to do it for them, with sugar-coated bribes in various forms; and it sometimes happens that honest citizens are drawn into their meshes and forced to vote for certain candidates against their conscientious convictions of duty.

Hence, the opinion is daily gaining strength in the public mind, that additional safeguards are required to meet just such cases, and preserve more thoroughly the public integrity and purity of the ballot-box.

This matter was brought to the notice of the Constitutional Convention, held in Nebraska a few days ago, by J. W. Dawes, one of the delegates, who offered the following as a proper article to be incorporated in the new State Constitution. It seems to be sufficiently clear and binding even for these degenerate times of legislative corruption:

Members of the Legislature before they enter upon their official duties, shall take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation:

“I do solemnly swear (affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of Nebraska, and will faithfully discharge the duties of Senator or Representative—to the best of my ability, and that I have not, knowingly or intentionally paid or contributed anything or made any promise in the nature of a bribe to directly or indirectly influence any vote at the election at which I was chosen to fill the said office, and have not accepted, nor will I accept or receive directly or indirectly, any money or other valuable thing from any corporation, company or person, for any vote or influence I may give, or withhold on any bill, resolution or appropriation, or for any other official act.”

This oath shall be administered by a Judge of the Supreme or Circuit Court, in the hall of the House to which the member is elected, and the Secretary of State shall record and file the oath subscribed by each member. Any member who shall refuse to take the oath herein prescribed shall forfeit his office; and every member who shall be convicted of having sworn falsely to, or of violating this said oath, shall forfeit his office and be disqualified thereafter from holding any office of profit or trust in this State.

It matters not what may be the practice of political parties in other countries, it is enough for us to know, that in a Republic and under a Republican form of government, the public good requires that all political institutions must be preserved in their purity. This is unquestionably the popular sentiment of the people throughout the American Union. Political fraud is repugnant to good citizenship; it is offensive to the spirit of Republicanism, and degrading to our manhood. But in no form is it more offensive than when practiced in an election campaign, and in connection with the ballot-box.

Let us therefore by State legislation and other practical safeguards, labor to preserve our political institutions of every form from all those practices which tend to weaken them in the eyes of honest men and destroy their legitimate influences upon society.

FIDELITY TO DUTY AS REPUBLICANS

For a neat disposal of a subject in few words, this from the Buffalo Express is about as good as anything that could have been said:

"There is ample scope in our political life for the exercise of individual liberty and independence without making war upon the few cardinal principles that form the foundation of political parties, and so of the government. The individuality and independence that Senator Schurz exercised too much resembled the independence of the bushwhacker who plunders with judicial impartiality the corpses of both armies. Plain, common people will regard his war upon the Republican party as simply treason to it."

At the recent meeting of the Social Science Association, held in Detroit, Professor Kent read a paper on political parties, their organization and management, and the costs thereof. The Professor remarked that political parties are a necessity of the age, and are fully developed in free countries. Through them come reforms. Rarely can a man or a newspaper hold aloof from a party and have much influence. Direct influence on governmental action is only obtained by party ties. A leader must not step outside his party; if he does, influence and leadership will desert him. The ideal after which a party should strive, is to put its best and wisest men at the head. In the management of parties the chief defects are the great excess of party prejudices manifested in the ultra views and statements of the most intelligent men. There is no remedy for this except a gradual education towards a closer unity of thought. The Professor considered it the sacred duty of good citizens in these days to take a deeper interest in politics. He held that teachers should enforce this, and that preachers should preach it. Every citizen should belong to some party, and strive to purify it by attending the primaries, and by defeating unworthy nominations. Perfection is impossible, but by such means as these much will be gained and the world be benefitted.

The Professor is right, and his suggestions are worthy of attention. The Republican party which has brought the nation through its peril, and whose principles are those of the best and wisest of its citizens, is the only party capable of keeping the nation abreast of the progress of the age. Had Republicans done their duty in the last elections, no such anomaly as a Democratic House of Representatives could have existed in the last quarter of the 19th century. Regret for past neglect is useless, unless accompanied by reformation. Important public questions and living issues have yet to be met and settled; the Republican party is the only party which possesses the requisite intelligence and patriotism to deal with them. Democratic professions and Democratic practice are two different things. The Democratic leaders say that their party will not disturb what the Republicans have done, but Democrats are busy in the South and elsewhere, fanning the embers of discontent and inflaming sectional prejudice for their own selfish ends. The next Presidential election will determine the political character of the country for years to come. If the doctrine of State Rights is to keep one portion of the people always hovering on the brink of rebellion and resisting Federal authority, it will be through Democratic influence. It is said that the issue in the next campaign will be the same as was the issue in 1860—STATE RIGHTS versus POPULAR RIGHTS AND HUMAN RIGHTS. No greater calamity can overtake the country than Democratic ascendancy. And this can only be guarded against by Republicans doing their duty—their whole duty.

Suppose, among so large a number of earnest Republicans, there may be some disagreement on minor political points, is it enough to justify men in remaining away from the polls, or in casting their ballots for the Democratic party? If any republican does this he does it with his eyes open. We have a Democratic House of Representatives precisely from this cause. And every Republican voting against his party, or abstaining from voting, strengthens the Democratic party. Mr. Schurz is a man of admitted ability and was eminently capable of serving his country; but he became wiser than the Republican party that made him and gave him the opportunity of service. And what was the consequence? His influence left him; his eloquence was as beating the air; and instead of being great in the Senate Chamber, his pride of talent and persistent bickering, fault-finding, and charges against public men whose character was certainly as pure as his own, reduced him to a more pitiable condition of insignificance than if his ability had been below mediocrity. And more, his unhappy position rendered it impossible that he should return to the Senate; and he may be charged with having fastened on the State of Missouri, a rebel Democrat for the Senatorial term. Therein he assisted the Democratic party in their schemes, though he says he holds Republican principles. Let then those Republicans who are disposed to grumble, put aside their differences and labor to secure the triumph of the Republican party. For in that triumph the country secures peace and prosperity and all the attendant blessings of National advancement at home and abroad.

HOW DID THE SOUTH ACCEPT THE SITUATION?

The return of the rebel States to a place in the Union which their treason had sought to destroy, was very different from the entry of the States into the Union when the Union was first formed. All had emerged from a war in which all had more or less participated—a war for the freedom and well-being of man, and not on behalf of bondage. Then, morally and politically, the equality of the States was recognized, and they were bound together by ties of mutual respect and esteem for the part they had severally taken in founding the Republic. This Union of the fathers the seceding States rebelled against; and if their rebellion had been successful, the Confederate States would have stood confronting us as a Slave Power, on the same soil as the remnant of the old Union, with freedom as its corner stone. But in the providence of God the Union was preserved; and throughout the territory of the United States no sigh of a slave ascends to heaven.

It is a mark of wisdom in a people to review the lessons of history, as it tends to strengthen patriotism and solve difficulties. In 1865, as the end of the war approached and its cause was obviously lost, the South expected to be held responsible for its treason—the leaders being apprehensive that their punishment might be severe. The surrender of the Southern armies on the generous terms proposed, somewhat allayed that apprehension. And during the surprise discovery that none of them for the pains and penalties were willing to enter in or pledge for their future eral authorities were aware of this, and were not slow to ascribe it to the magnanimity shown. Not a rebel suffered in his person for the crime of resorting to arms to dismember the country. The only protection taken was to parole on honor the leaders and the rank and file, who were thenceforward to obey the laws and the authority of the United States.

A war of such intensity and magnitude, in its results, disorganized society in the South, and desolated its most fruitful regions. In the act of secession by force, the South had wrought a fearful and widespread ruin. And, though the magnanimity of the North forbore inflicting additional punishment, it was impossible to save the South from the punishment of its own deeds. It had to be rebuilt, reconstructed, restored, and placed in a way to secure the blessings derived from loyalty to freedom. Treason had failed, and could not be usefully employed in restoration. Nor could the principles and prejudices which had led the South to secession be of service in its return to the Union. It was clear that the South must commence anew, and that the moral and political principles of freedom alone were of value. A new and renovated South was expected to arise from the waste and decay of the old. The expectation was just, all things considered; and the world looked for a fresh example of wise and tolerant government. Old habits, with other disqualifications, prevented the old leaders in Southern politics from taking a prominent part. They held opinions which were behind the age, which were unsuited to the new condition, which the world rejected as unfriendly to progress. The old methods and measures of slave government were altogether out of place, and must give way to what was more in accord with the needs of the occasion. If chaos reigned, and confusion perplexed, the material was at hand to receive the impress of modern civilization. New men with new ideas were there, whose desire was to introduce the new principles adapted to the new elements of Southern society; and Federal legislation lent its powerful aid. It might be supposed that those men and those measures would, under the circumstances, have received hearty welcome. There was a time when they would have been so received; but impunity and evil counsels wrought mischief. The situation was not accepted in good faith, though prominent Democrats learned to speak the words until they came to indicate a combined and laborious effort to defeat reconstruction. As the Democratic party permitted the war for secession, if it was not instigated by it, the Democratic party cannot reconstruct the South, so that the South and the North shall be a homogeneous people. Nor can the work be done by Southern leaders, who forget that times have changed, and that the old exclusiveness and tyranny of slavery have passed away forever. The South will be a source of vexation and turmoil until the Golden Rule shall find a home in every Southern heart. How long will Southerners fight against their best interests and seek by every pretext and injustice to delay what is inevitable? What is morally wrong can never be politically right. The new conditions of Southern society must be known, felt, and appreciated. The old conditions can never return. There must be freedom of thought and action; freedom in the exercise of political rights; freedom to labor and secure the rewards of labor. There must be State education provided for the youth of both sexes. There must be freedom for intelligence to thrive—to gain its livelihood in the collision of mind with mind, and the certainty of enjoying the fruits in safety. In a word, there must be provided by the South for all men, friends and strangers, that which shall produce a sense of safety; and the only source of safety on earth is justice between man and man and trust in Almighty God.

AGRICULTURAL WARNINGS.—The benefits arising from the forecast of "Old Probabilities" are by no means slight, but they are likely to be soon largely increased as regards agricultural districts. This will form one of the principal subjects of discussion at the forthcoming Meteorological Congress at Paris, and we learn that the French Telegraphic Administration has appointed two delegates to examine, in connection with the Board of Observatory, what steps should be taken to collect by wire meteorological information, in order to send warnings to agricultural districts.

THE WHISKY FRAUDS.

The New York Nation presents its readers with the following :

Consider for one moment what has happened. The Secretary of the Treasury discovers, by means of outside informers, that a very large number of manufacturers, in various parts of the country, are engaged in the commission of systematic frauds on the Government, on an enormous scale. Far from giving instructions, however, to the officers of the Government, specially charged with the collection of the revenue, to put the law in force against the delinquents, he carefully conceals from them all knowledge of his discovery; and, indeed, treats them throughout as accomplices in the fraud, and employs new and unofficial agents to bring his plans to maturity. The officers of the Government, too, on getting an inkling of what is going on, far from hastening to the support of their chief, at once place themselves at the disposal of the criminals, and render them every assistance in their power, by information and otherwise; so that to outwit its own servants the Government is actually obliged to invent a new cipher.

There is a class of persons whose blame is praise, and, on the other hand, whose praise is blame. In like manner, there is a class of journals which adopt this line of criticism, and which not only belittle themselves, but the cause they advocate. Notably of this class is the New York Nation, a journal as full of crotchets as a nervous beauty, and as doubtful of good results from a bold action as the most confirmed coward. Could it hear the remarks of its friends, it might pause in its career, for however timid it may be, the nation of men does not share its misgivings on the discovery and treatment of the whisky frauds.

The people know, if the New York Nation does not, that revenue legislation aims at the collection of taxes, and that the shrewdest intellects will be employed to defeat the law. Congress has, therefore, lodged the power of detection in the hands of the Treasury Department, which is responsible for the collection of taxes. With these facts borne in mind, the fears of the New York Nation are not the fears of the American people.

It has been said that the chief labor of the Treasury is to enforce the revenue laws, and to see that these laws are not evaded. In accordance with this general statement, the appointment of officers and the making of regulations, there has always been a watchful eye kept on the manufacturers of articles, say whisky, on which tax is to be levied, in order that the tax may reach the Treasury. To thwart illegal combinations and check frauds, which deprived the Government of revenue, officers of the Internal Revenue were instructed to report the production of whisky and the tax it ought to yield, and as part of the estimates was calculated on these reports, coupled with the amount of previous collections, if the revenue fell short by any large sum, it was sure to attract attention and lead to investigation. Now, it happened that the revenue from whisky did fall short of what was expected. A record was in existence, not only of the distillers, but of the capacity of their distilleries. More than this, the whisky market was as closely watched as the gold market, by officers whose duty it was to note its operations; and when it was found that whisky was abundant and cheap, while the revenue from it shrank, is there any cause for surprise when we learn that the Government heard of the facts? But if the Government received communications, as it frequently does, from outside parties, the Government had its plans and machinery in constant operation, although it was discreetly silent.

In the ordinary course of business at the Treasury, frauds are discovered every day, and its action is instant and vigorous. In the case of the whisky frauds, as they developed in magnitude and extent, there was no coup de main. There was no outcry to alarm; there was no doubt of reaching around them and probing their depth and breadth. Shrewder heads, with nimbler brains, were employed, than ever vs of the New York Nation heads and nimbler brains; the interest of the nation was done in the simple When the facts came

Mr. Bristow, and it became his duty to act, he did not hesitate a moment. The Executive was consulted, and the highest officer in the Government lent his aid to the Secretary, and also recognized the call of duty. What instrumentality should be used under the law, was dictated by the experience of the President and Mr. Bristow, and their knowledge of men is certainly not small. They had to reach the guilty parties. The frauds known had been perpetrated almost in the eyes of the revenue officers. If, therefore, measures were taken to punish the guilty, as well as to recover the revenue unpaid, it was unreasonable to expect that the revenue officers would be asked to assist. That they had failed to make the discovery of fraud themselves disqualified them for the task. If they were honest, it was their misfortune to be incapable. But if they had connived at the fraudulent proceedings of the whisky ring, their exclusion in the premises was an act of wisdom. And it may be said here, that while sympathy with honest men may fairly be displayed, with those officers who turn against the Government to aid the ring, their deeds are an evidence of guilt, and the end with them is not yet.

Does it become the Nation to parade the assertion that the civil service is rotten, because of its dishonesty through small pay; that revenue officers receive more from the distillers to allow the Government to be defrauded than the salaries paid by the Government? This may be morality in the city of Tweed, but where such men as Tweed could not live, the people have been taught better. On the subject of appointments to office, the position of the President is always one of difficulty. He does not know the men personally, and must rely upon the written or oral testimony presented to him. The officers in whose districts frauds were discovered are, in almost all cases, men moving in the best society, against whom was no taint of suspicion. They would have passed the purest civil service of any country with honor; but human nature is not perfect, and the most shining appearance of virtue becomes reality, only when strong enough to resist temptation. But a Republican administration has been persistent in its endeavor to secure honest men and an honest collection of the revenue, and it may be said with truth that it has always punished those who betrayed their trust.

We have only to repeat that when the disclosures in the whisky frauds were made, the machinery of the Government, detecting frauds daily, simply widened the area of its operations. The machinery was there in full play, and the operators were on duty and watchful. It was no unusual display of effort. It was no spasmodic exercise of power. There was no ulterior object in view. There was, however, a stern determination to find out the guilty parties, distillers and officers, and to put the law in force to punish them, while the Government recovered the revenue of which it had been defrauded.

NATIONAL BANKRUPTCY.—Democratic supremacy means national bankruptcy. The payment of its honest debts has been a task which has taxed the nation to its utmost. It has yet to pay nearly $2,000,000,000 of debt, incurred to put down the rebellion, for which the Democratic party stands responsible. Add to this, and other legitimate expenses, the debts of the Southern States, their war claims, the refunding of the cotton tax, the payment for slaves set free, all favorite schemes of Southern Democracy, and the nation would stagger under a load of debt that would end in National bankruptcy. This is but one of the dangers which would follow in the track of Democratic restoration.

FIRELESS ENGINES ON TRAMWAYS.—Experiments have been made in Belgium to test a locomotive's power to work after the fire has been dropped, and M. Pichault publishes the result in the Annales Industrielles. It has been conclusively shown "that the employment of an ordinary engine fed from a simple hot water tank, for drawing cars along tramways, is possible, and even easy, not only in theory, but also in practice." The publication of these facts takes place at the time of the death of Sir Goldsworthy Gurney, who was so persevering in his attempts to get steam carriages used for ordinary traffic in Great Britain. This subject will certainly not be permitted to remain a mere theory.

NATIONAL UNITY—POLITICAL AND RELIGIOUS.

The friends of Christianity and the working advocates of National unity of sentiment have watched with intense interest the recent proceedings of the Churches, North and South, with a view to re-union and fellowship. It is to be regretted, however, that up to this time the work has not been productive of very encouraging results. It is not necessary here to inquire where the blame lies. It is enough to know that the grave responsibilities resting upon the Christian Churches, North and South, cannot be ignored with impunity. The growing enthusiasm in favor of harmony and unity of political and religious sentiment and action, must not be impeded by the absence of Christian fellowship among Church organizations. If the Christian communities, North and South, cannot work successfully, through their Churches, to bring the people together in harmony, there is but one other course to pursue, and that is to go forward with the work independent of those organizations.

It should be distinctly understood, as the fact is almost universally admitted, that there is no cause for the continued division of the Southern and Northern branches of the Presbyterian Church, or of any of the professedly Christian Churches that have been separated from the close of the war up to this time. If they had been guided by the spirit and lessons of Him who said, "Blessed are the peace-makers, for they shall inherit the earth," the Churches would have made the first advances after the close of the war toward universal unity and harmony; but they have passed through a period of ten years and are still divided in spirit and action. Are they aware of the wrong they are thus doing to the communities, to the nations, and to the Cause they have espoused and profess to be anxious to advance? Even in a pecuniary point of view they are defeating their own interests by depleting their ranks and weakening their power.

It is gratifying, however, to note the fact, that the Young Men's Christian Associations, North and South, are a unit in effort, and have become a powerful element in the work of conciliation and concord among all classes, in every section of the Union. Their re-union, a few days ago, in the city of Richmond, Virginia, so recently the Capital of the Confederate States, was of the most cordial character. Their prayers, addresses and proceedings all signified an earnest desire to cement the affections of the communities and labor together for universal harmony and Christian amity in the future. The citizens manifested their hospitality by throwing open their houses and inviting the delegates from the North and the South alike to their tables.

One of the Union addresses made during the four days' proceedings was by Hon. Robert Ould, the late Confederate Commissioner for the exchange of prisoners, and his words were not accepted by the entire audience as expressing the emotions and feelings of a sincere man.

We have a farther evidence of the progress of the spirit of unity and harmony outside of the Churches, in the fact that the Masonic Order and the Odd Fellows, as well as other lay organizations, are respectively a unit, North and South, in the work of National unity. In short, the only considerable impediment to a general movement toward universal unity of feeling and interest, is found in the very organization that might reasonably be expected to be foremost in the work. How long this may continue it is not easy to predict; but there is reason to hope that the Church opposition will soon yield to the popular sentiment, if not to Christian principle, and throw its power in favor of the popular movement for a unity of sentiment and social and political harmony.

TRICHINÆ IN THE WILD HOG.—It has until recently been supposed trichinæ were the exclusive possession of the domesticated breeds of the hog. Their discovery in the wild German boar is of practical, as well as of scientific value, and throws light on some difficult questions concerning hereditary trichinæ and the influence of domestication.

THE ELECTIONS—PRIMARY MEASURES.

The nation is now entering upon a period during which, in a political point of view, each citizen will be called to the discharge of important duties to his country. In many of the States Conventions have been or will soon be called, for the purpose of nominating State officers, and in some cases Representatives in Congress. The campaign will then open and be continued until the Fall elections, which occur this year in the following order :

Kentucky.....	Monday, Aug. 2, 1875
California.....	Wed'ay, Sept. 1, 1875
Arkansas.....	Monday, Sept. 6, 1875
Maine.....	Monday, Sept. 13, 1875
Iowa.....	Tuesday, Oct. 12, 1875
Ohio.....	Tuesday, Oct. 12, 1875
Virginia.....	Tuesday, Nov. 2, 1875
Kansas.....	Tuesday, Nov. 2, 1875
Maryland.....	Tuesday, Nov. 2, 1875
Massachusetts.....	Tuesday, Nov. 2, 1875
Mississippi.....	Tuesday, Nov. 2, 1875
Minnesota.....	Tuesday, Nov. 2, 1875
Missouri.....	Tuesday, Nov. 2, 1875
New York.....	Tuesday, Nov. 2, 1875
New Jersey.....	Tuesday, Nov. 2, 1875
Pennsylvania.....	Tuesday, Nov. 2, 1875
Texas.....	Tuesday, Dec. 7, 1875

Each of these elections will carry with it more than ordinary importance, as the result will have a direct bearing of more or less weight upon the Presidential and Congressional elections of the ensuing year. In fact the Campaigning work will practically be continuous from this time until the next Presidential vote is cast.

In all kinds of enterprise a good commencement is essential to success. It is especially so in an election contest. The tone and spirit of the primary meetings may, with a large degree of confidence, be taken as indicating final results. The first object is to have the primary meetings in central localities, and in halls of easy access. General publicity should be given of the time and place of meeting, and the notices should bear on their face an invitation for a full attendance. In the next place, every voter should feel it to be his duty to be present. Much depends on the character of the meeting. If it is composed of intelligent citizens, among whom are embraced the property-holders of the community, there is every reason to believe that every part of the proceedings will be harmonious, and candidates will be selected whose fitness for the places for which they have been designated will be a guarantee of their strength, popularity and election. If, however, as is too often the case in late years, the primary meetings are left entirely to irresponsible and speculating politicians, in four cases out of five aspirants will thrust themselves into notice who are without qualifications, character or weight, and whose nomination could scarcely fail to be followed by defeat.

Another precaution which should never, under any circumstances, be lost sight of, is harmony of action, after the selection of candidates has been made, the whole strength and influence of the patriotic portion of the community, and friends of the Union should be exerted in favor of their election.

It will not do for aspirants to stand in the way if the choice of the people is clearly indicated in another direction. Self-abnegation in favor of the public interests, is the governing impulse in the breast of the patriot, and where this feeling prevails there can be no probability of divisions and party splits.

The party of progress is numerically much stronger than the opposition, and, with the best men for candidates and a strong "pull all together," their success is certain.

A GLORIOUS RECORD.—The history of the Republican party is the history of the nation during its most glorious period. It came into existence for the defense of the Republic, it will retire when its teachings become as strong in the popular heart as the unwritten law of the land. It sprang, full armed, into life and activity by the decree of loyalty, and it will lay aside its power when loyalty has no further use for it. That time has not yet come; there is work still unfinished. There is a debt to be paid; a broader freedom in the South to be established; civil and religious liberty to be made more secure. The nation will not entrust this work to the Democratic party.

SECESSION VS. RECONSTRUCTION.

"Ben" Hill, of Georgia, who will be in the next House, and is sure to divide with Lamar, of Mississippi, the leadership of the Southern Democrats, has uttered the Shibboleth of the Confederate campaign. In substance, he says: We, the Confederates, have abandoned secession, and you, the North, must give up reconstruction.

No other words than these could be found so more tersely express the whole contest. The South abandons secession, if they do, and we who conquered it are to abandon liberty and the hope of finally establishing Republican equity and unity. In order that we may live at peace with "Ben" Hill and his tribe, we are to surrender. That is what it means; nothing less, and a great deal more. This same orator and leader recently said that we (the South) must be let alone, to control our own labor in our own way. One of his intimates, also a reorganized leader of the Confederate politicians, Governor Smith, of Georgia, not long ago illustrated what was meant by "our own way," in saying that they could preserve their plantation system and rebuild it on a baronial plan. Sounding words, but having an ominous meaning. It means that the laborer of the South is to be enslaved to society there. While nominally free, he is to be practically a serf.

This is the whole of it. We are coolly asked to believe that the South gives up secession. In that, Hill falsified. Secession was destroyed. The indissolubility of the Union is sealed in the blood of half a million of men, North and South, who fell on one or the other side of the mad attempt to destroy it. The South, as represented by Hill and Lamar, Jeff Davis and Bob Toombs, gives up nothing. It surrenders only because it must.

To-day their devotion to the doctrine of State sovereignty is as extreme as it was in 1860. Only zeal, therefore, is tempered by the discretion our bayonets have enforced. Other methods are to be used. Other means are to be organized. One of them is found in the systematic attempt that has been made since Ku-Kluxism proved a terror which turned and rended its contrivers, to make the loyal people believe that reconstruction has been a breeder of corruption and the fecund propagator of bad and barbaric government. The object is self-evident. We ought to give it up, as the South has given up secession. There might be something in this, if the latter part of the proposition was true, instead of being absolutely false.

State sovereignty, as inculcated South, as sustained North by Eaton, Bayard, Thurman, Allen, Hendricks & Co., leads inevitably to disintegration, secession, or the support of a strong, self-willed Chieftain like Andrew Jackson, who, to preserve the national unity, will substitute his will for law, his policy for the constitution, and so pave the way for the supremacy of the Executive power, establishing the one-man or autocratic idea for that balanced average of co-ordinate forces, which is the most sagacious feature of our system.

That reconstruction which we are so coolly asked to give up, means the reverse of all this. In spite of the lapses and errors which have arisen because the plans adopted have been too lenient, compromising too much with the "Ben" Hill element, its result is sure, in the creation of free labor, equal citizenship, the broadening of educational opportunities, and the growth, if slow, of all the complex features of a free society, controlled by law equally made and enforced, and moving forward orderly towards the establishment of all the varied interests of Republican civilization, such as is seen around us, in the States that conquered secession and have well maintained reconstruction.

Since the Democratic party power in Connecticut the re State debt has ceased. During the rate of taxation having been the Legislature of 1873, the cost of the State have exceeded the revenue by nearly one hundred thousand dollars. Comment is needless.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The attitude of the Roman Catholic Church towards our public school system is one of aggression. It desires to get control of the education of the young with a view to priestly instruction. Our common school system is the offspring of a free people, and could only exist in a country of free institutions. Indeed, it is unsuited to the habit of priestly tyranny, which could only alter its character and destroy its virtue. The Romish Church dreads the public school because the youth instructed there know nothing of priestly intolerance. Bishop McQuaid at Cincinnati denounced the public schools of that State as "Godless schools," as there was no religious teaching. The outrage perpetrated by the Bishop, and of which he ought to be ashamed, consisted in the fact that the reading of the Bible in the public schools of Cincinnati was dispensed with through Roman Catholic influence. A State does not undertake to teach religion; but among Christian nations, in the education of children, the Bible is not an unknown book. A religious sect in this country like the Roman Catholic Church, which banishes the Bible from the public schools in a locality where the ignorance of its church members abounds, cannot stigmatise those schools as "Godless" on that account without deserving and receiving severe rebuke. What it gains in Cincinnati in this respect, it will lose with contempt in States where the Roman sect has less power.

Is it not strange that in Rome where the Pope dwells, and the whole machinery of the Catholic Church is at work, the Roman people neither love the Pope nor the church? They desire to break away from all priestly instruction and have their children educated to become good citizens. They find that schools under the supervision of priests are not such as they desire to perpetuate. Even the Romish "Parochial Schools," now clamored for by the Catholic priesthood of New York, the Romans hate, and will not have. There are, therefore, "Godless schools" in Rome which send out pupils better trained for the duties of life than those taught by the priests.

Moreover, the political power of the priesthood is curtailed in Rome, and the Romans are not to be hoodwinked as to the political character of the Catholic Church. In the "Godless schools" in Rome the Bible is read, and the boys and girls are taught to love their country and be loyal to their sovereign, while the pupils in clerical schools are not, but taught that their fidelity is due first of all, to the Pope.

The difference is great. The elements of patriotism and obedience to law are wanting as subjects of instruction in clerical schools, which exist in the public schools of this country. The founders of public schools and those who support them desire that they shall be made available for the instruction of children in the best and noblest precepts of citizenship. Where the Roman Catholic Church is powerless for political evil, the children read the Word of God with profit. The Republican party is the party of education; and has done more to extend the public school system during the last decade than the Democratic party during its whole existence. The Democratic party, for political reasons, is in league with the Roman Catholic Church. That party will aid the church in its designs for the sake of the Catholic vote, which is cast at the bidding of the priesthood. Free public education is one of the cardinal doctrines of the Republican party; and it expects the support of every right thinking man; for its principles are those which alone can preserve the freedom of the country, and keep it in the true path of progress.

GEN. FITZHUGH LEE, in a letter to General Bartlett, says: "Your words in reference to Federal soldiers are equally applicable to the Confederate soldiers, for they too 'have a prejudice in favor of peace,' and I fully agree with you that 'between the soldiers of the two great sections of our great country fraternal relations were established long ago,' and we feel that if such a felicitous companionship of sentiment could have found a resting-place in the hearts of other classes of people, the rehabilitation of the South would long since have been assured."

MR. BRISTOW'S VIEWS OF THE WAR AND ITS RESULTS.

Mr. Bristow's address at Cave Hill Cemetery embodied more than is usually to be heard on such occasions, and was too significant to be allowed to fade from the memory. Mr. Bristow spoke in his native State to an audience chiefly composed of the people of Kentucky; and he took the opportunity of expressing his views upon the war and its results; and upon the new conditions and duties imposed upon the South. He appears to have adopted that course from two motives, both actively prominent and both working harmoniously, namely: First:—He felt that he was an American citizen, proud of the country of his birth and loving it better than life. And secondly: He felt the value of the teachings of experience and the advantage it gave to a public man. His experience in public affairs had been great, and he was able to take a wider range, and even look beneath the surface of things of which the world knew nothing, save from hearsay. For he was one of the men whose daily lives make history, and who have to deal with great questions, not only as patriots, but as statesmen—statesmen whose utterances sway the public mind and direct it to secure and preserve the blessings purchased through the pain and suffering of the past.

"Although ten years have passed," said Mr. Bristow, "since the conflict ended," it is even now too soon to know and appreciate, to their fullest extent, its beneficent results, or its influence upon the destiny of a great people." The object and conduct of the war was not left to the fortuitous combinations and strategy of men in civil life or in the field, but was influenced by a power which, while unseen by mortal eye, governs and sustains the heart of man. As there was no malice in the conflict of the mighty armies of the Union and their illustrious chiefs, so, was there a controlling influence which made them yearn that that Union should be unbroken, and all that had wrought the mischief in the South should be moved out of the Nation's pathway in the restoration of the future. The war, dreadful as it was, was rendered absolutely inevitable, in order to give completeness to the work of the fathers, and to place the Republic on a sure foundation. Mr. Bristow said that "the Government for which the soldiers of the Federal armies went forth to battle has not only been saved from overthrow, but its foundations are made deeper and broader. The fundamental idea upon which the great founders builded has been carried to its logical result. The political axiom of our fathers, 'that all men are created equal, and that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness,' has found fuller illustration and broader application."

Until the end of the war, it was clear that every blow struck at wrong was to open an avenue for the establishment of human right and justice. And it may be said that the echo of those blows on this continent was heard throughout Christendom; and their echo will be heard through the coming ages, until the rights of humanity are everywhere recognized throughout the world. The eloquent words of Mr. Bristow on the subject of the destruction of slavery will find a ready response from thoughtful and patriotic men. He says:

"I but declare a truth, which will not be controverted or questioned by any considerable number of intelligent persons, when I assert that a great blight has been removed from the South by the abolition of slavery. It requires no prophet to foretell, that sooner or later, the South must enter upon a career of unexampled prosperity under the influence of free institutions. Her resources are, practically, boundless. Her fertile soil, her rich mineral deposits, her propitious climate, all point to future wealth and power. Free labor must and will develop these, as it has already done in the less favored region of the North. The causes which have operated since the close of the civil war to retard the onward movement and check the prosperity of the South might be easily traced."

The noble sentiment of Mr. Lincoln at Gettysburg that the soldiers who had fallen on that celebrated battle-field gave their lives that a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, should not per-from the earth, was referred to by Mr. Bristow, who declared that a nobler sentiment in fitter words was never uttered. Mr. Bristow bore testimony to the courage and endurance of the men of the South—that they fought for what they believed to be right, however they might have been misled by false theories of government, or deluded by the artful teachings of cunning and ambitious leaders. But our troops too, fought for principles, and the principles they fought for are the principles which must prevail in the accomplishment of our National reunion. The two grand results of the war which, said Mr. Bristow, more than compensates for all the bereavements and vast expenditure and waste of money, are the extinction of slavery and the recognized indissolubility of our National Union; and, the time is not far distant when these will be admitted and accepted as blessings by the people of every section. We have a right to insist upon practical loyalty to the country and cheerful obedience to its constitution and laws. With such loyalty and obedience, sectional animosities would die out, and the bitter discussion of controversies over the struggles of the war, give way to a more generous and genial occupation. The revolution in England in the seventeenth century produced a similar loyalty among the leaders and the people, over whom Cromwell ruled as Protector—and England flourished. And holding the South to the exhibition of such loyalty, Mr. Bristow concluded with the following earnest appeal:

“May we not, then, look forward with assured confidence to the time in the near future when all intelligent men, North and South, will not only accept the results of the late conflict, but will recognize the blessings that flow from it and admit that any other issue would have been an irreparable calamity to both sections of the country. While we must differ from those who sought to dissolve the Union, and look from a different standpoint upon the history of the struggle that ensued, we may safely concede to them the right to hold such opinions as they like in respect of the past, and claim from them only a cheerful and hearty loyalty to the present and future. And why should this not be so? Are we not bound together by ties of consanguinity and community of material interests? Whatever promotes discord, or weakens our common Government, threatens danger and disaster to all alike; and whatever gives strength and perpetuity to our free institutions promises blessings to the people in every part of the country, and to their posterity. God speed the time when the men of the North and of the South shall vie with each other in efforts to rebuild the waste places, to promote the general welfare, and to advance by all proper means the greatness and prosperity of our common country!”

A STATE PROHIBITION CONVENTION was held at Harrisburg, Pa., on the 17th of June, which placed in nomination as Governor, Dr. R. A. Brown, of Lawrence county, and E. F. Pennypacker, of Chester, for State Treasurer. The speeches were as intemperate in denunciation of Governor Hartranft, and of political parties generally, as could be expected from a body belonging to what has been aptly termed a “parasite party.” The resolutions are a curiosity. By the first motion it is declared the State should not allow the manufacture or sale of liquors; that licenses cannot limit; that as a political issue temperance transcends all others; that none but temperance men should be elected or appointed to office, and that other parties are untrustworthy, venal, and are conspirators against the public peace. Governor Hartranft is denounced for signing the law repealing the local option act. Other resolutions ask the appointment of a commission to investigate the liquor traffic, endorse the temperance crusade, declare the labor troubles largely due to intemperance, and denounce all ecclesiastical interference with the public school revenues. For all this success is hoped for by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit and the power of an Omnipotent God. The resolution and proceedings vividly recall Æsop’s fable of the beleaguered city, and the council its people held as to means of defence, when the courier insisted that for fortifications there was “nothing like leather.”

THE recent New Hampshire contest involved this point—re-districting of the State. The democrats feared that the republicans, if allowed to control the Senate, would secure some advantage in the next Legislature, which is to elect Senator Cragin’s successor. The Senate being democratic, can prevent the passage of any re-districting bill that does not suit its majority.

CALIFORNIA REPUBLICAN PLATFORM.

All reports from California are of a cheering character, and the Republicans there present an unbroken front. For the first time for some years past there are no internal dissensions, and this may be accepted as evidence of coming victory. The resolutions adopted at the State Convention, held June 11th, in San Francisco, are of no uncertain sound, as to either National or State affairs. The latter has, in some aspects, an importance not second even to those of a more general character.

Senator Sargent presided, and the Hon. George C. Gorham, Secretary of the U. S. Senate, led off in vigorous support of the bold declarations passed, relating to the railroad issue. These gentlemen have heretofore been proclaimed by the opposition press as the special champions, in State and Congress, of the Central Pacific Railroad. Senator Newton Booth won high renown for his presumed antagonism thereto, and came eastward heralded as the new-found Republican leader against the great incorporated monopolists. He is to-day without position on that or other issues, the solitary "independent" in the Senate, while the party which it was claimed his defection would disrupt, is evidently stronger than ever in California. The position now taken heals and unites.

The nominees are as follows: For Governor T. G. Phelps; Lient.-Governor, Joseph M. Cavis; Secretary of State, O. H. Hallett; Comptroller, J. J. Greene; Surveyor-General, R. E. Gardner; Treasurer, Wm. Beckman; Attorney-General, E. D. Sawyer; Clerk Supreme Court, G. P. Taggart; Supt. Public Instruction, E. C. Carr.

These gentlemen are all spoken of as persons of character and ability, every way worthy of the honors and responsibilities for which they are selected.

The Congressional nominations are as follows: 1st District, ——— Betrill; 2d District, Horace F. Page; 3d District, C. B. Denio; 4th District, S. O. Houghton.

Mr. Denio is a mechanic and building contractor, who formerly resided in Illinois, and was a well known personal and political friend of Abraham Lincoln. He is a man of fine repute as a speaker, and otherwise thoroughly qualified. Messrs. Houghton and Page were members of the last Congress. Mr. Betrill is a lawyer of excellent repute and very much respected.

The Congressional nominations fairly represent that element in the Republican party there which embraces the producers and workers, in contradistinction to the corporation-related powers, which have, it is charged, exercised too great an influence in the councils of both parties. The tickets, State and Congressional, represent the producers rather than attorneys and monopolists. There is nothing uncertain in the other portions of the platform, as will be seen by the synopsis given:

The first resolution is deservedly eulogistic of the President, and the second declares that the "third term letter," so called, must be regarded as "explicit to a final settlement of the third term agitation created by our enemies solely to arouse jealousies and dissensions in the Republican party." The next two resolve that the amendments to the Constitution must be enforced by Congressional legislation, when necessary, and that the conduct of those who, in the South, attempt to prevent the exercise of the franchise by colored citizens, is rebellious in spirit and calculated only to keep alive the animosities of civil war. They declare, also, that the loyal people should not slumber in face of the evident determination expressed and seen, to prevent the next election of the President by the people. The next plank declares a desire to live in fraternal relations with men of all parties; and the wishes of California Republicans to unite with all men in furthering justice and promoting tranquility.

The other resolutions relate to State affairs, and contain an earnest and practical deliverance on the subject of economy and honesty in the administration of the State and County Governments by such a curtailment of the number of officers and their salaries as will place public servants on an equal footing with business employes in the matter of compensation, and thus abate the general mania for office-holding; a demand that the State and its common schools be kept free from ecclesiastical or secular control; a declaration of war upon the Central Pacific and other railroad companies which deny and resist the right of State regulation and control of fares and tolls; and a pledge that the Republican members of the Legislature will vote for a fair and reasonable reduction in this direction. The platform throws down the gauntlet to all monopolies and corporations seeking to plunder the people, and makes this a leading issue in the campaign.

CONDITION OF THE UNITED STATES TREASURY.

— In order to support Judge Kelley's declaration that "the United States Treasury is approaching insolvency," the Democratic press is industriously circulating statements to the effect that the revenue receipts have fallen far below the estimates, and that a large deficit at the end of the fiscal year will be the result. On the 16th (June), the Washington correspondent of the Louisville, Ky., Courier-Journal telegraphed to that paper as follows:

"The Secretary of the Treasury estimated that the receipts for the fiscal year would be $284,000,000, and the expenditures $275,000,000, leaving $9,000,000 to go to the credit of the sinking fund. It is now evident that the total receipts for the year will not exceed $265,000,000 thus creating a deficiency of some $19,000,000 or over, and the revenue and customs receipts may continue to fall off between this time and the 30th, so that the above estimate may not be reached."

If the correspondent of the Courier-Journal had been disposed to furnish the readers of that paper with a truthful statement, he would have applied at the Treasury for the facts, and received the official statement, which is as follows: The estimated receipts for the year, as made by the Secretary of the Treasury in his last report were, as this correspondent states, $284,000,000, in round numbers. But the receipts, instead of falling below, will exceed the estimates, and amount to at least $289,000,000. Of this the internal revenue will give $109,500,000, customs $157,000,000 to $157,500,000, and miscellaneous $12,000,000. The internal revenue receipts will exceed the estimates $7,000,000, while the customs revenue will fall $1,000,000, to $4,500,000 below the estimates.

The aggregate expenditures for the year will not exceed $276,000,000, and they will probably be between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000 less, varying according to the aggregate of unexpended balances remaining in the hands of disbursing officers. But $276,000,000 is the maximum of expenditures for the year. This taken from the receipts leaves a balance of thirteen million dollars over the expenditures.

This is the official exhibit of the books of the Treasury, at the present time, and as we are within a few days of the close of the fiscal year, no material variation is possible from the figures as they will stand at the closing of the year's record.

It must, therefore, be concluded that the result is not only satisfactory, but that it affords a complete refutation of the statements of Mr. Kelley and the Democratic press.

There is another fact that should be stated in this connection. The Secretary of the Treasury never expected that the change made by Congress at its last session, in the revenue and customs laws, would increase the receipts during the current fiscal year, but there will be an increase of revenues from this source during the ensuing fiscal year.

When estimates for the fiscal year 1875-6 were made the receipts were put down at $293,000,000; that is, $170,000,000 from customs, $106,000,000 from internal revenues and $17,000,000 from miscellaneous sources. It is now believed by officials that the receipts will exceed the estimates by $6,000,000 to $10,000,000, the increase coming mainly from the internal revenues. Some well informed officers put the increase on the estimates at $14,000,000. At the same time the appropriations for the ordinary expenses of the fiscal year 1875-6 are $7,000,000 less than for the present year, and less than for any year since the commencement of the rebellion. It is more than probable, therefore, that the receipts for the next fiscal year will exceed the expenditures by at least $20,000,000 to $25,000,000. So much for the probable insolvency of the United States Treasury predicted by the false prophets of modern times.

MR. LINCOLN: HONESTY THE BEST POLICY.

Frequent charges are made of fraud and dishonesty prevailing among persons in business and persons holding public trusts. It is said of persons in the public service that a feeling exists which may be thus formulated: The emolument is small; a change may soon take place; and unless advantage is taken of the moment, the opportunity is lost forever. If the charges were true generally, it would show a sad state of morals; but, as there is truth enough in the charges to make dishonesty the exception and honesty the rule, they deserve attention, for many reasons.

One of the worst examples to young men is that of a public servant, having used his office to enrich himself at the expense of the people; for, although swift punishment will follow discovery, the warning may be forgotten, and only the guilt remembered. In a country like ours, it is most important to instil the principles of honor and honesty in the hearts of men, in order that the duties of good citizenship may be well performed. A violation of those principles is a public calamity, deserving the severest censure, and demanding ample atonement, be the culprit who he may.

Honesty is the best policy. A poor man is not debarred from rising in life by his poverty, if his character is untainted and his ambition wise. If he has been faithful in a limited career, the probability is that he has prepared himself for higher responsibility. The eyes of a community are fixed upon those who do well the duties entrusted to them; and when the time comes, as it always will come, for advancement, the testimony borne to a good reputation is supported by willing hearts and helping hands.

Wherever Mr. Lincoln dwelt he seems to have impressed his neighbors most favorably. In the early days of his obscurity, people remarked in him a certain candor and manly honesty, which, doubtless, was the foundation of his subsequent prosperity. There was a kind of moral grandeur in his independence and freedom from all cause of reproach, that attracted recognition and induced reliance upon his integrity. His poverty spurred him to industry. His industry enabled him to acquire much general knowledge, and the knowledge of the law, which was his profession. As he rose in public estimation, he labored for his daily bread, with the idea of riches a long way off; but his poverty kept him so scrupulously careful in the path of right, that when receiving money which was not his own he paid it over in the coin that was paid to him.

How many young men with fair prospects in life have wrecked all by using funds which were not theirs, and which they flattered themselves they would soon return, but were not able? They became amenable to the charge of dishonesty, though perhaps, at the time, they did not mean to be dishonest. It is the first wrong step that destroys character. To shun that first step should be our courageous endeavor; and if we reflect upon the results likely to ensue, the temptation may be resisted.

Mr. Lincoln was remarkable for his love of truth and consistency in politics. Trained in a school where he had to labor and suffer, he came out of the trial with a keen appreciation of right and wrong, and of the necessity of private worth as the basis of success. The effect of his surroundings was to chasten his mind and lead him to look out upon the affairs of men from no superficial standpoint. He saw men of promise fall and fail, which aroused his sympathies and gave him a strong bias toward all that was good and noble in our common nature. Had he not received that peculiar culture which saved him from self-deception and guarded his heart, he might have shown weakness in his altered fortunes, when, in fact, his manliness and purity created surprise. As a politician, he was in full accord with the principles and aims of the Republican party. They became incorporated with his manhood, growing with his growth; and, eventuating in an able and wise statesmanship, he could serve his country in the crisis of her fate. With unblemished honor he discharged the duties of the hour without a thought of his future destiny; and he rose, step by step, until he reached the highest office in the gift of the people. Thus preserved in poverty, and protected as with a shield by his uprightness, the following pleasing incident by "Burleigh," of the Boston Journal, tells the secret of his fame, not only to the country of his birth, but to the nations of the world:

"Mr. Lincoln, before he moved to Springfield, was postmaster in a small western town. The office was poor, and Lincoln was poorer than the office. It was known that he was very hard up, and it was also known that the Washington agent was in town to collect the little sum due the General Post-Office. A friend, thinking Lincoln might be embarrassed, came down to the office to loan him the sum necessary to meet the demand. Mr. Lincoln thanked him, and said he did not need any loan. While the two were talking, the gentleman came in. The sum due was less than $100. Lincoln went to his desk and took out an old stocking, and turned the coin on the table. It was counted out, and met the demand exactly. Well it might, for it was not only the exact amount due, but the identical money itself that Lincoln had taken in; old-fashioned Rix dollars, pistareens, sixpences, old-fashioned cents and all were there. "I never use money that belongs to other people," said Lincoln, and that resolution did much toward making him President of the United States."

GREAT, BUT NOT AMBITIOUS.—In expressing his intention not to be a candidate for a third term, President Grant, with that frank simplicity which always characterizes his language, said: "I do not want it any more than I did the first. I would not write or utter a word to change the will of the people in expressing and having their choice."

This language has been made the text for countless attacks upon the President. He has been represented by the Democratic and so-called Independent press, as a man of inordinate ambition, who sought his first nomination, and obtained his second, through the power and influence of his high military position. These journals refuse to accept his letter as declaratory of his intention to retire to private life, and insist that he is as ambitious to serve a third term as he was to serve the first. We commend to the attention of these journals a letter written by General Grant in 1864, at a time when personal ambition, if it had been a controlling element of his nature, would have shown itself.

The tone of the letter is one of exalted patriotism, and in the light of his recent utterances, affords a key to the President's true character. He never desired a first term. He accepted it as he did the second, through a sense of duty to his country. As he said in his recent letter, "I was made to believe that the public good called me to make the sacrifice."

We present the following letter, because it gives us a better insight into the character of the President, than we could possibly obtain from a document intended for the public eye. Its pointed allusions to the Presidency will make it acceptable at this time:

NASHVILLE, TENN., January 20, 1864.

HON. I. N. MORRIS:

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of the 29th of December I did not receive until two days ago. I receive many such, but do not answer. Yours, however, is written in such a kindly spirit, and as you ask for answer confidentially, I will not withhold it. Allow me to say, however, that I am not a politician, never was, and hope never to be, and could not write a political letter. My only desire is to serve the country in her present trials. To do this efficiently it is necessary to have the confidence of the army and the people. I know no way to better secure this end than by a faithful performance of my duties. So long as I hold my present position, I do not believe that I have the right to criticize the policy or orders of those above me, or to give utterance to views of my own except to the authorities at Washington, through the General-in-Chief of the army. In this respect I know I have proven myself a "good soldier."

In your letter you say I have it in my power to be the next President. This is the last thing in the world I desire. I would regard such a consummation as being highly unfortunate for myself, if not for the country. Through Providence I have attained to more than I ever hoped, and with the position I hold in the regular army, if allowed to retain it, will be more than satisfied. I certainly shall never shape a sentiment, or the expression of a thought, with the view of being a candidate for office. I scarcely know the inducements which could be held out to me to accept office, and unhesitatingly say that I infinitely prefer my present position to that of any civil office within the gift of the people.

This is a private letter to you, not intended for others to see or read, because I want to avoid being heard from by the public, except through acts in the performance of my legitimate duties.

I have the honor to be very respectfully,
your obedient servant,

U. S. GRANT.

THE SOUTH, AND HOW ITS WANTS MAY BE SUPPLIED.

The Southern people feel the wants of the South, which visitors from the North, observe with pain, because they not only see that there are wants, but see also the way by which they may be supplied. One of the results of the war was the permanent introduction of free labor; and had the wise counsels of the Republican party been listened to, the South long since would have adapted itself to the new condition. It is impossible for the South to continue in the old habits and ways either of thought or of life, as if no radical change had been effected. The new foundations of industry were designed to uproot the blighting and sluggish system of bondage, which bound the white man, while it existed, as firmly as the negro, though with different fetters. Shall the black man only derive advantage from freedom, while the white man, assuming to have greater intelligence, persistently refuses to better himself, by clinging to the old order, and thrusting back every hand held out to help him to be prosperous? The South to-day is a marvel of prosperity, compared with what it was at any period when it was dependent upon slave labor, in proof of which we give the following fact:

The Louisiana sugar planters are now more prosperous than at any time since the war. The yield for 1874 was 240,000 hogsheads against 103,000 the preceding year, while the crop was made very economically and commanded fair prices.

The same may be said of other States and other industries. And the South might be more prosperous if it would only adopt the course of men of enterprise and business capacity.

It is folly to complain of what Southern men will make no effort to remedy. Do they want the yeoman to immigrate or the manufacturing class? They must make the South inviting and pleasant as a residence to persons who may please themselves in selecting their location, and who will naturally locate only where affairs are most pleasing. Do they want capital? They must make every foot of the South safe for money, person and life, if this desire is to be granted. Moneyed men are not apt to invest where their money only is the object of respect. They claim to deserve respect; and would prefer to respect the men who need their help rather than expose themselves to cavil, and abuse, and neglect. And they are not disposed to anticipate a contest if they desired to withdraw the money they had invested. It may as well be understood, once for all, that capital will not go where there is danger and contention, and where there is the smallest chance of political disturbance from the exercise of political rights. Yeoman and workman, with means and skill are also supremely indifferent to the wants of the South so long as the South disregards the yeoman's wants, which are peace and freedom, security and evenhanded justice between man and man.

What the South appeared to want in the view of Judge Kelly, he has made known to the people. He says:

"What is required to regenerate the South is subsoil plows, phosphates, agricultural implements generally, a large increase of horses, mules, and horned cattle, a steadily increasing supply of steam engines and machinery, and such manufacturing machinery as can be moved by water power. These, with a comparatively small amount of cash capital, and a few earnest men to teach their use and value, would, in a few years, make the South bloom like a garden, and develop a population as loyal as that of any Northern State during the war. The interests of Northern capitalists require them to supply these potent agents at the earliest practicable day."

In this we agree with Judge Kelly. And we also agree with Judge Kelley that the principles of the Republican party are the only principles that can increase the prosperity of the South. The present prosperity commenced from adherence to them; and it follows that any increase must be built upon the same ground. We hope the men of the South will hasten the time when its political and social condition will be so inviting that both capital and immigration will pass into it, and raise up industrious, upright and intelligent States which shall strengthen and dignify the Nation by adding to its mental and material wealth.

REVIEW OF THE MONTH.

NATIONAL.

. . . While Europe has been agitated by the fast flying rumors of coming war, in the United States, nothing but peaceful relations and conditions are known to exist. The month of June has been especially free from disturbing or exciting rumor, or incident, so far as the Nation itself is concerned. In government, politics, civic or material affairs nothing has transpired to mar the "sweet serenity" of these summer days.

. . . At the National Capital, the chief topic of interest has been the recent Sioux conference, and the return of the Indian delegations to their homes in Dakota, in a state of apparent dissatisfaction. It is worth while making a statement derived from official sources of the number of the Sioux nation, and their relations to the general government, as well as to the particular matters under consideration.

According to the last report on Indian affairs, the Sioux embraces more than one half of the Indians who are reported as "wild and scarcely tractable to any extent," beyond receiving the bounty of the government. The enumeration of this class is 98,108, of whom all but about 23,000 roam through the northwest territories. The wild Sioux are set down at 46,663; their total being estimated at 53,000 persons. Of the partially civilized Sioux there are 4,622, and of those who have wholly renounced a nomadic life and are settled as farmers, there are 2,781. Six years ago the government and the country might well have feared an outbreak among the Sioux, growing from such differences as now exists, but as the Commissioner says in his last annual report:

"The feeding process, has so far taken the fight out of them that it was impossible for a portion of the more war-like non-treaty bands to prevail upon their brethren, who have been sitting down at the agencies along the Missouri River, to risk the loss of their coffee, sugar, and beef in exchange for the hardships and perils of a campaign against soldiers."

Red Cloud comprehends the character of this process, and said recently in Washington to a former member of the United States

Senate, "that if the government would stop issuing beef, he would take care of himself."

There is a general misapprehension of the reasons for holding a conference with Red Cloud and Spotted Tail, with their associate chiefs at Washington. The Interior Department has several disturbing questions to settle; among them being the location of the agencies, which are now outside the reservations assigned to such tribes as recognize the chieftianships of Red Cloud and Spotted Tail. Other and more troublesome matters relate to the northern boundary of Nebraska, which the Brule Sioux declare to be wrongfully run through their villages, to certain unceded territory in Nebraska, which is bounded on the south by the Niobrara river, also as to similar territory in Wyoming, and the right to hunt on the Northern or Republican fork of the Kansas River. This valley is being gradually settled by persons engaged principally in raising sheep and cattle. It will be remembered that the famous English colony of "Victoria," embracing a whole county of Kansas, is located on the Republican. This stream makes a north-western course from its junction with the Smoky Hill and Kansas, near Fort Riley, in the latter state, and quite a considerable portion of the upper valley is within the boundaries of Nebraska. A glance at a map will show how dangerous is this liberty to hunt, in a region which is becoming thickly settled and where the growing scarcity of buffalo with the increase of fine stock; must be a constant temptation to the rude young braves, who make up the Sioux hunting parties.

The government is desirous of inducing the Indians to cede this disputed right and also the territory in Nebraska, lying north of the Niobrara river. Twenty-five thousand dollars were appropriated by Congress at its last session for payment of such cession. Besides this practical result, the Black Hills and their cession was of course discussed. The Indian Bureau had no expectation of doing more than impressing upon the chiefs the danger of collision and the necessity of making some permanent provision for their own future.

The result is believed to be, on the whole, quite favorable. Red Cloud and Spotted Tail have both agreed to use their influence in obtaining an agreement for the cession of the disputed hunting right on the Republican. To that end the Executive has promised his influence with Congress to procure an additional $25,000 for the Indians. It is expected that the result of the conference at the agency will be favorable.

With regard to the cession of the Black Hills region, or such portions thereof as may be found to be auriferous a grand council is to be held between a commission representing the government and the several chiefs of the Sioux tribes that are interested. This council will represent more Indians than have ever before been in conference with the white people at one time. The endeavor will be, on our part, to procure from the Indians—

First. A relinquishment of all right in the unceded lands in Nebraska, lying north of the Niobrara river. The right of these Indians thereto, is a disputed matter, but the government is ready to come to any fair settlement with them.

Second. To procure the settlement of a similar question in Wyoming. No dispute exists as to the Dakota reservation. Its boundaries are defined. But east of the Big Horn Mountains is a territory which is regarded as unceded by the government. The Indians, however, lay claim to it, as secured by the treaty of 1868. The commissioners are to secure the right of way for a government road, running through it, to definitely determine its future relations, obtaining relinquishments of all the territory west of the summit of the Big Horn Mountains, included in the Wyoming reservation.

Third. To negotiate for the purchase of so much of the Black Hills as may be found containing gold.

The Commission will also urge upon the Indians with such force as they can the propriety of considering the President's recommendation, that they arrange for a removal to the Indian Territory, south of Kansas, where they will have permanent homes, while the proceeds of the sale of their territory in the northwest, will insure their comfort. It has been asserted that the Executive had no right to make such a proffer, as the territory belongs to other Indians. In reply to this it should be borne in mind that by treaties made in 1866, the civilized Indians, Cherokees, Choctaws, Creeks, etc., ceded a large area for the express purpose of settling other Indians thereon, with the view of making an Indian state at some not distant day. A large number have been gathered there, and others are being removed to that region.

The Sioux council is being watched with the greatest interest. In the meanwhile all proper precautions are being taken to promptly check any turbulence at the outset.

. . . The Treasury Department and that of Justice are actively pushing forward the work of destroying the whisky ring, its aiders and abettors, private or official. So with the smuggling propensities, so common among a large number of importers. It may be safely asserted that there will not be the slightest cessation in this good work; that the utmost harmony exists in all branches of the government, and that offenders will be brought to bay. It is worth while observing here that the comments of the opposition press all point severely to official offenders, and them alone. While it is perfectly just and right to condemn them severely, it is manifestly unjust to have no word of criticism for the clever and cunning rogues in business, who have devised the schemes of fraud now being unearthed, and who tempted with lavish bribes, federal officials to assist in the plundering. The arrest of ex-supervisor John McDonald, of St. Louis, is a proof of the earnestness which animates Secretary Bristow's course.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATIONS.

. . . The noteworthy event of the month has been the magnificent celebration, at Boston, of the one hundredth anniversary of the "Battle of Bunker Hill." The daily press has given full details of the patriotic outpouring on that occasion, and of the superb hospitality accorded to visitors. It is in somewhat striking contrast to that shown to the Presidential party at the Concord and Lexington celebrations and the discourteous conduct of the Boston press in publishing the bills incurred by the State in support of its hospitality. There is a mean little yankee trick hidden under the bills referred to. Among the items is one of over four hundred dollars for "wines and cigars." This is being widely published as a proof of bad habits on the part of the distinguished guests of the 19th of April. The truth is that by far the smallest portion of those articles are justly chargeable to the presidential party. There was a legislative committee, of seven or nine members, who were accompanied by a sergeant-at-arms, and several deputies. Several members of Governor Gaston's staff were in constant attendance. Of course, these gentlemen all had many visitors, who desired to be presented to the President, or members of the Cabinet, there present. How convenient to offer them wine and cigars, at the expense of the State, and cover that, by having all charged to the Presidential party. It will be observed that in the Revere House bill, no charge is made for any one of the score or more of state attendants, committee-men, etc., except $4 50 per day for the board of each. Is it supposable, for a moment, by any one acquainted with the habits of such persons, when junketting at the public expense, that they were so economical, as the bills indicate? Not a whit. They, and their friends, indulged to their heart's content, and had the same charged to the President's bill. The Bunker Hill visitors were doubtless more courteously dealt with.

Putting all this aside, the country may well be congratulated at such scenes as Boston has recently witnessed. It makes little difference to us, whether Putnam, Gridley, or Prescott, had chief command on that memorable 17th of June, 1775; whether the engagement there fought was on "Bunker's" or "Breed's" Hill, or even whether it was or not, in the technical military sense, a victory for the British and a defeat for the Provincials; we know now that its results were and are glorious, and that out of such heroic endeavors, as those displayed by the rude volunteers, behind their ruder works in Charlestown, a great nation has sprung, whose noblest reward is that the sun looks down on a free people, and that within the ample folds of the Union, enlarged from the struggling array of the Atlantic colonies to the majestic proportions of a continent, while freedom reigns, and no slave breathes, and equity is the aim and spirit of the Nation, and will, ere long, be that of every Commonwealth within its borders.

POLITICAL—STATE CONVENTIONS.

. . . A number of State nominating conventions have been held during the past month. A large portion were republican in character, though two were democratic and others belong to those that "hang on the verge" of "healthy organizations." Ohio republicans led off by a large and harmonious convention at Columbus, on the 2d of June. This body did good work. Their nominations were excellent, and the platform adopted was noticeable for a direct simplicity and terseness of expression, unusual in such documents. It was outspoken against a third term nomination; against a division of the public school fund among religious bodies, and in opposition to patent monopolies. The California republican convention, which met on the 10th of June, was equally as outspoken on the "third term" and "school" questions, and presented in its nominations and declarations relating to railroad monopolies, the boldest platform on the Grangers or producers side, yet adopted. Mr. Phelps, the nominee for Governor, is a leading Granger. The State Republican Convention, of Maine, met on the 14th of the month, and General Selden Conner was placed in nomination as Governor.

The platform adopted declares that the Union of the States must be maintained at all hazards; that the Government is that of the Nation, not of a Confederacy; local self-government, in matters purely local, must be adhered to; that there can be no legitimate conflict between the powers of the Nation and any State; that a sound currency, based on coin, and redeemable in coin, is essential to the prosperity of the people; that the most kindly and fraternal relations should be cultivated between all sections of the country.

The Iowa Republican convention met at Des Moines on the 30th.

The Democratic conventions were—Ohio, at Columbus, on the 17th; Maryland, at Baltimore, on the 21st; Maine, at Portland, on the 22d, and that of California, at San Francisco, on the 29th.

A "People's Independent" convention was called at San Francisco on the 22d.

. . . Among other bodies which have been in session is the New York Liberal State Committee, at Albany, June 10th, which called a State Convention for the 1st of August next. Resolutions favoring union with the democracy and republicans were not adopted. One of the speakers said the result of liberalism in Missouri when Carl Schurz was laid aside for a rebel general, ought to teach liberals a wholesome lesson. Another said he was opposed to grantism on the one hand and bourbonism on the other. The family is not very happy and will probably dissolve, each member taking his place under the banner which pleases him best. The dissatisfaction manifested is seen wherever there is a corporal's guard of liberals.

A most striking proof of this is in a letter from Colonel William Grosvenor, of St. Louis, to the New York Tribune, published in its issue of June 8th. Grosvenor was the organizing brain of the Greeley and revenue reform bolt of 1872, and what he says is worth heeding. He says:

"On the streets here to-day one cannot find an independent voter nor a German of either party, unless he is an extreme Catholic, who has not a set purpose to overthrow the Democratic party. Possibly events may change that feeling; but to-day it exists, and its causes are worthy of notice. It will be felt elsewhere." Again, "in Illinois, men whose names are known all over the land share the same feeling. Nor is it by any means confined to German Independents."

OTHER CONVENTIONS.

. . . The Prohibitionists Convention convened at Des Moines, Iowa, on the 20th ult., the day before the republicans. The purpose of the Convention was to take political action either by joining with one of the organized parties, or to form a new prohibitory party. A National Temperance Convention was also held in Chicago, which decided against forming a National party, but recommended political action in the states, as occasion offered. A State Temperance Convention for Indiana assembled at Indianapolis, June 8th, in which resolutions were adopted asking Congress to appoint a national commission to investigate and report upon the effects of the alcoholic liquor traffic upon pauperism, crime, revenue, taxation, and the general welfare of the country.

2. To prohibit the manufacture and sale of such beverages in the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States.

3. To prohibit the importation of alcoholic liquors from foreign countries.

4. To require total abstinence from all such beverages on the part of officials and subordinates in the civil, military, and naval service of the United States.

It did not resolve on separate political action at this time.

IN COMMENT.

. . . It may be stated with reasonable assurance that the pending campaign will be conducted on both sides with great spirit, as each recognizes its importance in connection with the presidential year. During the current months, republican conventions will be held in Wisconsin on the 7th, and in Minnesota on the 28th instants. At both full state tickets are to be nominated.

. . . The National Head-quarters of the Patrons of Husbandry, which have been established at the national capital since the order was formed, are to be removed to Louisville, Kentucky. It is to be feared that this will be found to be a mistake, and one evidence of this is to be seen in statements made by the grand secretary, who has recently published a volume on the order. Mr. Kelley complains in the earlier chapters of the supineness of his Washington associates on the executive committee, and says in substance and frequently that the people look with eagerness and authority to Washington for information. The popular instinct easily seizes upon a salient fact in regard to the federal district. That is, that it is the one center or city in the country which is given over to national questions and influences. All other of our great cities and centers are swayed by their dominating local or sectional influence. New York is wholly commercial. Boston is New England and necessarily provincial—though it is a fine type. Philadelphia is pre-eminently Pennsylvanian and not national. Chicago and St. Louis are western, of the Lakes and Mississippi Valley. It is true their outlook is continental, but even then it is exclusive. So with Cincinnati, though it may fairly be said for the Queen city that it is nearer national in its central and unifying position than the others. No southern city can be, for years to come, anything but sectional in its public expression. The Grangers have then deliberately placed themselves outside non-partizan influences and will pass under those of a sectional character. It may seem strange, but we doubt if anywhere else than in Washington, they can be as free from direct political and trading impressions. At the present time there is a stupendous effort to enlarge the order in the south, and the number of granges there are nearly as many as in the western states, the Louisville location must tend to place the Patrons under southern interests. It is perhaps a fear without reason, but it exists, nevertheless—that this removal will be followed by a marked growth of certain political forces within the granges. If so, the days of the great order are numbered.

. . . Ex-Secretary McCulloch has written another interesting letter from London. He speaks of the causes which led to the depreciation of American credit abroad. The principal cause has been the failure of the States to provide for the payment of their bonds and the interest thereon in gold. These bonds were negotiated upon a gold basis, with the understanding that both principal and interest should be payable in coin. The States have been unable to live up to their part of the contract, have paid in greenbacks instead of gold, and have made no effort since the close of the war to fulfill their original obligations. This has entailed great loss upon European investors, and caused them to look with suspicion on bonds based upon the credit of the States. Not fully understanding the complex system which makes the nation supreme in the exercise of certain functions, while it leaves the States sovereign in the exercise of other functions, the prejudice against investing in State securities operates in a measure, against those of the nation. For this reason, our national credit abroad is not as high as it should be. According to Mr. McCulloch, an early resumption of specie payments by the States and the nation would restore European confidence in our home securities.

. . . The Missouri Constitutional Convention now in session at Jefferson City, in that State, under the presidency of Waldo P. Johnson, one of the most pronounced of confederate politicians, came within one vote on the 6th of June, of striking a deadly blow to the public school system. The report on executive and ministerial departments was under consideration, and a motion was made by a Mr. Adams, of Cooper county, to strike out the words "Superintendent of Public Instruction," under the plea that the Legislature should be allowed to decide whether such an officer was necessary or not. After warm debate the vote was 28 to 29; defeating the motion. The convention is largely democratic—with strong confederate proclivities. The attempt is in accord with a general policy.

. . . The Alabama Legislature refused to appropriate money for the decennial census provided for under the present as well as former constitutions. The Democratic majority were more anxious to convene a Constitutional Convention and used the money needed for the census-taking for that purpose. This was done avowedly after discussion. The last census taken by that State was in 1865-6, after the civil war had ceased. It showed that Alabama had decreased in population by about 27,000 persons—mostly males. Of these about 13,000 were white and the remainder colored. The relative decrease was larger, because the increase for five years was also swallowed by the war losses. The only states taking a decennial census are New York, Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

EXECUTIVE AND DEPARTMENT DOINGS.

THE EXECUTIVE.

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER ON THE THIRD TERM.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, D. C., May 29, 1875.

DEAR SIR: A short time subsequent to the Presidential election of 1872, the press, a portion of it hostile to the Republican party, and particularly so to the Administration, started the cry of 'Cæsarism' and "the third term," calling lustily for me to define my position on the latter subject. I believed it to be beneath the dignity of the office, which I have been twice called upon to fill, to answer such a question before the subject should be presented by competent authority to make a nomination, or by a body of such dignity and authority as not to make a reply a fair subject of ridicule. In fact, I have been surprised that so many sensible persons in the Republican party should permit their enemy to force upon them and their party an issue which cannot add strength to the party, no matter how met. But a body of the dignity and party authority of a convention to make nominations for the State officers of the second State in the Union, having considered this question, I deem it not improper that I should speak.

In the first place, I never sought the office for a second, nor even for a first nomination. To the first I was called from a life position—one created by Congress expressly for me for supposed services rendered to the Republic. The position vacated I liked. It would have been most agreeable to me to have retained it until such time as Congress might have consented to my retirement, with the rank and a portion of the emoluments which I so much needed, to a home where the balance of my days might be spent in peace and the enjoyment of domestic quiet, relieved from the cares which have oppressed me so constantly now for fourteen years. But I was made to believe that the public good called me to make the sacrifice. Without seeking the office for the second term, the nomination was tendered to me by a unanimous vote of the delegates of all the States and Territories, selected by the Republicans of each to represent their whole number, for the purpose of making their nomination. I cannot say that I was not pleased at this, and at the overwhelming endorsement which their action received at the election following. But it must be remembered that all the sacrifices except that of comfort had been made in accepting the first term. Then, too, such a fire of personal abuse and slander had been kept up for four years, notwithstanding the conscientious performance of my duties to the best of my understanding, though I admit, in the light of subsequent events, many times subject to fair criticism, that an endorsement from the people, who alone govern republics, was a gratification that it is only human to have appreciated and enjoyed.

Now for the third term: I do not want it any more than I did the first. I would not write or utter a word to change the will of the people in expressing and having their choice. The question of the number of terms allowed to any one Executive can only come up fairly in the shape of a proposition to amend the Constitution—a shape in which all political parties can participate—fixing the length of time or the number of terms for which any one person shall be eligible for the office of President. Until such an amendment is adopted, the people cannot be restricted in their choice by resolution further than they are now restricted as to age, nativity, etc. It may happen in the future history of the country that to change an Executive, because he has been eight years in office, will prove unfortunate if not disastrous. The idea that any man could elect himself President, or even re-nominate himself, is preposterous. It is a reflection upon the intelligence and patriotism of the people to suppose such a thing possible. Any man can destroy his chances for the office, but no one can force an election, or even a nomination.

To recapitulate: I am not, nor have I ever been, a candidate for a re-nomination. I would not accept a nomination if it were tendered, unless it should come under such circumstances as to make it an imperative duty—circumstances not likely to arise.

I congratulate the convention over which you presided for the harmony which prevailed, and for the excellent ticket put in the field, and which I hope may be triumphantly elected. With great respect, your obedient servant.

[Signed]

U. S. GRANT.

To General Harry White, President Pennsylvania Republican State Convention.

STATE DEPARTMENT.

COUNSEL RECOGNIZED.

Julius Webster has been recognized by the President as vice consul of Russia for the port of Mobile.

DUTIES ABROGATED.

The Secretary of the Treasury has received from the Department of State official information that by a decree of the General Government of Mexico, all foreign money (coin) heretofore paying the regular export duty of five per cent. on silver, and one half per cent. on gold is declared free from export duty. The export duty on Mexican money (coin) remains without modification.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

REVENUES AND FINANCES.

It is estimated that the internal Revenue receipts for the present fiscal year will aggregate $109,500,000.

THE ROBBERY.

No arrests have yet been made in connection with the Treasury robbery of $47,500.

BONDS CALLED IN.

The following call for coupon bonds was issued by Acting Secretary of the Treasury Conant on the 2d of June:

"Notice is hereby given that the principal and accrued interest of the bonds hereinbelow designated, known as '5-20 bonds,' will be paid at the Treasury of the United States; in the city of Washington, on and after the 1st day of September, 1875, and that the interest on said bonds will cease on that day. That is to say, coupon bonds, known as the fourth series, act of February 25, 1862, dated May 1st, 1862, as follows: $50—No. 20,301 to No. 21,000; $100—No. 51,601 to No. 59,100; $500—No. 27,501 to No. 31,900; $1,000—No. 80,651 to No. 91,500, all inclusive. The amount outstanding (embraced in the numbers above) is $10,000,000. United States securities, forwarded for redemption, should be addressed to the loan division of the Secretary's office."

AMENDED CENTENNIAL REGULATIONS.

The following circular, amending regulations of October 3, 1874, governing the free importation of goods for the Centennial exhibition, has been issued:

Article 4 of "Regulations governing the free importation of goods for the International Exhibition of 1876, at Philadelphia," (Printed Decisions, 2192,) is hereby so amended as to read as follows:

Fourth. All goods arriving so marked and represented will, without examination, be forwarded from the port of arrival by bonded line of transportation to Philadelphia; there to be delivered to the custody of the collector at that port.

B. H. BRISTOW, Secretary.

ILLICIT STILLS IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Collector Carpenter, of Columbia, S. C., has just returned from a raid upon illicit distilling. He was accompanied with ten United States soldiers, mounted, under command of Lieutenant John Anderson, United States Army, and two deputies. The party destroyed eleven distilleries, took into custody five prisoners and a large quantity of spirits. The trip created something of a panic amongst the violaters of the law in that region.

THE NEW COLLECTOR AT CHICAGO.

General J. D. Webster, just appointed collector of internal revenue at Chicago, was General Grant's chief of artillery at the time of the battle of Shiloh. He was afterwards chief of staff to Sherman. General Webster is an editor by profession. It was he who originally established the Chicago Tribune. General Webster ranks with the first men of Chicago. He commands universal respect.

SEIZURE OF STEAMERS.

The following circular relative to the seizure of steam vessels has been promulgated:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, D. C., May 31st, 1875.

It has recently been decided by the United States Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Michigan that, before the commencement in Court of proceedings in cases of prosecution of steam vessels for non-compliance with the requirements of the laws relating to the inspection and equipment of such vessels, there should be a seizure by a government officer. Collectors and other chief officers of the customs, therefore, are instructed, under sections 4,462 and 4,496 of the Revised Statutes, to seize vessels in case they have become liable to seizure or forfeiture for any violation of the laws aforesaid, and if the penalty or fine incurred, has not been paid to the proper officer. It is suggested, however, that prior to seizure, in cases where it is practicable, a report shall be made of the facts and circumstances of each case, with the names of witnesses, and the provisions of law alleged to be violated, to the proper United States Attorney, to the end that his opinion may be obtained in regard to the action required.

CHARLES F. CONANT,
Acting Secretary.

FOG BELLS.

The Light-house Board gives notice that on and after the 20th of May there will be sounded during thick and foggy weather, at Horn Island light-station, a fog-bell, struck by machinery, giving one blow at intervals of fifteen seconds. The bell is located on the east gallery of the light-house. Notice is also given that, during thick and foggy weather, there will be sounded, at Head of passes light-station, a fog-bell, struck by machinery, giving two blows and one blow at alternate intervals of ten and twenty seconds. The bell tower is located immediately in front of the light-house.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

GOVERNORS APPOINTED.

The Secretary of the Interior has issued appointments to Governor Aptell, of Utah, to be Governor of New Mexico, vice Giddings, deceased; also George W. Emery, to be Governor of Utah, vice Aptell, appointed to New Mexico.

THE SIOUX COMMISSION.

The following is the Sioux commission as completed by the Secretary of the Interior: William B. Allison, of Iowa; Bishop E. R. Ames, Maryland; F. W. Palmer, Illinois; Brigadier General Alfred H. Terry, U. S. A., Allen Comingo, Missouri; Rev. S. D. Hinman, Dakota; G. P. Beauvais, Missouri; and Gen. A. G. Lawrence, R. I. John S. Collins, post trader of Fort Laramie, is appointed secretary to the commission. The salary of the commissioners will be eight dollars per day and expenses.

PENSION BOARD OF APPEALS.

The following is the board of appeals appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions, whose duties, as was recently stated, are to examine cases reported rejected, and to consider cases where differences of opinion exist between the examiners and reviewers, &c.: Joseph Lockey, deputy commissioner, chairman; J. L. Penniman, George Ewing, E. M. Dawson and J. B. J. Ryan. Dr. N. F. Graham is appointed medical adviser of the board.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

IMPROVED CONDITION OF THE ARMY.

By a statement from the Adjutant General's office, it appears that the desertions from the army, since the 1st of July last have diminished more than one half in comparison with those in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1874, and the number of re-enlistments have averaged three times as many during the same period. The desertions have averaged 383 per month during the first named period and 172 per month during the year ended June 30, 1874, and have averaged 178 per month during the present fiscal year. These statistics show that the tone and condition of the army is elevated, and speak well for the management of the army by the War Department. This increasing contentment indicates kind, methodical and considerate treatment of the enlisted men by the officers, as well as the effect of enlightened legislation in 1872, looking to a gradual increase of pay, rewarding length of service and faithful service, encouraging re-enlistments and providing for a system of deposits, which are forfeited by desertion. But Congress appropriated for the pay of the army, less than the War Department estimated by $90,000 for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1875, and there is a threatened deficiency, so that (as set forth in an order of the War Department) officers and men may be able to receive only one half or two-thirds pay for the month of June, and they may be compelled to wait for the same until a deficiency bill is passed by the next Congress.

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

BOARD OF EXAMINERS.

The Board of Naval Officers to examine officers for promotion and retirement, of which Commodore J. W. A. Nicholson is President, resumed its session at the Navy Department on the 15th June.

The following officers have been ordered to report to the Board for examination: Commanders John Irwin, A. E. K. Benham and E. P. Ryan; Masters A. Ross, H. L. Tremain, J. C. Wilson, W. S. W. Ruchenberger; Ensigns G. F. W. Holman, T. G. Salter and P. D. Bolles. A number of officers of the Lancaster, Kansas and Alert with several now on coast survey duty, will be ordered for examination during the summer.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.
INVESTIGATING UNITED STATES MARSHAL'S AC-COUNTS.

It is said that Attorney General Pierrepont has caused an investigation to be made into the accounts of United States Marshals and Deputy Marshals for the past year, with a view of calling upon certain officers in the Southern States for an explanation of what is deemed most exorbitant charges in the way of witness fees.

RE-ORGANIZATION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

By order of Attorney General Pierrepont, on the first day of June, bureaus under the general supervision of the Solicitor General were organized in the Department of Justice as follows :

Bureau of the Supreme Court; Bureau of the Court of Claims; Bureau of Legal Investigations; Bureau of Official Correspondence; Bureau of the Chief Clerk and Bureau of Criminal Law.

A chief of each Bureau, with assistants, was designated by the Attorney General, and specific duties assigned; but in furtherance of the public service, whenever one bureau is overburdened, calls may be made upon a bureau less burdened for assistance. No vacation or absence from the duties of the Department can be permitted except on leave, specifying the date and length of the absence. Whenever any one in this Department is about to be absent on leave he must register in the Bureau of the Chief Clerk the address where a dispatch can reach him. Permission to go beyond the United States will not be given under any circumstances.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.
COTTON CROP REPORT.

The Department of Agriculture, in its cotton report for June, states that the threatened reduction in area has not taken place, nor has the reduced area of last year been much enlarged. The reported increase is between one and two per cent. The comparison with last year is as follows : North Carolina, 102; South Carolina, 106; Georgia, 96; Florida, 99; Alabama, 104; Mississippi, 102; Louisiana, 101; Texas, 108; Arkansas, 101; Tennessee, 92.

The report of condition is the most favorable in the past five seasons with the exception of that of 1872. The order of procedure in this respect is 1872, 1875, 1873, 1871, 1874. Though planting was late, and the soil generally too wet and cold for rapid germination, the stand is comparatively good, and recent weather has been more favorable to rapid growth. The crop is unusually clean. The comparison with a crop of full vitality and normal growth, in all respects, is, for the present month, as follows : North Carolina, 92; South Carolina, 97; Georgia, 91; Florida, 94; Alabama, 101; Mississippi, 100; Louisiana, 95; Texas, 96; Arkansas, 90; Tennessee, 99.

COURT OF ALABAMA CLAIMS.
THE TIME OF THE DURATION OF THE COURT EX-TENDED.

The President has made proclamation reciting the eighth section of the act of Congress, creating the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims, which provides conditionally for an extension of the functions of said court beyond the period of their original expiration and ordering as follows :

"Now, therefore, be it known, that I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the provisions of the eighth section of the act of Congress aforesaid, do hereby extend the time of the duration of said Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims for a period of six months after the 22d day of July. A. D. 1875. In testimony whereof, I have hereunto signed my name and caused the seal of the United States to affixed."

Quite recently the United States District Court convicted some democratic county officials of a charge of conspiracy, in Alabama, on account of their having refused to count the votes of over 1,200 colored republicans. The law provides for two separate ballots and polling places for colored and white voters. The sheriff, an independent democrat, desired two polling places, as usual. The County Commissioners opposed this, and refused to appoint election inspectors. The people did it under the law on the day of election. Their votes were then uncounted. The court ruled and the jury decided that the defendants were guilty of a conspiracy.

New York Tribune

"THE LEADING AMERICAN NEWSPAPER."

THE BEST ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

DAILY, $10 A YEAR. SEMI-WEEKLY, $3. WEEKLY, $2.

Postage Free to the Subscriber. Specimen Copies and Advertising Rates Free. Weekly, in clubs of thirty or more, only $1, postage paid.

Address THE TRIBUNE, N. Y.

$3 TO $20 PER DAY.

AGENTS WANTED

All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at anything else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere until you have learned what we offer.

G. STINSON & CO., Portland, Me.

UNITED STATES OFFICIAL POSTAL GUIDE.

Revised and Published Quarterly by Authority of the Post-Office Department.

NO. 3 FOR APRIL NOW READY,

CONTAINING

TWO ALPHABETICAL LISTS of all the Post Offices in the United States.

LISTS OF MONEY ORDER and Letter Carrier Offices.

FULL DIRECTIONS about Money Orders and Registered Letters.

RATES of Foreign and Domestic Postage.

HOURS OF ARRIVAL AND CLOSING of mails in all the Principal Cities.

DISTANCES by shortest mail routes between the Principal Cities.

RULINGS of the Post-Office Department during the last quarter, including

THE NEW LAW about postage on Third Class Matter, and

All the information required by those who use the Mails.

TERMS: Single copies, 50 cents, for sale at the News Stands and Book Stores. Subscriptions, $1.50 a year, received at any Post-Office, or on application to the publishers.

H. O. HOUGHTON AND COMPANY,
Boston.

HURD AND HOUGHTON, New York.

ADVERTISING:

CHEAP, GOOD, SYSTEMATIC.

All persons who contemplate making contracts with Newspapers for the insertion of Advertisements should send 25 Cents to

GEORGE F. ROWELL & Co.,

41 PARK ROW, NEW YORK,

FOR THEIR

PAMPHLET BOOK

(Ninety-seventh Edition,) containing

Lists of Over 2,000 Newspapers and Estimates, Showing the Cost.

Advertisements taken for Leading Papers in Many States at a Tremendous Reduction from Publisher's Rates. Get the Book.

PREMIUMS.

THE REPUBLIC MAGAZINE,

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Terms - - - - - $2 Per Year, in Advance.

TO ANY PERSON SENDING A

CLUB OF TEN SUBSCRIBERS FOR THE CURRENT YEAR AND $20,

The publishers will forward, free of cost and postage,

A Complete Set---Three Volumes---of the Republic,

HANDSOMELY BOUND, WITH INDEX.

TO THE PERSON SENDING

THE LARGEST CLUB IN ANY MONTH,

BEING MORE THAN TEN,

A COMPLETE SET, INCLUDING THE FOURTH VOLUME,

Which will close with the June number of this year, all neatly bound, with index, and free of cost or postage.

These propositions afford an opportunity to acquire, with little effort, the best text book extant on the science of government.

Specimen copies and prospectus will, on request, be sent free to those desiring to raise clubs.

ADDRESS

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY,

[EXCHANGES PLEASE COPY.]

WASHINGTON, D. C.

SINGLE COPIES, 25 CENTS.

JA
3
R419
THE REPUBLIC:

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

DEVOTED TO

THE DISSEMINATION OF POLITICAL INFORMATION.

Vol. VII.—No. 4.

OCTOBER, 1876.

Whole No. 44.

Contents:

	PAGE
How Hard Times are Made Harder.....	193
The Situation.....	199
Where the Credit Belongs.....	202
Registration of Voters—Why the Repeal of the Law was Wanted.....	204
Mr. Tilden's "Patriotism Above Dollars and Cents".....	205
A Thousand Million Dollars Wanted.....	207
Enforcement of the Election Laws.....	208
Adopted Citizens—The Truth of History.....	210
The Democratic Record—Dare the Nation Trust Such a Party?.....	215
History of the White Line Organization in Mississippi.....	225
Free Schools in the South.....	232
Reform Catechism.....	236
Tilden and Hendricks—A Few Facts about their War Records.....	237
Civil Service Reform.....	240
Southern State Governments—Their Financial Condition Considered...	241
Under which King, Bezonian? Speak, or Die!.....	250
Review of the Month.....	253
Executive and Departmental Doings.....	254

PUBLISHED BY

THE REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

$2 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

July, 1876.

PROSPECTUS.

Vol. 7.

THE REPUBLIC,

Political Science Monthly Magazine.

THE REPUBLIC begins its seventh volume with the July number.

Its publishers are pleased to announce that it has grown steadily in public favor and that it is regarded by all good citizens who have consulted its pages as a power for good throughout the land.

Its past course—consistent, fearless, patriotic—is the index of its future. It will defend the right, denounce the wrong, and endeavor to point out, at all times, the true path for all who love their country to follow.

A sentinel upon the watch-tower of freedom, it will be found at its post of duty to give the word of warning, and sound the alarm should any danger threaten the peace of the Nation.

It will favor the maintenance, by all legitimate means, of free schools, devoid of sectarian influences, and will oppose any attempt to divide the school funds, believing that such division, whether made in the interest of the Catholic Church or its opponents, will ultimately destroy the system of free education, and that civil and religious toleration on which our institutions rest.

It will do all within its power to develop true friendship between the citizens of the North and the South, and for this purpose will advocate the recognition of justice and equality before the law as the only means to secure lasting friendship and its two allies, peace and security.

The Presidential contest of 1876 will be one of the most important in our history. On its issue depends the future policy of the Government. The vital question to be answered by the people is, "Shall the party that proved faithless in war be trusted in peace, and those who saved the country be set aside for those who endeavored to destroy it?"

On this question THE REPUBLIC will take its position at the head of the loyal column, and will do its best to keep the old flag flying until the voice of the people shall announce that Republicanism—the synonym of justice and liberty—has again triumphed over the enemies of good government.

THE REPUBLIC calls upon its friends to aid it in the great work of the present and future. It desires each subscriber to send in at least one additional name to help swell its ranks, and thus add to its power and activity. Is it asking too much—in consideration of the valuable material furnished the cause—to ask that our friends everywhere exert themselves to secure for THE REPUBLIC as many new subscribers as possible?

To the Republican press of the country the magazine sends greeting and cheer. The signs of the times indicate a glorious victory in November. Let no effort be relaxed to make it complete and effective. Insist upon thorough organization, a personal canvass of all doubtful or close districts, the distribution of well-considered documents, and the practice of that vigilance which alone can secure success. If our brethren of the press will but do their duty as faithfully as in the past, victory will be certain.

For their generous confidence and warm support the publishers of THE REPUBLIC return thanks, and hope in the future, as in the past, to deserve by well-doing the good-will so often expressed.

TERMS:

THE REPUBLIC is a magazine of sixty-four pages, published monthly, at $2 a year, or six copies for $10. The postage, in all cases, will be paid by the publishers. A few copies of the back volumes may yet be obtained, either bound or in numbers. Remittances should be made by postal money-order or registered letter.

Address,

REPUBLIC PUBLISHING COMPANY, Washington, D. C.

THE REPUBLIC.

Devoted to the Dissemination of Political Information.

VOL. VII.

WASHINGTON, D. C., OCTOBER, 1876.

No. 4.

HOW HARD TIMES ARE MADE HARDER BY THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

The circumstance upon which the Democratic party base their chief hope of success in the present political campaign is unquestionably the hardness of the times. Their expectation is that tens of thousands of Republican voters will desert their party, or at least remain at home on election day, because they find themselves in straitened circumstances. Even the ravages of the grasshopper and the damage to crops by drought in one locality or excessive moisture in another are expected to be traced by some mysterious process to the maladministration, "corruption," or extravagance of the Republican party. It is to the last named fault that Mr. Tilden, in his letter of acceptance, traces the present depressed condition of trade and industry, and it is chiefly by economy in the national expenditures that he proposes to restore the country to a condition of prosperity. Now we believe it to be true that public expenditures are as a whole larger than they ought to be, but it is chiefly in municipal expenditures that this excess exists. In some cases State expenditures may be somewhat extravagant, but those of the National Government have been such as to leave but a slight margin for reduction, and the reductions actually made in the appropriations during the last session of Congress have been chiefly effected by a sacrifice of the public interests, which will suffer incomparably more from this cause than they ever suffered through any slight excess of expenditures which may previously have existed. The present assessed value of real and personal property in the United States is estimated to be upwards of $20,000,000,000, and the true value to be about $43,000,000,000. Taking the assessed value, however, as the basis of calculation, the expenditures of the National Government for the last fiscal year amounted to a tax of less than one and three-tenths per cent. If from the total expenditures (about $258,000,000) we deduct interest on the public debt (about $100,000,000) and pensions, (about $28,000,000,) the expenditures for other purposes will be found equivalent to a tax of only sixty-four hundredths of one per cent., and by deducting other items which, like the two just mentioned, are clearly traceable to the late Democratic rebellion, we should find that the actual expenditures of the Government for current services amount to less than one half of one per cent. on the assessed value of the taxable property of the country. The contrast between these figures and those which are exhibited in the financial reports of the Democratic city of New York is positively startling. We are unable to give the figures for the latest year, but those for 1870—a time when Mr. Tilden was cheek by jowl with Tweed and other ring thieves of that city—show expenditures amounting to no less than four and two-thirds per cent on the total assessed value of the real and personal property subject to taxation. Happily, however, this state of things is quite exceptional; for though our large cities are not, as a rule, any too well governed, whether under Republican or Democratic rule, New York is the only city which can boast a robber like Tweed, or a reformer like Tilden, whose conversion to virtue and honesty occurred just at the moment to enable him to join in the cry of "Stop thief" when the pursuit of the plunderers began.

The truth is that national taxes are reasonably low and State taxes are not as a general rule extravagant. Particular communities, like the people of New York city, may groan under excessive burdens, but the people at large have no great cause to complain on the score of excessive taxes, and no one knows better than Mr. Tilden the absurdity of attributing to this cause a state of financial distress which had no existence eight or ten years ago, when the taxes collected by the General Government were about twice their present sum and the population and wealth of the country much smaller than they are at present.

The fact is, as Governor Tilden very well knows, if he possesses the intelligence to fit him for the high position to which he aspires, that periods of commercial and industrial distress like that through which we are now passing are due to causes of an exceedingly complex nature, the analysis of which has called forth the best efforts of the ablest statesmen and economists of the age. The financial crises in which such periods originate appear to have little, if any, connection with the political administration of the various countries in which they periodically occur. The last great crisis in our own country previous to that of 1873, from whose

in of its be us-ear ion us-ful eir liss—es, odgly
and

the immense development of the credit system which has grown out of the necessity of concentrating the small loans and investments of the many into the hands of a comparatively small number, to be employed in erecting and operating the great establishments in which modern industry is so largely carried on, or in the execution of the various gigantic enterprises for which the present century has been so signally distinguished.

The process by which a period of general industrial stagnation is reached is well described in the following extract from a very able article on the "Wage-fund Theory," by General Francis A. Walker, which appeared in the North American Review for January, 1875. After briefly sketching the industrial conditions which prevail in a primitive state of society, General Walker says:

"If now we take a long step and reach a condition of industrial civilization, we find great numbers producing that which they do not themselves desire to consume, but which they look to others to take off their hands. If we examine the catalogue of articles thus produced we shall find some of them supplying wants the most imperative, others ministering to the lightest fancies; and between these extremes a host of products meeting desires of varying intensity. Suppose now this intricate organization of the producing body to have been carried to its limits by a long-continued period of general prosperity inducing the greatest diversity of production, when a disaster, industrial or financial in its origin, occurs in the community. Is it not evident that those who are producing the most dispensable articles will find consumption greatly checked, if not destroyed? They cannot at once find a new place in the industrial order. They are trained to one thing only: their tools are adapted to that alone. Even though they enjoyed perfect mobility industrially, it would require a long time to reappportion the supply of labor among a diminished number of industries. Hence they suffer, and in their distress have to forego the use of things more necessary to life than those which they had themselves been producing, and this in turn affects the consumption of these articles, and thus distresses new classes of producers, and so the mischief proceeds. Now, were men all perfectly intelligent and self-possessed, the effect would be a constantly diminishing one, as the original loss should be distributed over an ever-widening circle of production. But as men are, panic enters almost at the first; apprehension runs ahead of the evil; consumption is checked far more rapidly than is necessary; and every blow which production thus encounters is transmitted with effect heightened by the growing alarm.

"All this would be true if the industrial community were wholly composed of direct producers. But the introduction of "middlemen," merchants, master-manufacturers, and bankers serves prodigiously to heighten the effect. The merchant, perceiving the actual falling off in demand, exaggerates it in his orders to the manufacturer. The latter, judging of the demand only through the merchant's orders, and alarmed by what they show, inevitably in his turn exaggerates the evil and reduces his production more than proportionally. The banker, in his turn, fearing for the safety of the merchant and manufacturer in these critical conditions, and resolved not to be himself the victim, curtails his loans and deprives both of the means essential to the conduct of their already embarrassed business. Such, rudely sketched, are the possibilities of disaster, which lie in the separation of production from consumption, through the division of labor in industrial society."

The industrial conditions of the present day are, in truth, comparatively new to the experience of mankind; and the laws which govern banking, the incorporation of business associations, and generally the business relations of the members of the body politic, are as yet but imperfectly adapted to the wants of the age. This lack of adaptation is due, not to willful maladministration or to willfully bad legislation, but to the occult nature of the problems to be dealt with and the want of an adequate acquaintance with the laws upon which the solution of these problems depends.

It may be said, however, with the most perfect truth and fairness that ignorance of these laws has rarely if ever been more conspicuously manifest in any modern legislative body than it was in the Democratic branch of the Forty-fourth Congress during the session which has just closed; and rarely has such ignorance been conjoined with a stubbornness more thoroughly mulish than that which characterized the action of some of the Democratic leaders of that body. If the science of political economy is not yet sufficiently advanced to afford the means of preventing financial crises, there are at least certain obvious ways in which their effects may be alleviated; and, as all the natural conditions requisite to public prosperity seemed to be present when the Forty-fourth Congress convened, that body might reasonably have been expected to devote its first and most earnest attention to the task of devising some means for the relief of the prevailing distress. Indeed, it is hardly too much to say that this was the very purpose for which that body was elected, thousands of the less intelligent class of voters having entertained a vague notion that a change of political parties would in some mysterious manner bring about a changed condition of affairs throughout the country. Those who entertained such an idea must have discovered by this time how fallacious were their expectations. And yet, as we have already intimated, there was work which might have been done had the House possessed the intelligence and the patriotism to undertake it.

We have mentioned the large development of the credit system in modern society as one of the causes of financial crises. It is one of the peculiarities of the present era that its manufacturing industries are carried on mainly in large establishments; that consequently small amounts of capital cannot, as a rule, be turned to advantageous account by their possessors in any business of their own, but, to become profitable, must be lent to others; and that, as a matter of fact, vast sums in the aggregate are so lent and, in combination, are used in carrying on the great industries of the world.

Now, under a system of industry which depends so largely on tens of thousands of small loans indirectly made through the agency of banks, it is of the utmost importance, nay, it is absolutely vital, to the prosperity of such industry that a feeling of confidence in the safety of this sort of loans shall be diffused throughout the country. Such a feeling of confidence did prevail to a very considerable extent prior to the crisis of 1873; but that event developed the fact that many of the banks which had received these small loans in the form of deposits were unsound; that the managers of these institutions, moved by inordinate greed of gain, had taken the money of depositors and instead of lending it on approved security, as they easily might have done, had invested it in speculative enterprises. A signal example of such mismanagement is seen in the case of Jay Cooke & Co., who had invested millions of dollars belonging to their depositors in the futile attempt to build a great railroad through the midst of a wilderness. And when such firms failed it was found that depositors were practically without remedy.

Such experience naturally shook the confidence of the people in banking institutions generally, and, by preventing deposits, dried up tens of thousands of small streams of capital which previously had helped to keep the wheels of industry in motion.

Now, one of the greatest of practical problems which a national legislature could have set itself to solve would have been that of restoring these small streams of capital to their usual channels by infusing confidence among the people; and the way to do this was to furnish a solid foundation for such confidence by such an improvement in our banking system as would give to the money of depositors the highest attainable security. The problem is, indeed, a difficult one, but its solution is by no means impossible; and in view of the great value such a measure would have in restoring the country to its normal prosperity it might well have claimed the first place in the deliberations of Congress. Instead of that, we have witnessed a most humiliating spectacle. At a time when wise statesmanship was peculiarly needed we have seen a whole session of Congress—the longest for many years past—almost exclusively devoted to making party capital by the most pitiful arts of the demagogue, while of that statesmanship which by wise measures, undertaken with a single eye to the public good, might, without seeking it, have made party capital enough to last for a generation, we have not had a solitary glimpse.

Even the economy upon which the Democratic majority of the House of Representatives have rested their principal claim to public favor has been mainly of that brilliant description which consists in "saving at the spigot and losing at the bung." Internal revenue districts have been consolidated and the force of collectors and assessors cut down at the risk of losses in collection which will exceed the few paltry thousands saved in sum of official salaries. Thus the people who purchase the products subject to taxation will have to pay taxes which for lack of an adequate force of revenue officers to protect the interests of the Government will go into the pockets of dishonest manufacturers instead of the National Treasury. Navy-yards in which the Government has invested from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000 would have been left, had the House had its own way, without a dollar for their care and protection. In a thousand details, so small that they will never reach the public eye, the pseudo economy adopted by the House with a single eye to political effect will bear a crop of waste and loss. Thus, in one of the public offices, we recently saw a quantity of valuable reports which had been received from a foreign Government. They consisted chiefly of heavy quarto volumes in paper covers. A requisition had been made for the binding of them, but the reply came that owing to the scantness of the appropriation for such work it would have to be indefinitely deferred. The expense of binding is not saved but merely postponed, and the postponement is at the probable cost of serious damage to the books, which must be used in their present form. There is an old saying that for want of a nail the shoe was lost, and for want of a shoe the horse was disabled. The Democratic economists of the House of Representatives have not hesitated in any case to save the nail at the expense of the horse whenever the loss of the latter could be postponed or concealed until after the November election.

One of the most signal examples of this is seen in the postponement of necessary public works, which, owing to the dullness of the times and the consequent cheapness of labor and materials, might have been executed now at about one-third less cost than they would involve at a time when business is good. The postponing of such works is certainly not the kind of economy which is practiced by sagacious private capitalists. Any one who keeps his eyes open as he walks the streets of our capital city, for example, cannot fail to be struck by the large number of buildings in course of erection and we believe that the same state of thing exists in most other cities and rising towns throughout the country. Is this because any unusual demand for houses or stores? This question, substantially, was asked a few weeks ago of a gentleman who is engaged in erecting a fine, substantial block of dwellings. His answer was a decided negative. "Why, then, are you building so extensively?" he was asked. "Because I can build so cheaply," was the reply; "and the houses are sure to be wanted by and by."

Now, here is a capitalist who is erecting buildings on the faith of a prospective demand for them; and were there not many others like him the condition of the working classes throughout the country would be much worse than it is. In contrast with the foresight and enterprise of such men how wretchedly stupid and imbecile appears the policy which men of the Randall type are impressing upon the National Government! The nation has no need to erect public buildings with a view to a prospective necessity for them. The necessity exists already, and, in Washington particularly its existence, on a large scale, is demonstrated by the rents the Government is paying for private buildings to accommodate public offices for which there is not room in the Departments to which they belong. In these buildings large amounts of property and public records of the utmost importance are exposed to constant risk of fire, while furniture is subject to breakage, and the public business to interruption and derangement by frequent removals, three of which are commonly said to be as bad as fire itself.

Now, why is it that the buildings necessary for the permanent accommodation of these outlying offices cannot be erected at once? And why is it that we cannot at once erect such buildings as the public service needs in various other cities throughout the country? • Why is it that we cannot now continue work on the double-turreted iron-clads whose construction, being deemed necessary to enable us to hold our own, even in a contest with an effete and third-rate power like Spain, was commenced two or three years ago? Why is it that we cannot provide for the necessary repairs to ships of our existing navy, or even for the ordinary care needed to preserve them from decay? Why can we not now, as well as any other time, construct the fortifications which competent military men deem necessary to the safety of our scattered garrisons, and to the efficiency of our operations against the hostile savages, who have come to understand so well our paltry economies that even our forty odd millions of population no longer have any terrors for them? Why need we postpone such improvements as are really needed in important rivers and harbors, and thus, by subjecting commerce to unnecessary disabilities, add to the cost of imported articles and diminish the price which the producer receives for articles destined for exportation? Are we postponing the work until there is a revival of business? But with a revival of business will come an increased demand for labor and a consequent rise in wages and in commodities. Why, then, should we forego the saving which might be effected by executing these works now? Is it because the people are at present too poor to bear additional taxation? But additional taxation is unnecessary. The credit of the Government is so good that it can now borrow money at about $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum; and, as regards public buildings, at least, it may safely be said that the rents saved by their erection would much more than pay the interest on the sum required to erect them; while the saving in cost which would be effected by executing these and the various other works above named at the present time, instead of postponing them until after the revival of business, would alone be sufficient to make it immensely profitable to borrow every dollar needed for the purpose. There has been no question of borrowing, however, or of adding a dollar to existing taxation. All that has been proposed on the part of the executive department of the Government has been work for the execution of which the existing revenues would probably yield all the money that would be needed. There seems, therefore, to be but one reason why this work must be postponed, and that is the necessity under which the Democratic party finds itself of doing some startling thing by way of demonstrating that it is the party of economy. And the plan it has selected is that of postponing the expenditure of a certain number of millions now with the prospect of having to spend those same millions, with half as many more added, after the revival of business shall have increased the rates of wages and the prices of materials.

Not merely is this wasteful policy unwarranted by the present depression in business; not only does it utterly fail to afford the slightest relief from the pressure of hard times, but, on the contrary, it aggravates existing distress and withholds from thousands of the working classes a relief which would have been as welcome to them as the giving of it would have been profitable to the Government. The total reduction in the appropriation bills of this year, as compared with those for the fiscal year 1875-6, is shown by a careful analysis to be about $20,000,000, of which about three-fourths consist of postponed appropriations.

These postponed appropriations, for the most part, represent postponed work, and the postponement of work implies the throwing of workmen out of employment, or the failure to employ those to whom employment might have been furnished. Hence it is not merely at a loss to the Government, but at a still graver loss to the working classes, and through them to the trade of the country, that necessary public works have been postponed. The good which might have been done by the judicious employment of the $15,000,000 unnecessarily and wastefully withheld cannot easily be calculated. At a moderate estimate the expenditure of this sum would have given steady employment for a year to more than twenty thousand mechanics and laborers. These workmen would thus have had the means of purchasing many comforts which they will now be obliged to forego, and their custom would have given employment to other workmen in producing the articles which they would have been enabled to consume. The employment of this second body of workmen would in turn have increased their power as consumers, and thus would have furnished employment for a third body, and so on indefinitely. It is therefore difficult to estimate the aggregate number of persons who could have been furnished with employment by the adoption of a wisely liberal policy in reference to the prosecution of public works; and this, too, as we have already shown, not merely without loss, but at a great profit to the Government itself, and without imposing any additional burdens upon the people, whose taxes this economical House of Representatives has not reduced by a single penny.

GENERAL CONCLUSIONS.

We have shown that the Democratic outcry against the extravagance of the Federal Government under Republican administration is unfounded.

The total expenditures for the last fiscal year amounted to only one and three-tenths per cent. on the present assessed value of our property, and to not more than six-tenths of one per cent. on its estimated true value.

Deducting interest on the public debt, pensions, and other expenses due to the late Democratic rebellion, from the total expenditures, the expenditures for all other objects amount to less than half of one per cent. on the assessed, and less than one-fourth of one per cent. on the true value of our taxable property.

The expenditures of the Democratic city of New York in 1870, when Tilden and Tweed were still on terms of intimacy, amounted to $4\frac{2}{3}$ per cent. on the assessed value of property in that city.

The assertion that the present depression in business is due to official extravagance is contradicted by the fact that business was comparatively good when the expenditures of the Government were about twice their present amount. It is also at variance with the views of the ablest political economists, who attribute financial crises, and the business prostration which follows them, to the causes already pointed out.

If the assertion were sincerely made it would indicate such ignorance on the part of those who make it as to preclude all hope of their discovering and removing the causes of our financial troubles.

The incompetency of the Democratic party to discover and remove these causes has in fact been abundantly demonstrated by the course of its representatives in Congress during the last session.

Their sole remedy for hard times has been to cut down the appropriations by which they have—

First. Crippled the Government and exposed it to loss through an imperfect collection of the revenues.

Second. Postponed needed public works, upon which millions of dollars might have been saved by executing them while labor and materials can be had at their present low rates.

Third. Added tens of thousands, directly and indirectly, to the great army of the unemployed, who in some of our cities are already muttering "bread or blood," and withheld from as many more employment which, under an enlightened policy, might have been furnished with equal advantage to them, to the Government, and to the people at large.

In all of this there has not appeared a spark of patriotic purpose. It is true that much of the mischief done may be attributed to ignorance and stupidity; but the motives of the House were as bad as its intelligence was defective; and if its legislation has been worse than party spirit and unmitigated demagogism need have made it, it is only because the leading Democratic members lacked the wit to see how far they might take care of the public interests without compromising the interests of their party.

THE SITUATION.

That the condition of the country is a critical one even the most cursory observer will admit. The issues of the hour are those of 1860 resurrected under a new name, and thousands more sprung into life during the last sixteen years. And these issues are of such vital importance, appeal so strongly to the patriotism of the whole country, not to mere political bias, that no man or woman who has the life and welfare of that country at heart can look upon them with the indifference with which many regard the ordinary struggles of one party to dethrone the other every four years. The issues of 1860 are entering largely into the present conflict. They were defeated then by the bullet—they must be overcome now by the ballot. When the rebels laid down their arms in 1865 the loyal people threw away theirs and sprang forward with hands extended to give the clasp of reconciliation and brotherly love. But how were they met? Was the response equally frank and sincere? No! Like whipped schoolboys the Southerners put their hands behind their backs and refused the offered pledge. Still, the North was patient and hopeful. They trusted that when time had healed the wounds and softened the bitterness the South would see what was for their own good and accept the situation. They (the North) were like travelers in a new country met by a terrific storm. After weathering it—after seeing the clouds break away, the flashes of lightning becoming less and less frequent, the thunder fainter and fainter, and finally the sun shine forth in mid-sky, they fondly hoped all danger past. Because the sun was not obscured they said the elemental strife was over. And when those who were "native here and to the manner born," the loyal people of the South, uttered their words of warning they met a like fate with Cassandra. When they pointed to the low, black shadows lying along the horizon, and the deep red flashes of lightning that occasionally dyed them, and called attention to the distant muttering of the thunder, and cried the storm was but retiring to gather new force—was but gliding around upon the wind and would once more mount to the zenith, and that at no late day, they were laughed at for their fears. But now, after sixteen years, these warnings are proved to have been timely ones; and at the first Presidential election in which all the "reconstructed" Southern States take part the work is all to be done over again if we would not see the country struck down like some monarch of the forest beneath the revived power of the storm. Now, as then, the Southerners are clinging to the false doctrine of State's Rights, only in a new dress. The cry is again that they want "self-government" and "to be let alone." That is all just as it was in 1860—and a very modest request, their apologists told us. But let us see how the idea is to be carried out in 1876; its working in 1860-5 are patent to all the world. If we had let them alone eight years ago each State would have had slavery re-established under another name, and the negro, as helpless and degraded as before the war, would to-day have cried as loudly for succor as he did then. But we did not let them alone, and the full rebel element not then having a representation in Congress laws of universal suffrage were passed, which put a weapon of self-protection into the black man's hands. Now they want "to be let alone," that by murder and intimidation they may drive that black man and his friends, the Southern Republicans, from the polls, and so obtain that "self-government" of rebels, by rebels, and for rebels for which their souls sigh. And this enfranchised negro is one of the issues which has sprung into life since 1860. The Republican party is responsible for him and to him, and can no more, in honor and honesty, throw him over than they can ignore the national debt.

The geni has escaped from the bottle, which was his prison, and will not redissolve into a mist and return to it to be again corked up and put out of the way. But the geni of the Arabian Nights rewarded, if memory serves, his liberator by valuable presents, and so will the negro, if properly cared for and protected until he can fully protect himself, reward his liberators by helping them to preserve the gift of liberty to the whole country. That the issues of 1860 are revived it is only necessary to read the accounts which reach us constantly from one or other of the reconstructed States that are clamoring for "self-government." Only the other day Wade Hampton, one of the fiercest and most uncompromising rebels—one whose slogan during the war was, "We have no time to take prisoners," and accordingly whose hands are deeper dyed with Northern blood than almost any other of their leaders—Wade Hampton is unanimously nominated for Governor of South Carolina. Why? Because with a wise prudence he tries to induce the people to forget the past, so far as to bear no malice, but to unite with the other States to meet the North half way in its offers of peace?

Because he endeavors to soothe the passions and curb the fierce spirits of those who look upon him as a leader? By no means! But for the very reverse. Because he never loses an opportunity of exciting those very passions, of lashing those fierce spirits into greater fury, of bringing the lost cause forward on all occasions, and waving the palmetto flag before them whenever opportunity offers; because he sneers at the negro and insults him, and vows he shall have no rights now any more than he had in the past, if he can prevent it. For such qualities, and such only, is Wade Hampton unanimously nominated by the rebel Democracy of South Carolina to be their Governor. At this Tilden and Hendricks meeting, after the nomination of Wade Hampton, several ex-generals and colonels of the rebel army spoke. Mr. (General?) Sam Ferguson told them how, with a Republican majority of five thousand in Mississippi, the election of the rebel officials was carried by a Democratic majority of eleven hundred. There was no intimidation or violence, according to this gentleman—"but we told the Radical leaders that if one drop of blood was shed not one of them should leave the State alive"—and so "all went merry as a marriage bell." Mr. (General?) Gary advised the people not to hurt the poor, ignorant negro, but to hang the white Republican leaders first, the mulattoes second, and then the black ones, and he believed the American Congress would pass them a vote of thanks! Butler, of Hamburg, explained his little game to them in plain language. And all this was done in a grand ratification meeting in the Columbia State-house yard, not by a few reckless, insignificant men, but by the leaders of the Democracy in the "prostrate State" of South Carolina. And yet there are men like Mr. Lamar who claim for the South full renunciation of the principles leading to the war, and acceptance of those developed by it, and expect the country to believe them! He (Lamar) supposes the world will close its ears to the cries which come up from the victims of these men who are leagued together to carry their murderous policy out at all hazards, and force each State under rebel rule by bloodshed, if no other means will attain their end, and listen only to the rounded periods in which he dresses his falsehoods as he stands upon the floor of the nation's Congress, under the folds of the very flag he used every effort to destroy, and now insults by his very presence! But if the evil of negro suffrage was a necessity forced upon the Republican party, that of rebel enfranchisement was as grievous a mistake. To that mistaken policy of kindness the evils of the present day are all owing. Had the right to vote been withheld from every man who bore arms in, or aided and abetted the rebellion in any way, the Democratic party would have died a natural death, and from its ashes a better and a wiser one would have arisen. But the evil once done, the object of all loyal men must be to prevent its full effects from destroying the country by defeating them next November in the Presidential contest. The people must not be led astray by the catch words "reform and retrenchment" with which the friends of the rebels are trying to beguile them. They must look back upon the record of the Republicans for the last sixteen years with calm, dispassionate judgment, and giving all due heed to the errors of that party, forget not the good work it has done. When the Democratic rebellion broke upon the country the Republican party sprang, like Minerva from the head of Jove full armed, at once to life and the fulness of power. For four years it guided the ship of State through the sea of blood and brought her safe to anchor at a peaceful port. If it made mistakes it hastened to correct them. That the people indorsed its actions the elections of '64, '68, and '72 have proved. Is it reserved for the Centennial year of our national life to see all that indorsement canceled, all the work of the sixteen years undone, and the country a prey to the very men whose efforts, had they succeeded, would have rendered it in this year of 1876 a by-word and a mockery for the nations?

Another issue of the war which the Republican party is bound to the country to guard is the national debt. Power once put into the hands of the rebels and their Democratic confederates, and that debt will be repudiated and the liabilities of the South met instead. The many rebel personal claims with which they have clogged the wheels of the last session of Congress would be a mere bagatelle compared to the millions that would be put into the pockets of the rebels under that head, and the nation would be bankrupt in a year. That the country was not wrecked through the machinations of the party which now asks the people to restore it to power is due to the Republican party; that that party made mistakes no one will deny, (and there was no greater mistake than giving the rebels the right to vote;) that wicked and dishonest men cloaked themselves under its name in order to further their own designs no one will deny; neither will they deny that they were ejected from their places as soon as their villainy was discovered, and promptly punished for their crimes by that very party. "To err is human," and the Republican party is composed of men not supernatural beings, consequently as men, they are as apt as any others to err, particularly when they give up the beacon-lights of that party's principles, and while still calling themselves by its name go aside after personal aggrandisement. But the principles of the party will last as long as the world will last, because they are founded upon the rock of right and justice, and even should the people be led astray by the ignis fatuus of Democratic promises to desert those principles, they will hasten at the first opportunity to retrieve their mistake and resume their allegiance to them. Democracy has been galvanized into life by the misplaced clemency of over-sanguine Republicans, but there is no soul in it and it cannot thrive.

"Truth crushed to the earth will rise again,
 • The eternal years of God are hers;
 But error, wounded, writhes in pain,
 And dies amid her worshippers."

A MERE "reduction" of the appropriations of the Government service does not always mean a "saving." While the appropriation bills of this year, as passed by the House of Representatives, are in the aggregate $29,594,187.38 less than for the same branches of the service last year, the actual "saving" to the Treasury, as is conclusively shown by Senator Windom in his speech in the United States Senate August 12th, is not one-fifth of that sum. Senator Windom's figures are official, and they are conclusive on that point.

WHERE THE CREDIT BELONGS.

One of the many weak inventions of the enemy in the present political contest is the statement that Governor Tilden has reduced taxation in the State of New York to the extent of eight millions of dollars, and is therefore entitled to the reputation of being a great political reformer, and to the management of the affairs of the National Government. The claim that he is a great reformer is not true in point of fact, and even if it were true it does not follow that he is entitled to the Presidency in preference to Governor Hayes, whose character, record, and views will bear the closest scrutiny without detracting in the least from his fair fame. A reduction of about seven and a half millions of dollars in the State taxes of New York has been made, if we go back to 1874 for a comparison. The reduction from 1875 is considerably smaller. But we shall presently see by whom these reductions were made, and that Governor Tilden is not entitled to the credit. Several weeks ago he issued a campaign document in the shape of a veto, in which he instituted a false and misleading comparison between the State taxes of 1876 and those of 1874, the last year of Governor Dix's administration. Whether intentionally or not, in this manifesto he confuses expenditures with taxes. Out of $7,459,286, the computed reduction of taxes, he claims $6,323,417, as the result of "real economies" in expenditures, and craftily insinuates that the whole $6,323,417 of these so-called savings were effected through his agency and influence. How preposterous this claim is, upon which his reputation as a great reformer is principally based, will appear as we proceed. In fact, the falsity of his pretenses in this respect has been exposed time and again, but by systematic and judicious advertising his bulletins grew and his fictitious fame spread abroad like his own ambition. We even find that in the Senate of the United States a Democratic Senator from Delaware, Mr. Saulsbury, recently declared that there was a cry for reform from all parts of the country, and that his party had presented to the country a man who had reduced the taxes in his own State from $15,- 000,000 to $8,000,000. He also said that "the Democrats would hail with joy the day when the Government at Washington would be reformed and purified by the man who had purified the government of New York." A Democratic Senator from Connecticut, Mr. Eaton, in a very partisan speech, said still more recently on the floor of the Senate, that "the taxation of the State of New York before the accession of Mr. Tilden to power was $16,000,000 annually, and that after his accession to power it was $8,000,000." He then concluded that "there must be a change here such as there was in New York, where, instead of $16,000,000 a year, the taxation was reduced to $8,000,000 a year." His figures and statements, like those of Mr. Saulsbury, were even more exaggerated than those of Mr. Tilden. At the Democratic ratification meeting in Boston Judge Abbott called Governor Tilden, amidst great applause, "a man who has proved by his acts that he is capable in a year and a half of reducing the burden of taxes in the great Empire State of New York nearly one-half." The claims made on Mr. Tilden's behalf can be properly characterized only by the use of very unparliamentary language, or else it must in charity be said that these Senators, this Judge, and their political friends generally, have shown great weakness in taking the Governor at his own word. They are too innocent to suspect or too partisan to admit that Governor Tilden, in order to advance his personal political fortunes, is guilty of claiming for himself a reputation for reform which does not belong to him. Without attempting to reconcile this fact with his character as a candid man, we shall content ourselves with briefly stating the following facts, showing on what an unsubstantial basis rests his reputation as a financial reformer in his own State, upon which he and his supporters greatly rely in advancing his claims for election to the Presidency:

The Legislature of New York, and not the Governor, originates all appropriations and tax bills. The Legislature elected last November, and still existing, consists of 20 Republicans and 12 Democrats in the Senate, and 72 Republicans and 56 Democrats in the House, and is therefore a Republican Legislature. This Legislature passed this year every one of the tax laws and made all the appropriations. The Governor's vetoes this year were few and insignificant, notwithstanding his great desire to make political capital by the exercise of the veto power. Whatever credit is due for the reduction of taxes this year as compared with those of any former year is therefore due to the Republican Legislature, and not to Governor Tilden. The sum levied in 1874, while General Dix was Governor, for the payment of debts and for the sinking funds, was nearly $6,000,000, which was made necessary for deficiencies in the sinking funds, several millions of money having been diverted therefrom in consequence of low taxes and profuse expenditures under preceding Democratic administrations. These $6,000,000 were not for a dollar of expenses, but for extinguishing debt and for the sinking funds. The tax levied for 1876 for the same purposes is nearly $800,000. The difference of more than $5,000,000 is due to the extinction of the debt and to the filling up of the sinking funds, and not at all, as Governor Tilden claims, to the reduction of expenses, or what he calls "real economies." This year's taxes are undoubtedly less, but it is not because Governor Tilden has reduced expenses, but because debts have been paid. The provision for the payment of these debts and for the relief of the tax-payers, for which Governor Tilden unjustly wishes to take the credit, is due to the Republican administration of Governor Dix, who restored $11,000,000 to the sinking funds, from which they had been taken by the Democratic party to help out the State payments. The sinking funds were thus made complete. The whole indebtedness of the State was reduced during Governor Dix's term more than $8,000,000. The process of extinguishing the bounty debt of $21,000,000, owing to the large premium upon sinking fund investments made by the Republicans, was in a more advanced condition when Governor Tilden came into office than Governor Dix had anticipated it would be. Last year's tax rate, by being levied on an assessed valuation much increased over that which was taken as the dividend in computing the rate, produced over a million dollars more than the State required or could lawfully use, and this million is now being used for current appropriations in place of a million dollars which otherwise must have been obtained this year by higher taxes. In 1874 the Legislature and Governor Dix, instead of being favored in this way, were compelled to tax the people for a deficiency in the general fund, which had been created by Democratic management of the State finances. The reduction of taxation, which is due to Governor Dix's interference on behalf of the sinking funds, and to the paying off of debts, is now claimed by Governor Tilden and his supporters to be due to greater economy of administration. In his false and misleading comparison in the message referred to Governor Tilden attempts to rob a Republican of the reputation which is justly due to him, in order to bolster up his own and convey the impression to the people that he has reduced the expenses of the State government by $6,000,000, and is therefore a great reformer and peculiarly qualified as a Democratic candidate for the office of President of the United States. The reduction of taxes to the extent of $6,000,000, which Governor Tilden claims is due to his efforts, has been exaggerated by Democratic Senators and newspapers to $8,000,000. The false pretenses which Governor Tilden put forth in order to promote his nomination and election to the Presidency prove conclusively, if they prove anything, that he is one of the most stupendous of those shams which he says "the public mind will no longer accept."

OVER fifty million dollars of the annual public expenditures of the Government, for pensions, &c., are the direct result of the Democratic rebellion. This sum is annually taken from the pockets of the people. That same Democracy now wants to control the Government, in order to vote payment for rebel claims.

PROTECTION against undue foreign industrial competition is as clearly one of the first laws of civilized nations as self-preservation is a law of nature itself.

REGISTRATION OF VOTERS—WHY THE REPEAL OF THE LAW WAS WANTED.

The movement of the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives for the repeal of the election laws in relation to the registration of voters and the appointment of supervisors of elections was, like much of their legislation, purely a partisan measure. Its political object was to open the door to the old system of frauds that prevailed in elections throughout the Nation, and particularly in the State of New York in 1868, and thus to secure a "solid South" for the Democracy in the pending Presidential contest without any interference on the part of the General Government. It is well known that the grossest frauds prevailed in the elections held in the State of New York in 1868, especially in the city of New York, where Tweed and Tilden, backed by the Tammany Democracy, exercised a powerful influence. Subsequent investigations have shown that these frauds were sanctioned and indorsed by the prominent Democrats of that State, one of whom is now the Presidential candidate of the Democratic party, and who was at that time chairman of the Democratic State Committee. In his capacity of chairman of said committee, Samuel J. Tilden issued a private and strictly confidential circular addressed to his partisan friends throughout the State, in which he urged them "at once to communicate with some reliable person in three or four principal towns, and in each city of the county," requesting him ("expenses duly arranged for at this end") to telegraph to Wm. M. Tweed, Tammany Hall, at the minute of closing the polls, not waiting for the count, such person's estimate of the vote." Specific directions were then given as to the form of the telegram. He then added, and the language is especially significant: "There is, of course, an important object to be attained by a simultaneous transmission at the hour of closing the polls, but not longer waiting." This language is certainly explicit. Waiting longer than the hour of closing the polls would defeat the important object to be attained by a simultaneous transmission. Further directions were given with the view of obtaining a simultaneous transmission at the hour of closing the polls. The estimates were to be telegraphed to Tweed at the minute of closing the polls, without waiting for the count. And this private and strictly confidential circular, by which an important object to the Democracy was to be obtained by a simultaneous transmission at the hour of closing the polls, and lost by waiting longer, was signed by Samuel J. Tilden, Chairman of the Democratic State Committee.

In 1869, when the full extent of the election frauds committed by the Democracy in 1868 became fully known, Horace Greeley, who only four years ago was the candidate of the same party for President of the United States, addressed an open letter in the New York Tribune of October 20 to Samuel J. Tilden, the present candidate of the same party, in which he accused him of wholesale ballot-box stuffing, and went on to say: "On the principle that the receiver is as bad as the thief, you are as deeply implicated in this matter to-day as though your name were Tweed, O'Brien, or Oakey Hall." Coming from the Democratic candidate in 1872, this declaration ought to have some weight in determining the character of the Democratic candidate in 1875. As Mr. Greeley said, "the manifest intent of this circular was to 'make assurance doubly sure' that the frauds here (in New York city) perpetrated should not be overborne by the honest vote of the rural districts." Mr. Greeley pointed out some of the glaring frauds in the lower wards of the city, and then added: "Mr. Tilden, you know what this contrast attests. Right well do you comprehend the means whereby the vote of 1868 was thus swelled out of all proportions."

The head and front of this gigantic swindle, by which over fifty thousand fraudulent votes were cast and counted in New York city, was William M. Tweed, and in this corrupt scheme he had the influence and aid of Samuel J. Tilden, the chairman of the Democratic State committee. In 1868, at the height of his corrupt power, Tweed could command all the votes required to balance the honest vote of the State. His plan, as Tilden's strictly confidential circular shows, was to get the news in advance from the State, in order to determine, as nearly as possible, how large a vote was needed from the city to counteract the country vote. Thus, by practicing the grossest frauds, the Democrats carried the State of New York in the Presidential election of 1868, and "counted in" Hoffman as Governor.

These irregularities and frauds, so far as they related to the election for representatives to Congress and electors of President and Vice President, were made the subject of a thorough investigation by a Congressional committee, the report of which was submitted to the House on February 23, 1869, by Mr. Lawrence, of Ohio. Investigation revealed a system of Democratic corruption almost beyond belief. In compliance with Mr. Tilden's confidential request over two hundred telegrams were received and paid for by Tammany Hall; and, as the responses came early in the evening, Tweed & Co. were enabled to supply the necessary vote from the city to counterbalance the country vote and thus carry the State for Hoffman. On Tilden's examination as a witness in the Tweed trial the fact was developed that he had taken $5,000 from Tweed as a political contribution. It is said that he received $15,000, but the proof is positive and admitted that he did receive $5,000. Thus, out of his own mouth, the fact is established that Mr. Tilden was supplied with funds by Mr. Tweed shortly before the confidential circular was agreed upon and issued. It was therefore truly said that expenses were "duly arranged at this end."

And to-day the Democratic chairman of 1868 for the State of New York is the "Reform" candidate for the Presidency of the United States. This is the "honest" man, this is the "reformer" who, in 1868, could have "expenses duly arranged at this end," and for whom the Democrats of the present House of Representatives have thought it necessary to repeal the supervisory election law, in order that unlimited frauds may prevail at the coming elections, and this "honest" man, this Democratic "Reform" candidate for President, be "counted in," as Hoffman, the Democratic candidate for Governor of New York in 1868, was "counted in." This Democratic "reformer" is in urgent need of reform himself, and the party that supports him, knowing his unclean record, is in still more urgent need of reform.

MR. TILDEN'S "PATRIOTISM ABOVE DOLLARS AND CENTS."

The Democratic party is still composed of the men who hug the old delusions, and who are utterly incapable of realizing that the country has outgrown the restraints of its evil policy and repudiated its control. The stronghold of the Democratic party has always been its belief in the ignorance of the masses. And it has entered upon the work of the Presidential campaign by resorting to its stale tricks of bold assertion of downright, absolute falsehood.

Mr. Tilden himself knows that he has not the faintest claim to be considered a reformer. He is one of that very old school of Democrats who have survived to the Centennial year. He never had a thought in advance of the Democratic party. He commenced his political youth in finding out the party ruts, and he has been all his life running in those ruts, through pools of corruption and chicanery, until he has reached the office of Governor of New York. But it has been said that if before taking the oath of office he had been required to take an oath that he had not been "counted in," he might have hesitated briefly while he asked himself some questions. At all events, as he looks down the tortuous path through which he had traveled, his long and early connection with Tammany, his offensive and unpatriotic conduct during the war for the Union, and his close intimacy with Tweed till he supplanted him, let him say when it was he first yearned for reform, and what he has done for the good of the country.

When Mr. Tilden placed himself in the hands of the "claquers" of the Democratic party as a Presidential aspirant he thought the people would forget his political career. He should know that a Copperhead always puts himself upon record in such a manner that his subsequent deeds must needs be challenged. Mr. Tilden and patriotism were never related; and even Mr. Hewitt's impudent contradiction of Mr. Kasson in the House of Representatives will not serve his purpose. Mr. Tilden never contributed one cent towards the Tammany regiment. The expenses of the regiment were defrayed from the funds of the Union Defense Committee. Mr. Kasson was right, therefore, in the assertion. It was hardly possible for Mr. Kasson to be wrong in saying that Mr. Tilden never said a word, and never performed an act that showed he was in sympathy with the Union cause; while it was notorious that his sympathies were all the other way.

Mr. Hewitt's disdain must have been something magnificent as he piped out in reply to the inquiry how much Mr. Tilden gave to the regiment—"patriotism is above dollars and cents!" When the Democratic party went into the rebellion of the South Mr. Tilden clung to its skirts in the North, and roared out lustily that the war was an outrage. How much money would such a man give to equip soldiers to go to the front? Not much, Mr. Hewitt. Mr. Tilden knows he gave nothing—simply nothing. And the people know that Mr. Tilden deserves nothing at their hands, and will get it.

Mr. Tilden and the Democratic party are behind the age. When steam printing and the telegraph came into use the party began to decay. Slavery was doomed directly the electric wire touched Southern soil. For it was not possible that the doings of the Slave Power could be flashed through the world without awakening a response that must destroy it root and branch. But Mr. Tilden was at the Northern end of the wire and avoided being shocked by crying that it was an outrage to send the grand armies of the Republic to put down the rebellion. And Mr. Tilden's Democratic rebel friends thought that he had sufficient occupation thus to lift up his voice and cry out in their favor. But they did not understand Mr. Tilden—Mr.

Samuel J. Tilden—who had a little business of his own to attend to in Michigan. It will be remembered that the gold and silver of the country disappeared shortly after the war commenced; and the greenback was necessary to carry on the war. Then national banks were established, in the hope of assisting the Government, whose circulation was made safe by the deposit of bonds. Perhaps Mr. Tilden did not like to invest in United States bonds. Perhaps Mr. Tilden thought a bank tax unjust, and he did not like to pay it. But he did this: He said he was "a hard money man;" that the Government had no right to promise to pay and not keep its promise; it was dishonest. "Gold and silver for me," said Mr. Tilden, "they are the birds that sing all the year round."

No doubt Mr. Tilden heard those birds sing. No doubt he often talked of "the purchasing power of the greenback and the purchasing power of the gold dollar." "Yes, gentlemen, I am a hard money man," said Mr. Tilden. Then Mr. Tilden hied him to North Michigan, where there were iron and copper industries, and many workmen with large families. There he had mills—iron-mills—and money mills, out of which he turned out paper dollars till he flooded North Michigan and was detected, and he ought to have paid the penalty, but he didn't. So Mr. Tilden, the hard money man in New York, was the softest of soft money men in Michigan, and made much money thereby—"A barr'l of money," as they say in Indiana. And Mr. Tilden is a reformer and a Democrat, and wants to be made President of the United States. Yet more: From being a money maker in Michigan, the history of Mr. Tilden reveals that he was a money taker from the Union Pacific Railroad Company. And between the two he ought to be wealthy, and undoubtedly is. But what honest connection Mr. Tilden could have with the funds of the Union Pacific is a mystery. Mr. Tilden did not tell the story. The books of the railroad told the tale; and this is how the tale is told: Mr. Tilden is connected with the fatal credit mobilier business. A dispatch from this city alleges that the books of the Union Pacific Railroad Company contain the record of the payment in one check of $25,000 to the Democratic presidential candidate shortly after the credit mobilier transactions, and his receipt also for that amount. It claims, furthermore, for reasons given, that this payment cannot be accounted for as legal fees. Mr. Tilden can possibly explain the matter satisfactorily.

And Mr. Tilden has no right to go back to those days when his patriotism was so great that he called the war an outrage, and plead, as Mr. Hewitt did, that such patriotism was above dollars and cents. Mr. Tilden had $25,000 of the railroad money in his pocket. Did he earn it? How? Mr. Tilden is not above an answer.

A THOUSAND MILLION DOLLARS WANTED.

An act "To facilitate the adjustment and settlement of claims of citizens of the United States for stores and supplies taken or furnished during the rebellion, for the use of the army of the United States, and for other purposes."

This bill, introduced in Congress by Wilshire, of Arkansas, just before the adjournment, has a significance not comprehended by the casual reader or thinker. The purpose, however, is direct, and it is a matter of surprise that any Democratic member of the House at this time could have been persuaded into embodying in a proposition intended to become a law a scope of possibilities so disastrous and ruinous to the country.

The first section of the bill amounts to this, that all citizens having any such claims, including the loss of vessels and cargoes, the emancipation of slaves, injury to property, commercial inconveniences, and every species of damage resulting directly or indirectly from invasion by a victorious army, whether for actual maintenance or for incidental application of personal effects, may substitute suit against the Government in the District Court of the United States for the district where the losses were incurred, and courts are required to hear cases, whatever may be the sum involved.

Another section makes it the duty of the United States District Attorney to represent the Government in each district, and when he is absent, or the functions of his office are suspended, the United States marshal is to serve a valid writ or process, by pasting a copy on the door of the United States courthouse, and this shall be held sufficient to authorize a trial in all cases.

It goes on further to state that "fees are to be paid to attorneys, marshals, and clerks, according to the amount recorded, or to be recorded by the plaintiff." And then an important item comes in clearly expressed:

"In all cases of final judgment the sum awarded shall be paid out of any general appropriation made by the Government, upon presentation of the judgment to the Secretary of the Treasury, with interest at five per cent. from date of rendition of judgment."

To clear away every obstacle in this contemplated wholesale raid upon the Treasury, it is proposed that "the laws passed to protect the Treasury in 1871, 1872, and 1873, together with the Commission of Claims, are repealed, and all books, records, or papers filed with the Commission of Claims are to be deposited with the Department of Justice, and to be delivered over to the District courts where cases are brought for claims."

This is comprehensive enough for the most skeptical. It is, in fact, the most sweeping of all Southern attempts yet inaugurated for depleting the Treasury of the United States. It is a measure to reward Southern rebels for their fruitless endeavors to destroy the Republic. Through its cunningly worded provisions the Southern traitors are to be fully and amply reimbursed for all damages incident to the war; and every advantage is given the claimant, and the bill is put forth mainly in the interests of Southern autocrats, whose property was lost in the vain effort to establish a slave oligarchy upon the ruins of the Union.

These suits are "to be heard in the districts where the losses are incurred." This is a master stroke of policy. It means the trial shall be in the South; the witnesses from the immediate neighborhood; the judges doubtless slightly biased through ambition to cultivate popularity among their constituents, and the whole proceedings under the direct influence of similar grievances to be redressed.

Should Samuel J. Tilden, through any means of political trickery, in which he is a consummate master, succeed in his election to the Presidency, it would probably involve the Congressional districts, carrying them for the Democracy, and the State Legislatures going with the same would secure the Senate, when the machinery of the Government would be wholly in their hands. Under such a state of public affairs Mr. Wilshire's bill would speedily become a law, the courts would be largely, if not absolutely, under control of the Administration, and the rush upon the Treasury would begin.

The amount it would take to satisfy this demand can scarcely be realized. Careful and able men, whose positions have given them the knowledge upon which to base a tolerably correct estimate, think the sum would not fall short of one thousand million dollars.

Every clause in this bill is intended to make the collection of these claims an easy matter, while not one safeguard is thrown around the Treasury. No question is asked relative to the claimant's loyal status during the rebellion. The Union and Confederate soldiers are forced upon an equal footing, notwithstanding the former gave all—home, friends, property, yea, life itself—to save the country, while the latter sustained their losses in the mad effort to destroy it. Under this bill of the astute Mr. Wilshire the contrast is amply sufficient in that while there is no adequate redress for Union soldiers in their great sacrifices the rebels are to be paid even to the uttermost farthing.

The claims from Southern sources already before the Commissioners amounts to something over one hundred million dollars. These claims for damages, in most part fraudulent, have been refused under Republican rule; but let this bill become a law, and the one hundred millions will not only quickly be paid, but swelled in proportions to a thousand millions—nearly, if not quite, half the present national debt.

Are the American people prepared for a crisis of this character? Are the old veteran heroes of the war to be satisfied with this misapplication of their services? Are they willing to step out from beneath the banner of victory, and placing themselves side by side with those whom they conquered, say, we ask nothing, not even considerate remembrance, for our sufferings in preserving the Union, and are willing you should be paid dollar for dollar for every wrong or injury we may have inflicted in thus sustaining the integrity and unity of the Republic?

ENFORCEMENT OF THE ELECTION LAWS.

Mr. Scott Lord, of New York, is a Democrat, but is said to be a Christian. As a believer in Divine truth the golden rule had a home in his heart; and the profligate injustice of his party in the South, by denying the rights of citizenship to the colored people, could no more secure his approval than the solemn work of the statesman could be appreciated by a man of the calibre of Mr. Cox, the servant of Tammany Hall, who believes that the chief object in life is to be a buffoon, and to play antics in the face of Heaven when the angels weep to hear his jokes on the horrors of Andersonville and the murders at Hamburg, in South Carolina. Mr. Lord believed the reports of the massacres of voters at the South to prevent their voting the Republican ticket. He believed that there were Ku-Klux ruffians and White League assassins whose work was in the interest of the Democratic party. And he arose above the trammels of his party and introduced his preamble and resolution in good faith, that the voice of the South might be heard in the election next November, and the polls be kept open for the deposit of ballots.

The Democratic party is furious at the passage of the resolution. Southern Democrats had arranged that the vote of the South should be solid for their party; and every one knows what that means. So vile a conspiracy against the rights of the citizen is worthy of the dark ages. And as the reports of murders and other political crimes in the South reached European countries, when the people were filled with indignation against the Turkish massacres of unoffending Christians, it is not to be wondered at that a comparison was drawn between the events at Hamburg, South Carolina, and Limestone, Texas, and the events on the Turkish battlefields. The London Times could see no difference between the political assassinations by Democrats in the South and the barbarities of the Bashi Bazouks in the Servian villages; and the American people suffer in reputation abroad, as well as materially and morally at home.

The determination of the President to preserve order in the South during the coming campaign is welcomed by all good citizens; and the orders issued, and to be issued to that end, will undoubtedly be carried out. The use of the army in States lately in rebellion where the habit of disloyalty prevails among the Democratic white citizens, the surviving rebels, is eminently constitutional. If the war had just closed, and these gentlemen, uncertain of the fate which awaited them, had taken the same pains to show their hands as they have done since, it is possible that even the generosity of the Republican party might have considered what was due to the rebel chiefs taken with arms in their hands and bitterness in their hearts before deciding upon the gentle terms of amnesty. And the result might have been different. Treason made odious and dangerous to the necks of the guilty would have had no disposition to erect monuments to the memory of men executed at the stern demand of justice. And the elevation of a few of the most guilty dangling from the limb of a tree might have deprived the world of the pleasure of listening to the voice of Jeff. Davis thanking his rebel comrades for their efforts to destroy the Union, or Congress of the delightful eloquence of Maxey and Gordon or of Lamar and Young, as they defied the patriotism of the people and reveled in reminiscences of their rebellion. It might even have narrowed down the numbers of rebels aspiring to represent the nation or the State in high places, so that when such men as Wade Hampton were looked for they could not be found.

But the mistaken clemency of the Republican party has not been without its lessons, although it has cost thousands of lives, every one of them political murders by the Democratic party in the South. Now, the nation cries, Halt! and the gun-shot policy of the Southern Democracy must cease. The President was never more in earnest than he is to day. His determination to use all constitutional means to put down political assassination, and have the polls kept open, is not to be trifled with. Nor is the temper of the North to be trifled with. The election in the South must be as safe and as free for Republican citizens, white or black, as in the States of Vermont or Massachusetts. Let the Southern Democracy take a note of this. It may be for their benefit, if not for their comfort. And to show how thoroughly the work of protection is to be done, and how busy the proper officers are in making preparation for it, the following information is made public as to carrying out the election laws:

The Attorney General is preparing, and will in a few days issue, specific instructions to United States marshals in every State in the Union, instructing them as to their duties and rights under the election laws. The object of the administration, as stated by the Attorney General, is to secure to every citizen, in Massachusetts as well as in South Carolina, his full rights under the law. The marshals having once been instructed as to their rights under the law will be expected to enforce them; and if they cannot do this with the usual force at their command, then the military will be sent to assist them.

Under the order issued to General Sherman there will be no present change in the stations of troops in any of the States, North or South, but the order itself will be issued in the form of a general order, and sent to all officers commanding divisions, departments, and posts, and they will regard it as a sufficient notice to hold their troops in readiness to answer any legal demand that may be made upon them to assist in executing the law. General Sherman, in speaking of this order, says he does not believe it is the intention of the President to interfere unduly in the affairs of any State, but thinks that the President has determined, as far as lies in his power, there shall be a fair and peaceable election in every State in the Union, even if all the available force of the army must be used to protect citizens in their rights.

ADOPTED CITIZENS—THE TRUTH OF HISTORY.

"Reform is necessary to correct the omissions of a Republican Congress and the errors of our treaties and our diplomacy, which have stripped our fellow-citizens of foreign birth and kindred race, recrossing the Atlantic, from the shield of American citizenship." * * * "We denounce the policy which thus discards the liberty-loving German."—Democratic Platform.

Of all the "shams" of the Democratic platform the above quotation contains the most deliberate perversion of truth. It is unworthy even of the hypocrisy of Tilden. For nearly half a century the Democratic party has impudently assumed the exclusive friendship of adopted citizens, when in fact Democrats have only made them "hewers of wood and drawers of water." Democratic administrations, in their treaties, have utterly pretermitted the rights of naturalized citizens when "recrossing the Atlantic." This is absolutely affirmed, and the treaties are appealed to for its confirmation. In truth the only treaties embracing this subject have been negotiated by Republicans. Numerous treaties are signed by Van Buren, Marcy, Buchanan, and other Democratic lights, but not one provides guarantees for "our fellow-citizens of foreign birth" on "recrossing the Atlantic." And not only so, but the lower House of the present Congress is Democratic; what has it done to correct the "errors" complained of? Has any bill or measure been introduced or proposed? Not one. But the subject was investigated by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and a unanimous report made by Mr. Faulkner, its Democratic chairman; which report not only compliments and vindicates the present treaty, (1868,) but declares it to have been carried out by the German Government "with scrupulous honor and good faith." "This treaty," says the report, "gives to the naturalized citizen" * * * "a guarantee from both Governments that his rights shall be fully recognized and protected." What becomes of the Democratic platform? What must be the character of the men who concocted it? In the following pages the Democracy is "stripped" of the assumption in which it has concealed itself, when it will appear, for "lo, these many years," to have been only an "ass" in a "lion's skin."

The attitude of the Democrats toward naturalized citizens is only equalled by the conduct of Codlin, in Dickens's story of the Old Curiosity Shop. After persecuting little Nell for a long time some circumstances led him to think that something could be made by being on good terms with her. In an instant he turned and shouted, "Codlin's your friend; Codlin's your friend, not Short!"

Our Democratic Codlins, with few interruptions, were in power from the opening of the century until the beginning of the rebellion. During that time they practically controlled every department of the Government. They had the Presidency, the Cabinet, Congress, the Supreme Court—everything. What did they do for the emigrant? And what has been done by their opponents?

I.—AS TO NATURALIZATION.

In the First Congress of the United States the States' rights Democrats were in a great minority. The first statute for regulating naturalization was enacted by that Congress in 1790. It provided that the alien, being a free white person who should have resided within the United States for the term of two years, might become a citizen on complying with the provisions of the statute.

In 1795 the Democrats had a majority in the House of Representatives. They repealed the act of 1790, and substituted a statute requiring a residence of five years in the United States, and a preliminary declaration of intention to become a citizen, to be made three years, at least, before the naturalization. Under this statute, however, they allowed the fact of the five years' residence to be proved by the oath of the emigrant himself.

In 1798, under the pressure of a war with France, the period of residence required as a preliminary to naturalization was greatly extended, but the statute was in great measure suspended by provisions permitting persons who had previously declared their intention to become citizens to become so at any time within four years after the passage of the act, and the act itself was repealed before the expiration of the four years.

In 1802 the States' rights party obtained the entire control of the Government. They repealed the previous acts, and enacted a new statute containing similar provisions as to time as were contained in the act of 1795, but they required the emigrant to prove his five years' residence by other testimony than his own affidavit. The practical effect of this statute was to throw an additional impediment in the way of naturalization. It is still in force, except as hereinafter mentioned.

In 1824 the States' rights Democrats had lost their control of the House. The Congress which elected John Quincy Adams as President modified the act of 1802 by reducing the period for making the preliminary declaration of intention from three years to two years, and by releasing minors who should reside within the United States three years before arriving at their majority from the necessity of making such a declaration.

With the defeat of John Quincy Adams in 1829 the Democrats came again into power, and no change was made in the naturalization laws until after their defeat in 1860.

In 1862 a Republican Congress again modified the naturalization laws by permitting an alien who had served in the army and been honorably discharged to become a citizen without the usual preliminary declaration and without reference to the length of residence in the United States.

II.—EXPATRIATION.

The Democratic party did not assist the emigrant to become a citizen. Did it assist him in being recognized as such or asserting his rights as such?

Naturalization is the acquisition of citizenship by a person in a country to which he was before then an alien. Expatriation is, in one sense, the reverse of this. It is the loss of citizenship in the land of nativity. The assent of the Power whose allegiance he assumes is necessary to the first. Democratic authorities have, with a single exception, invariably maintained that the assent of the Power whose allegiance he abandoned is essential to the second.

The authority of Henry Wheaton as an exponent of Democratic ideas cannot be questioned. He was appointed by President Jackson to be the Chargé d'Affaires of the United States at Berlin. He was promoted by President Van Buren to be the Minister of the United States at the same Court. In 1840 Johann P. Knoche, a native of Prussia, who had been naturalized in the United States, returned to his native land, and was required to perform military duty. He appealed to Mr. Wheaton for protection. Mr. Wheaton replied:

"It is not in my power to interfere in the manner you desire. Had you remained in the United States, or visited any other foreign Courts (except Prussia) on your lawful business you would have been protected by the American authorities, at home and abroad, in the enjoyment of all your rights and privileges as a naturalized citizen of the United States. But having returned to the country of your birth, your native domicile and natural character revert, so long as you remain in the Prussian domains, and you are bound in all respects to obey the laws exactly as if you had never emigrated."

William L. Marcy was a shining light of Democracy. He was a prominent member of the Albany regency, a Governor of New York, a leader in the Senate, and Secretary of State during the whole term of President Pierce's Administration. While he was Secretary of State, Simon Tousig, an Austrian by birth, came to the United States, resided here for some time, and returned to Austria with a passport from the Department of State. The Austrian military authorities took proceedings against him. He appealed to the Legation at Vienna for protection. Mr. Jackson, who was then Chargé d'Affaires, was a Democrat. He reported the case to the Department of State, and Mr. Marcy replied:

"Assuming all that could possibly belong to Tousig's case, that he had a domicile here and was actually clothed with the nationality of the United States, there is a feature in it which distinguishes it from that of Kosota. Tousig voluntarily returned to Austria, and placed himself within the reach of her municipal laws. He has voluntarily placed himself within the jurisdiction of the laws of Austria, and is suffering, as appears by the case as you present it, for the acts he has done in violation of those laws while he was an Austrian subject."

Jeremiah S. Black was, and still is, regarded as a Democratic leader. In 1857 his official opinion was requested by the Secretary of State as to the status of a Bavarian who, after naturalization in the United States, had returned to Bavaria and taken up his abode there. He replied:

"There is no statute or other law of the United States which prevents either a native or naturalized citizen from severing his political connections with this Government, if he sees proper to do so in time of peace and for a purpose not injurious to the country. There is no mode of renunciation prescribed. In my opinion, if he emigrates, carries his family and effects with him, manifests a plain intention not to return, takes up his permanent residence abroad, and assumes the obligations of a subject of a foreign Government, this would imply a dissolution of his previous relations with the United States."

In a public life of half a century Lewis Cass was a leader among the Democracy. In October, 1857, he instructed Mr. Wright, of Indiana, who was then the representative of the United States at Berlin, to govern himself in dealing with such cases by the views of Secretary Marcy, who, he said, had "clearly and succinctly stated" the rule in such cases.

The treasonable conspiracies in the Democratic ranks loosened the hold which the party had upon Mr. Cass, and in 1859 he modified his views and instructed Mr. Wright to insist that "the moment a foreigner becomes naturalized his allegiance to his native country becomes severed forever."

But the declaration produced no result to the emigrant, and it was not until the States' rights Democrats had been beaten, both at the ballot-box and in the field, that a Republican administration was able to secure a practical recognition of the principle. Meanwhile, experience had shown that while tens of thousands of naturalized citizens had rushed to bear arms in support of the country of their adoption, some recreant cowards who had come here to avoid military service in Europe had flown back again to escape it here. Mr. Lincoln, in his annual message in 1863, said:

"There is also reason to believe that foreigners frequently become citizens of the United States for the sole purpose of evading the duties imposed by the laws of their native countries, to which on becoming naturalized here they at once repair, and, though never returning to the United States, they still claim the interposition of this Government as citizens."

It was thought unworthy of the United States that the mantle of its protection should be extended to such cases of fraud. When, therefore, a Republican administration succeeded in setting aside the precedents which have been established by its Democratic predecessors, and in securing the recognition in Germany of the right of an emigrant to expatriate himself, it did not hesitate to agree on its side that the expatriation must not be a sham. Justice to the honest emigrant who had become a citizen caused it to agree that if the emigrant, instead of really expatriating himself, should return to the land of his nativity to reside permanently, using his foreign nationality in the United States to avoid duties here, and his lately-acquired citizenship to avoid them in his native country, that he should cease to enjoy the benefit of acquired citizenship.

But how could a minister or a Secretary of State know whether the returned emigrant meant to go back to the United States or to stay in the land of his birth? How easy for the latter to reside in the old country year after year, with the declaration of a purpose to go back to the United States ever on his tongue? How can an officer disprove statements which such a person would not hesitate to make, except by the very fact itself of the continued residence? And this was adopted in the treaties as one of the standards of proof, and it was agreed that a two years' continuous residence might afford a presumption of an abandonment of naturalization.

This two years' residence does not of itself afford so strong a presumption that the authorities of the old Government can act upon it without notice of an intent to do so. In all cases they are required to give parties against whom they propose to proceed a reasonable notice, to hear their explanation, and to afford them an opportunity to return to America if they desire to do so.

Thus, the young German who desires to emigrate to America may now do so in safety. In safety he can return to his native land when naturalized here, can revisit his parents and friends, can reside in the old country, and can occupy himself in business or labor for his support while there, assured of the protection of the United States. He can only lose the protection when he fraudulently endeavors to convert a temporary visit into a permanent residence and attempts to commit a fraud upon both Governments.

Mr. Faulkner, a Democratic member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the present House of Representatives, in the name and on behalf of that committee, in a report made February 15, 1876, upon this very subject, says as follows, in reference to the treaty with the North German Confederation:

"Before the existence of that treaty constant difficulties arose between the two countries, growing out of a return of the naturalized German citizen to the land of his birth, and every page of our diplomatic correspondence shows how continually our representatives abroad were called upon to protect the rights of this class of our fellow-citizens; what delays and difficulties were encountered in the vindication of their rights, and how frequently the peace and good understanding between the two Governments were imperiled by the rigid adherence of Prussia and other German Powers to their own views of the obligations resting upon their native-born citizens. Much inconvenience, great loss of time, interruption of business, heavy fines, burdensome costs, and sometimes imprisonment, were the fate of many before their rights were recognized by these foreign Governments, and in no instance have we learned that any compensation or indemnity was ever accorded by the foreign Governments, or demanded by our own, for the cost, privation, and suffering encountered by our fellow-citizens in the vindication of their rights. Emigration itself, under many circumstances, was treated as an offense punishable by their laws.

"Much of this evil has ceased to exist since the formation of the treaty of 1868. That treaty has been carried out by the German Government with scrupulous honor and good faith.

* * * * *

"This treaty admits, in the broadest terms, the natural right of expatriation—a doctrine never before so fully and unconditionally recognized by the German Government.

"It concedes the free right of emigration, and the absolute discharge of every naturalized German citizen from all military service not actually required of him by some legal obligation then operative and in active force on the day of his emigration; so that upon his return to Germany the exemption continues as fully as if he was a natural-born citizen of the United States.

"The protection which this treaty gives to the naturalized citizen is of the highest and most solemn character, and gives to him a guarantee from both Governments that his rights shall be fully recognized and protected. This guarantee must necessarily extend to his full indemnity by the Government that unjustly interrupts, delays, or denies those rights.

"So sound and unassailable are the principles incorporated into this treaty that it would be difficult to conjecture any possible ground of objection to it, unless it be that provision which, having declared that if a German, naturalized in America, renews his residence in Germany without the intent to return to America he shall be held to have renounced his naturalization in the United States, also declares 'that the intent not to return may be held to exist when the person naturalized resides more than two years in the country of his birth.' The original phraseology of this treaty used the word 'shall,' but, at the instance of our Minister, the word 'may' was substituted; so, as it now stands, the two years' residence affords only presumptive evidence of an intention not to return, which may be rebutted by facts and circumstances.

"Your committee see no objection to this provision, which has been alike inserted into most of our subsequent naturalization treaties. It is intended to guard against the gross abuse of American citizenship, of which Germany especially affords so many examples. This citizenship is acquired by many, not for the honest and bona fide purpose of enjoying the blessings of our Government, and contributing to the advancement of our country, but as a convenient pretext to enable them to escape their obligations as citizens, both to the country of their birth and the country of their adoption. It has been found necessary, therefore, to fix some period that will test the intent of such persons. Two years have been fixed upon as a proper time to determine that question. But even under this treaty that period of time is only presumptive, and may be rebutted by showing that two years' or a longer residence is honest and bona fide, and consistent with the intent to return to the country of their adoption."

The naturalized German in the United States owes these benefits alone to Republican statesmen and Republican policy.

NOTES.

NOTE 1. The negotiations and treaties of the United States with foreign Powers can well be divided into and classed under periods. The first may be called "The period of the Revolution." By reference to the treaties of this period it will be seen that the question now raised was not presented or discussed.

NOTE 2. The next period may be designated that of "The War of 1812." This war was waged to vindicate the freedom of the national flag. It was the second, or real, war of independence. The main question was the claim of Great Britain to search our ships and seize our seamen or sailors on the high seas. The question now mooted did not arise. Modern Democrats claim to be the special successors of Jefferson and Madison, whose mantle, the former assert, has fallen on their shoulders. If the champions of the war of 1812 failed to assert all they ought these latter-day Democrats are estopped from complaint.

NOTE 3. The country had fully recovered from the war of 1812 only about 1820, when the institution of slavery intruded its hideous and hateful presence into the political arena. From the latter date until the rebellion, a period of over forty years, Democrats and Democratic administrations were engrossed with the task of aiding, protecting, and extending that institution, to which all other interests were subordinated.

Democrats, however, have ever been adepts at frauds, especially on the naturalization laws, thus easily making citizens of emigrants on their arrival on our shores in violation of law. And hence, by such false professions of friendship, fraudulently enticing these new citizens into the Democratic party. Nevertheless, as a matter of history, the treaties negotiated by Democratic administrations show that they did not in a single instance attempt the protection of adopted citizens on their return to their native land. This was the period almost consecutively down to 1861 of complete Democratic ascendancy, culminating in treason to the Constitution and the Union.

NOTE 4. There were negotiated by the United States, prior to the rebellion, treaties as follows under the administrations of—

(Prior to —, 1789)	17
Washington.....	6
John Adams.....	4
Jefferson.....	6
Madison.....	6
Monroe.....	12
J. Q. Adams.....	13
Jackson.....	19
Van Buren.....	10
Harrison.....	1
Tyler.....	8
Polk.....	16
Taylor.....	5
Fillmore.....	11
Pierce.....	25
Buchanan.....	18

Total..... 177

Not one of the foregoing treaties embraces the subject under consideration, viz: the protection of adopted citizens on their return to the land of their nativity, though of the foregoing 107 were under special, modern Democratic auspices.

NOTE 5. But Republican administrations have negotiated since March 4, 1861, upward of seventy-five treaties, or nearly half as many as all prior to that date, a leading feature being a provision recognizing the right of expatriation theretofore denied, and granting personal rights and protection, mutually, to naturalized citizens on their return to their native land; limited, however, quite properly, to cases of naturalization and return to the good faith of the party.

This has been the period since 1861 of Republican administrations—a period full of trials by reason of Democratic treason, yet throughout the world the nation is at the very acme of fame.

CONCLUSION.

It will be seen that upon this, as upon all subjects, the Republican party is progressive. It has been the first to take this step forward, and if anything remains to be done it can be relied on to carry it to perfection.

No one can for a moment doubt that the present administration, with General Grant at its head, would be prompt to exert the whole power of the Government to protect its citizens in any part of the world. Nor will it hesitate, within the Constitution and laws, to protect citizens at home as well.

THE DEMOCRATIC RECORD—DARE THE NATION TRUST SUCH A PARTY?

When a political party goes before the people with a claim for their suffrage and the control of their Government and public affairs, the first and most natural impulse of the public mind is to know something of the past public record of the claimants. In order to aid in this very proper and necessary investigation the following facts and figures have been drawn from the official records and published. They are presented without note or comment. The reader will draw his own conclusions, and at his leisure answer from his own convictions the question: Dare the nation trust such a party?

JACKSON AND HIS TIMES—"TO THE VICTORS," ETC.

On March 4, 1829, Andrew Jackson, pledged to retrenchment, economy, and reform, was inaugurated President of the United States.

Proclaiming the maxim that "to the victors belong the spoils," Jackson let slip the "Furies of the Guillotine" in a wholesale proscription of the old and tried officials of former Administrations. John Q. Adams, in the preceding four years, had made but twelve changes—all for cause. In the preceding FORTY years, all his predecessors together had made only one hundred and thirty-two changes—of these Jefferson had removed sixty-two; but Jackson, in the genuine spirit of a Democratic reformer, in one year removed, it was estimated, one thousand five hundred officials—in one year nearly twelve times as many as by all his predecessors from the beginning of the Government. The officers removed were experienced, capable, and trusty. The character of those who filled their places—"Slamm, Bang & Co."—is attested by the reform which followed.

THE GREAT PUBLIC AND INDIAN LAND GRABS.

A rage for speculation in the public lands distinguished the period. General Lewis Cass, Secretary of War, who pocketed illegally, as extra allowances, the sum of $68,000, united with Martin Van Buren, Secretary of State, Benjamin F. Butler, Attorney General, and others, in a land Credit Mobilier for speculation in public lands—for speculation in sales by the Government, of which they were members. Amos Kendall, the Fourth Auditor, and subsequently Postmaster General, in like manner united with a Boston land company, for a fee of $50,000, in the wholesale robbery of certain Indians in Mississippi of their lands—all swindling enterprises in contemptuous violation of the law, of which they were the administrators. (H. R. 194, second session Twenty-fourth Congress.)

THE GALPHIN SWINDLE.

In 1834 John Forsyth, of Georgia, succeeded Lewis McLane, of Delaware, as Secretary of State, in Jackson's Cabinet. In 1850 the payment of the notorious "Galphin swindle" scandalized the nation. By the Democracy it was denounced as "infamous"—as "without a precedent"—as "a clear and unmitigated swindle!" Their memories were bad. In 1837, before the Wise committee, John Ross, the Cherokee chief, testified that in 1835, in the Cherokee treaty of that year, an article covering the "Galphin" was inserted directly through the influence of "Mr. Forsyth, Secretary of State;" that it was urged, in the negotiations of the treaty, that Mr. Forsyth had great influence with the President; that "Mr. Forsyth could and would induce the President to grant a sum sufficient to cover the Galphin additional to the sum stipulated in the treaty if the Cherokees would sanction a treaty upon such terms." The article was consequently inserted. Mr. Forsyth admitted that he "advised" its insertion, as also his personal interest in the payment of both principal and interest. He had applied to both Secretaries of War, Eaton and Cass; as Secretary of State had certified the papers from the Department of State to the Secretary of War. General Cass had told him that the claim was just; and when the treaty was pending before the Senate had "conversed" with Senators urging its ratification; but pleads that, to them, his "appeals" were "founded solely on the justice of the claim"—"the hardship of the condition of the claimants."

Hence, lobbied in 1835 by Forsyth, Jackson's Secretary of State, approved by General Cass, his Secretary of War, and justified in 1837 by the Democratic majority of the Wise committee, engineered through Congress, in 1849, by another distinguished Democratic reformer, Mr. Burt, of South Carolina, and the principal paid by James K. Polk, the question of interest was only reserved and its liquidation by Polk only defeated for want of time.

THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT "INSOLVENT" UNDER DEMOCRATIC RULE.

In 1834, after a hard battle, (from 1830,) Senators Thomas Ewing, of Ohio, and John M. Clayton, of Delaware, forced an inquiry by the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads into the condition of the Post Office Department. It found the Department "insolvent," a helpless prey to maladministration, corruption, robbery, and fraud. In the preceding administration, under John Q. Adams, the Department had been not only self-sustaining, but had contributed annually $1,103,063 to the revenues of the nation. But now, in a few brief years, under Democratic reform, it was bankrupt, a burden upon the Treasury. (S. R. 422, first session Twenty-third Congress.)

Mr. Felix Grundy, of Tennessee, the Democratic chairman of the committee, was opposed to the investigation.

Postmaster General Barry refused to recognize its authority. He declared that he was responsible, not to the Senate, but to the President, and through him to the people. He refused to furnish the committee the information it requested, and it was forced to prosecute its labors under the greatest difficulties, among mutilated records and fabricated accounts in the greatest confusion. But even under such disadvantages it developed a condition of affairs utterly without a parallel in all our previous history.

THE "EXTRA-ALLOWANCE" FRAUDS IN DEMOCRATIC TIMES.

One of the greatest abuses of the Department was in its extra allowances, aggregating hundreds of thousands annually, frequently given without an increase of duty or service, without the authority of law, and in many cases where there was an increase of service, "unreasonable, extravagant, and out of all proportion with such increase." These extra allowances actually exhausted the whole postal revenues of States, and were granted practically as pensions to party favorites. This favoritism took a hundred shapes. Certain contractors were compelled to surrender their contracts for the benefit of others. Contracts were granted on bids different from advertisement, and others were altered or changed in material respects after they had been accepted. Proposals for carrying the mail were withheld from advertisement. The contracts, as in the case of the route from Chicago to Green Bay, actually given to clerks in the Department under other men's names, and the compensation on bids raised without an increase of service. Mail lines were authorized, "at a heavy expense," to run more than once daily without benefit to the public, and steamboat lines were established, by private contract without authority of law, at an enormous expense. Oppressive monopolies were actually established by the Department for the benefit of private parties. An instance is given in which an agreement, drawn by an officer of the Government and adopted at his pressing instance, with the sanction of the Postmaster General, was entered into between two companies of mail contractors to put down all opposition lines of coaches—all competition of passengers on their respective mail routes.

The contractors, in turn, divided by handsome loans never repaid—generously relieved the Postmaster General of his debts, and enabled the chief clerk to speculate largely in real estate in Washington. They also furnished the table of both with the most choice wines! With shrewd business foresight the contractors lent their credit to the Department when threatened with collapse, and the Department responded by pledging its funds for the benefit of contractors.

DEMOCRATIC SPECIAL-SERVICE PLUMS.

The "incidental expenses" of the Department—not its "contingent expenses," which were separate, distinct, and additional, but its "secret-service fund," in a single year, (1829,) increased to $56,471, "exceeding that of any former year," but in 1832, during the Presidential election, it suddenly swelled to $88,000! It was principally the newspaper fund. After deducting the support of traveling partisan emissaries, under the title of "postal agents," it was the fund out of which the numerous party presses were permitted to richly share the plunder. So the Greenes, of the Boston Statesman, the elder Greene (Nathaniel) being postmaster at Boston, and certifying the accounts which were for "printed blanks, twine," etc. So the Hills, of the New Hampshire Patriot, the Shadrach Penns, of the Louisville Public Advertiser, the Albany Argus, New York Courier and Enquirer, the Washington Globe, the national organ, etc. The prices paid to F. P. Blair of the Globe were "enormous." Of the $22,957.08 of "incidental expenses" during the Presidential election of 1832, $13,673.31 were paid to the editors of newspapers. Of that Blair received $8,386.50! During the election he received from this secret fund alone about $116 daily for every day his paper was issued. The details are disgusting. Maladministration, corruption, and fraud run riot. The aggregate excess of expenditures in four years, as compared with the preceding four years, under Adams, was "$3,336,859!" The amount of funds actually "sunk" by the Department since 1829 was "$1,032,933," and the aggregate of its "indebtedness" April 11, 1834, was "$1,123,600!" To avoid immediate exposure by the collapse and closing of his Department, the Postmaster General was forced, besides his loans from contractors, to unlawfully contract loans, bearing interest, from the banks. There was no evading the judgment. (S. R. 422, first session Twenty-third Congress.) At the next session the report of the Democratic Committee of the House was even more damaging than the Senate's. Hence, under the unanimous verdict of the Senate, Postmaster General Barry was compelled to resign—to accept promotion to the mission to Spain, with its lucrative outfits and infits.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY "PET BANK" ROBBERIES.

About this time the affairs of the old Bank of the United States and its branches began to wane. By law the bank was the depository of the Government revenues, and in consequence was the Treasury of the nation. In 1834, by a daring act of usurpation, President Jackson removed the deposits. He transferred them to certain "pet" State banks of the Democratic reformers, who claimed the revenues of the nation as the "spoils" of "THE PARTY!" The destruction of the Bank and subsequent explosion of the "Pet Banks" involved the loss of millions, the destruction and ruin of thousands of the business men and the business of the country—of $500,000,000 of private capital—and the consequent suffering and want of tens of thousands of all ranks and classes throughout the Union. The Democratic reformers nevertheless applauded. They laughed at the misery and ruin they had caused, belittled their magnitude, and maintained and justified the removal in all its bearings.

INVESTIGATIONS AND EXPOSURES.

In 1837 the Garland committee published the "Wool-clip" correspondence between Secretary Woodbury and the deposit banks, exposed the criminal partisan favoritism of the Treasury in the distribution and management of the deposits or revenues of the nation as the "spoils" of "THE PARTY," and prepared the country for the disastrous explosion of the "Pet Banks" which followed. (H. R. 193, second session Twenty-fourth Congress.)

The Wise committee unearthed "Forsyth's Nankeen;" exposed the complicity of the high-toned Georgian Secretary of State in the "infamous Galphin swindle;" exposed Postmaster General Kendall's complicity, with "a $50,000 fee," in the Boston scheme for the wholesale robbery of the Mississippi Indians of their lands; and developed Secretary Cass's corrupt favoritism in the dispensation of his patronage. (H. R. 194, second session Twenty-fourth Congress.)

FORGERY, ABSENTEEISM, EMBEZZLEMENT, AND EXTORTION.

One T. B. Waterman was a protege—a copying clerk in the Pension Office, appointed by the General. Waterman forged the initials of Secretary Cass to an account; Waterman confessed the forgery, and the General paid the account. (H. R. 194, second session Twenty-fourth Congress.)

D. Azro A. Buck was a model reformer. He was appointed a clerk by Secretary Cass, July 8, 1835. About the same time Buck was also elected a member of the Vermont Legislature. Hence he did not report at the War Department for duty until December. In January, 1836, General Cass paid him for five months' service, when Buck had rendered but one. (H. R. 194, second session Twenty-fourth Congress.)

Lieutenant Thomas Johnson, a disbursing officer, lost, in gambling, two United States drafts for $1,000 and $1,500, respectively. These drafts were protested by a deposit bank—the Union Bank of Louisiana, at New Orleans—and an appeal for their payment was made to the War Department. The facts were all known. The Hon. Ambrose H. Sevier, of Arkansas, and the Hon. Richard M. Johnson, of Kentucky, (model Democratic reformers,) interested themselves in their payment, the pious Attorney General (B. F. Butler) uttered a favorable opinion, and Secretary Cass drew a warrant for their payment even after Woodbury had declined. (H. R. 194, second session Twenty-fourth Congress.)

At the same time Garret D. Wall, then United States District Attorney at Perth Amboy, N. J., and subsequently United States Senator from New Jersey, a distinguished Democratic reformer, assessed his modest fees for his influence with the Administration. (H. R. 194, second session Twenty-fourth Congress.)

In 1839 resistance to investigation was no longer possible. "No more packed committees," was the fiat of the nation—no more committees appointed by James K. Polk; and accordingly the House, by ballot, elected the celebrated Harlan committee.

Now, the proofs were overwhelming.

THE SWARTWOUT SWINDLES.

In April, 1829, Samuel Swartwout was appointed by President Jackson collector of the port of New York. He was notoriously impetuous, a reckless gambler in stocks, largely in debt, always in want of money, and wholly irresponsible financially. His default began within a year from the date of his appointment, and continued during eight years—for years with the knowledge of the authorities at Washington—for years (from 1834 to 1837) without the bonds required by law to the Government for the safe-keeping of the millions in his hands. (H. R. 313, third session Twenty-fifth Congress.)

His default was for $1,225,705.69. The causes of his default, as the Harlan committee declare, were his irresponsibility in pecuniary character when appointed; the culpable disregard of law and neglect of official duty by the naval officer at New York, by the First Auditor and First Comptroller of the Treasury; the discontinuance of the use of banks of deposit; the consequent accumulation of vast sums in the hands of a stock gambler so improvident and reckless as Swartwout; and the negligence and failure of the Secretary of the Treasury to discharge his duty as head of the Treasury. In a word, by the abandonment at New York and Washington of all the checks thrown by law around the collection of the revenue. (H. R. 313, third session Twenty-fifth Congress.)

Swartwout was not removed. His commission expired March 28, 1838, and, being apprized in time, he, on the 16th of August, fled to England with his plunder, followed within a fortnight by William M. Price, (the district attorney for the southern district of New York,) a confederate in crime, and, like Swartwout, a defaulter in the sum of $72,124.06. The default of General C. Gratiot, Chief Engineer United States army, was for $50,000.

CORRUPTION AND FRAUD REIGN SUPREME.

In every bureau of the New York customs maladministration, corruption, and fraud reigned supreme, and here, with the origin of Democratic reform, began the "tyranny" of assessments for party purposes, levied for national and local elections upon the customs officers and in the navy-yard at New York, as throughout the country and in the executive departments at Washington.

The maladministration and corruption in the collection of the revenue from the sales of the public lands were as flagitious as in the customs. Out of sixty-odd receivers of public moneys fifty defaulted. A few instances will illustrate the whole:

A RECEIVER'S OFFICE MADE A BROKERS' DEN.

John Spencer was receiver at Fort Wayne, Ind. In May, 1836, the Secretary complained to Spencer that his accounts were in arrears, and appointed Nat. West, jr., of Indianapolis, as examiner, to investigate the office at Fort Wayne. Mr. West reports the office a broker's den for speculation and shaving. Spencer was about to be removed. Hon. Wm. Hendricks rushes to the rescue, and urges that Colonel Spencer is "an honest and honorable man;" that his removal "would, to some extent, produce excitement," "for he has many warm and influential friends, both at Fort Wayne and in Dearborn county. Better let it be." Mr. Woodbury concluded to "let it be." To Mr. Hendricks he writes: "I am happy to inform you that Mr. Spencer's explanations have been such that he will probably continue in office." Mr. Spencer's explanations were: "My Democratic friends think I ought not to leave until after we hold our election for President," "which I have concluded to wait." (H. R. 313, third session Twenty-fifth Congress.)

Willey P. Harris was receiver at Columbus, Miss. "General Harris" was indorsed by his Democratic representative in Congress as "one of the main pillars of Democracy," as of "diffused and deserved popularity," and as "one of the earliest and most distinguished friends of the [Jackson's] Administration in Mississippi." In March, 1834, Secretary Roger B. Taney complained of his conduct, and after fifteen warnings, extending through two years, from Secretary Woodbury, "General Harris" was permitted to resign, and to nominate and secure the appointment of his successor, "Colonel Gordon D. Boyd, of Attala county." Whereupon the Secretary quietly entered on the books of the Treasury: "Balance due from Mr. Harris, $109,178.08." (H. R. 313, third session Twenty-fifth Congress.)

FIFTY "HONEST" DEMOCRATIC OFFICIALS.

Colonel Boyd early fell into the footsteps of his illustrious predecessor. In June, 1837, Mr. Garesche reports the Colonel as a defaulter to the amount of $50,000, but adds: "All concede that his intemperance has been his greatest crime." "The man seems really penitent, and I am inclined to think, in common with his friends, that he is honest, and has been led away by the example of his predecessor and a certain looseness in the code of morality which here does not move in so limited a circle as it does with us at home. Another receiver would probably follow in the footsteps of the two. You will not, therefore, be surprised if I recommend his being retained." So it was decreed. In October, Boyd was allowed to resign, and the Secretary entered against his name: "Indebted $50,000, as per last statement." And so with the remainder—Linn, Lewis, Alsbury, Dickson, Skinner, Hays, Simpson—fifty in all; making an aggregate default of $825,678.28. (H. R. 313, third session Twenty-fifth Congress.)

JESSE HOYT'S SYSTEMATIC ROBBERIES.

In 1841-'42 the Poindexter commission investigated the maladministration of Swartwout's successor, Jesse Hoyt, the special protege of Martin Van Buren, who was appointed in March, 1838. At the date of his appointment, Hoyt, like Swartwout and Price, was notoriously impecunious, irresponsible financially, largely in debt, and a reckless speculator in stocks. His maladministration and systematic robberies of the Government and the importers amounted to piracy. Even in the incidental expenses of the customs—in the matter of stationery, printing, and the like—the pillage amounted to tens of thousands annually. No advertisement for the lowest bidder, no contract at stipulated prices for their supply, but ordered extravagantly and in the loosest manner, with no evidence required of the delivery of the article, they were paid for, on demand, at prices ranging from 100 to 200 per cent. greater than the current New York rates. (H. R. 669, second session Twenty-seventh Congress.)

Geo. A. Wasson, "a sort of factotum" for Hoyt, had a monopoly of the cartage at the public stores—two privileged carts, for the use and labor of which, in three years, Hoyt paid him $94,430.92. In addition to his salary as storekeeper, Hoyt paid Wasson unlawfully, as deputy collector, $1,500 per annum. (H. R. 669, second session Twenty-seventh Congress.)

In the seizure of goods under Hoyt's rapacious system of reappraisement, Wasson was one of a "triumvirate"—Wasson, Cairns, and Ives—of Hoyt's standing witnesses in the courts. This trained trio were allowed to share the plunder. In a single instance in 1840 Hoyt paid Wasson, without vouchers, $1,767.33 over and above the legal fees, for attendance on three trials, between May and October. Wasson was allowed to employ, for his private benefit, laborers hired and paid by the Government. He was a privileged purchaser, in his own name and in the names of others, at the sales of goods remaining nine months unclaimed in the public stores; allowed to plunder the public stores of goods in large quantities; to rob the custom-house of coal for his private use; in a word, to indulge in "a multitude of illegal practices and petty frauds" in addition to the goods, the luxuries, the salaries he absorbed from outside parties interested in the ruin of importers. (H. R. 669, second session Twenty-seventh Congress.)

Cairns and Ives, in like manner, equally shared in the plunder.

In January, 1840, a fire destroyed the Front-street stores. The goods saved were removed by the custom-house attaches—placed in an open lot—all entrance to which was refused to the importers for the purpose of identifying and recovering their property; but the goods, practically seized, were made up into piles or lots in which the vilest frauds were practiced to deceive purchasers—struck off at nominal sums to privileged parties in collusion with the officials, and the proceeds, after deducting fees, &c., pocketed by the collector. Thus the owners were robbed of goods aggregating in value $1,000,000, the Government of $400,000 as duties, and Hoyt pocketed about $30,000 which should have been deposited in the Treasury for the benefit of the owners.

Hoyt also rented unlawfully five stores for the safe-keeping of goods entered at the custom-house. These stores yielded him a profit, per annum, of $10,000, at a $30,000; or, in law, but with Woodbury, Hoyt, ted $30,000, at a 001 (H. R. 669, 1th Congress.)

stic instances in administration.

Their magnitude and extent were astounding. His criminal rapacity attained its shocking results in his system of fraudulent reappraisement. Goods regularly invoiced, and upon which all demands at the custom-house had been paid after examination and appraisement by the lawful appraisers of the customs, were followed by Wasson, Cairns, and Ives to Baltimore, Philadelphia, and other cities, again examined, reappraised, condemned, seized, and held for trial. At the trials the trained "triumvirate" were the standing witnesses. Nevertheless, "in nearly all these cases"—"thirty-two out of thirty-three"—tried in the United States district court for the southern district of New York, "the verdicts of the juries were in favor" of the importers. A like result attended the suits elsewhere. But in every case, whether favorable to the importer or not, the result to him was equally disastrous—absolute ruin to many through the unlawful seizure, supported by the systematic perjury of a trio trained in the service of Hoyt, with the sanction of the Secretary of the Treasury. (H. R. 669, second session Twenty-seventh Congress.)

A single instance will illustrate a multitude of similar cases. Mr. Bottomly swears in 1841: "Mr. Hoyt has taken from me the principal part of all the property I possessed." "In less than two years" Hoyt's rapacity had mulcted Mr. B. in costs aggregating $200,000. "One-third" of all the English importers were ruined. Their property, (upon the sales of which they depended to meet their liabilities to the foreign manufacturer,) seized and locked up for an indefinite period, their failure was the inevitable result; and their bankruptcy carried with it the ruin of "a large number of English manufacturers." Mr. Bottomly had recently been in England, where goods were unusually cheap, and swears: "I could have procured assignments to the amount of $1,000,000 for this season, (1841,) and even more, if I could have assured the consignees that they would not be seized after they had passed the custom-house, and the duties thereon had been paid." (H. R. 669, second session Twenty-seventh Congress.) As it was, they dared not risk their goods within Hoyt's piratical jurisdiction.

HOYT, BUTLER, AND THE "TRIUMVIRATE."

In all this rapacious villainy, systematically pursued under the forms of law, under the grandest protestations of "patriotism" and "reform," again and again repeated, Ex-Attorney General Benjamin F. Butler, President Van Buren's old law-partner, the pious and prayerful president of the defunct bogus "Washington and Warren Bank" of Sandy Hill, and subsequently Price's successor as United States district attorney for the southern district of New York, was Hoyt's adviser and active coadjutor. Through it all the Government bore all the enormous expenses. Hoyt, Butler, and the "triumvirate"—Wasson, Cairns, and Ives—absorbed all the profits. Besides the immense sums accruing as fees in all cases of seizure under reappraisement, Hoyt's practice of retaining in his own hands, with the sanction of Secretary Woodbury, the amount of duties in such cases enabled him for indefinite periods of time—for years—to use the vast sums thus held for his private profit in loans to banks and brokers and in speculations of all kinds—in bolstering, by heavy deposits of the Government funds, such rotten institutions as the "North American Trust and Banking Company," in the stock of which he was a heavy gambler. By his own statement Hoyt thus constantly held of the Government funds, free of interest, an average of $350,000, at a time in New York when money was demanding 5 per cent. per month. The sum thus held was shown to be much larger, probably not less than half a million, and "it was understood" and believed that his deposits in rotten "banks" were made under the sanction of the Secretary of the Treasury," at a time when Woodbury was "borrowing" for the Government "on Treasury notes bearing interest."

The exact aggregate of Hoyt's plunder is not known. The aggregate of his default was not less than $500,000. His unlawful income—the aggregate of his pillage of importers and merchants—cannot be exactly estimated: it was known to be prodigious; but his annihilation of the commerce of the country, and the consequent heavy loss to the Government in its revenues, while immensely increasing the cost of collecting the customs at New York, can be approximated. In one year, in 1840, as compared with 1839, the falling off of imports was $40,232,763, involving, besides the heavy loss to the traffic of the nation, a loss to the Government, in its revenues, of $7,651,765.53. As compared with 1825, the first year of Adams's Administration, the falling off in the aggregate of imports and exports in 1840 was $2,975,142, while the cost of collection had increased in a corresponding ratio. In 1825, the amount of duties received at the New York custom-house was $15,754,827.54, at an expense of collection of $211,471.87; that is, at the rate of 1.34 per cent. In 1840 the amount received by Jesse Hoyt was $7,591,760.95, at an expense of collection of $563,829.39; that is, at the rate of 7.42 per cent. From 1825 to 1828, inclusive, under Adams, the average cost of collection was 1.43 per cent.; from 1838 to 1840, inclusive, under Hoyt, the average cost was 5.20 per cent., while the estimated increase in number of officers employed in the collection was "three hundred and thirty-seven per cent.," and the increased cost of collection "five hundred and fifty per cent."

A SAMPLE OF DEMOCRATIC ADMINISTRATION.

So in all departments of the Government—maladministration and corruption rioted unrestrained. Contractors, commissioners, Indian agents, paymasters, officers of the army and navy, and Governors of Territories—all defaulted for thousands upon thousands. The Indians were special objects of rapacity. Cherokees, Chickasaws, Creeks, and Choctaws, outraged and oppressed in a thousand brutal ways, and forced into hostilities, were mercilessly murdered and deprived of their lands. In forty years, in Indian wars, the nation expended $500,000,000; in the Seminole war alone, in seven years, $50,000,000 in gold—an average in gold of $7,000,000. Thus, Indian claims were the fattest of rotten perquisites. Their name was legion! The robberies attending the removal alone of the Cherokees and Choctaws, under the treaties of 1835 and 1846, are estimated, upon official data, at $7,358,064.60. In these even Colonel Richard M. Johnson, Van Buren's Vice President, indulged the dominant propensities, and assessed $18,000 fees for fraudulent collections.

Necessarily, in every branch of the service, the expenditures increased enormously, while the revenues decreased. Under Adams, the heaviest annual current expenditures amounted to $13,296,041.45; under Jackson's reform they suddenly swelled to $29,621,807.82; under Van Buren's, to $31,793,587.24. The aggregate of the current expenditures of Adams' Administration was $50,501,914.31. Under Jackson the aggregate of his first term was $56,270,480.62; of his second term, $88,275,930.46; total, $143,380,307. Under Van Buren's single term, $112,188,692.16.

POLK'S ADMINISTRATION AND FRAUDS ON THE INDIANS.

Under Polk the Indian frauds were enormous. These are embraced in a settlement by Commissioner Medill, and covered in a report by William L. Marcy, Secretary of War, dated May 20, 1848, to Congress. Under the treaties of 1835 and 1846 the Cherokees were entitled to $5,000,000, less $1,000,000, for the purchase of lands to which they were to emigrate, and the creation of a national fund for the tribe, leaving due the Cherokees $4,000,000, which should have been paid them. Against that sum, at the settlement, as per William L. Marcy, fraudulent charges, by the agents and others, were audited, amounting to $3,815,000, leaving for the Indians only $184,071.28 of their $4,000,000 under the treaties. Of course the Indians demurred. An appropriation was subsequently made of $1,256,500.27; and the agents were instructed to demand from the Indians receipts in full before the payment of even that sum. The Indians were compelled to submit. Thus, in the removal of the Cherokees, under the treaties of 1835 and 1846, as per William L. Marcy's settlement, the Indians were deliberately robbed of $2,743,499.27.

Under the same treaties, at the same time, the Government was mulcted in a like sum. The amount paid by the Government in the transportation of the Indians was $2,915,141.58. An offer was made to transport and subsist the Indians at $40 per head. Even the Indians proposed to transport and subsist themselves at the same rate—$40 per head—which for 13,149 Indians (the number charged for) would amount to $525,960, showing a swindle, as compared with the amount actually paid by the Government, of $2,389,181.58. The records of the Indian office show that the contractors charged for 1,633 more than were actually removed, which, at $40 per head, amounted to $65,320. The original contractors were compelled by the Government agents to transfer their contracts to second parties, and to the original contractors were awarded as damages the sum of $227,362.52. The records also show that the Cherokee fund was defrauded by a citizen agent of $68,145.64, and by two army officers of $76,976.54, making the total fraud against the Government $2,827,000.28. In like manner the Choctaws were swindled of $1,787,565.05.

To recapitulate:

Aggregate fraud against Government under the treaties of 1835-'46	$2,827,000.28
Aggregate fraud against Cherokees under same treaties	2,743,499.27
Aggregate fraud against Choctaws	1,787,565.05
Total	*7,358,064.60

THE MEXICAN WAR AND DEMOCRATIC CORRUPTION.

The Mexican war exacted an expenditure of hundreds of millions and the lives of 25,000 of our citizens. Corruption in the Government stalked unrestrained. The Eli Moores, the Purdys, the Morrisises, the Patrick Collinses, the Beards, the Scotts, the Kennerlies, the Denbys, and the Wetmores—a host of pillagers—Indian agents, sub-Indian agents, contractors, disbursing officers of the army and navy, navy agents, pension agents, marshals, receivers of public moneys, commercial agents, surveyors, inspectors, and collectors of the customs, plundered their million.

Under Pierce Washington "rings" rejoiced in mammoth fraud in the building of the Capitol wings and in the extension of the Treasury building, and were encouraged in their pillage by Pierce's "outlaws of the

*These facts and figures are from official statements and tables prepared at the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Treasury." The actual and proposed plunder was immense. The aggregate amount of spoils proposed in the first Congress under Pierce was estimated at three hundred millions!—$120,000,000 in obedience to the decree of the Ostend conference for the purchase of Cuba; $20,000,000 for the Gadsden purchase, and so on in like acts—all for the aggrandizement of slavery.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL SWINDLES THE GOVERNMENT.

The maladministration of the Post Office Department under Campbell, Pierce's Postmaster General, rivaled that under Barry and Kendall. Even "the sale of letters and papers was made an item of revenue." "Bank-bills, checks, and insurance policies were sold in piles," and a Connecticut mill, buying two thousand of these, exposed the crime.

PRECEDENTS FOR ROBESON.

Secretaries of the Navy anticipated Mr Robeson in transactions now denounced as crimes by the Democracy. Hundreds of thousands of the national funds were intrusted to rotten banking institutions like Fitch & Co.'s. But Judge Mason, styled by the Union—the Washington organ of Democratic reform—as "the accomplished and excellent Secretary of the Navy," reformed even upon that. Nathaniel Denby was the agent of the Navy Department at Marseilles, France. Osborne was a Richmond merchant. They defaulted for the sum of $159,433.67. At a time when Denby had an unexpended balance on hand of nearly $60,000, with no demands for its use, Judge Mason deposited with the Richmond merchant (Osborne) $100,000 for the use of Denby. Denby had no use for the money. He even, from his prison under Fillmore, urged in extenuation of his default that he had had no "advices" of this deposit with Osborne. But Osborne says:

"These moneys ($100,000) I received as [Mr. Denby's] agent, paying interest for them, and consequently, as would be inferred from this circumstance, and also by express understanding, had the use of the funds until called for. All these funds were in the hands of various European and American houses; and in consequence of their failures my losses were so great as to involve my whole estate in ruin and leave me destitute."

THE CONGRESSIONAL PRINTING FRAUDS AND OTHER PARTY SPOILS.

Under Buchanan, as under Jackson and Van Buren, the revenue and the offices were again the "spoils" of "THE PARTY." Loyalty to the Administration, allegiance to slavery, were the conditions of a division. The profits of the Congressional printing were great. The bills of the Printer immense. But the profits of the Executive printing and binding and the printing of the postal blanks were enormous. Out of these profits—the newspaper corruption fund, disbursed by the notorious Cornelius Wendell—presses like the Pennsylvanian, the Philadelphia Argus, the Washington Union, &c., received a subsidy as a condition of slavishly supporting the Administration. Papers like the Cleveland National Democrat were established under the patronage of the Government by office-holders for like purposes—the defense of border ruffianism, Lecompton, and sectional strife. The navy-yards, custom-houses, and post offices were degraded into corrupt party machines. Editors of servile sheets, rendering to Government no service, were borne upon their rolls, drawing pay—like Baker, of the Pennsylvanian, and the noted Theophilus Fisk, of the Argus, at Philadelphia; William M. Browne, of the Journal of Commerce, at New York; Harry Scovel, of the Free Press, at Detroit, and the Henry J. Alvords in other sections—men like Cummings, at Philadelphia, pocketing pay in the name of subordinates for which no services were rendered; like Clements, at the Philadelphia navy-yard, unable to write, but useful as a politician, appointed and drawing pay as clerks while working as bricklayers; like the infamous Michael C. Murphy, a foreman in the New York yard, and the principal in a $35,000 jewelry robbery, retained as party strikers. Fealty to party covered all crimes. Swindling contracts, like the notorious live-oak contracts to Swift, were awarded to party favorites in payment of party services. Thousands of dollars were regularly assessed for party purposes, even three times in the same year, upon the Departments at Washington, upon the navy-yards, custom-houses, and post offices throughout the country; even assessments, in the form of contributions, for the support of the organ, the Constitution. Woe to the unfortunate wight who rebelled; his independence was instantly rewarded by decapitation. Office-holders were organized into mercenary corps for the control of National and State politics; and by wholesale frauds at elections—by frauds upon the registry—by the issue and distribution of fraudulent naturalisation papers—by ballot-box stuffing and frauds in counting votes, enabled corrupt minorities to dominate for years the intelligent majorities of the great States of Pennsylvania and New York. Defaults like Isaac V. Fowler's, the postmaster at New York, for $75,000, were but bagatelles compared with Thompson's and Floyd's grander system of pillage. The abstraction by Floyd's nephew, Godard Bailey, in 1860, from the Interior Department, under Jacob Thompson, of $870,000 of Indian trust bonds, and their transfer to Russell, Majors & Waddell, upon Secretary Floyd's fraudulent acceptances, under a contract of that firm with the War Department, and similar fraudulent acceptances by Floyd, as shown by the records of the War Department, to the amount of $5,339,335, aggregated a fraud of $6,137,395, to be borne either by the Government or the holder.

THE INDIAN BONDS THEFT.

Under the numerous Indian treaties, up to 1861, with the Cherokees, Chickasaws, Choctaws, Creeks, and others, funds in large amounts (held under the solemn pledges of the nation in trust for those tribes) had accumulated in the hands of the Secretaries of War, Treasury, and Interior. These were invested by Secretaries Woodbury and Thompson in nearly valueless Southern stocks and State bonds. Even the Smithsonian trust fund ($538,000) was sunk with the rest. By Woodbury $1,744,166.66 were thus invested, upon which the Government has paid as interest $1,571,708. Of this fund, under Buchanan, Secretary ocks and State in the Govern-

, 575,435, all in a total loss to nder Democratic nent by defaults

$1,000 collected and disbursed; under Lincoln, but $0.76; under Grant, only $0.34. Under Buchanan, five times greater than under Lincoln. Under Buchanan, over eleven times greater than under Grant.

Such is a brief history of Democratic reform—such the character of its public men—not of one period only, but of its every period, from its origin under Jefferson to its close, in 1861, under Buchanan. Maladministration, malfeasance, spoliation, corruption, and fraud—every vile administrative crime—dominated amid executive usurpation and military tyranny, supported by laws outraging every human right.

THE DEMOCRACY OF TO-DAY.

Turning from the past terrible record of the party, the question naturally arises: "Has the Democracy, as a party, improved?" "Is it the author of a single good act in the last quarter of a century?" This question has been asked before, but never answered. Take, for example, the nomination of Samuel J. Tilden for the Presidency: It is fair to conclude that as is the man of their choice so is the party he represents. One illustration of his character for veracity is sufficient.

On December 28, 1863, In his answer to the Mr. Tilden swore to a complaint in the Circuit Court of the United States in the suit

"I hereby certify of the St. Louis, Alton and Terre Haute Railroad Company against statement of the gains, himself and others, profits, or income of which answer was filed Samuel J. Tilden, of recently, Mr. Tilden the city of New York, swore under oath as and county of New York, State of New York, whether derived from any kind of property, rents, interests, dividends, salary, or second mortgage bond, from any profession, holders, and the said trade, employment, or vocation, or from any other source whatever, mortgage bondholders, from 1st day of January to the 17th of October, 1862; * * * that the defendant, Tilden, for a days inclusive, and part of his services subject to an income aforesaid, also made a tax under the excise law of the United States. Income from all sources, $7,118."

rendered to the first mortgage bondholders and the receivers, which was paid to him by the said Azariah C. Flagg; * * * and which payment appears under date of November 7, 1862, in a statement annexed to the first report aforesaid, as having been receipted for by the said Tilden, 'on account of professional services.'"

Is Mr. Tilden a willful perjurer? And if so, is he a fit person to be President of the United States?

DARE THE NATION TRUST SUCH A PARTY?

Dare the nation again trust such a party? In what have Republicans forfeited the confidence of the Republic? Shall Belknap's single crime—his sale of a post-tradership to the Democrat Marsh—the only offense of which it has been convicted—an accident, not the rule of its administration—blot out its record of magnificent achievements—its triumphant restoration of the Union against the murderous efforts of the Democracy to destroy it; its steady development and careful husbandry of the grand resources of the Nation, increasing immensely the wealth and happiness and comforts of the people? Even admitting Belknap's Republicanism—a mooted question—into what lilliputian proportions, in character and degree, does his single crime dwarf before the greater and more heinous villainy of the Democracy—before those of its highest officials—its truest representatives in office; its Richard M. Johnsons, Vice President of the United States; its Martin Van Burens and John Forsytes, Secretaries of State; its Levi Woodburys, Secretary of the Treasury; its Lewis Casses and John B. Floyds, Secretaries of War; its John Y. Masons, Secretary of the Navy; its Jacob Thompsons, Secretary of the Interior; its William T. Barrys and Amos Kendalls, Postmasters General; its Hoyts, Harrises, and Boyds, whose maladministration and corruption stand without a parallel in history? A single crime—a comparatively petty offense, by which the nation loses nothing, not a penny—against a multitude by which the nation has been pillaged of hundreds of millions—aye, through the rebellion, of thousands of millions!

HISTORY OF THE WHITE LINE ORGANIZATION IN MISSISSIPPI.

In Mississippi the White Line organization is not new. Beginning with the ante-war period, it dates from 1865. This policy lay at the foundation of President Johnson's so-called reconstruction. When the war closed the constitution of the State was only amended so as to recognize the abolition of slavery. This was absolutely required by the Government. But negroes were not made citizens. As to them the old constitution remained unchanged. In October, 1865, State officers, a legislature, and county officers were elected. B. G. Humphries, an ex-Confederate major general, was chosen Governor. There were no party organizations, but Confederate records were the only recommendation for office. No man need apply who has not been loyal to the rebellion. The new government was installed in October, and the military were withdrawn.

The Legislature began its work by defining the status of the emancipated race. The laws then enacted will speak for themselves, and brief extracts verified by the official acts as published are given below.

In his inaugural of date October 16, 1865,

Governor Humphries said: "The planter cannot venture upon the cultivation of the great staple unless the laborer is compelled to comply with his contract, remaining and performing his proper amount of labor, day after day, and week after week, through the year; and if he attempts to escape, he should be returned to his employer, and forced to work until the time for which he has contracted has expired." By oversight or otherwise the Governor forgot to say anything about compensation for the forced labor he proposes, and this remained a minor consideration in the legislation that followed, as will be seen in the laws quoted:

THE BLACK CODE.

AN ACT to confer Civil Rights on freedmen, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, That all freedmen, free negroes, and mulattoes may sue and be sued, implead and be impleaded in all the courts of law and equity in this State, and may acquire personal property and chuses in action by descent or purchase, and may dispose of the same in the same manner and to the same extent that white persons may: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not be so construed as to allow any freedman, free negro, or mulatto to rent or lease any land or tenements, except in corporated towns and cities, in which places the corporated authorities shall control the same.

SEC. 2. * * * That it shall not be lawful for any freedman, free negro, or mulatto to intermarry with any white person, nor for any white person to intermarry with any freedman, free negro, or mulatto, and any person who shall so intermarry shall be deemed guilty of felony, and on conviction thereof shall be confined in the State penitentiary for life.

SEC. 5. That every freedman, free negro, or mulatto shall, on the second Monday of January, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six, (1866,) and annually thereafter, have a lawful home or employment, and shall have written evidence thereof as follows, to wit: If living in any corporated city, town, or village, a license from the Mayor thereof, and if living outside of any incorporated city, town, or village, from the member of the board of police of his beat, authorizing him or her to do irregular and job work on a written contract, as provided in section six of this act: which license may be revoked, for cause, at any time by the authority granting the same.

SEC. 6. That if the laborer shall quit the service of the employer before expiration of his term of service without good cause he shall forfeit his wages for that year up to the time of quitting.

SEC. 7. That every civil officer shall, and every person may arrest and carry back to his legal employer any freedman, free negro, or mulatto, who shall have quit the service of his or her employer before the expiration of his or her term of service without good cause, and said officer and person shall be entitled to receive for arresting and carrying back every deserting employe aforesaid the sum of five dollars, and ten cents per mile from the place of arrest to the place of delivery, and the same shall be paid by the employer, and held as a set-off for so much against the wages of said deserting employe.

SEC. 8. That upon affidavit made by the employer of any freedman, free negro, or mulatto, or other credible person, before any justice of the peace or member of the board of police, that any freedman, free negro, or mulatto legally employed by said employer has illegally deserted said employment, such justice of the peace or member of the board of police shall issue his warrant or warrants, returnable before himself or other such officers, directed to any sheriff, constable, or special deputy, commanding him to arrest said deserter and return him or her to said employer, and the like proceedings shall be had as provided in the preceding section; and it shall be lawful for any officer to whom such warrant shall be directed to execute said warrant in any county of this State, and that said warrant may be transmitted without indorsement to any like officer of another county, to be executed and returned as aforesaid, and the said employer shall pay the cost of warrants and arrest and return, which shall be a set-off for so much against the wages of said deserter.

SEC. 9. That if any person shall persuade, or attempt to persuade, entice, or cause any freedman, free negro, or mulatto to desert from the legal employment of any person before the expiration of his or her term of service, or shall knowingly employ any such deserting freedman, free negro, or mulatto, or shall knowingly give or sell to any such deserting freedman, free negro, or mulatto any food, raiment, or other thing, he or she shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars, and not more than two hundred dollars and the costs, and if said fine and costs shall not be immediately paid, the court shall sentence said convict to not exceeding two months' imprisonment in the county jail, and he or she shall moreover be liable to the party injured in damages: Provided, If any person shall, or shall attempt to persuade, entice, or cause any freedman, free negro, or mulatto to desert from any legal employment of any person with the view to employ said freedman, free negro, or mulatto, such person, on conviction, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars, and not more than five hundred dollars and costs, and if said fine and costs shall not be immediately paid the court shall sentence said convict to not exceeding six months' imprisonment in the county jail.

Approved November 25, 1865. (Pamphlet acts of 1865, page 82.)

AN ACT to amend the Vagrant laws of Mississippi.

* * * * *

SEC. 2. Be it enacted, &c., That all freedmen, free negroes, and mulattoes in this State over the age of eighteen years found on the second Monday in January, 1866, or thereafter, with no lawful employment or business, or found UNLAWFULLY ASSEMBLING themselves together, either in the day or night time, and all white persons so assembling with freedmen, free negroes, or mulattoes or usually ASSOCIATING with freedmen, &c., on terms of equality, or living in adultery or fornication with a freed woman, free negro, or mulatto, shall be deemed vagrants, and on conviction thereof, shall be fined in the sum of not exceeding, in case of a freedman, free negro, or mulatto fifty dollars, and a white man two hundred dollars, and imprisoned at the discretion of the court, the free negro not exceeding ten days, and the white man not exceeding six months.

* * * * *

SEC. 5. That all fines and forfeitures collected under this act shall be paid into the county treasury, for general county purposes, and in case any freedman, free negro, or mulatto shall fail for five days after the imposition of any fine or forfeiture upon him or her for violation of any of the provisions of this act to pay the same, that it shall be, and it is hereby, made the duty of the sheriff of the proper county to hire out said freedman, free negro, or mulatto to any person who will, for the shortest period of service, pay said fine or forfeiture, and all costs: Provided, A preference shall be given to the employer, if there be one, in which case the employer shall be entitled to deduct and retain the amount so paid from the wages of such freedman, free negro, or mulatto then due or to become due, and in case such freedman, free negro, or mulatto cannot be hired out, he or she may be dealt with as a pauper.

SEC. 6. * * That it is hereby made the duty of the board of county police of each county of this State to levy a poll or capitation tax on each and every freedman, free negro, or mulatto (male and female) between the ages of eighteen and sixty years, not to exceed the sum of one dollar annually to each person so taxed, which tax when collected shall be paid into the county treasurer's hands, and shall constitute a fund to be called the freedmen's pauper fund, which shall be applied by the commissioner of the poor of the freedmen, &c., of this State.

SEC. 7. Be it enacted, That if any freedman, or free negro, or mulatto shall fail or refuse to pay any tax levied according to the provisions of the sixth section of this act it shall be prima facie evidence of vagrancy, and it shall be the duty of the sheriff to arrest such freedman, &c., or such person refusing or neglecting to pay such tax, and proceed at once to hire for the shortest time such delinquent tax-payer to any one who will pay the said tax, with accruing costs, giving preference to the employer, if there be one.

Approved November 24, 1865.

AN ACT to punish certain offenses therein named and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, That no freedman, free negro, or mulatto, not in the military service of the United States Government and not licensed to do so by the board of police of his or her county, shall keep or carry fire-arms of any kind, or any ammunition, dirk, or bowie knife; and on conviction thereof, in the county court, shall be punished by fine, not exceeding ten dollars, and pay the costs of such proceeding, and all such arms or ammunition shall be forfeited to the informer, and it shall be the duty of every civil and military officer to arrest any freedman, free negro, or mulatto found with any such arms or ammunition, and cause him to be committed for trial in default of bail.

SEC. 2. That any freedman, free negro, or mulatto committing riot, making seditious speeches, insulting gestures, largely, or acts, or assaults on any person, or committing any other misdemeanor, the punishment of which is not specifically provided for by law, shall, upon conviction thereof in the county court, be fined not less than ten dollars, and not more than one hundred dollars, and may be imprisoned, at the discretion of the court, not exceeding thirty days.

SEC. 3. That if any white person shall sell, lend, or give to any freedman, &c., &c., any fire-arms, dirk, or bowie knife, or ammunition, or any spirituous or intoxicating liquors, such person or persons so offending, upon conviction thereof in the county court of his or her county, shall be fined not exceeding fifty dollars, and may be imprisoned, at the discretion of the court, not exceeding thirty days.

SEC. 4. That all the penal and criminal laws now in force in the State defining offenses and prescribing the mode of punishment for crimes and misdemeanors committed by SLAVES, FREE NEGROES, or MULATTOES be, and the same are hereby, ENACTED AND DECLARED TO BE IN FULL FORCE AND EFFECT against freedmen, negroes, and mulattoes, except so far as the modes and manner of trial and punishment have been changed or altered by law.

SEC. 5. That if any freedman, free negro, mulatto, convicted of any of the misdemeanors provided against in this act shall fail or refuse for the space of five days after conviction to pay the fine and costs imposed, such persons shall be hired out by the sheriff or other officers at public outcry to any white person who will pay said fine and costs, and take such convict for the shortest time.

Approved November 29, 1865.

AN ACT to regulate the relation of MASTER and apprentice, as relates to FREEDMEN, FREE NEGROES, and MULATTOES.

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of all sheriffs, justices of the peace, and other civil officers of the several counties in this State to report to the probate courts of their respective counties semi-annually, at the January and July terms of said court, all freedmen, free negroes, and mulattoes under the age of eighteen within their respective counties, beats, or districts, who are orphans, or whose parent or parents have not the means, or who refuse to provide for and support said minors, and thereupon it shall be duty of the said court to order the clerk of said probate court to apprentice said minors to some competent and suitable person on such terms as the court may direct: Provided, That the former owner of said minors shall have the preference. * * *

SEC. 3. That in the management and control of said apprentices said master or mistress shall have power to inflict such MODERATE CORPOREAL CHASTISEMENT as a father or guardian is allowed to inflict on his or her child or ward at common law. * * *

SEC. 4. That if any apprentice shall leave the employment of his or her master or mistress without his or her consent, said master or mistress may pursue and recapture said apprentice and bring him or her before any justice of the peace of the county, whose duty it shall be to remand said apprentice to the service of his or her master or mistress, and in the event of a refusal on the part of said apprentice so to return, then said justice shall commit said apprentice to the jail of said county, on failure to give bond, until the next term of the county court, and it shall be the duty of said court at the first term thereafter to investigate said case, and if the court shall be of the opinion that said apprentice left the employment of his or her master or mistress without good cause to order him or her to be punished, as provided for the punishment of hired freedmen, as may be from time to time provided for by law, for desertion, until he or she shall agree to return to his or her master or mistress.

SEC. 5. That if any person entice away any apprentice from his or her master or mistress, or shall knowingly employ an apprentice, or furnish him or her food, or clothing, without the written consent of his or her master or mistress, or shall sell or give said apprentice ardent spirits without such consent, said person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, before the county court, be punished as provided for the punishment of persons enticing from their employer hired freedmen, free negroes, and mulattoes.

Approved November 22, 1865.

An illustration of the effect of the fifth section of the first act quoted may not be out of place here. It will be seen by section two of the act amending the vagrant laws, that all freedmen, free negroes, or mulattoes over the age of eighteen, found without employment on the second Monday of January of each year, were deemed and declared vagrants, and liable to heavy fine and imprisonment. Under the foregoing fifth section no one was permitted to work without first obtaining license. But the absolute necessity to work was also made a privilege, and licenses had to be purchased. The prices ranged from fifty cents to one dollar per month, the city authorities themselves regulating the amount. Poverty was thus made a double crime.

A case of this kind arose in 1866, under the first section of the above act. An order issued by Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War, in 1865, permitted soldiers to purchase of the Government the muskets they carried in the service, by paying the regulation price, and take them to their homes as personal property. A number of colored United States soldiers mustered out in Mississippi availed themselves of this privilege, and one of them returned to his home near Canton. He was arrested, tried, and convicted under the first section, and his rifle taken from him by the white informer. Major Williams, of the Freedmen's Bureau, carried the case to the supreme court of the State, which sustained the action of the lower court, Chief Justice Handy delivering an elaborate opinion in the case.

STATE TAXATION.

The Democratic maxim of "no taxation without representation" was utterly unknown to the Democracy when they were in power. They had not only reduced the negro to a condition of oppressive vassalage, with no rights that any one was bound to respect, but weighed down his beggared hands with almost the entire burden of government. The poor whites and the negroes paid three-fourths of the taxes of the State, as will be seen below.

The State tax upon lands was only one-tenth of one per cent. of the value given to the assessor by the owner of the land.

Under the same law, (Acts of 1865, page 216,) "all blacksmiths, bakers, butchers, brickmakers, carriagemakers, carpenters, printers, shoemakers, tailors, tanners, painters, milliners," &c., &c., were required to pay twenty-five cents on every hundred dollars' worth of their GROSS EARNINGS!

Thus the poorest man in the State, with nothing but the proceeds of his hard, honest daily toil to support his family, was made to pay two and a half times as much tax on the small pittance he earned by "the sweat of his brow" as the wealthy planter paid on his fine estate.

ITS PRACTICAL WORKINGS.

The practical workings of this barbarous system was shown by Attorney General Morris, from the tax-rolls of Warren county in 1868:

Col. Joseph E. Davis, total taxes on 3,793 acres of bottom land, which he sold for $50,000, all told..... $141 14

Heirs of Gen. John A. Quitman, on 6,810 acres of bottom land, handsomely improved, including a plantation which was rented for $30,000 per annum. It was assessed the same year. Total taxes, all told..... 188 64

"LOOK ON THIS PICTURE."

Mr. Philip Gilbert, shoemaker, pays annually 75 28

Mr. P. Crecy, on a salary of $1,200, with no property, pays $33 00

Mr. Vetch, a barber, and no property but his soap, shears, and razors, pays 107 63

Pompey Higgins, a colored drayman, on his dray and two mules, pays 33 82

Mr. Fred. Lord, a butcher, pays annually 243 70

These figures show briefly how the Democratic party set systematically about to oppress, impoverish, AND ROB THE POOR AND EMPTY THE RICH!

It was a part of the general plan to "keep the negro in his place," and compel him to serve and support the white man.

THE CIVIL RIGHTS BILL was passed over President Johnson's veto on the 9th day of April, 1866. In his special message of October 16, 1866, Governor Humphries said: "The civil-rights bill passed by Congress at its recent session conflicts directly with many of our State laws, and has been a fruitful source of disturbance. Immediately after your adjournment, in December, 1865, I appointed commissioners to visit the city of Washington, lay these laws before the President, and request him to indicate which of them the military authorities would be allowed to nullify. The President gave full assurances that none of them should be nullified except by the civil courts of the land."

As the "civil courts" of Mississippi were in full sympathy with the spirit of the State legislation, it is easy to understand which of the laws were "nullified" by them.

RECONSTRUCTION.

The reconstruction acts were approved March 7, 1867. They required that a majority of the registered voters of the State should vote "for convention," or it would be no election. It was the negro's first vote.

At first many whites "accepted the Congressional plan as a choice of evils," and advocated its adoption, but by the time the election took place—in December, 1867—the fewest possible number voted at all. The following paragraphs from the Vicksburg Times of that date will show the animus of the opposition:

"STAY AWAY FROM THE POLLS.

"We again urge every decent white man, every honorable gentleman of the Caucasian race, to avoid General Ord's election as he would pestilence and a prison. As this advice does not apply to, and is not intended for, the white sneaks of the Loyal League, we shall expect the last-named despicable vermin out in all their strength.

"THE IMMORTAL FIGHT.

"We are gratified to be able to announce to the readers of the Times that at the courthouse yesterday, the only place open to the whole people, there were cast the votes of eight people only. We tried to get the names of the interesting sneaks who voted, but failed, though the Times office was and is ready to pay a dollar for the name of each voter. We shall publish the names of those voters if we can get them, and some day we shall; but if we do not, we shall with pride chronicle the fact that in the heroic city of Vicksburg, the gallant Sarragossa of the South, that there were only eight cowards, dogs, and scoundrels of the Mygatt and McKee breed."

But the convention was carried by a small majority, there being almost a solid colored vote cast in its favor. The constitutional convention assembled the first of January, 1868, and proceeded to frame a constitution. It was largely Republican from the fact mainly that Democrats had indignantly refused to touch reconstruction in any way, and were very bitter in denouncing all who did. On the 15th of January a Democratic State convention assembled at Jackson and adopted the following

WHITE-LINE RESOLUTIONS:

"Resolved, That the military bills of Congress for the reconstruction of the so-called rebel States are unconstitutional, and oppressive in all their particulars, and should be resisted by the unanimous voice of the people at the ballot-box.

"Resolved, That the nefarious design of the Republican party in Congress to place the white men of the Southern States under the governmental control of their late slaves, and degrade the Caucasian race as the inferior of the African negro, is a crime against the civilization of the age, which need only to be mentioned to be scorned by every intelligent mind, and we therefore call upon the people of Mississippi to vindicate alike the superiority of their race over the negro and their political power to maintain constitutional liberty."

The race issue is thus early declared, and maintained with vigor and ability.

ANOTHER CONVENTION.

On the 19th of February, 1868, another Democratic State convention met at Jackson. It represented fully the revolutionary and desperate spirit of the January gathering. A long series of resolutions were adopted, of which the following is a specimen:

"Resolved, That by the constitution and laws of Mississippi white males of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, and citizens of the United States, are alone qualified electors and office-holders, and that no others have a right to vote within the limits of said State, or to hold office therein, and that therefore the acts of Congress prescribing rules whereby negroes are claimed to be authorized to vote or hold office in said State are utterly null and void and of no effect whatever."

Yet in spite of these repeated declarations of the Democratic party of Mississippi, Congressman Lamar had the hardihood to declare, in a speech at Jackson, Mississippi, on the 4th of August, 1875, that "the Government first drew the color line, distinct and deep, by the passage of the reconstruction acts."

The Democratic press teemed with nothing but the most scurrilous and mendacious slanders against all Republicans, and appealed to their readers to treat "all who advocated reconstruction as enemies and outlaws."

"A GOOD RESOLUTION."

To show what the spirit was at this time, a portion of an editorial from the Vicksburg Times, under the above caption, is given:

"The Democratic Club, of Marion, Alabama, recently adopted unanimously the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the members of this club, in their social intercourse, will not recognize any man as a gentleman, or a friend to his country, who may accept any appointment to office under the reconstruction acts of the Congress of the United States."

"This resolution is good, but it does not go far enough. * * * Between the white men of the South and the advocates of negro suffrage there should be a deep ditch—a high wall—and these obstacles should be as fixed as fate, and as impassable as the gulf which separated Dives from Lazarus when the former was in hell. They should be made to feel that they are despised outcasts, cut off from all human fellowship and sympathy. * * * Between them and us there can be nothing but hostility, eternal and undying, and there is not a murderer or a thief in the world for whom we have not more respect than we have for the vagabonds who seek to impose negro rule upon the people of the South."

Such was the common sentiment of the press and the stump-speakers at that time. Governor Humphries was the nominee for Governor, and Colonel Charles E. Hooker, at present a member of Congress from the Jackson district, candidate for Attorney General. Both indorsed the White-Line platform, and went far beyond it in their hostile and incendiary declarations.

The election on the new constitution and for State officers occurred on the 22d of June, and for violence, intimidation, and outrage has only been equaled by the high-handed and bloody revolution of 1875. The constitution was voted down by a forced majority of 7,000.

The manner in which that election was carried is thus stated in an address issued by a State convention of Republicans, November 18, 1868:

"Loyal and peaceable citizens were driven from their homes and threatened with violence and death. Public speakers, by threats and intimidations, were prevented from meeting their appointments, or were driven from the stands by lawless mobs. An organization of armed and disguised men, calling itself a Ku-Klux Klan, perambulated the country by night, committing outrages and murders, defying detection. The poor dependent classes of our loyal fellow-citizens were threatened with starvation, discharge from service, and violence and death, if they failed to vote with their disloyal employers. In many counties the state of affairs herein enumerated prevailed to such an extent that there existed, not even the semblance of a fair election."

THE ELECTION OF 1869.

Another election on the constitution and for State officers was held in December, 1869. Hon. J. L. Alcorn was the Republican candidate for Governor, and Judge Louis

Dent, a brother-in-law of the President, was the candidate of the Liberals and Democrats. Dent was imported from Washington for the canvass, the Democracy thereby hoping to catch the support of General Grant, but as soon as the trick was discovered the President used all his influence against the attempted fraud, and supported the regular ticket. In like manner, and for the same purpose, the Democracy of Mississippi supported Horace Greeley in 1872. They hoped to accomplish by this means what they had failed to by regular organization under a White-Line banner.

THE KU-KLUX KLAN.

In 1871 a general election occurred in Mississippi for legislative and county officers. The Ku-Klux Klan reorganized early in the spring and began their depredations in that year. Meridian was made the opening theatre of the campaign, and a terrible massacre of colored people ensued. Over thirty school-houses for colored people were burned or destroyed in two months, and a reign of terror, accompanied by murders and outrages, pervaded the State. The enforcement law of Congress was thereupon passed, and over one thousand convictions of Ku-Klux took place in the Federal courts at Oxford and Jackson. Comparative peace was thereby restored, and the general elections of 1871, 1872, and 1873 were peaceably and quietly held. The result of those elections was as follows :

	Rep. maj.
1869	38,041
1871	31,000
1872	35,103
1873	20,031

Inasmuch as both candidates for Governor in 1873—Ames and Alcorn—were Republicans, the Republican vote was somewhat divided, the body of the party, however, voting for Ames.

THE REVOLUTION OF 1875.

The memorable election of 1875 was the next trial of strength. The canvass opened early, and it soon became evident that the struggle would be fierce and desperate. The time was well chosen by the Democracy. The courts had decided the enforcement law to be unconstitutional, and as they had no fear of prosecutions under State law, being fully able to intimidate and defy the local officers, they could carry on a campaign of force with impunity. The character and result of that campaign is known to the country and need not be repeated here. Since 1873 it is estimated that the colored vote of the State has increased fully 10,000 by immigration from Georgia, Alabama, and other Democratic States, which they left to escape Democratic oppression. At a fair election the Republican majority in 1875 would not have been less than 45,000. Yet what was the result? The vote for State treasurer was as follows :

Hemmingway, Democrat	99,211
Buchanan, Republican	68,225
	<hr/>
Democratic majority	30,986

MACHINE POLITICIANS.—The taunt of machine politician, applied to Republican leaders who do not happen to be chosen for us by the Confederate Democracy, has little point and no fitness. Applied to men like Chandler, Morton, and Conkling it is conspicuously senseless. These men have long been prominent in public life. Standing in the open light of the United States Senate for twelve and eighteen years, they have made records which mark the high-water line of American statesmanship, public honor, and personal integrity. No stain smirches the character of either of them. Even Democratic vituperation, that most unclean thing which to-day impeaches Christian civilization, has failed to note the first speck upon their political garments. But they propose to “hold the fort.” They decline to strike the flag of Republican principles, of the equal rights of all citizens and equal protection to all; they refuse to throw open the gates of the citadel to the marauding bands without; they are not ready to welcome the blood-stained banditti of the South nor the Tammany thieves of the North to a control of the nation achieved by violence and outrage, or purchased by corruption and fraud. On the contrary, they do not intend that innocent people shall be murdered nor honest voters cheated if they can help it. Hence these tears.

FREE SCHOOLS IN THE SOUTH.

The article in the September number of THE REPUBLIC under the above title included the States of Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi. In pursuance of the line of thought therein presented, and to show what progress, if any, the cause of popular education has made in the reconstructed States since the war, the difficulties encountered in the establishing of free-school systems, and the united and relentless hostility of the Democratic party met in this work, the subject is continued in this number. Attention is next invited to the State of TEXAS.

Texas was readmitted into the Union by the enabling act of Congress approved February, 1870. The Government then inaugurated was Republican, and the establishment of a system of public instruction was among the first acts passed by the Legislature. October 28, 1871, State Superintendent J. C. De Gress writes that "the system promises to be a success, notwithstanding the prejudice and strong opposition of a large portion of the people." Among the obstacles encountered in the work he enumerates the following:

"At Millican a teacher of a public school cast his vote for the candidate of his choice, and his school was broken up in consequence." * * * * *

"Not long since a teacher of a colored school in Bastrop county was taken from his home at night, tied to a tree, and whipped nearly to death. His school-house was also burned." * * * * *

"It is with great difficulty that houses can be procured for the colored schools in the State, on account of the great opposition to the education of the blacks; and it has been even more difficult to find persons willing to teach such schools, as they have in all cases been ostracised from society."

from the sale and dedicated is annual re-amounted to the war the onal Govern-ion of it was heir treasonof available

funds were from time to time, during the existence of the rebellion, withdrawn from the school fund and expended; the most of it under the direction of the Military Board." * * * * *

"Out of the thirty-seven States, Texas yet ranks seventh in the possession of a large permanent school fund; this now amounts to $2,670,798.12."

In 1871 the Legislature of Texas enacted a compulsory school law. It required that all children of suitable age should attend some school for four months in the year.

The sixth report of the agent of the Peabody Fund, made in 1871, contains the following:

"The school fund of Texas, after being sadly plundered, is still larger than that of any Southern State, being $2,585,297. The whole expenditure for schools in 1871-'72 amounted to $1,217,101.48."

In his annual report for 1874 the State Superintendent reports that "about 75 per cent. of the scholastic population received four months' tuition in the public schools."

The State of Texas became Democratic by a large and permanent majority in the winter of 1873. The educational condition of the State since that time is shown below in reply to the following letter addressed to the editor of the Waco Register, as reproduced, with the editor's reply, in the columns of his paper:

ANSWER TO INQUIRIES.

UNION REPUBLICAN

CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE,

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 10, 1876.

W. R. Chase, Esq., Waco, Texas:

DEAR SIR: Will you please inform me what is the exact status of your free-school system under Democratic management?

What does the present law provide for?

What amount of money or taxes is appropriated, and what is the educational condition at this time?

I see you have, or are to have, a new law on this subject.

Did not the Democrats abolish free schools when they came into power?

What is the character of the school-trust fund, and what have they done with it?

I should also like to know what your rate of taxation is and the condition of your finances. Truly, yours, — — —

Editorial.

We have concluded to publish our reply to the above :

1. There are no free schools in the State ; at least we are aware of none, either in this section or elsewhere in the State.

2. "The present law" provides for nothing which supports schools. The present law sets apart alternate sections of State public lands to schools, but money is not realized from these, nor expected to be realized, sufficient to support a system of public schools.

3. No money derived from taxation is set apart for schools under the present Democratic administration.

4. Yes, the Democrats abolished free schools when they came into power. We had a good free-school system, and in excellent operation, under our Republican administration, under which the children of the State were being educated. Under our constitution (Republican) all the public lands and one-fourth of the revenues of the State derived from taxation were set apart to schools, and the constitution made it obligatory upon the Legislature to provide free schools for not less than four months in the year.

When the Democrats came in they abolished this constitution, and have put one in its place which sets apart only one-half the public lands to schools, and does not make it obligatory upon the State government to set apart a cent of the money derived from taxes to schools. Under this (Democratic) constitution the public schools have gone down.

5. The school-trust funds were in United States bonds ; but the Democratic Legislature has just ordered these bonds to be sold for the money ; with which money they will pay themselves for their services, and issue their own (State) depreciated bonds to be put in the place of the United States bonds. The transaction constitutes simply a robbery from the school fund.

6. Taxes have been heavier every year under Democratic administration than they were any year under Republican administration, and have increased from year to year. The rate may be no higher, but more things are taxed.

7. The condition of our State finances is that the legislative finance committee has just reported a deficiency of the rise of $300,000 of taxes to meet current expenses of the State government. The Comptroller asserts this deficiency to be $500,000.

The State has been steadily run in debt at the rate of about a million dollars since the present administration came into power.

In May, 1873, the State Legislature (Democratic) abolished the school law which had been in operation since 1871, and passed another of which the Governor of the State (Republican) says, in declining to approve the act, page 383 :

"The constitution (art. 9, sec. 4) directs the Legislature to establish a uniform system of free schools throughout the State ; but this act, though in its title it proposes to establish such a system, in reality does away with all systems."

It, however, became a law notwithstanding the opposition of the Governor. And William Alexander, Attorney General of the State, says, (page 384 :) :

"After a careful study of the school law of May 22, 1873, I am forced to conclude that so many of its provisions are unconstitutional, while others are impracticable, that it cannot be put into operation."

And of its practical effect the State Superintendent says :

"The last Legislature enacted a new school law, repealing the old one, and in effect abolishing our rapidly growing system of common schools. Under this law no uniform system of public free schools, as required by the State constitution, can be established ; in fact, the poor, to whom alone the free schools are to be opened, can never under it be educated. * * * In short, the old pauper law of the State is being substantially re-enacted. The school fund is hence likely to be given away to private institutions of learning, while those who are unable to pay for the tuition of their children and are too proud to acknowledge themselves paupers will be deprived of an education solemnly guaranteed to them by the constitution of the State and indorsed by the Congress of the United States.

"The public domain (of the State) on the 31st day of August, 1872, consisted of 88,842,704½ acres of land, the proceeds of which were, by section 6, article 9, of the State constitution, to become a part of the common school fund ; but the last Legislature gave away over half of such lands to corporations."

And the Attorney General further says in his official opinion :

"Besides, the Constitution enacts that no law shall ever be made appropriating such (school) fund for any other use or purpose whatever, and the Congress of the United States guaranteed this enactment by providing that the constitution of Texas shall never be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the school rights and privileges secured by the constitution of said State."

Thirty millions of acres of the large public domain referred to by the State Superintendent above have been donated to Tom Scott's Texas and Pacific railroad. Speaking of this enormous grant the Austin Statesman (Democratic) says:

"Scott has gotten all; the Legislature holds its session to suit his ends, and he has been protected in his great land grab, out of which he may, in time, carve States even more pliable than Pennsylvania or Texas. Until the sequel shows it we can hardly believe it, and would ask the public not to foster the idea that Tom Scott is to govern Texas absolutely. That the people can thus be sold out through agencies selected by themselves we will not believe, until a vote is given for President pro tem. of the Senate, drawing a distinct line between the friends and opponents of the Texas and Pacific. It is a pitiable spectacle to contemplate, that of Tom Scott wholly controlling the destinies of Texas—making Governors, directing legislation, and even placing a delegation in Congress from Texas purely subservient to his schemes of plunder. It is time for us to ask, in the most serious of moods, are we free?"

A late number of the San Antonio Herald (Democratic) says:

"In our Legislature the characteristic feature is waste and extravagance. Offices are multiplied, salaries increased, and the people's domain squandered in the most reckless manner; but the sacred trust—the school fund, amounting to $800,000—committed to their fiduciary care, is also seized and appropriated to the payment of the mileage and per diem and other expenses of this session of the Legislature, and to make good the deficit in the State treasury, caused in part by the expenses incurred for the constitutional convention."

Again, in another issue:

